It was the next year, July 12, 1759, that Lieut. Daniel Lee left Goshen, and he was killed by the tomahawk of an Indian while he was loading and firing. The third was the son of a proprietor. His name was Manna Humphrey, and he was killed at the taking of Havanna, in 1762, near the close of the war. He was one of the thousand men from Connecticut in that expedition under Col. Israel Putnam, only a handful of whom lived through the sickness and returned. His son, a lad of fourteen years, was one of the four who died, also Elisha North and two brothers, Moses and Thomas Wilcox. Joel Dibble was taken prisoner, 1755, near Fort Edward, with three others; he was fired upon from an ambush, and received four wounds. He lay a prisoner for five years, and, in response to a petition made by him to the General Assembly, he received from the colony, in consideration of his sufferings, the sum of twenty-five pounds.

The names of the twelve who lived to return home, some of whom we find also in our Revolutionary war, fifteen years later, are Lieut. John Wright, Benjamin Reeves (a half-brother of Judge Reeves, of Litchfield), John Doud, Ashbel Humphrey, Jacob Beach, Josiah Roys, Nathaniel Stanley, Jr., Stephen Tuttle, Munson Winchel, Charles Richards, John Wilcox, and John Musson.

Our town was first represented in the General Assembly in 1757, Deacon Gideon Thompson being the first representative. The next year, 1758, we sent two, as we have ever since, and the second year Deacon Moses Lyman and Deacon John Beach were sent. Of very many who were sent many times before 1800, Asaph Hall, Esq., served during twenty-four sessions, and Col. Ebenezer Naton for twenty-six sessions.

We find in the record of a town-meeting, April 12, 1762, one vote petitioning the Assembly for liberty to raise by a lottery two hundred dollars for mending and making the highways; also, the same year, Samuel Oviatt was released from paying his fine of forty shillings for killing a deer, although, as they say, he was "justly fined," but failed to get clear on account of his "ignorance in making his defense."

We first notice in 1771 that the words "exclusive of churchmen, Baptists, and Quakers" are introduced into the warnings for our town-meetings. This was continued for some years, not as showing any antagonism towards them, but to prevent their being called upon to support both their own church and the Congregational.

STOCKS.

In 1773 the selectmen were instructed to erect a public sign-post, and also, near by, a "pair of stocks."

THE REVOLUTION.

But we now approach a time in the history of our town full of interest. Our fathers assembled Sept. 20, 1774, and appointed a committee to correspond with the committees of our county and colony in regard to the present alarming situation of our affairs in North America. In December following the town, in most emphatic language, indorsed the action of the Continental Congress assembled in Philadelphia three months before. Boston was filled with British troops, sent over to crush out the spirit of liberty from the hearts of men who had resolved that from henceforth they would "call no man master."

The second census of which we have a record was taken this year, 1774. Our little town, which numbered 610 eighteen years before, had increased to 1098. At this time Litchfield had 2509; Hartford, 4881; New Haven, 8022; while Philadelphia, the largest town in America, had 25,000, and New York, 18,000.

The following year, 1775, witnessed the battle of Lexington, the capture of Ticonderoga by Ethan Allen and his little band,—among whom was Asaph Hall, of Goshen,—and the battle of Bunker Hill. Among the officers appointed at the May session of our Assembly this year, 1775, are the names of Oliver Wolcott, of Litchfield, colonel of the Seventeenth Regiment; Ebenezer Norton, lieutenant-colonel; and Epaphras Sheldon, major. In the list of appointments in April of the same year we find placed in command of the eighth company in the Fourth Regiment, then raised, John Sedgwick, captain; Wareham Gibbs and James Thomson, lieutenants. This was the company of men enlisted from Goshen and Torrington, under Capt. John Sedgwick, of Cornwall Hollow. They left Goshen for Ticonderoga May 31, 1775, and stopped the first night at Canaan. Capt. Sedgwick's house was burned that night, and the company marched forward the next day in charge of the lieutenants. He returned home, and his neighbors raised him another house in one week's time, and he joined his company, only to be compelled to leave them by illness.

There were twenty-eight Goshen men in this company, whose names are among our roll of Revolutionary soldiers. About one-half of them were very sick with the camp distemper, and one died, David Wright; none were killed in battle, and they returned at the expiration of the seven months for which they had enlisted.

We find two or three of them re-enlisting, during the winter after their return, in the regiment commanded by Col. Jonathan Burral, of Canaan. In this regiment, which was to march for Quebec in the winter of 1776, there were twenty-one Goshen men. In the company of Capt. Luther Stoddard, of Salisbury, were Lieut. Thomas Converse and nine men, and in the company of Capt. Titus Watson, of Norfolk, were Lieut. John Riley and ten men. The place of rendezvous and starting for Lieut. Converse and his nine men was the house of Daniel Miles, on East Street, and the spot, sacred to their memory, is now marked by an elm-tree, placed there this centennial year. They started on their cold winter march Feb. 1, 1776, and marched to Canaan, thence to Salisbury, and onward to Albany. They were accompanied nearly to Albany by Mr. Cyprian Collins, with a three-ox sled to carry their luggage. On their way up the river and lake they had to march through snow two feet deep, and one, John Musson, died of pleurisy. They reached Quebec the last of February, and there commenced their time of suffering with the smallpox. While still wholly unfit to march they were compelled to retreat, and their sufferings cannot be described. The ten men, with Lieut. John Riley, in the company of Capt. Watson also had terrible sufferings from sickness, of which four of their number died. There had been also one more death from sickness in Lieut. Converse's little band, and another, George Dear, was killed by a cannon-ball, which cut him nearly in two. Thus of the twenty-one men one was killed and six died, leaving only fourteen who returned at the expiration of the year for which they enlisted.

But while these twenty-one men were gone to Canada, Goshen was called upon to send forth many of her fathers, brothers, and sons, to suffer at New York and Long Island. In May, 1776, Capt. Stephen Goodwin, of East Street, was commissioned to raise a company in Goshen and Torrington to go to New York. Timothy Gaylord, of Norfolk, a nephew of Lieut. Gaylord, who fell in the French war, was his first lieutenant, and Jabez Wright, of Goshen, was ensign. There were forty-eight men from Goshen in the company. They left Goshen about June 1, 1776, and after reaching New York were quartered for a while in a large brick house near the Battery. During the time they were there the Declaration of Independence was read in the presence of the troops. With their brigade, they went across to Long Island about the middle of July, and were in view, but not themselves engaged, in the battle of Long Island. They were under Gen. Putnam's orders, and with him they safely crossed over to New York under cover of night and a dense fog.

Soon after the defeat of the American army, August 27th, this brigade, under Gen. Wadsworth, were placed two or three miles north of the city, and were immediately exposed to the fire of three British ships on East River. Succeeding after a while in escaping from their fire behind a ledge, they gathered in an orchard surrounded by a stone wall. Here they soon saw a body of troops coming towards them from the north. Their uniform was not the red coats of the British, and their officers thought them American troops. Maj. Willis, of Connecticut, reached out his hand to welcome the supposed friends, but the wily Hessian officer pulled him off his horse. Wadsworth ordered a retreat, but the Hessian fire commenced, and many officers and soldiers were killed or taken prisoners. Lieut. Gaylord had his thigh broken by a musket-ball, and he, with seven Goshen men, were taken prisoners. Solomon Moore, of Goshen, fell, wounded, and was in the act of surrendering when John Norton, of Goshen, relieved him of his gun, and he succeeded in escaping. But the Hessian officer, too, met his fate, for while pursuing the flying Americans he reached the west wall of the orchard, where he overtook Sergt. Salmon Agard (an officer in Capt. Griswold's company from Torringford). The Hessian officer ordered him to surrender, but Sergt. Agard cocked his gun, whirled around, and shot the Hessian dead in a moment. Those who escaped soon met Gen. Wadsworth, fell into rank, and recognized Gen. Putnam coming, who ordered them to Kingsbridge. That night the Goshen men, who had lost almost everything in their retreat, helped themselves to somebody's cooking utensils, and took refuge by the side of a stack of hay. They found a rock with a hollow in it, where they placed some flour, and brought water from a spring in their hats, and in the bright moonlight baked their bread over a fire, and universally agreed it did taste good.

Of the forty-eight Goshen men in this company none were killed, but six were taken prisoners and five died of sickness. It is supposed that the living returned to Goshen in December, 1776, but there were very many other men from Goshen at the same time in our army at New York.

In August, 1776, Gen. Washington urgently requested Connecticut to send him all the standing militia west of the Connecticut River. The Assembly of our State promptly complied with the request (our representatives then being Ebenezer Norton and Asaph Hall). Thus Connecticut sent to Washington at that time fourteen regiments, numbering ten thousand men, and it appears that, counting those from the east of the river, and those at other points, there were in the field twenty thousand men from our little State.

All the men belonging to the two militia companies of Goshen at that time fit for service were called out and sent to New York. There is some uncertainty in regard to the names of the Goshen militia who were sent to New York. The veterans living in 1841 gave us the names of only fourteen men, headed by Capt. Medad Hills, Lieut. Matthew Smith, and Ensign Asa Francis, but they also inform us there were others, swelling the number to forty or fifty. From another source we have evidence that there were enough men, in addition to the fourteen whose names appeared on the roll, to swell the number above fifty. From the last information in our possession, we may assume that the militia of Goshen were sent to New York in sufficient number to show a roll of one hundred and twenty men absent at this time in the army. This was out of a population of ten hundred and ninety-eight, and it was truly a dark time in our history.

In our militia company ordered to New York was one man greatly bereaved, Ensign, afterwards Capt., Asa Francis. Three of his children died while he was absent in New York. They died on the 2d, 4th, and 7th of September, and the poor distracted wife and mother was at the time in a state of mental derangement.

These Goshen militia were in one engagement, and saw the Hessians in their attack upon their friends in the orchard. They too suffered much from sickness, but were all fortunate enough to return home the following winter.

The following spring, 1777, began the enlistment of men for three years or during the war, and the town of Goshen offered a bounty of ten pounds to every soldier who enlisted as above, to be followed by a similar bounty at the end of the first and second years of service. They also appointed a committee to take care of the families of absent soldiers. We have the names of eleven who enlisted at this time, who entered the Continental army and disappeared from our view for some years.

In the spring of 1777 there was a small draft of five Goshen men, whose names we have. They went to Horse Neck (Greenwich), thirty miles above New York, and were gone but three months. In April of this year a draft was also made from the militia of our town for six to ten men, who went to Peekskill, but returned the latter part of May.

But before their return the quiet of a Goshen Sabbath, April 27, 1777, was disturbed by the sound of distant cannonading. It was the heavy guns of the British ships at the burning of Danbury. The cannon were heard in the morning, but the people assembled as usual for meeting, and Mr. Newell preached. A messenger arrived at noon with the tidings, and the drum was beat upon the steps of the church. All dispersed to their homes, and a number started for the scene of action. The names of fifteen who went are preserved, but the British had left before their arrival, and they had only such booty as they found in plundering the houses of a few Tories.

We have next in order a draft of fifty-nine men and two commissioned officers, making sixty-one Goshen men, ordered by Col. Epaphras Sheldon to be ready to start at the shortest notice, under Lieuts. Miles Norton and Isaac Pratt, of Goshen. We have here, as nowhere else, the roll of names drafted in the unmistakable handwriting of Epaphras Sheldon. In this roll are thirty-two names not included in our list of one hundred and sixty-two Revolutionary soldiers, because we have no positive knowledge that they served, although it is almost certain they did so the previous year, when all our militia were sent to New York. This draft bears date July 22, 1777, and places the sixty-one Goshen men, with forty-two Harwinton men, under the command of Capt. Nathaniel Copley.

In the midst of all this there was a town-meeting, called Sept. 25, 1777, to encourage men to enlist in the regiment of Gen. Oliver Wolcott, of Litchfield, which was forming from several towns in this vicinity. It was hoped that Gen. Burgoyne would be overwhelmed with the numbers that Gen. Gates would muster, and thus be compelled to surrender.

Some time previous there had been a draft of six militiamen from Goshen to join Gen. Gates at the North, and to serve three months. These six men, whose names we have, were in the thickest of the fight of Oct. 7, 1777, under Arnold. His attack upon Burgoyne was most impetuous, and these men were brought into action about noon. The fight was a terrible one; each army was by turn victorious, but when night came the Americans were masters of the field. The six soldiers from our town, on the day of the fight, knew nothing of their friends from Goshen who had volunteered in Gen. Wolcott's regiment, and some of whom were there and fighting in the same battle.

Only eight of these volunteers are now known. Among them, Capt. Asaph Hall and Lieut. Moses Lyman arrived on the evening after the battle. Mr. Cyrian Collins also reached the camp at nightfall, and, searching for his son Ambrose first among the living, but in vain, found him, as he supposed, among the dead, and was about to remove him, when the words "Father, father," in the well-known voice of his son, brought such joy to his heart as rarely comes to mortals in this world. The volunteers who had been able to join Gen. Wolcott previous to October 7th were also in the thickest of that terrible battle, which did so much in deciding the destinies of our country.

Our Goshen men witnessed the surrender of Burgoyne, with his seven thousand men, a few days after, and were soon permitted to return home, with hearts greatly cheered and encouraged.

There was another draft on Goshen to send men to Peekskill in September of this year, the names of only four of them being remembered. Still later in the fall a band of volunteers from Goshen went to Peekskill, under Capt. Timothy Stanley. We have the names of only ten of their number.

There was not much call for our militia after the fall of 1777. The quota required of our town for the Continental army was promptly furnished to the close of the war.

We have on record the names of thirty, in all, who served in the Continental army, some of whom served seven or eight years. There was also a company called the "Household company," composed of officers and men who were by law exempt from military duty. It was commanded by Capt. Asaph Hall, and held itself in readiness for any emergency.

It was in 1778 that the massacre of Wyoming occurred,—that scene of barbarity almost without a parallel. That beautiful valley of Pennsylvania then belonged to Connecticut, and was settled chiefly from our State. They had sent three hundred of their men into the Continental army, and while in this defenseless condition they were invaded by a large body of Indians and Tories. When the little band of defenders were overwhelmed, they were slaughtered and scalped by the Indians; many of those who surrendered were butchered, regardless of the rules of war; some of the retreating were lured back by promises of safety, and then murdered; and the torch was applied to their houses. Those of the women and children who escaped made their way through the wilderness to their former homes in Connecticut after untold sufferings.

There were two families of Goshen who had gone to Wyoming in 1774, James Frisbie and Stephen Tuttle. Mr. Frisbie's son James was killed; he, with a younger son, was taken prisoner. They escaped the fate of many; were taken to Canada, and afterwards released. Stephen Tuttle is supposed to have been killed in the massacre, as nothing was known of him afterward. But there was one who fell there of whom we have positive knowledge, Ichabod Tuttle. His family were living here, and of him we learn by some surmise that "he was last seen flying for his life" from the merciless savages. There is no doubt of his fate. He was nevermore to enter his home in Goshen,—a home darkened by a sorrow so deep that the coming of a little son, who was born a few days after, could hardly bring light into that household, and well was he named, like his father, Ichabod,—"the glory is departed." Nothing in our history moves the heart of an American more than the mention of Wyoming, that beautiful valley we so loved, for evermore immortalized by the poet Campbell in his "Gertrude of Wyoming."

During this year (1778) Goshen promptly furnished her quota of ten men, whose names are not known. The system of classing came into use, and a class of thirteen was sent in 1782, and four more recruits soon after. The war was really ended by 1782, and the last British soldier left in November, 1783.

During the later years of the war our town, like other towns, was much troubled for want of salt. The town took measures to have ox-teams started for Boston to bring this much-needed article to Goshen:

"Daniel Miles, Capt. Beach, & Samuel Kellogg were instructed to transport the Salt now at Boston, provided by this State for this Town, to this town, in the most prudent manner they can, at the expense of the town, and distribute the same to each family in this town according to their number, they paying said Committee the price said salt stands the town in when delivered here."

All these toils and sufferings were cheerfully endured that ours might be a free and independent nation.

Among the many votes characteristic of these times was one in 1752, in which they declared themselves "uneasy under the ministerial performances of Rev. Mr. Heaton, and requested him to desist from the work of the gospel ministry in this place;" and in 1771 and 1773 the selectmen were instructed to grant to those who wished "the priviledge of building Sabbath-day houses and horse-houses." During one of the most trying years of the Revolution, 1777, at a town-meeting held in September, it was "Voted, that Fisk Beach be Chorister to tune the Psalm, and be head chorister, and that Wait Hinman be assistant chorister."

Also,

"Voted, that those persons, men and women, in the galleries who are skilled in singing psalms are desired to use the front seats in the galleries, both in the front and side galleries, to carry on the divine service of singing psalms."

At a town-meeting held in 1781 it was "Voted, that Adna Beach sit in the high pew near the pulpit stairs, and Capt. Edmund Beach sit in the opposite pew."

In September following this town

"Voted, To dignify the seats in the meeting-house; and that churchmen and Anabaptists be seated according to what they agree to pay."

We do not know much that occurred in our native town during the ten or fifteen years succeeding our Revolutionary war, save that our fathers pursued the even tenor of their way, depending chiefly for income on the tilling of the soil.

It is worthy of mention that there were twenty-eight blacksmiths in Goshen during the Revolution. Not only were guns made and stocked here, but many, if not all, our farming implements were made in our town. There were two lawyers here, whether kept busy by quarrels at home we cannot tell; but we are sure of one thing,—Goshen people never lacked in independence of character.

We find illustration of the laws and integrity of the magistrates of that time in the following cases from a record of trials:

"The King v^s Reuben Sweet. On Feb. 21, 1775, Reuben Sweet, of winchester, in S^d county, Personally appeared, and confest himself Guilty of Playing Cards, Contrary to the Statute law of this Colony, on the 16th Day of March last Past, at the Dwelling House of Joseph Hoskins, in Torrington, in S^d County, whereupon this court gives Gives Judgement that S^d Ruben Sweet pay a fine of ¾ Lawful money to the Treasurer of S^d Torrington, together with one shilling cost.

"The one shilling is paid.

"EBEN^r NORTON,

"The King versus Oliver Griswold. Oliver Griswold, of Goshen, son of Zacheus Griswold, Jr. (a minor), appeared in court, and Confest himself Guilty of breach of Law; by profanely playing on the Sabbath, in the time of publick Worship in the meeting-house in S^d Goshen; on the 4th Day of April last; in voluntarially smiling on the Cloths of one that was near him, and Lawfing and wispering; whereupon this Court gives judgement, for the S^d Oliver Griswold to pay a fine of 3s. Lawful Money to the Treasurer of the Town of S^d Goshen, for the use of S^d Town, and 1s. for this Judgement.

"This Judgement is satisfied.

"GOSHEN, June 14, 1775."

It seems a matter of surprise that the population of Goshen should have increased so much during the Revolutionary war. From 1774 to 1782, only eight years, the increase was from 1098 to 1439, a gain of 341. Hartford had only reached 5313, and New Haven had lost about 100. Middletown had lost 262, while Litchfield had gained 509, having a population of 3018.

We do not know the census of Goshen between 1782 and 1800, an interval of eighteen years; but we are surprised to find it in 1800 but 1493, a gain of only 54 in eighteen years. This can only be accounted for by the fact that emigration to the West had prevented our increase to a great extent.

Some things surprise us if we may assume that our early records of births, deaths, and marriages are complete. Three deaths (all in one family) are recorded during 1739, the first year of our existence, and none the next year; in the following year, 1741, there was one death; then there was a period of five years in which death did not visit our little colony, and the sum of deaths during the first ten years is only seven.

But there are five births recorded our first year; the next year six, and some years twelve and thirteen, making, in the same first ten years of our history, seventy-eight births against seven deaths.

Then the record of marriages is a good showing. The first couple married in Goshen were Daniel Harris, Jr., and Abigail Fanning. Rev. Mr. Heaton married them the first month he was here as a "probationer." One more couple followed their example that year, the next year four couples, and during our first ten years there were 22 marriages. The next ten years recorded 25 deaths, 45 marriages, and 173 births. This was with an average population of less than 610, as shown in 1756. Starting at 1759 (during the French war), the next ten years show, in a population estimated at 850 (as an average number): marriages, 42; deaths, 33; and births, 227. This must be called our increasing period, when almost 25 per cent. were added to our population by the excess of births over our deaths. Perhaps the next ten years, however, will exhibit almost as rapid increase. This is from 1769 to 1779, when our population, from the census of 1774, —viz., 1098, and that of 1782 of 1439,—would justify the estimate of 1100 as the average number of our inhabitants. This period shows: marriages, 23; deaths, 21; and births, 268, making an increase of 22 per cent. Now we will venture to suppose that our population in 1740 was 240 souls; in 1782 it was 1439. The gain during the first forty-three years of our history was 1199. There had been during the forty-three years 89 deaths and 784 births. The gain by births, then, was 695, leaving 458 of the gain to be accounted for by the coming in of outsiders; and, of course, to this 458 must be added enough to make up for all who had removed from town. Our population at the close of the Revolutionary war was considerably larger than at the present time.

Of the forty-six first owners of Goshen, we find only sixteen who remained permanently here, and those sixteen had all passed away before 1800. Two of them, Abraham and Andrew Parmele, had lingered until 1795. Among the many deaths during that century which were regarded as public calamities were those of Deacon Moses Lyman, Deacon John Beach, Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin, Asaph Hall, Esq., and Col. Ebenezer Norton, to which I might add the names of many other noble fathers of that time.

THE FIRST MERCHANT.

If we glance briefly at the business of our town in its early history, we find our knowledge less than we desire. It is known that wheat and rye were raised much more extensively than at the present time, our families using flour made from their own grain.

The first merchant in Goshen was John Smith, who had a store in East Street in 1745. Mr. Smith removed to the Centre in 1750, where he afterwards kept tavern, and finally failed in business. The next one of whom we know was Mr. Uri Hill, in West Street. In his store there we find a man as clerk who afterwards comes to the view as the most noted merchant of Goshen. His name was Ephraim Starr. Mr. Hill died, and Mr. Starr married his widow in November, 1769. Mr. Starr was then twenty-four years old, and his wife the same age. He was greatly prospered in business. Daniel Miles was also a merchant in East Street in 1778.

Mr. Starr built the Starr House, now owned by Mr. James Wadhams, before 1770, and there can be no doubt that there has been more money made in the part of that house then used as a store than in any other building in Goshen. His trade was extensive before and during the war, but in 1783 he secured a large quantity of goods which the Tories sold very cheap when they were compelled to leave New York. These he had conveyed to Goshen, and having the entire trade of Goshen, Cornwall, Norfolk, Torrington, and perhaps half that of Litchfield, he accumulated a large fortune, and retired from business in 1793.

Before this time, Elihu Lewis and Birdseye Norton had a store in East Street, and Lewis & Lyman were in partnership by the time Mr. Starr retired. This was Mr. Moses Lyman, whom many of us remember, and who in after-years was in company with his brother, Erastus Lyman. They were long in business on the corner near the house of Mr. Moses Lyman. The firm of Wadhams & Carrington, then Wadhams & Thomson, occupied the corner near the house of Moses Gray, and Birdseye Norton continued to trade in a store built near his new brick house. This house was erected in 1804, and was the most expensive house ever built in Goshen.

During the time Mr. Starr was in business, about 1783, there was a mercantile company formed in town, consisting of thirty-two men. One object of their uniting was to make sale of white-ash oars. The making of these boat-oars had become quite a business in our town, and complaint was made that Mr. Starr would not purchase their oars. But this mercantile company was not a success, and one after another they retired from it, leaving a large quantity of oars unsold. But their agent in New York, Mr. Holbrook, one of the company, was fortunate enough to meet an old captain of a French ship, to whom he made sale of the whole lot, much to the relief of many people in Goshen.

While we do not follow the history of mercantile business farther, we should glance at another business which has long been of great importance, the making and selling of Goshen cheese. The trade in cheese in early times, so far as we can learn, was like that in grain or other articles,—each man took his cheese away from Goshen and disposed of it as best he could. This trade in its present shape had its beginning in an experiment of Mr. Alexander Norton's, who took the first Goshen cheese to the South in 1792. He was successful, and continued in the business ten or fifteen years. But Birdseye Norton soon engaged in the trade, and was followed by other merchants, M. & E. Lyman and Wadhams & Thomson, and no doubt some others at an early date; but the trade in cheese never assumed its present proportions until it was extended largely beyond the limits of our town by the firm of A. Miles & Son.

We have been accustomed to think that we make more cheese now than our fathers and grandfathers did in 1799, but this is very doubtful. There were only one hundred and two less of horse and neat cattle in our town in 1799 than in 1875, and in 1806 the number of cows—viz., 1869—must be as large as are now kept for cheese-making. It is noticeable that in 1798 there were 646 horses in Goshen, against the number of 250 in 1875. The time for sheep seems to have been 1827, when there were in town 5528 sheep.

To Goshen also belongs the notoriety of originating the manufacture of pine-apple cheese in this country, in 1808, by Lewis M. Norton, and at a later date, 1843, the starting of the first cheese-factory in our country. It is believed that Goshen cheese had attained its high reputation as early as 1800, if not sooner. This business has added much to the wealth and prosperity of our town. The following tribute by Mr. Barber, in his "Historical Collections of 1836," is from one competent and impartial:

"Large quantities of cheese are annually made, the fame of which is widely and justly celebrated, and the inhabitants are generally in prosperous circumstances. In neatness in and about their dwellings, and in the appearance of general comfort and prosperity, they are not exceeded, if equaled, by any town in the State."

There was a furnace or forge in Canada village for some years previous to 1813, the iron ore being brought from Salisbury. The woolen-factory business was started in West Goshen in 1813 by the firm Wadhams, Thomson, Walter & Cobb. This business was carried on by different firms for many years, until more recently changed to a cotton-yarn factory. From first to last it has not proved as profitable as could be desired.

In 1810 our population had reached 1641, a gain of 148 in ten years, while Litchfield had reached its climax, 4639, outnumbering the city of Hartford, which, without East Hartford, had only 3955, 104 less than Litchfield, and New Haven had only 5772. Passing to the census of 1820, Goshen had fallen off to 1586, a loss of 55; Litchfield lost 29; Hartford had overtaken Litchfield and showed 4726; and New Haven had 7147 inhabitants. Emigration to the West must account for this our first decrease in number.

WAR OF 1812.

We have passed 1812, the period of our last war with England. We were not called upon for great sacrifices at that time, but we to-day make honorable mention of three men from Goshen who served in that war. Their names are Harlan Humphrey, John Wilcox, and Alfred C. Thomson. Mr. Humphrey still lives. There are two others now residing here not natives of Goshen who did service in that war, viz., Thomas Robinson and Abial R. Bragg.

In 1819 there occurred a meeting here of too much importance to pass by without notice. It was the occasion of the ordination of the first missionaries to the Sandwich Islands, Messrs. Bingham and Thurston. It was a movement great in its results upon those islands, now so thoroughly Christianized.

Fifty years later, on Sept. 28, 1869, a most interesting meeting was also held here in memory of the one in 1819, at which Mr. Bingham, one of the two missionaries, was present.

In 1823 our Goshen Academy was erected, and in it was established a school of a high order, which has done much towards giving intellectual ability to the people of Goshen.

GOSHEN ACADEMY.

Previous to 1823 there had been a select school in Goshen, called some of the time an academy, for in the Litchfield Monitor, Jan. 6, 1807, a "Mr. Joseph Edwards" advertised himself as teacher of Goshen Academy. Our fathers, only four years after they came here, in 1738, leased their school right for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, and voted that the proceeds should be used to support two schools in the east part of the town, one in the south, and one in the west part of the town. The next year, 1743, they appointed "Deacon Baldwin, Amos Thomson, and Daniel Richards a committee to hire a school-master or masters, or a school-mistress or mistresses, to teach school."

It is not certain that any schools were taught here during the first ten years of our history; but from 1748 to 1800 our schools afforded a fair education in common English branches, excepting grammar, although geography was little taught; but between 1800 and 1825 the standard of education here had greatly advanced. It is doubtful whether there has been much advance in our common schools in Goshen since 1825.

However this may be, it is certain that the Goshen school-boy of 1755, then at the age of five years, looked back from his stand-point in 1825, at the age of seventy-five, and could truly boast that he had learned something. He remembered back seventy years, when he first saw a stove, an open one. He also heard then of lightning-rods, and wished we had one on our house in Goshen. In 1760 he is surprised to see people wear collars on their shirts, and hears that ladies in some places ride on a thing with wheels, called a chaise. In 1770 he asks his father if we cannot have one of those wooden clocks, so as to know what time it is in a dark day (for he knows they cannot afford one of those expensive brass ones from England). On the 4th of July, 1776, he starts for East Street, to help the boys put up a liberty-pole; but when he comes home he sees that his mother has been weeping, and learns in the evening that father has made up his mind to leave them all and go to the war. He makes up his mind that if father goes he shall go too. In 1780, after their return home, with his bride at church, he sees some one carrying a thing over their head, which he learns is called an "umbrillo." Twelve years later he tells his wife he means to get the start of anybody in this town, and have a carpet for their best room; but she thinks they must be queer things to walk on. In 1795 he tells her he has made up his mind to lay aside his knee-breeches and wear what they call "pantaloons." In 1807 he hears that a Mr. Fulton ran a boat up North River by steam. In 1815 he buys one of Terry's clocks to regulate his old verge watch by,—a watch that has uniformly deceived one hour a day in time, and which he found it necessary to regulate anew every time he wound it. In 1817, feeble and aged as he finds he is becoming, he is glad to find a stove in the meeting-house, so he need not go to the "Sabba-day" house at noon. This year his son, just returned from purchasing goods in New York, tells him he has sailed on a steamboat from New York to New Haven. He is astonished at his son's recklessness in thus risking his life. In 1822 his son makes him a present of a steel pen, which he likes, his hand having become too tremulous to make a quill-pen. In 1832, at the age of eighty-two, his son tells him of his first ride on a railroad, and produces what he insists is the greatest discovery ever made, viz., a box of matches. The boy of 1755 is indeed astonished to see that old tinder-box, steel, and flint laid aside nevermore to be used.

No longer a boy, but an old man, he goes to his rest, and it is not strange that some of his children, feeling the life and spring inspired by the world's rapid progress, should go forth from the old home and help to build up and people the towns and cities of the great West.

But we have reached the time of our greatest population, 1830, when we numbered one thousand seven hundred and thirty-four, a gain of one hundred and forty-eight in ten years. Litchfield had decreased, Hartford nearly doubled, and New Haven grown one-half.

It is not strange that the people of our town in 1838 were resolved to notice in a becoming manner the centennial of the settlement of Goshen. There was a large and deeply-interested assemblage in this church on that day, Sept. 28, 1838. An address was delivered by Rev. Grant Powers, then a minister here,—an address well worthy of the occasion and the town. It will doubtless be preserved so long as Goshen exists. Some few Revolutionary soldiers were then living and present. There are none of them here to-day. They have passed from sight in that long procession which is filing into our cemeteries,—a procession of which we form a part.

Some are with us to-day not less brave or patriotic than our sires of old, who gave themselves to their country in the hour of peril at a later day. Perchance some of them may linger, with feeble step and tones tremulous with age and emotion, and tell a touching story to our children one-half a century from now.

Glancing backward again, it was in 1830, or a little later, that the speaker first looked upon, with a curious gaze, what he had often heard of before but never seen, viz., an Irishman. I do not think before 1835 an Irish girl was ever seen in Goshen. The change in this respect is striking. The sons and daughters of an island well called the "Emerald Isle," in its verdure and beauty, have enabled America to make her wonderful improvements. They now form an important portion of our population, and we may well ask how America could have reached her present position without the aid of these her adopted citizens.

There were a few families from Ireland settled here between 1830 and 1840, and we find from the census of 1870 that, out of our population of 1224, 170 are natives of Ireland and England; those born in Germany, 32; in France, 21; in Switzerland, 3; making, in all, 226 born over the wave. The number of their children (native Americans) I do not know. It seems remarkable that during the six years since 1870 more than 350 persons have removed from Goshen.

THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

As we approach 1860, that time so full of deep interest to us all, we pause astonished at the magnitude of the events through which we passed. We all remember how our first little band of five resolved to rally round our flag,—a flag that had been one short month before desecrated at Fort Sumter. On the morning of May 24, 1861, as they were about to leave to join their regiment at Hartford, many friends assembled to give them the parting hand and blessing. These five pioneers did good service for three years or more, and were all spared to return.

There were twenty-eight others from Goshen who enlisted in different regiments before the close of 1861, making thirty-three in all. The next year, 1862, there were forty-nine Goshen men enlisted, forty-seven in the company commanded by James Q. Price, and two others in another company in the same regiment, the Nineteenth; in the company of Capt. Rice were fifty-three men from Torrington, making one hundred and two. This was the largest cluster of Goshen men together during the war; and when they left, on Aug. 21, 1862, and marched to their camp at Litchfield, we found the war had become a startling reality to us. Those men, who had left all the joys of happy homes on these hills of Goshen, carried with them our prayers and blessings. We followed them with anxious hearts during their eventful career. They were called through terrible scenes of blood, and when they who lived through were discharged in 1865, their's was a sad, although a heroic, record, for many a dear familiar face was nevermore to be seen on earth.

During their service 9 recruits joined them from Goshen, making 58 of our men in that company. Of these 58 men, 8 were killed and 11 more died of sickness, making 19 out of 58, almost one-third,—a record that tells its own tale.

In 1863 there were 17 men enlisted: the 9 above, who were recruits in Capt. Rice's company, and 8 men who joined other companies. The whole number of enlisted men, counting two who enlisted in a New York regiment, and one who enlisted in a Vermont regiment, amounts to 101. Of this number there were killed, 12; died of sickness, 16; 1 killed in an explosion on the railway, making 29 in all, or almost 29 per cent., truly a sad record. Besides these 101 men, there were 46 substitutes furnished by Goshen men during the war. Of their fate we have no means of knowing.*

Goshen furnished 147 men in the war, her quota being 122, which makes 25 men above her quota. Large as was this number, we cannot forbear on this occasion looking back to the Revolution, to inquire in which struggle did we play the most important part. There were, all told, 231,771 men in our Revolutionary army; but in the Rebellion our army numbered 2,688,523, eleven times as many. Connecticut furnished in the Revolution 31,939, which was one-seventh of the whole army, and Goshen furnished 1 man out of every 1485 in the whole army. In the Rebellion Connecticut furnished 55,775 men, or about one-forty-eighth of the whole army, and Goshen furnished one man in every 14,278. Our country was so much less populous in the time of the Revolution that our little town of 1098 inhabitants had to bear twelve times as large a share in filling up the army as fell to her during the war of the Rebellion. But let it be remembered that our present population is not 200 greater than during the Revolution; and while in the Revolution we sent 1 man for every 6 inhabitants, we in the Rebellion sent 1 man for every 8½ inhabitants. The term of service, too, in our late war was much longer.

But the most significant fact is the much greater loss of life in our late war. Of 162 men in the Revolution, but 2 are known to have been killed, and 15 died of sickness, which is about 10 per cent.

The sad record of our rebellion is almost three times as great, viz., twenty-nine per cent. Alike those patriots of the past and those of our own time claim our deepest interest.

* Among the many natives of Goshen residing elsewhere who did good service in our late war, we may mention Albert Wadhams, Esq., who served in a Hartford regiment, and who has, unlike any others remembered, returned to live in his native town.

INCIDENTS.

Among the incidents of the past, the burning of the "Blue House," as it was called, which occurred in 1767, was the most startling. It was struck by lightning, two young men in it were killed, the house caught fire from the lightning in three places, and burnt in spite of the pouring rain, almost burning those who were struck down as well as the dead.

The hail-storm of July 15, 1799, was the most severe ever known in Goshen. The hail-stones were the size of hens' eggs, destroying all crops, and covering the ground in the forests with small limbs cut off by the stones. The large crops of grass standing were cut to pieces, and wholly disappeared. One young man was almost killed; covered with blood and bruises, he at last found a shelter.

The census of 1840 cannot be found in Washington, but in 1850 the population was 1457, a loss of 277 in twenty years; in 1860 it was 1381, a loss in ten years of 76; and in 1870 it was 1224, a loss in ten years of 157.

It seems a matter of surprise that, while our early fathers kept a record of births, deaths, and marriages, their sons should have kept none, and that from about 1789 up to 1855, a period of sixty-six years of our greatest population, there remains no record, except for five years a partial record, from 1847 to 1852. It is a disappointment deeply felt now, but what will it be to those who will vainly search for that record in the centuries to come? This long period, therefore, remains a blank, only relieved by a private record of deaths kept by Mr. Luther Beecher from 1803 to 1824, a period of twenty years. Nor can we thank him as we would to-day for his service; and it would be most unjust should I omit to mention that honored father, Lewis M. Norton, who passed away in 1860, for to him we owe very much of our knowledge of our past history.

Our records are perfect since 1855. Looking over these twenty-one years, to 1876, there have been during that time 200 marriages, 612 births, and 384 deaths. The largest number of marriages was in 1856, when 23 couples were married. The largest number of births was two years after, in 1858, when there were 38 births; and two years later still gives the largest number of deaths, viz., 30.

The largest family in Goshen is thought to be that of one of our first settlers, Mr. Simeon Humphrey, who had nineteen children. The family of Miles Norton numbered eighteen children. If we may venture to estimate our average population at 1295, it would be safe to say that during the one hundred and thirty-eight years since Goshen was settled there have not been less than 1242 marriages and 3726 births, while to our graveyards have been borne 2311 of the dead.

From the record, in the early part of this century it appears that Goshen people lived on an average thirty-eight years, but for the last twenty-one years the record seems to make the period of life in Goshen thirty-three years.

POST-ROUTES, RIDES, AND OFFICES.

We borrowed from our mother-country all our early improvements, and one of the greatest of them, the post-office, did not exist in England until the time of Cromwell, in 1656. Charles I. had, it is true, in 1635, established a "running-post" from London to Edinburgh, to go that four hundred miles and back in six days. Not until 1784, when as a town we were thirty-six years old, was there a general post-office in England. And at this time William Penn had established regular posts from Philadelphia through to Maryland, posting notices of time of starting upon the doors of churches. But twelve years before, in 1672, a messenger was started to carry letters between Boston and New York via Hartford; and he was required to make the round trip in one month. Doubtless it was through a wilderness much of the way, with no bridges across the rivers. New York was made a general letter office in 1711.

In 1754, Dr. Franklin was appointed in charge of the post-office in America. During the twenty-five years previous to this time, it had required six weeks to go and return between Philadelphia and Boston. Dr. Franklin reduced this time to three weeks. But at this time, 1763, it took seventeen days for the mail-coach to go from London to Edinburgh, and so late as 1812 it took the mail-coaches six days to run from Paris to Geneva, three hundred and ninety miles. In 1766, ten years before the Revolution, what were called "flying-machines" (swift wagons) were put upon the route between New York and Philadelphia, which ran the eighty-eight miles in the time, then astonishingly short, of two days. Just before the Revolution, in 1775, a postmaster-general was appointed, but we do not know how many offices had then been established. Fourteen years after 1789, when we were first fairly organized as a nation, there were but seventy-five post-offices in all our country. There were a few in Connecticut, but more in Litchfield County.

In the Courant of 1764 we find letters advertised for persons, more (women had scarcely any letters in those days) for men, in Salisbury, New Hartford, and other towns in this county. Two years later, 1766, as we learn in Mr. Kilbourn's "History of Litchfield," "Mr. William Stanton was a post-rider between Hartford and Litchfield. It is supposed he did not go as often as once a week, nor do we know that he brought any letters for the Goshen fathers as far as Litchfield. We are left wholly in the dark as to how they obtained their mail from our post-office in Hartford. The first notice of any post-rider going through Goshen is in 1789, when Jehiel Saxton, a post-rider between New Haven and Lennox, passed through, as we hear, at 'stated intervals.'" But those intervals are not stated to us. But the next year, as Kilbourn tells us, "one of these primitive letter-carriers commenced his long and lonely ride over the almost interminable succession of hills between Litchfield court-house and New York, leaving each place once a fortnight. That was a proud day for Litchfield." But a prouder day was at hand, for a post-office was established in Litchfield March 20, 1793, and Benjamin Tallmadge appointed postmaster. Thus, after fifty-five years' existence as a town, our letters and papers were in 1793 deposited in Litchfield. The next year, 1794, we find, for the first time in our history, the way opened for Goshen people to receive once a week their mail. In the "Litchfield Monitor," March 28, 1794, Mr. Ebenezer Burr, of Norfolk, advertises himself as a "post-rider from Litchfield, through Goshen, Norfolk, and Canaan, to Salisbury, and solicits patronage as such; but requests all who need his services as county surveyor to call upon Mondays and Tuesdays, as he shall be away the rest of the week." No doubt by the above, or similar accommodation, our town was favored until August, 1805, when the Goshen post-office was established, and Erastus Lyman appointed the first postmaster.

The office was established in Norfolk in 1804, but not in Torrington until April 1, 1813. The post-office was established in East Goshen Nov. 17, 1819, David L. Parmele postmaster, with a salary of seven dollars, afterwards reduced to five dollars. This post-office was discontinued Oct. 18, 1838.

The North Goshen post-office was established June 11, 1832, Putnam Bailey postmaster; and it was discontinued June 12, 1838.

The West Goshen post-office was established July 10, 1849, Frederick Miles postmaster.

The seventy-five post-offices in our country in 1789 had increased in 1794 to four hundred and fifty, and when Goshen first had an office, in 1805, the number had risen to fifteen hundred and fifty-eight.

We may assume that Mr. Burr, the Norfolk post-rider, began in 1794, and brought the mail weekly to those who employed him. But we next find that we had one of that primitive class of letter-carriers living here in the Centre, Ephraim Leach, or "Pony Leach," as he was called. He went weekly from Litchfield to Canaan from before 1800 (as we suppose) to 1809, or later; when another post-rider, Benjamin Beach, brought the papers, and probably letters also, from Norfolk through North Goshen and Cornwall

Hollow. But we have now reached the era of turnpikes, although we find no evidence of any stage running on these turnpikes until the winter of 1812–13; then, for the first time, a stage appears in Goshen, running weekly from New Haven to Albany. But we do not know that the mail was carried on this stage until 1816, when it was carried once a week. In 1817, and for two years after, it ran with mail twice a week, and in 1820 three times a week. In 1821 commenced our daily stage and mail. This was in connection with a daily steamboat from New York to New Haven. And now Goshen found herself upon a great route of travel, with a four-horse stage running through daily, and sometimes extra stages put upon the route, loaded with passengers from New York City en route to Albany to attend the winter sessions of the Legislature there. A branch route was established through East Goshen to Norfolk, connecting also with Albany there, with sometimes a four-horse stage upon it, and both lines using four-horse or two-horse stages as occasion required. These stages continued up to about 1840. During these years, much of the time, a stage ran weekly through to Hartford from Sharon. But all these stages were discontinued when the Housatonic Railroad was completed to New Milford in 1839, and to West Cornwall in 1842, giving us almost always since a daily mail.

Pine-apple Cheese.—Lewis M. Norton, of Goshen, Conn., was the maker of the first pine-apple cheese made in this country. He commenced making them in 1809, having seen a portion of an imported one, and obtained a patent for the process the following year.

Continuing to make from his dairy alone until 1845, he then erected a cheese-factory, the first, it is believed, in America. This factory still stands, and here have been made usually from ten thousand to fifteen thousand cheeses in number annually, weighing from five to six pounds each. While comparatively few pine-apple cheeses are in this county, the number of cheese-factories erected in this country since 1845 for making common cheese is large, and the quantity of cheese manufactured in them is enormous.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

THIS church was organized in November, 1740, and at the same time Rev. Stephen Heaton was ordained pastor. The following is a list of pastors from the organization of the church to the present time: Stephen Heaton, 1740–53; Abel Newel, 1755–81; Josiah Sherman, 1783–89; Asahel Hooker, 1791–1810; Joseph Harvey, 1810–25; Francis H. Case, 1826–28; Grant Powers, 1829–41; Lavalette Perrin, 1843–57; Joel F. Bingham, 1859–60; William T. Doubleday, 1864–71; Timothy A. Hazen, 1873, present pastor.

The present deacons are Marcus D. F. Smith, Edward Norton, and Francis M. Wadhams.

The first church edifice was erected in 1744, and was used until 1770. The second was erected in 1720, and occupied until 1832, when it was succeeded by the present building. Before the erection of the first church building worship was held in a house which stood by the "old ash-tree." So says Rev. Grant Powers in his address. The church edifice was repaired in 1874.

WEST GOSHEN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was organized in the winter of 1797–98 with the following members: Asaph Wright and wife, Helmot Kellogg and wife, Melzar Howe and wife, Sarah Ives (known as Aunt Sal), Pamelia Norton, Clarinda Howe, Ida Landon, and Anna Carr. These joined when the society was first organized or soon after. The first officers were Asaph Wright, Thomas Munson, and Alfred Walter.

The following is the list of pastors: 1797, Ezekiel Canfield, William Thatcher; 1798, Ebenezer Stephens, Truman Bishop; 1799, Augustus Jocelyn; 1800, Aaron Hunt, Elijah Batchelor; 1801, Peter Morraity, John Sweet; 1802, James Campbell, Lumen Andrus; 1803, C. Morris, John Sweet; 1804, Zalmon Lyon, Eber Smith; 1805, Zalmon Lyon; 1806, Nathan Emory, Samuel Cochran; 1807, Aaron Hunt, Jonathan Lyon; 1808, Henry Eames, Andrew Prindle; 1809–10, Laban Clark, Reuben Harris; 1811, James Coleman, Arnold Scofield; 1812, James Coleman, Benjamin Griffin; 1813, William Swayne, Gad Smith, J. Reynolds; 1814, Thomas Thorp; 1815, Samuel Cochran, Billy Hibbard; 1816, Samuel Cochran; 1817, E. P. Jacob, J. J. Matthias; 1818, Datus Ensign, E. Canfield, T. Benedict; 1819, Datus Ensign, Ezekiel Canfield; 1820, Nathan Emory, Smith Dayton; 1821, E. Washburn, Smith Dayton, John Nixon; 1822, J. M. Smith, David Miller, Julius Field; 1823, Daniel Brayton, Elbert Osborn; 1824, Arnold Scofield, Elbert Osborn; 1825–26, Eli Barnett, John Lovejoy; 1827, E. Washburn, F. Sizer, A. Bushnell; 1828, E. Washburn, Smith Dayton, J. Nixon; 1829, B. Sillick, W. Wolcott; 1830, B. Sillick, L. C. Cheney, D. Stocking; 1831, Luther Mead, Luman A. Sanford; 1832–33, Aaron S. Hill, Orlando Starr; 1834, Charles F. Pilton. This year Goshen became a station; 1835–36, A. G. Wickware; 1837–38, John Luckey; 1839–40, David Osborn; 1841–42, Thomas Ellis; 1843–44, Joseph D. Marshall; 1845

–46, David L. Marks; 1847, Isaac Sanford; 1848–49, Rufus K. Reynolds; 1850–51, David Miller; 1852, Charles R. Adams; 1853–54, Daniel W. Lounsbury; 1855, Henry Burton; 1856, William Silverthorne; 1857–58, Alexander McAlister; 1859–60, William Ross; 1861, George W. Allen; 1862–64, James D. Bouton; 1865–67, Samuel F. Johnson; 1868–69, William H. Stebbins; 1870–72, William Brown; 1873–75, David S. Stevens; 1876–78, Cornell S. Dikeman; 1879–80, Francis M. Hallock.

The first church edifice was built in 1809–10 by Benjamin Roberts, assisted by Brace Stoddard. This building is now (1881) occupied by George Herrold. The "L" part is an addition situated near the Goshen Centre Cemetery. The present edifice was erected in 1835–36, nearly on the old site.

The present officers are H. G. Wright, E. S. Richards, A. B. Dickinson, J. B. Thompson, H. O. Beach, Smith Beach, Morris Luthill, and Daniel S. Beach.

The first Methodist sermon was preached in the brick house now occupied by H. G. Wright by Ezekiel Canfield. After a society had been organized it met in a school-house which stood west of the village of West Goshen, and subsequently on the second floor of the house now occupied by Hobart Griswold, east of the village.

The first organized Sunday-school was established in the spring of 1827, with David Wooster as superintendent.

The Episcopal church was built in 1767, and stood near the East Street burial-ground. It was abandoned in 1788. The first Methodist quarterly meeting was held in the barn of Capt. Jabez Wright, in West Goshen. The North Goshen Methodist church was built about 1842.

The Catholic chapel was built in 1856.

THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

The first town-meeting in Goshen was held Dec. 6, 1739, when the following officers were chosen: Moderator, John Beach; Selectmen, John Beach, Samuel Pettibone, Nathaniel Baldwin, Samuel Turner, and Benajah Williams; Constables, Samuel Hinman and Gideon Hurlbut; Grand Jurors, Samuel Towner, Abel Phelps, and Isaac Hill; Listers, Christopher Graham, Timothy Tuttle, and Abraham Parmeley; Surveyors of Highways, B. Phelps, Isaac Hill, and Nathan Baldwin; Town Clerk, Samuel Pettibone; Horse Branders, Gideon Hurlbut, Benajah Williams, and Joseph Heacock; Fence Viewers, Daniel Richards, Benjamin Bishop, and Benjamin Phelps.

At this meeting it was "Voted, That the selectmen shall ascertain the places of holding the meetings for publick worship of God."

GOSHEN IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

MILITARY RECORD.

There being no recruiting officer located in Goshen there were no enlistments from May till September, when Henry Fritz, Charles A. Barnum, Robert T. Becker, Daniel Kimberly, Uriah Nickerson, Gerrit Rinders, and Joseph N. Wooster joined the Seventh Regiment in October. Edward N. Fanning joined the Eighth Regiment, and John Fanning joined the Ninth or Irish Regiment. Peter McCabe, William N. Ford, and Henry C. Ford enlisted in the Eleventh Regiment about the same time, that is, in October. In the latter part of November, George W. Sperry, Henry E. Merrvin, George W. Butler, George C. Downs, James Hicks, and Benjamin H. Prindle, and in December, Michael Morris, Frank E. Wadhams, and Joseph Brady joined the Thirteenth Regiment, under Capt. Charles Blinn, of Company C. In January, 1862, Henry Mayo, Edward S. Richmond, James Robinson, and Frederick L. Wadhams joined Company I, under Lieut. Frank Wells, of Litchfield, also in the Thirteenth Regiment. Up to this time no bounties had been promised or paid, except seven dollars and a half to each of those who had enlisted in the Fourth Regiment to buy each of them a pair of boots.

In the fall of 1861 there was apprehension that the soldiers in the field would suffer for the want of sufficient clothing and bedding, and a pressing call was made by the Sanitary Commission for aid. In response to this call the ladies of the "Soldiers' Aid Society" collected and sent to the commission in New York two boxes and one barrel, containing the following articles, viz., forty-four woolen blankets; sixty-one pair knit woolen socks, thirty-six bed-quilts, fourteen pillow-ticks, eight dressing-gowns, nine sheets, fifty-five pillow-cases, two pillows, sixty-four towels, seven knit wrappers, twenty-eight pair drawers, two flannel bed-gowns, twelve hospital shirts, two bars Castile soap, ten yards red flannel, fifteen rolls linen bandages, one box pins, needles, and thread, lot of lint, inventoried at four hundred and four dollars and ninety-nine cents.

At the session of the Legislature in June, 1862, a law was passed giving a bounty by the State of fifty dollars to each volunteer, and also authorizing the towns to pay bounties, and lay taxes to pay them or issue bonds for the purpose. The county was in great excitement and alarm about this time. McClellan had marshaled a heavy force and advanced towards Richmond, but was compelled to make a masterly strategic retreat. Under these circumstances a renewed effort was made to raise recruits. Governor Buckingham went through the State and addressed public meetings, urging the people to volunteer, assuring them that if the towns should furnish more than their quotas that the excess should be applied on subsequent calls. Under these circumstances, Mr. James Q. Rice, who had been the principal of the Goshen Academy for eleven years, procured enlisting orders, and engaged vigorously in procuring volunteers.

At a town-meeting held on the 31st of July, 1862, it was "Voted, That the selectmen are hereby authorized and directed to draw an order on the treasurer of the town for the sum of one hundred dollars in favor of each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, and private who resided in this town, and has enlisted or who may enlist between the 10th day of July and the 20th day of August, 1862, in any regiment of volunteers being raised in this State under the recent call of the President of the United States. Provided, That each non-commissioned officer, musician, and private, before he shall become entitled to the above bounty, shall procure a certificate from the officer commanding the regiment into which he has enlisted that he has been accepted and sworn into the service of the United States." A tax was laid, and the sum of four thousand six hundred dollars was collected within sixty days and paid to the soldiers.

Mr. Rice was very successful in obtaining recruits, so that by the 15th of August he had enlisted forty-five volunteers, a large proportion of them being his former pupils. The above number not being sufficient for a company, they united with the Torrington recruits, which, when united, made a company of one hundred and two. On the morning of August 21st, Mr. Rice, with the men he had enlisted, assembled near the Centre meeting-house, and, after a few short addresses, proceeded to the head of North Street (accompanied by many of their friends) in Litchfield, where they were joined by their future comrades from Torrington; thence, united, marched to the court-house, where refreshments were provided by the citizens of Litchfield, and then proceeded to Camp Dutton, east of Litchfield hill, where they remained until their departure for the seat of war, which was on the 15th of September, 1862. In the afternoon of the day that the Goshen recruits left for Litchfield, those that had been recruited in Kent, Sharon, Cornwall, Salisbury, and Canaan met at Goshen Centre to the number of three or four hundred, where they were supplied with a substantial lunch by the Goshen people; thence proceeded to Camp Dutton. The quotas of the towns had not been particularly specified at this time, but subsequently it was ascertained that the quota of Goshen was but sixteen to satisfy all calls to this date, so that Goshen was largely in excess. While the regiment was at Camp Dutton, Mr. Rice was chosen captain of Company C, William McK. Rice, first sergeant; James P. McCabe, third sergeant; Homer W. Griswold, George W. Newcomb, Frederick A. Lucas, corporals; and George D. Bentley, wagoner. Frederick A. Cook, who had recruited a number of men in the adjoining towns, was chosen first lieutenant of Company B, and Moses Cook, Jr., was chosen sergeant of Company B. On the evening of September 6th, a fine army regulation sword was presented to Capt. Rice by his friends in Goshen, in the presence of a goodly number of the citizens, in the vestry of the Centre church. On receiving it, Capt. Rice made a very appropriate and patriotic response, in which he pledged himself that he would take it and wear it, and return with it or on it; the latter he heroically redeemed.

In April, 1861, the President called on the States to furnish seventy-five thousand volunteers for three months, the quota of Connecticut being seven hundred and eighty. In May, 1861, the President made another call on the States for five hundred thousand men for three years, the quota of Connecticut being thirteen thousand and fifty-seven; in July, 1862, a further call for three hundred thousand three years' men, and three hundred thousand nine months' men. The quota of Connecticut in each of these calls was seven thousand one hundred and forty-five; total, fourteen thousand two hundred and ninety. The quotas under the foregoing calls were assigned to each town in the State in proportion to their military rolls made out by the State selectmen, and under State authority. But in subsequent calls the quotas were assigned in rolls made out by an enrolling officer in each town appointed under authority of the United States government, and the State divided into four districts, corresponding to our Congressional districts, and these into sub-districts, in most cases embracing a single town. Any surplus that had been furnished by any district was deducted from the quota of the district, but not from the particular sub-district or towns that had produced said surplus, so that the large excess that had been furnished by the town of Goshen did not avail her on subsequent calls as we had good reason to expect.

In December, 1863, a number of persons who were enrolled and liable to draft associated together and raised funds sufficient to procure volunteers or hire substitutes to fill the quota of the town and relieve themselves from draft. Under this arrangement the following persons enlisted and were paid the sums annexed to their names: Newton T. Abbott, seventy-five dollars; James Mooney, seventy-five dollars; John Quin, fifty dollars; James Quin, fifty dollars; James Palmer, fifty dollars; Marcellus J. Judd, forty-five dollars; Wolcott Little, forty-five dollars; Timothy Maher, forty-five dollars; James Hicks, forty-five dollars; William E. Albin, Charles H. Albin, Herbert D. Hoxley, David Treadwell, Alfred Saunders, Samuel Hall, Jerome B. Ray; these last seven were paid four hundred and ninety-five dollars, being distributed among them, in the whole, nine hundred and seventy-five dollars. The twelve first named were recruits in the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and the four last named joined the Twenty-ninth Colored Regiment. Nelson Lawton entered the navy about this time. This terminated the enlistments from this town.

In February, 1864, the President called for five hundred thousand more men for three years. The quota of Connecticut under the new enrollment was seven thousand nine hundred and nineteen. John Quain, Thomas McCowen, and George McCaul were drafted under this call, but absconded to parts unknown, and did not return until the close of the war. Efforts were persevered in to make the excess of volunteers in this town available, but without effect. In August, 1864, the town appointed a committee to go to Hartford to consult with the Governor or other State officers, but the committee reported that there was no remedy short of an act of Congress. In October, 1864, the town

"Voted, That the selectmen of Goshen confer with the selectmen of other towns which have furnished an excess of volunteers and memorialize Congress, or take some other measures to obtain justice."

In January, 1865, a convention of selectmen from the towns which had furnished an excess of volunteers was held in Hartford, and such measures were adopted as induced Congress, then in session, to pass an act of relief, but too late to be of service to us, as no more men were needed.

By an act of Congress it was provided that any person being drafted might commute by paying three hundred dollars or furnishing a substitute. In August, 1863, William Davis, Frederick E. Hurlburt, Andrew Bowns, Robert Palmer, and Warren Wilcox were drafted, and furnished substitutes at a cost of three hundred dollars each.

In June, 1864, the Legislature passed an act that all who should volunteer or furnish a substitute for three years or during the war should be paid a bounty of three hundred dollars by the State, and at the same time prohibited the town from offering bounties or laying taxes for the purpose. Notwithstanding the prohibition, at a town-meeting held on the 15th of August, 1864, it was "Voted, That this town will pay to each person who has procured or shall procure an acceptable substitute for three years or during the war as part of the quota of this town, under the last call of the President of the United States for five hundred thousand volunteers for the military service, and to each volunteer as a part of said quota for the same period under said call, and to each person who may be drafted and held to service as a part of said quota under said call, the sum of three hundred dollars, to be paid to them in the order in which they shall have procured such substitute or volunteer, or have been drafted and held to service as aforesaid till such quota be filled; and when such substitute or volunteer or drafted man shall have been duly accepted and mustered into the army or navy as part of said quota.

"Also the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid to each of those who have been drafted and have provided substitutes which have been accredited to this town since the 1st of August, 1863. And the selectmen of the town are hereby directed to draw an order on the town treasurer for the payment thereof. Provided, however, that no greater sum shall be paid on account of such substitute than the actual cost of obtaining the same over and above what is paid by the State."

At the session of the Legislature in June, 1865, an act was passed confirming the votes and doings of towns in relation to bounties that were passed contrary to law, and the selectmen of Goshen issued orders on the town treasurer, dated Sept. 18, 1865, to the following-named persons:

Willard E. Gaylord	$300
Moses W. Gray	300
Benjamin F. Lamphire	300

Alson Sanford	325

As there were a number of Connecticut regiments stationed in and about Hilton Head, it was reported that they were in want of vegetables, and it was proposed to send them a vessel-load. Accordingly, a vessel was chartered and loaded at Bridgeport in season to be presented to the soldiers at or before Christmas, 1863; there was sent from Goshen, December 12th, thirty-two barrels, ten boxes, and one tub filled with vegetables, cheese, and butter, estimated at one hundred and seventy-eight dollars and fifty cents.

In January, 1863, the Lodge Soldiers' Aid Society sent to the Nineteenth Regiment, stationed at Alexandria, Va., one box, contents estimated at fifty-five dollars and forty cents; also one box sent to the Sanitary Commission, valued at sixty-six dollars. The Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society after this time expended their efforts principally in work, making up articles furnished by the State society. The Christian Commission commenced its operations about this time, and collections were made, by the young ladies getting up tableaux, singing concerts, and contributions of monthly prayer-meetings, for the soldiers, amounting to four hundred and twenty-nine dollars and thirty-nine cents.

The State of Connecticut has furnished forty-one thousand nine hundred and eighty-three enlistments, as appears by the report of the adjutant-general. The quota of Goshen, according to population, would be one hundred and twenty-two, so it will be seen that this town furnished twenty-four more than its proportion. It is a question whether any town in the State has furnished a greater per cent. of excess than Goshen.

Of the evils attendant upon a war no adequate estimate can be made of the loss of life, impaired health, the sacrifice of property, and in most cases the demoralization of those connected with an army, but the writer would congratulate his fellow townsmen that of those who went out from among us to defend and sustain our and the nation's rights, have sacrificed their lives honorably or returned to us without a stain upon their fair characters. That they should at once resume their former vocations with alacrity, and particularly the younger portion of them seem to have advanced in intelligence and manly bearing, is surely a subject of gratulation.

The compilers of the preceding record have labored under much embarrassment; as no one had pretended to make any detailed memoranda of the events as they transpired, of course have had to resort to isolated documents and personal inquiries to obtain the few facts contained in the preceding pages.

The following is copied from a document purporting to have emanated from the war department, giving the number of men comprising the Union army, viz.:

The number of deaths compared with the whole army is equal to fourteen one-hundredths or fourteen per cent. The number of deaths from the enlisted men from Goshen, compared with the whole number of enlisted men, is equal to twenty-nine one-hundredths, or twenty-nine per cent. There is no means to ascertain the deaths among the substitutes furnished by Goshen.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HENRY NORTON.

Henry Norton was born at Goshen, Nov. 10, 1815. His father, who died in 1860, was Deacon Lewis M. Norton, the historian of Goshen. His mother was Laura Foote, of Canton, Conn. He married Delia Beach, the daughter of John Beach, of Goshen, May 11, 1842. One daughter, Delia Hillhouse Norton, died at Mount Holyoke Seminary in 1867. He received his education principally at Goshen Academy, giving considerable attention to astronomy and geology, and was the first one in Litchfield County to find with the naked eye the planets Mercury and Uranus; and he first called the attention of the people of this county to the wonderful marks made on the rocks by the glaciers in the early ages, which are now so plainly seen on the tops of our mountains. When he was twenty years of age he commenced teaching, and taught eight winters, working on his father's farm summers until he married. Most of his teaching was in the Winchester Centre and Wolcottville Academies. He was acting school-visitor twenty years, between 1841 and 1875, examining the teachers and visiting the schools.

He was a member of the Legislature in 1852. He was appointed county surveyor by the County Court in 1841, and after the death of Judge Burrall he was appointed by the surveyor-general of Connecticut deputy State surveyor for Litchfield County, and, besides attending to his farm, he has practiced land surveying for forty years, and is at it still. He also holds the office of notary public. His grandfather was Deacon Ebenezer Norton, who put stocks to the guns manufactured here and used in the Revolutionary war; and his great-grandfather was Col. Ebenezer Norton, one of the original settlers of the town. He traces his ancestry back to the Lord of Norville, who came over into England from France with William the Conqueror in the year 1260, and he was his constable.

From the time of the Norman conquest to the arrival of Thomas Norton in Guilford, Conn., there were fourteen generations of his ancestors in England, and there have been six since. When he was a small boy his father pointed to a little hollow on the west side of the road in E Street, telling him that there was a tradition that a liberty-pole stood there in the Revolution. So he watched the spot for fifty years, and in 1875 dug a hole there to erect a centennial monument. He dug out a large load of stones and pieces of the rum-bottle used when it was erected, and found the pine wood and bark four and a half feet below the surface, and preserved the relics. The pole was eighteen inches in diameter. The Stars and Stripes waved over the spot at the great centennial celebration, July 4, 1876, and he was chairman of the committee on relics that day.

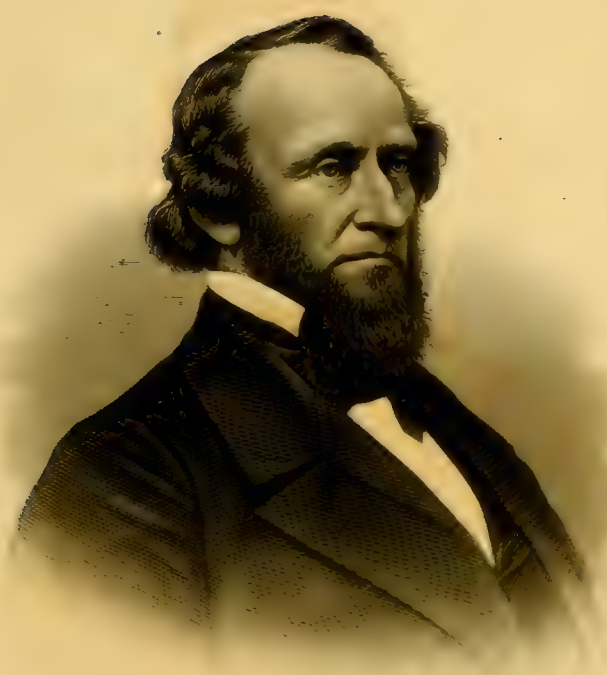
CAPT. WILLARD GAYLORD.

Capt. Willard Gaylord is a lineal descendant of William Gaillard (or Gaylord), who came from England with his family and settled in Dorchester, Mass., in 1630. From an old record we quote the following: "Between 1639 and 1664 Mr. William Gaylord, the earliest settler of that name in Windsor, was elected a member of the Assembly at forty-one semi-annual elections, which was one more than any other man was thus honored in that town." William Gaylord died July 20, 1673; his wife died June 20, 1657. Their children, all of whom were born in England, were as follows: Elizabeth, married Richard Birge, William, Samuel, Walter, and John. Walter, third son of William, was born in England about 1622; came with his father to New England in 1630; settled in Windsor. He married Mary Stebbins, daughter of Deacon Edward Stebbins, of Hartford, April 22, 1648; she died June 29, 1657, when he married Sarah, daughter of William Rockwell, March 22, 1658. Children by first wife,—Joseph, born May 13, 1649; Mary, born March 19, 1651; Joanna, born Feb. 5, 1653, married John Porter; Samuel Benjamin, born April 12, 1655; Isaac, born June 21, 1657. Children by second wife,—Eliezer, born March 7, 1662; Sarah, born April 13, 1665, married William Phelps, all born in Windsor.

Joseph (first son of Walter and Mary Stebbins) settled at Farmington, Conn.,—that part which was afterwards the town of Waterbury, and about 1708 he removed to the town of Durham, Conn.,—where his sons Joseph and John settled. He married Sarah Stanley, July 14, 1670. Their children were Sarah, born 1671, married Thomas Judd; Joseph, born April 22, 1673; John, born Aug. 21, 1677; William, born 1680; Benjamin, Elizabeth, Mary; Abigail married James Williams; Joanna married Robert Royce; Ruth married Stephen Hickox; Joseph Gaylord died 1742.

Joseph, first son of Joseph and Sarah Stanley Gaylord, married Mary Hickox in 1699. Their children were Timothy, born Nov. 29, 1706; Samuel, born July 5, 1709; Edward, Benjamin, Joseph, Mary, Thankful, Martha.

Lieut. Timothy, first son of Joseph and Mary Hickox Gaylord, married Prudence Roys, April 25, 1733; she died Feb. 7, 1746. Their children were Prudence, born Jan. 31, 1734; Timothy, born May 3, 1735; Roys, born July 7, 1737. He married for his second wife Phebe Wilton, who died in Goshen in 1777. Their children were Titus, born Dec. 24, 1749; Lois, born Dec. 22, 1751, married Samuel Bishop; Joel, born May 8, 1755; Joseph, born April, 1758. Lieut. Timothy's commission is in the possession of his grandson, Capt. Allen Gaylord, of Newbery, Ohio. It is dated March 27, 1757. He was killed by Indians, near Fort Ann, N. Y., in 1758.



Joseph, third son of Timothy and Phebe Wilton Gaylord, married Eunice Ives, of Torrington, April 24, 1792. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was in New York when the British took possession of that city, and was carried out on a blanket, sick. He was honorably discharged, and during the latter part of his life received a pension. He was a farmer by occupation, as were nearly all of his ancestors. He died March 25, 1838. His wife died Nov. 3, 1825. Their children were,—Joseph I., born Sept. 1783; Willard, born May 21, 1799; Alletia, born March 4, 1801.

Joseph I., first son of Joseph and Eunice Ives Gaylord, married Clarissa Norton, Nov. 21, 1821. Their children were Mary, Lorraine, and Frederick. His second wife was Eliza M. Norton. He was instantly killed by the roof of his house, blown off during a tornado in Goshen, Feb. 10, 1860.

Willard, second son of Joseph and Eunice (Ives) Gaylord, married Amy Hooker, of Bristol, Conn., April 27, 1825. Miss Hooker was a niece of the Rev. Asahel Hooker, who was settled as pastor of the church at Goshen in 1791. Their children were Willard E., born March 26, 1827; Charles H., born March 27, 1833.

Willard Eliezer, first son of Willard and Amy Hooker, married Sarah E. Wooster, May 14, 1851. Their children are Henry C., born March 30, 1852; Amy C., born Feb. 17, 1858.

Charles H., second son of Willard and Mary Hooker, married Jeannie M. Thompson, of New Haven, June 10, 1856. Children are William H., born Sept. 7, 1862; Charles E., born March 13, 1865.

Capt. Willard Gaylord, as mentioned above, was born in Goshen, May 21, 1799, son of Joseph and grandson of Timothy Gaylord, who settled in Goshen about 1738. He was the purchaser of an original right of land, where the family have since resided. Willard Gaylord received a common-school and academic education. The business of his life has been that of a farmer, although he has been called to fill many responsible positions; has filled nearly all the town offices, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1840–41 and 1862.

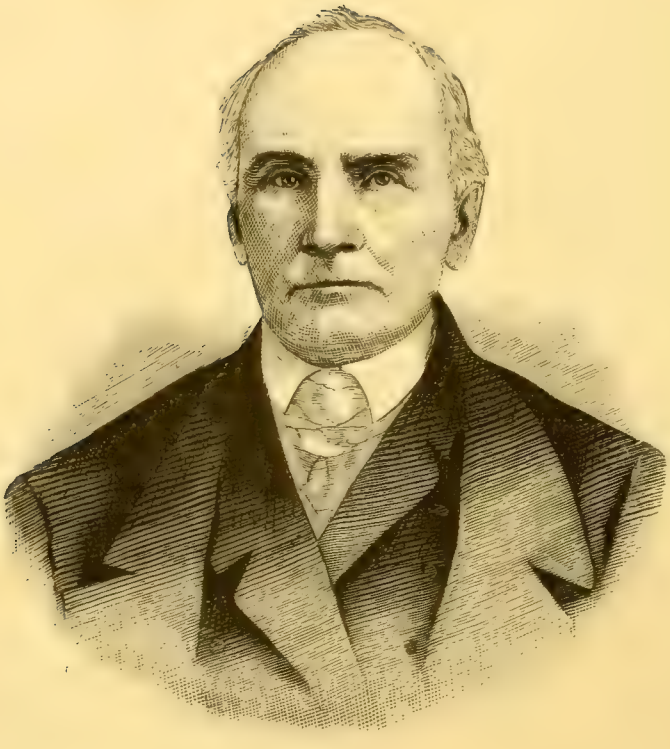
Mr. Gaylord was one of the original corporators of the Winsted Savings Bank, and a director for many years. Was appointed State director of the Iron Bank at Falls Village, and served as such for several years; was subsequently appointed director, which office he now holds. He has held an office in that bank for more than twenty years.

Politically, Mr. Gaylord was formerly a Whig, and since the organization of the Republican party has acted with them. During the war of the Rebellion he took strong grounds in support of the government. Subsequently the town of Goshen appointed a committee, of which Mr. Gaylord was chairman, to write "Goshen in the Rebellion." Their report is on file in the office of the town clerk, and is eminently satisfactory. And now, after an active and industrious life of more than fourscore years, we find this venerable pioneer in the enjoyment of good health, with an erect figure and an elastic step, retaining in a marked degree the energy and spirit of Capt. Gaylord of forty years ago.

MOSES LYMAN.

Moses Lyman the sixth is a lineal descendant, in the eighth generation, from Richard Lyman, an Englishman, who left the parish of Ongar, County of Essex, England, and in the middle of August, 1631, embarked with his wife and children in the ship "Lion," and on 4th of November, 1631, landed in Boston. Richard Lyman's name is on the list of the original proprietors of Hartford in 1636. He died in 1640, leaving a family of children, one of whom was named John, born in High Ongar, England, September, 1623; came to Boston with his father, married Dorcas, daughter of John Plumb, of Bradford, Conn., and in 1654 settled in Northampton, Mass., where he resided till his death, Aug. 20, 1690. He was in command of the Northampton soldiers in the famous Falls fight, above Deerfield, May 18, 1676. He had ten children, the fourth of whom was named Moses, born Feb. 20, 1662, or 1663, and died Feb. 25, 1701. He had eight children; three only grew to maturity, one of whom was Moses.

Moses Lyman is a name widely known in business circles, and recalls men honored, respected, and beloved always. It has been borne by the eldest son of this family through eight successive generations. Capt. Moses, the second bearing the name, was born Feb. 27, 1689; married Mindwell Sheldon, Dec. 13, 1712, and died March 24, 1762, aged seventy-three years. He was the only son who left issue, and became thus the ancestor of a very numerous posterity. He was the great-grandson of Richard. He had a family of ten children, the eldest of whom was Moses the third, born Oct. 2, 1713, and died Jan 6, 1768. He married Sarah Hayden, or Heighton, of Windsor, Conn., March 24, 1742.



Deacon Lyman settled in Goshen in the autumn of 1739, being one of the earliest inhabitants of the place. He was the ancestor of a distinguished and noble lineage, an honor to the name and the whole Lyman family. Mr. and Mrs. Lyman were characterized as religious, exemplary, industrious, economical, and liberal to the poor. He was remarkable for his endeavors to make peace and reconcile difficulties; of sound judgment, and for many years a magistrate, he exercised a controlling influence in the town. He was a representative of the town in the General Assembly fourteen times. Of Deacon Lyman it was said he was a "father to the poor, eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame," relieving the fatherless and helpless, and making the widow's heart to sing for joy. He had seven children, the eldest of whom was Moses the fourth, born March 20, 1743, married Ruth, daughter of William Collins, of Guilford, Conn. She died June 8, 1775, and he married for his second wife the widow of Jesse Judd, of Litchfield, Conn., daughter of Capt. Jonathan Buel, of Goshen. Mr. Lyman was a farmer, and occupied the homestead of his father through life. In the militia Mr. Lyman held in succession every grade of office from that of corporal to colonel, and was known as Col. Lyman. During the Revolutionary war he was frequently in the army, sometimes by draft, sometimes as a volunteer on sudden alarms. Col. Lyman was commander of a body of troops stationed, on the night of the 7th of October, 1777, to watch the movements of Burgoyne's army, and was the first to inform Gen. Gates, on the morning of the 8th, that they had deserted their camp. In consideration of his important services he was honored with the duty of conveying to Gen. Washington personally the first intelligence of the battle of Saratoga and the surrender of the British under Gen. Burgoyne. He was also commander of the guard over the illustrious and gallant captive, Maj. Andre, at and previous to the time of his execution. In civil life Col. Lyman sustained many offices in the gift of the town. He was a man of strong mind, and great energy and decision of character, of the strictest integrity, conscientious in the observance of the Sabbath, and of the daily worship of God in his family. He died Sept. 29, 1829, aged eighty-seven years.

Moses the fifth, known as Judge Lyman, eldest son of Col. Lyman and Ruth Collins, was born in Goshen, Conn., April 16, 1768; married Elizabeth Buel, daughter of Ira and Prudence Buel, of Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 21, 1796. Judge Lyman had in a remarkable degree the characteristics of his father and ancestors,—a man of commanding influence and foremost standing in society, a thorough and successful business man, and a firm supporter of the gospel. He engaged extensively in commercial pursuits, and through a long course of years successively sustained most if not all the offices in the gift of the town; was representative many times in the General Assembly, and long acted as a civil magistrate. He was a man of superior mind, polished manners, and distinguished for politeness. He died May 22, 1844, aged seventy-seven years. To Judge Moses and Elizabeth (Buel) Lyman were born only two children,—Lucretia, the eldest, was born in Goshen, Feb. 13, 1801; married to Caleb Day, Esq., of Catskill, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1826; she died at the residence of her son, Edward Lyman Day, in Kent, Ohio, in the autumn of 1876. She was a noble and attractive woman, inheriting many of the characteristics of her excellent father.

Their son, Moses, the sixth of the name, was born in Goshen, Oct. 1, 1810. He partially fitted for college with Rev. Timothy Cooley, in Granville, Mass., and in Goshen Academy, but student-life being neither congenial to taste nor conducive to health, he chose mercantile life, and at the age of sixteen years entered the store of Lyman & Porter, successors to M. & E. Lyman. From that time, to use his own words, he "took care of himself." Engaged in mercantile pursuits both in Goshen and West Cornwall; during the early days of the Housatonic Railroad through that valley he did a large and prosperous business. About 1844, associated with Samuel S. Robbins, of Salisbury, Lee Canfield, and the Hunts, of Canaan, he was one of the founders of the Hunts-Lyman Iron Company, in Canaan. A few years later, relinquishing mercantile pursuits, he became interested in the manufacture of charcoal pig-iron from the celebrated Salisbury and Richmond (Mass.) ores, and continued this during all the after-years of his life. In 1867 he visited Florida, purchasing lands in Orange County, a portion of which he developed for fruit culture. His charming winter home, "Onoro," surrounded by lovely lakes and orange-groves now in full bearing, in the heart of a delightful and rapidly-developing country, proves that as a pioneer in that section he anticipated the future wisely and well. This was the pride and pet of his latter years. Here he spent half a score of delightful winters, and the impress of his character is still felt in that community. In 1872 he was one of the incorporators of the Wheel and Foundry Company of Waverly, N. Y., and continued its president until the sickness that prostrated him in 1877 removed him from connection with all active business and the entire outer world. In politics he has been a Republican since the organization of that party. He has been called repeatedly to positions of responsibility and of trust in his native town, but he had little taste for political life, and was haunted with no longing for office. His nature scorned the methods by which place and power are usually acquired, and he "would none of them." He possessed to a remarkable degree patriotism undefiled with the scum of politics. Mr. Lyman was a most dutiful son, an upright man and public-spirited citizen, combining integrity and manly virtue with great energy, promptness, and generosity. In 1833 he united with the Congregational Church in Goshen, and has always been one of its most liberal supporters. Christianity has ever been his ruling principle. All that an affectionate, generous husband and father could do to make home happy he has done, and his domestic life is a blessed memory. On the 6th of May, 1834, he married Mary Ann, daughter of John Milton and Sally Porter Holley, of Salisbury, Conn. (see history of John M. Holley), and to them have been born five children. Moses, the eldest, and seventh of the name, was born in Goshen, Aug. 20, 1836. He has been twice married, first to Ellen Augusta, daughter of Edwin A. and Harriet Dexter Douglas, of Mauch Chunk, Pa., Dec. 31, 1863. Their children were Moses, the eldest, and eighth of the name, born July 17, 1865; Isabel Douglas, born March 21, 1867; Harriet Dexter, born July 27, 1870; she died at her grandfather's in Florida, aged four years and six months. Mrs. Lyman died in Goshen, Aug. 17, 1871, aged thirty-two. It may truly be said of her

"None knew her but to love her,
Few named her but to praise."

Priestley Lyman

Mr. Lyman married for his second wife Sarah H., daughter of Philip S. and Lucy R. Beebe, of Litchfield, Conn. (see history of the Beebe family), on March 6, 1873, in Florida. Of their four children only one is living, Mary Alice, born July 8, 1877. Mr. Lyman is a graduate of Brown University, Providence, R. I; served as first lieutenant in the Fifteenth Vermont Volunteers in 1862–63. For a few years he was engaged in the lumber business, and is now manager of the Cayuta Wheel and Foundry Company, at Waverly, N. Y. Mary, born Aug. 15, 1839, in Goshen, Conn., married, June 15, 1865, to Philip Wells, of Brattleboro', Vt. He died in Amenia, Dutchess Co., N. Y., Jan. 28, 1872. On the 15th of August, 1877, she was again married to Rev. Lyman Phelps, in Goshen, Conn. They spend the greater part of each year at Onoro, Florida, in charge of her father's interests there. Alice, born May 15, 1845, married to Hon. J. T. Sawyer, of Waverly, N. Y., Oct. 24, 1872. Their only child, Ellen, was born May 12, 1874. Richard, born in Goshen, June 27, 1848, died Dec. 24, 1851; Holley Porter, born in Goshen, Jan. 22, 1855, died December 5th of injuries received by falling from his horse.

ERASTUS LYMAN.

Erastus Lyman was a lineal descendant, in the seventh generation, from Richard Lyman, an Englishman, who left the parish of Ongar, county of Essex, England, and in the middle of August, 1631, embarked with his wife and children in the ship "Lion," and, on the 4th of November, 1631, landed in Boston. Richard Lyman's name is on the list of the original proprietors of Hartford in 1636. He died in 1640, leaving a family of children, one of whom was named John, who was born in High Ongar, England, September, 1623; came to Boston with his father; married Dorcas, daughter of John Plumb, of Branford, Conn. In 1654 settled in Northampton, Mass., where he resided until his death, Aug. 20, 1690. He was in command of the Northampton soldiers in the famous Falls fight, above Deerfield, May 18, 1676. He had ten children, the fourth of whom was named Moses, born Feb. 20, 1662, or 1663, and died Feb. 25, 1701. He had eight children; three only grew to maturity, one of whom was Moses, the second, born Feb. 27, 1689, married Mindwell Sheldon, Dec. 13, 1712, and died March 24, 1762, aged seventy-three years. His wife died May 23, 1780, aged eighty-eight years. Moses, the only son who left issue, thus became the ancestor of a very numerous posterity. He was the great-grandson of Richard.

Moses Lyman the second had a family of ten children, the eldest of whom was Moses the third, born Oct. 2, 1713, and died Jan. 6, 1768. He married Sarah Hayden, or Heighton, of Windsor, Conn., March 24, 1742. She was born Sept. 17, 1716, and died in Goshen, Conn., Aug. 27, 1808, aged ninety-two years. Mr. Lyman settled in Goshen in the autumn of 1739, being one of the earliest settlers there. He was the ancestor of a distinguished and noble lineage, an honor to the name and the whole Lyman family. Mr. and Mrs. Lyman were characterized as religious, exemplary, industrious, economical, and liberal to the poor. He was remarkable for his endeavors to make peace and reconcile difficulties. Of sound judgment, and for many years a magistrate, he exercised a controlling influence in the town; he was a representative fourteen times.

He had seven children, the eldest of whom was Moses the fourth, born March 20, 1743; married Ruth, daughter of William Collins, of Guilford, Conn. She died June 8, 1775, and he married for his second wife the widow of Jesse Judd, of Litchfield, daughter of Capt. Jonathan Buell, of Goshen. Mr. Lyman was a farmer, and occupied the homestead of his father through life. He died Sept. 29, 1839, aged eighty-seven years, and his wife died Oct. 7, 1835, aged seventy-three.

In the militia Mr. Lyman held in succession every grade of office from that of corporal to colonel, and was known as Col. Lyman. During the Revolutionary war he was frequently in the army, sometimes by draft, sometimes as a volunteer on sudden alarms. Col. Lyman was commander of a body of troops stationed, on the night of the 7th of October, 1777, to watch the movements of Gen. Burgoyne's army, and was the first to inform Gen. Gates, on the morning of the 8th, that they had deserted their camp. In consideration of his important services he was honored with the duty of conveying to Gen. Washington personally the first intelligence of the battle of Saratoga and the surrender of the British under Gen. Burgoyne. He was also commander of the guard over the illustrious and gallant captive, Maj. Andre, at and previous to the time of his execution. In civil life Col. Lyman sustained many offices in the gift of his town. He was a man of strong mind and great energy and decision of character, and of the strictest integrity.

He had six children, the fourth and last of whom by his first marriage was named Erastus, born Nov. 1, 1773. He married Abigail, daughter of Ephraim Starr, of Goshen, Sept. 8, 1803. Both united with the church Jan. 1, 1832, and resided through life in Goshen.

Mr. Lyman, like others of the family, was a man of distinguished abilities, energetic, methodical, and successful in business, eminently distinguished for his piety and benevolence, and his deep interest in the affairs of the church and town. In the course of his life he filled almost all the offices of the church, the society, and the town. Towards the close of his active life he remarked to a friend that he transacted more business for others than for himself. He was a friend of the friendless, the protector of the widow and the orphan, and the ready adviser of all who sought his counsel. He died Dec. 20, 1854, aged eighty-one. His wife died Jan. 22, 1855, aged seventy-seven.

Their children were Horatio Nelson, born May 2, 1804; Lucy, born Dec. 19, 1805, married, May 16, 1831, Dr. De Forest, of Watertown, a graduate of Yale College, 1826. She was an exemplary Christian, and died in the faith, Aug. 3, 1855.

Jane M., born Feb. 7, 1808, united with the church Aug. 28, 1831, and married, Oct. 4th of the same year, Alexander H. Holley, of Salisbury, Conn. She died Sept. 18, 1832, in the peace and serenity of Christian faith and hope.

Rev. Ephraim, born June 3, 1810, died Oct. 29, 1880, at Minneapolis, Minn.; William, born Oct. 2, 1812; Abigail, born Sept. 4, 1814, died Sept. 21, 1879; Erastus, born Nov. 29, 1816, married Abigail Wade; Frederick, born Dec. 7, 1819, married, first, Julia, daughter of Samuel W. and Phebe Gold, second, Mary Talmadge; Samuel, born July 19, 1829, married Lydia Cunneer, Oct. 20, 1875.

Erastus Lyman was a man and a Christian of inestimable value to the community. Self-made, or rather made by circumstances incident to a life of bold business adventure in all parts of this country, with more than an average amount of natural endowments, actuated under the pressure and the promptings of an indomitable purpose, he rose to prominence and an influence indicative of his character. In him, as a man, with remarkable physical energy were combined great mental activity and a strong moral sense. He became associated with the prominent men of this country and State in conducting and adjusting important business matters, and enjoyed a high reputation abroad as a counselor and an executor in financial affairs. We can point our young men to his regularity and punctuality at every place where duty called him; to his readiness for every good word and work; to his promptness in saying or doing whatever he had to say or do; and to his ready and cheerful response to almost every call of charity, and say to them, "Go ye and do likewise."

THE WADDAM FAMILY IN ENGLAND.

Sir John Waddam, Knight, was one of the justices of the Common Pleas or the King's Bench in the county of Devonshire, and was a native of that county. He was born at Egge (now Edge),—"so called from that figure which the hill wherein it stands casteth itself, in the parish of Branscombe, lying on the seaside in the southeastern part thereof." Both the house and parish were for a considerable time the possession and habitation of a family by the name of Branchescombe, which was of great fame, so much so that its antiquity runs so far back that it can hardly be traced to its origin, as asserted by an ancient author:*

"The parish of Branscombe was given to the church of Exeter by Thomas de Branchescombe before the Norman conquest (1056). Here lived Sir Richard Branscombe in the days of King Edward, son of Edward, king of England, a person well read in the laws of his land, and much employed in the government of his country, as being high-sheriff thereof for several years, and also one of the knights of that shire in Parliament. These lands did Branscombe part with unto Waddam in the latter end of the reign of King Edward III." Lyson, in his "Magna Britannia,"† says in his article under the head of "Knowston," that the Manor of Waddam belonged at the time of the Doomsday survey to an old Saxon by the name of "Ulf," who held it in demise ever since the time of Edward the Confessor, A.D. 1042. It is possible that Ulf might have been the ancestor of Wadham, of whom this was the original residence. In a copy of the "family arms" of Waddam the ancient name is Wadeham, and may have been given, as was the custom in those times, as a designation of one of the family of Ulf. Before the end of the year of Edward III., A.D. 1327, it had passed to Sir John Waddam, whose seat and dwelling-place it was and also that of his son after him, Sir John Waddam, one of the justices of the King's Bench. This estate at Egge, after the death of Nicholas Waddam, Esq., the founder of Waddam College, Oxford, passed to the heirs general of Waddam, and was a few years since the property of the Hon. Percy Wyndham. It is also said‡ that this estate, after remaining in the Waddam family for eight generations, passed with two of the coheiresses of Nicholas Waddam, founder, to the family of Strangways and Windham, and is now the joint-property of Earle Ilchester and of B. J. Stackey Bartlett, Esq. In the parish church are memorials of Joan, relict of John Waddam, A.D. 1581.

Prince, in his history entitled "Damonii Orientales Illustres, or Worthies of Devon," says, "This ancient and renowned family of Waddam had its original in the county of Devon, and derived its name from the place of its habitation, Waddam, in the parish of Knowston, near the corporate town of South Molton. William de Waddam was a freeholder of this land in the days of King Edward I., A.D. 1272, and both East and West Waddam descended in his name for three hundred and thirty-seven years unto Nicholas Waddam, who left them to his heirs general."

As to when this family came into possession of their noble and moated seat of Merryfield, in the parish of Ilminster in the county of Somers, but little has been ascertained; but it must have been some time after they became possessed of the estate at Egge, for the family sustained the office of sheriff for the county of Devon near threescore years before they did that at Somers. We are told§ that the manor, which had been a part of the ancient demesne of the crown, belonged at an early period to the Beauchamps of Hache, of whose heirs it was purchased by Sir John Waddam, one of the justices of the Common Pleas in the fourteenth century.

William Waddam was sheriff of the county of Devon in the twentieth year of Henry VI., A.D. 1441, and Nicholas Waddam was sheriff of Somersetshire and Dorsetshire in the fourteenth year of Henry VII., A.D. 1499, showing that the office was held some time in the former before it was the latter shire.

In the introduction of Collin Simmons' "History of Somersetshire" the following knights and sheriffs of that county are named: Sir John Waddam, A.D. 1485, King Henry VII.; Sir Nicholas Waddam, A.D. 1499, King Henry VII.; Sir Edward Waddam, A.D. 1503, King Henry VII.; Sir John Waddam, A.D. 1556, Queen Mary; Sir James Waddam, A.D. 1561, Queen Elizabeth.

It is certain that the chief seat of the Waddam family was removed from the county of Devon to the county of Somer, as early as 1499, but both estates were kept in the family, as may appear from their interments in Branscombe church, whereof there is one example in the mother of Nicholas Waddam, the last of the name who lies buried there, a noble monument having been erected to her memory with this inscription, which time hath rendered somewhat imperfect:

"Here lieth intomb'd the body of a virtuous and ancient gentlewoman, descended of the ancient House of Plantagenets, sometime of Cornwall, namely Joan, one of the daughters and heirs unto John Tregarthin, Esq., in the county of Cornwall. She was first married unto John Helleway, who had by her much issue. After his death she was married to John Waddam, of Merryfield, in the county of Somerset, Esq., and by him had . . . children. She lived a virtuous and godly life, and died in an honorable age, Sept. . . . in the year of Christ, 1581."

The early sepulchral monuments of this family may be found, 1st, at or in the parish church of Branscombe, Devonshire; 2d, in the parish church dedicated to Almighty God, under the patronage of the Blessed Virgin, at Ilminster, a small town ten miles from Taunton, in the county of Somers. The ancient moated seat of Merryfield, which for many years was in the possession of the family, is in the parish of Ilton, and five miles from Ilminster to the north. There is St. Mary's church, which is one hundred and thirty feet long, built with nave, tower, and aisles, and was the family burial-place. Sir William's monument in St. Mary's is older than that of Sir Nicholas'. How long after the year 1610 this church remained the burial-place is not known, but portions of the family must have been buried there for at least one hundred and twelve years. The north aisle of St. Mary's (by which is meant the portion of the church under a roof, distinct from the nave) is called the Waddam's aisle, because it is occupied with monuments, mural and other kinds, erected to the deceased members of the family. Sir William Waddam was buried, as was the custom in Catholic times, very near the altar. Sir Nicholas' tomb is also there, and bears this inscription:

"Pray for the Soul of Sir Nicholas Waddam, Sire of Sir Nicholas and Captain of the Isle of Wight, who departed out of this world on the 8th December, 1508; on whom Jesus show mercy."

There also may be found the monuments of Nicholas and Dorothy, his wife, co-founders of Waddam College, Oxford. Nicholas died about the year 1609. He was educated at Christ College, Oxford. Dorothy, his wife, died A.D. 1618.

This honorable family possessed this seat called Egge about eight generations in a direct line, five of which were knights, who matched with divers daughters and heirs, and became allied to many great and noble houses, as will appear from the following pedigree:*

(1) Sir John Waddam, of Egge (now Edge), about 1380 had issue: (2) Sir John, who by Joan, daughter of Wrothesley, had issue: (3) William, who by Margaret, daughter and coheir of Chiselden, of Holcomb Rogers, had issue: (4) Sir John Waddam, also William, and Elizabeth, the wife of Stawel, of Codlistor, and Mary, the wife of Gilbert Ford, of Bradley, and Anne, wife of William Montacule, of Henligle, near Crookham. Sir John Waddam,† by Elizabeth, daughter and one of the heirs of Sir Stephen Popham, had issue: (5) Sir John, who by Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh Stukely, had issue: (6) Sir Nicholas, who by Joan, daughter of Robert Hill, of Haleway, had issue, Lawrence, who died without issue. (7) John, Giles, and Andrew, and Mary, wife of Sir Richard Chadleigh, and Elizabeth, wife of Richard Bampfield, of Poltimore. John Waddam, Esq.,† married Joan, the widow of John Keleway, of Columpton, daughter and coheir of Tregarthin, of Cornwall, and had issue: (8) Nicholas and Joan, wife of Sir Giles Strangways, and Margaret, wife of Nicholas Martin, of Athelhampton, and Florence, wife of Sir John Windham.

Nicholas Waddam, of Edge,† married Dorothy, daughter of Sir William Petre, Knight, principal secretary of state to Henry VIII.; but having no issue, the issue of his sisters became heirs to his inherited estates.

It may be further stated of the first Sir John Waddam, Knight, that he applied himself even from his younger years to the study of the laws of the land, and became very successful therein, so that his learning and knowledge of this kind became his profession, which preferred him to great honor and reputation. He was called to the degree of sergeant, and made one of the king's sergeants at law the same year with William Hankford, his county man, and only three years after he was constituted judge, which latter took place about the eleventh year of the reign of King Richard II., 1388.*

"He had a large practice, and thereby made a great addition to his estate; among other things he joined unto it the rich manors of Merryfield and Silferton in this county, which yet continue in his heirs general, the How family of Windham, of Orchard Windham."

Sir Nicholas Waddam, of Edge and Merryfield, Esq., founder, had about three thousand pounds income per annum of hereditary estate, which, partly by his own and partly by his wife's thrift, came to be increased by the addition thereto of eight hundred pounds per annum in land and forty thousand pounds in money. He was born in the reign of Henry VIII., and married Dorothy, daughter of Sir William Petre, prime minister under Henry VIII., and he lived through the reigns of Edward VI., Mary, Elizabeth, and died during that of James I. As Nicholas and Dorothy could not hand their name down in a regular line, having no children, they determined to perpetuate it by other means.

Fuller says that "they had great length of extract, great breadth of estate, and great depth of liberality." Originally they intended to found a college at Venice for the benefit of the youth of England who might still desire to be educated in the Catholic faith, for both Nicholas and Dorothy were Catholics; but finally they consented to establish their college at Oxford, which they did. He made purchase of the ground for the site at an expense of six thousand pounds, "which having done, before he laid one Stone of the Foundation thereof he yielded to Fate, and left the care of that matter by Will unto Dorothy, his wife." Nor could he have left it in better hands, for soon after her husband's death she went on with the work, and, by great industry as well as charges, quickly brought it to a close, expending in the building twelve thousand pounds. Having raised this beautiful structure in the northeast part of the city, in a very beautiful place, adjoining the pleasant fields and meadows called New Parks, she settled upon the same a very fair endowment of eight or nine hundred pounds for the maintenance of one warden, fifteen fellows, as many scholars, two chaplains, two clerks, one mancipee, two cooks, two butlers, and a porter, and having obtained the royal leave of King James I. about 1612, she sent a charter of incorporation for said warden, fellows, etc., together with a book of statutes for the better government of the house.

Sir Nicholas Waddam was educated at Christ College, Oxford, and died about the year 1609, aged seventy years, and his widow died in 1618.

THE FAMILY IN AMERICA.

In the ancient family arms the name was Wadeham; in America on the early records it is written Wodom, Wadoms, Wadams, Waddams, and Waddoms.

John Waddams came from Somersetshire, England, in 1650; returned to England, and came back the next spring, having a wife Susannah, and in 1656 there was given him "a house lot by the town" of Wethersfield.† This John Waddams, the first at Wethersfield, came from the same county in England where Sir Nicholas, the founder of the college, resided, and may have descended from the family of one of the uncles of Sir Nicholas, viz., Giles or Andrew Waddams.

John Waddams, son of John the first, born in Wethersfield in 1655, married Hannah ——, and had a son Noah, born in the same town in 1695, who married, first, Elizabeth Sage, and second, Anne Hurlbut; had ten children when he settled in Goshen, Conn., in the spring of 1742, on a farm on the old road direct from Litchfield to Goshen Centre, his house being near the site of the brick house built by his son Seth, and now owned by the heirs of the late Samuel Ives, at which place he died in 1783, aged eighty-eight years.

Noah Waddams, Jr., born in Wethersfield, May 17, 1726, came to Goshen when fourteen years of age, with his father, at the time the town first began to be settled, and when there were no privileges for education except by private instruction. He fitted for college, how or where is not known, entered the College of New Jersey, was graduated Sept. 25, 1754, his diploma being now in the custody of his great-grandson, Calvin Wadhams, Esq., counselor-at-law, of Wilkesbarre; and what is a most singular coincidence, this same great-grandson was graduated at the same university just one hundred years after his paternal ancestor. Mr. Wadhams studied theology probably with the Rev. Abel Newell, then pastor at Goshen, and was ordained in 1758 the first pastor of the "Church of Christ" at New Preston, Conn., and married Elizabeth Ingersol, Nov. 8, 1758, and continued here a faithful, successful minister for ten years, when at his own request he was dismissed. Some of his descendants have remained honorable members of that community to the present time.

At that time the Susquehanna Company were arranging to effect a settlement on the lands claimed by the State of Connecticut, on the Susquehanna River, within the bounds of Pennsylvania, as constituting a part of Litchfield County. When, therefore, it was proposed to send a colony of forty families to that region, the providing of a pastor was considered of as much importance as that of a physician, or a person skilled in any of the mechanical branches; and in order that this personage might not be an incumbrance upon an infant colony, the company made provision for his support and maintenance. At a meeting of the company held in 1768 the following action was taken: "The standing committee was directed to procure a pastor to accompany the second colony, called the 'first forty,' for carrying on religious worship and services according to the best of his ability in a wilderness country." The proceedings make further provision: "That he shall receive one whole share or right in the purchase and such other encouragements as others are entitled to have and enjoy." This share amounted to some three hundred acres, besides the perquisites which sometimes accompanied the grant. The company also required the colonial adventurers to provide their pastor, when they should become located upon the promised land, "with sustenance according to their best ability." When preparation was being made to start this Plymouth colony on their journey into the wilderness, the committee made choice of the Rev. Noah Wadhams as their pastor, and he, being then without a parish, accepted the appointment. He was at this time, 1769, forty-three years of age, and had a family of small children. Leaving his family on his homestead in New Preston, he embarked with his flock in the spirit of adventure which was almost a ruling passion in those times to try the perils and privations of the wilderness, on the distant shores of the Susquehanna, amidst the conflicting suspicions and jealousies of the various Indian tribes.

* "Chronology of Serjeants," 51–55.

Mr. Wadhams proceeded with his flock to the place of destination, where they established what is now the town of Plymouth, on the western bank of the Susquehanna, in Luzerne Co., Pa., and there he continued his pastoral labors and relations, interrupted by an occasional visit to his family in Connecticut, until the year succeeding the Wyoming massacre, 1778, when he removed them to Plymouth. From this time to the period of his death, May 22, 1806, he faithfully pursued his religious duties, preaching in Plymouth and other parts of the valley. He was a man of considerable talents, persevering and industrious, and as a mark of merit Yale College conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts in the year 1764. He left four sons,—Ingersoll, Calvin, Noah, and Moses, the last dying of yellow fever in 1803.

Calvin and Noah were for many years prominent business men of the town. The success of the former was remarkable, he being at his death, in 1845, the man of the largest wealth in the town, and probably there was not more than one other citizen of the county who possessed more property than he. He was a stout, athletic man, about five feet eight inches in height, dark blue eyes, and a florid complexion. He possessed an agreeable presence, even temper; was strictly temperate, very industrious, and lived in a plain, economical manner. He possessed sound judgment, good health, and a strong constitution, and having resolved to become wealthy, he succeeded by fair and honorable methods, not being under the necessity of obtaining money by forced sales of the property of his debtors. He was, in addition to his occupation of farmer, a private banker, and being in the habit of loaning money, it seemed to afford him more satisfaction to lend to the poor than to the rich. Having accommodated such people, he would be annoyed when the day of payment came, and, as resort to execution was the last remedy he employed, he would often extend the time and receive almost anything under the name of property in payment. He was kind and indulgent to the men in his employment, but continued to superintend the work on his farm even when, in order to do it, he was under the necessity of riding in his carriage. Living in a frugal way, with great energy in business, he accumulated a large estate. His old homestead farm, being only a part of his estate left at his decease, but underlaid with a coal-bed, was recently sold by his family for seven hundred thousand dollars.

He was a religious man, and although educated as a Congregationalist, embraced the Wesleyan doctrines, to which he adhered to the end of his life. His home was ever open to the brethren of the Methodist Church, entertaining at quarterly meetings as many as fifty at a time; but this was not all; his hospitality was not confined to his own sect; it was broad and general, and his home was open to all. He died at a ripe age and in the full enjoyment of his faculties.

Samuel Wadhams, Esq., the only son who survived him, inherited the larger part of the estate. He inherited also the business qualities, the even temper and kind disposition of his father, and being remarkably methodical in business transactions, he made a wise improvement of the large estate inherited, which enabled him to leave an ample fortune to each of his children. He left three sons,—Elijah C., Calvin, and Moses, and one daughter, who married Hon. L. D. Shoemaker, afterwards a representative in Congress.

Elijah C., son of the above, is a liberally educated, thorough business man, residing in Wilkesbarre, Pa., and has the following children: Ellen Hendrick, Samuel French, Cornelia Frances, Moses Waller, Stella Catlin, Lydia French, Ralph Halliburton.

Noah Wadhams, Jr., third son of the pioneer at Plymouth, was one of the early justices of the peace of the county. He was a graduate of the famous law-school of Litchfield, Conn., under the management of Judge Reeve, and was admitted to the bar of Luzerne Co., Pa., about the year 1800, but this profession did not afford him any great attractions, and he settled on his patrimonial estate in Plymouth, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was an industrious, upright citizen, and his court decisions seldom found their way to the appellate courts. He was a model magistrate, and for many long years enjoyed the confidence and respect of his neighbors. He died in 1846, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

The Rt. Rev. Edgar P. Wadhams, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., is descended through another branch from Noah Wadhams, the first of the name in Goshen. His great-grandfather, Jonathan, son of Noah, was born Oct. 18, 1730, in Wethersfield, and came to Goshen with his father's family, where he married Judith Howe, Aug. 7, 1754, and where he spent his life as a farmer. His children were Abraham, Moses, Susannah, and Lucy. Abraham married Tryphena Collins, of Goshen, Jan. 15, 1778. Their children were Luman, born Sept. 17, 1781; Timothy, who died in Goshen; Noah, who lives at North Bay, Oneida Co., N. Y.; and Jonathan, who lives at East Clarkson, Monroe Co.; Abraham died in Goshen; Myra married J. Bartholomew; Orlando lives in Sangamon Co., Ill.; Lucy married John Beach, of Goshen; Elvira married John Parker, now in Wisconsin. Of these, Luman Wadhams married widow Lucy (Bostwick) Prindle, and had Jane Ann, who married Benjamin Wells, of Jay, Essex Co., N. Y.; Lucy Elvira, who married D. S. Wright, M.D., of Whitehall, N. Y.; William Luman, who married Emeline ——, and now lives on the old homestead at Wadhams' Mills, Essex Co., N. Y.; Abraham Edmond married Sophia Southard, and died in 1856; Noah Collins died young; Edward P., born May 21, 1817.

The bishop, Edgar P. Wadhams, is a liberally educated man of good qualities, having risen, by regular gradation, in the Catholic Church to the office of bishop of the diocese of Ogdensburg, which he has held a number of years; and, in the pursuit of literary tastes, he has given considerable time to the procuring of historical material concerning the Wadhams family, both at home and abroad, the results of which largely enrich the account of the family here given. His nephew, A. V. Wadhams, lieutenant United States navy, of the Coast Survey office, Washington, D. C., has rendered valuable service in the same line.

John Waddams, Sr., son of Noah the first, born in Wethersfield in 1732, came with his father to Goshen when he was eight or nine years of age. At the age of twenty-six years (1758) his father deeded him a farm of sixty acres, as he says, "for the Love and good-will I have and do bear unto my Loving son John Waddams of Goshen." This land lay on the east side of the road, and upon it, near the highway, this son built his house, which is still standing, about eighty rods south of where the father resided; it being in a good state of preservation, although it has been standing one hundred and twenty years. He married Ruth, daughter of Isaac Marsh, of Litchfield. She was born May 25, 1738. He was an energetic, successful farmer of Goshen, and died March 3, 1816, at the age of eighty-four years. An anecdote illustrative not only of his character but also of the times in which he lived is still remembered. He was remarking at a certain time, while in company, that he could write a deed for the sale of land as well as any lawyer in the county, to which a neighbor standing near objected, but he persevered in asserting the statement. The neighbor said, "John Wadhams, you lie when you say it." Such a remark being regarded in those days as the greatest dishonor to a man of character, John thrust out his arm, and his clenched hand coming in contact with the neighbor's head quite suddenly, he fell to the ground, a little astonished at the turn of matters. Mr. Wadhams being a member of the church was called on not long after by a committee of the church, who urged him to a confession of wrong-doing and sorrow for the same; but this he stoutly refused to do, not seeing that he had done wrong, but rather that he had vindicated his own character as a man of truth. A second committee visited him, and recommended that if he could not go before the church and make the statement, he might delegate another to do it for him; but all effort was unavailing, and the church, although acknowledging that his sense of honor was perfectly right, excommunicated him because he would not say he was sorry when he was not.

Another item characteristic of the times is found in the town order-book of Goshen, that on the day of the installation of the Rev. Mr. Sherman of that town, about 1781, Mr. Wadhams furnished the cheese and cider for the lunch for the council during intermission of services.

John Wadhams, Jr., married, April 25, 1805, Mary, daughter of Samuel Ripley, of Goshen. She was born Feb. 14, 1776. He made his home in the new house which his father had built on the then new turnpike road from Goshen Centre to Litchfield, on seventy-five acres of land that the father afterwards deeded to this son John and his brother Isaac, the house being now the residence of John M. Wadhams. John Wadhams, Jr., was a capable business man, but never possessing good health, on account of lung difficulty, could not endure much of the regular labor required on a farm, yet he managed the enterprise successfully. He died Sept. 3, 1814.

Mary (Ripley) Wadhams possessed a remarkable physical and mental constitution, being of a tender and kindly disposition, but of such courageous temper as seldom falls to the lot of a woman, being naturally retiring and sensitive, yet equal to any emergency. She assisted in several surgical operations of the amputation of limbs and excisions of cancers, performing important parts with perfect composure. When a girl she worked for fifty cents per week, never more than a dollar a week, but at the time of her marriage had five hundred dollars of her own earnings at interest. She survived her first husband, and four years after his decease married his brother, Isaac Wadhams, Nov. 26, 1818, and died Jan. 4, 1850, having been the mother of nine children by her first, and of one by her second husband.

Isaac, son of John Wadhams, Sr., lived with his brother John on the farm which they owned jointly until the year 1818, when he married the brother's widow, Mary (Ripley) Wadhams, and continued a successful farmer, specially thoughtful and considerate to the poor and unfortunate. He accumulated a handsome fortune. He died Feb. 24, 1832, leaving one son, Isaac, who continued to reside in a part of the old home, with his mother and half-sister, until his death, July 17, 1865. He was unfortunate in suffering three severe attacks of illness when a child, in consequence of which he never allowed himself to take full charge of his business without the advice and judgment of his brother, John M., who rendered the needed help in so efficient a manner that at his death his paternal estate had doubled once and a half.

ELIZABETH, daughter of John Wadhams, Sr., became the second wife of John Hatch, of New Preston, whose first wife was the daughter of the Rev. Noah Wadhams. She died in Goshen, Sept. 23, 1803, without children.

SARAH, daughter of John Wadhams, Sr., married Stephen Russell, of Litchfield, where she died of cancer, June 25, 1818, leaving two sons, John W. Russell and Isaac W. Russell, both of whom became prominent surgeons in Mount Vernon, Ohio. Isaac W. died unmarried; John W. married a daughter of William Beebe, of Litchfield, and is still living, having several children. Stephen Russell died at his son John's, in Ohio.

GEORGE, son of John Wadhams, Jr., born Jan. 28, 1806, married Angeline Parmelee, at Goshen, Nov. 26, 1836, and resided on the homestead of his grandfather until his death, Feb. 3, 1870, leaving no children.

MARY, daughter of John Wadhams, Jr., born Aug. 30, 1808, married Watts H. Brooks, of Goshen, and died Sept. 5, 1872. Mr. Brooks is a successful farmer, his home being efficiently maintained by the oversight of his youngest daughter, Amanda Collins Brooks; the elder daughter, Mary E., having died at the age of twenty years. This Goshen home is well represented in business circles throughout the State by the two sons as bankers at Wolcottville. The elder, John W., was trained to mercantile life some years, when the health of his brother, Isaac W., proving inadequate to a collegiate course which he had entered upon, the brothers accepted an opportunity, and conducted successfully a dry-goods and produce store in Goshen some ten years, when they removed and established their banking house at Wolcottville, where the enterprise is still prosperous. Mr. John W. Brooks is now insurance commissioner of the State of Connecticut. While these two brothers were traveling recently in Europe, they made such collections of names and historical matters as have rendered this account of the Wadhams family much more complete than it otherwise would have been.

HON. JOHN MARSH WADHAMS, whose portrait is here given, was born at Goshen, May 7, 1811, being the son of John Wadhams, Jr., and his wife, Mary Ripley. His father died when he was three years of age, leaving him, with two brothers and two sisters and a small patrimony, in care of his mother, who four years later married Isaac Wadhams, her first husband's brother. As a result of this marriage, a son, Isaac, was born in 1821, who died in 1865 without children. The children of these two families were reared at the homestead until they severally became of age, the boy-life of John M. being occupied with work on the farm summers and attendance on the common school winters until sixteen years of age, after which two or three terms at the academy completed his school days. He early learned to "cast interest" and found it more pleasant to receive than to pay, and from observation concluded that three-fourths of the estates probated did not amount to the original sum inherited had it been left to accumulate in the savings bank; in other words, not one of four had supported itself by its own exertion. Fifty-one years ago he kept a district school in Salisbury for four months, wages ten dollars a month, boarding around the district, and since for three or four years; about that time his stepfather clothed him and paid him fifty dollars per annum for his work; he placed his forty dollars school-money at six per cent. interest, which being compounded for fifty-one years, gives him now over one thousand dollars of school-money. This statement, while suggestive to the young, has a logical force, since his reckoning has never led him to change from receiving to paying interest.

His tact and good management in financial matters is shown to have been continued through life, as the tax-lists of Goshen prove at this date, while his skill in the management of the property of others, as well as his integrity of accounting and administration, is well known to the people of Goshen, and is questioned by none. One example is given. The estate of his half-brother, Isaac, which consisted mostly of scattered lots of land lying in Goshen and adjoining towns, managed by him for years as an agent, which estate, besides supporting Isaac, made the surprising increase from sixteen thousand to forty thousand dollars, which for a back country town is worthy of notice.

Mr. Wadhams since reaching his majority has been constantly trusted and honored as trustee, executor, guardian, or administrator of the estates of others, as the probate records of this district will abundantly testify, and it is probable that he has settled more estates of deceased persons than any other man now living in Goshen, with perhaps one exception.

He has been an office-holder almost continually for fifty years, having filled every position of trust or profit, except one, within the gift of his townsmen, being last of all for several years the town agent to fight its battles in money, if any should occur. He was for several years collector of internal revenue for the district including Goshen and adjoining towns. He served fifteen years as selectman and most of the time as chairman of the board; and it has been a fact, noted throughout the State, that the town affairs of Goshen have for many years been most frugally managed, and never more so than during Mr. Wadhams' administration; and many of the "old stagers" of the town boards outside of Goshen, from twenty to forty years ago, will call to mind their contests with him in which Goshen as a rule has been victorious.

By his skill as chairman of the board of selectmen, ably assisted by competent associates, Goshen was carried through the drafts, enlistments, and extra expenses of the late Rebellion without a debt or an obligation unpaid.

He was a representative in 1844, and served on the committee on sale of lands; also a representative in 1845, and served on the committee on claims as chairman; and again a representative in 1880, and was chairman of the committee on forfeited rights. He was the senator from the seventeenth district in 1858, and chairman of the committee on the State prison.

His service in both branches of the State Legislature was characterized by the same ideas of economy and careful financial management as is noted of his private and other public life. He contested all bills that had the appearance of "jobbery," and while advocating every measure which looked for "the greatest good to the greatest number," took time to count the cost, thoroughly investigating every measure by the test of its merit and public demand, though not in the spirit of parsimony, yet in such a manner as to retain the esteem and friendship of his opponents. The following article, taken from the New Haven Register of Feb. 29, 1880, a paper devoted to the opposite political party to which Mr. Wadhams belongs, illustrates a little his relations to his fellow representatives: "It is hard work to properly estimate Mr. Wadhams, of Goshen, there being in him a large amount of dry humor with a strong tendency to inoffensive sarcasm. He can hardly talk on any subject without the fun oozing out of him at every pore, and his remarks on any subject are always as eagerly listened to as were those of P. T. Barnum, of the last session. Mr. Wadhams is the funnier man of the two, inasmuch as natural humor is always better than boisterous fun. He is one of the most popular men in the House, and has a host of friends."

He was born in and held to the faith of the Old-Line Whigs so long as that party kept its name, but when Americanism arose he embraced its principles and became prominent in its councils, being greatly chagrined to see it merged in the Republican party.

It is proper to add that the foreign population of Goshen know no better friend, nor one they esteem more highly than he. No resident of Goshen has furnished the first home in this county to so great a number of the sons and daughters of Erin, Sweden, Switzerland, and Germany; many of whom are today honorable and successful freeholders in this county.

Mr. Wadhams is not a member of any church, but since his boyhood has been a constant and liberal supporter of the First Congregational Society of Goshen, contributing largely of his means and influence towards its success. He recognizes the ancient teaching "For ye have the poor with you always," and has ever been mindful that "whensoever ye will ye may do them good," as his neighbors in South Goshen and elsewhere will bear testimony.

He is known as a man of public spirit in its true sense, ready and willing to contribute of time and money to all enterprises of public benefit.

He was chairman of the committee having the management of the centennial celebration of the town of Goshen, July 4, 1876, and has been called to hold similar positions on many other public occasions. He was for two years president of the Litchfield County Agricultural Society, vindicating his standing as a successful, practical farmer of the county.

In his early manhood Mr. Wadhams was troubled with a lung difficulty which incapacitated him for severe physical labor for several years, but in his later life he has been favored with general good health. Although having measured the seventy years allotted to man, with beard and hair indicative of his stage of life, his form is still erect, and his eye as black and piercing as ever. He is the oldest living male representative of his branch of the Wadhams family; a name which numbers at this date fifty-two representatives in Goshen.

Mr. Wadhams married Eunice W. Hodges, of Torrington, Conn., Oct. 30, 1837, a descendant of one of the first families of that town, who died Aug. 7, 1855, leaving three children. In 1857, December 2d, he married Mrs. Myrantha (Drake) Gillett, of Torrington, who, although coming into a family of decided energy and character, has so judiciously and kindly cared for and nurtured the home as to win the decided esteem of all, and to make it thoroughly a home of gladness.

Of the three surviving children of this family,

John Hodges Wadhams, born Nov. 30, 1840, the eldest, resides on a farm adjoining his paternal home. He received a common-school and an academic education at Goshen and Norfolk; married, Sept. 11, 1865, Mary G. Pelton, of Torrington (born Dec. 11, 1846), and has seen considerable portion of his native country by travel, having resided over two years at Bloomington, Ill., from September, 1865. He is in politics a Democrat; having been a member of the General Assembly in the years 1872 and 1874, and for many years chairman of the town Democratic committee. He was also a director of the Connecticut State prison from July, 1874, to July, 1876, and is at present justice of the peace and register of voters.

His children are Julia E. Wadhams, born July 6, 1867; John Marsh Wadhams, born Sept. 14, 1870; Lucy Burr Wadhams, born April 8, 1872; Mary H. Wadhams, born Feb. 21, 1876; and Robert P. Wadhams, born Jan. 10, 1879.

Sarah Jane, daughter of John Wadhams, born July 12, 1846, married Frederick A. Lucas (born Sept. 9, 1841) Aug. 7, 1867. They reside at West

David N. Lucas.

Goshen, where Mr. Lucas, a successful business man, has been engaged some years as a merchant. Their children are Frederick Wadhams Lucas, born Nov. 11, 1868; and John Marsh Lucas, born Dec. 14, 1870.

JULIA HINCKLEY, daughter of John M. Wadhams, born Oct. 16, 1852, married, Sept. 3, 1874, Wilber H. Wadhams (born Nov. 6, 1848), a business man residing at West Goshen, being the owner and conductor of a valuable grist-mill property at that place. They have one child, Elizabeth Wadhams, born June 24, 1876.

ELIZABETH, daughter of John Wadhams, Jr., born Sept. 5, 1813, has always resided on the paternal homestead, and, although not the strongest in health, has a competency to secure the comforts of life, and has always been the aunt of the old homestead, whom all have delighted to honor.

SAMUEL NOAH, son of John Wadhams, Jr., born March 20, 1815, married, Sept. 9, 1838, Lucy Matilda Rea, who was born March 26, 1819. He engaged for a time as a merchant in Danbury, Conn., after a farming experience of some three years. Having traveled somewhat in former years as a salesman of cutlery, he engaged in this capacity with the Holley Manufacturing Company of Salisbury, in which relation he continued about twenty-five years, making a success of the enterprise both for himself and the company. He died Nov. 29, 1874. Their children were Mary Elizabeth, born June 5, 1839, who married Ephraim Starr Brewster, Jan. 20, 1859, and died in Florida, July 3, 1869, leaving a son, Clarence Nelson, born April 16, 1860; Franklin Edward and Francis Morris, twins, born July 17, 1844; the former married Alice Eliza Barnum, Nov. 25, 1875, who died June 2, 1880, leaving no children; the latter, Francis Morris Wadhams, married Frances Minor Palmer, Dec. 28, 1870, their children being Mary Palmer, born Sept. 30, 1872; Noah Samuel, born May 27, 1875; Joseph Palmer, born April 22, 1877; Francis Ray, born Jan. 22, 1880; Lucy Octavia Woodruff, born Feb. 27, 1848, who married Dr. John Crego Lester, June 24, 1880; and Henrietta Josephine, born Jan. 9, 1851.

SOLOMON WADHAMS, son of Noah, Sr., born June 26, 1740, in Middletown, where his father resided one year, was two years of age when his father's family removed to Goshen. He was graduated at Yale College in 1762, and afterwards engaged as a merchant in a store half a mile north of his father's residence. He married, in 1802, widow Abigail (Beebe) Allen, who had sons,—Beebe Allen and Heman Allen. He resided in Goshen until his decease. His children were Beebe and Melinda. Beebe Wadhams married Charlotte, daughter of Abner Ives, of Torrington,* and lived a time as a farmer about a mile south of Goshen Centre, where his wife died, and afterwards he removed to Berkshire Co., Mass., where he died. His children, born in Goshen, were Henry, who married Hannah Scott, of Massachusetts, and had sons,—Henry L., who died, leaving daughters, Charlotte and Mary, and Lewis, who married, and resides in Pittsfield, Mass., has son Louis; Julius, who died young; Willard, who was graduated at the Vermont University when seventeen years of age, traveled and studied in Europe, and died early in Texas; Albert, born June 25, 1819; received a diploma from Norwich University, Vermont; married, first, Lucy L. Ensworth, of Norwich, Vt., June 7, 1844, and second, Mrs. Emeline Perkins, of Goshen, Aug. 22, 1866, and has one son, Charles, born Sept. 2, 1847.

SETH, youngest son of Noah Wadhams, Sr., was born in Goshen; married Ann Catlin, of Litchfield, a woman of great energy of character and efficiency; known far and near as a practicing physician; built a brick dwelling-house near his father's residence, which is now owned by the heirs of Samuel Ives, whose wife, Polly, was his youngest daughter.

His children were Nancy, who married Timothy Childs, of Torrington, whose son, Dr. Samuel R. Childs, was one of the commissioners of New York City in the construction of the Croton Water-Works for that city; Anna, who married Capt. Samuel Buell, of Litchfield; Seth, Jr., died in Cornwall, had a son, George D. Wadhams, a merchant of Wolcottville, Conn.; Jesse, who removed to Mount Morris, N. Y., where he died; Heman, died in Goshen; David, who was for many years a merchant in Goshen Centre, leaving a family of fourteen children; Norman, who built the brick house where he lived and died, on the new road two miles south of Goshen Centre, a quarter of a mile east of his father's house.

DANIEL NORTON LUCAS.

The Lucas family came from England, the genealogy having been traced back to about the year 1600.

The subject of this sketch belongs to a family noted as large land-holders in Goshen and Middletown, reaching back to 1733. In the latter year we find Thomas Lucas, and also his son, Thomas Lucas, Jr., as residents of Middletown and owners of large tracts of land on the west bank of the Connecticut River, records of titles to same being found in "Middletown Land Records," Lib. 7, folio 135,—"35 page of Middletown, eightly book of Records," and others,—as we copy from the old deeds now in the hands of the family.

This Thomas, Jr., came to Goshen from Middletown about 1755, and bought a tract of land on what is now known as Lucas Hill, getting his titles from one of the original proprietors of the town. He built a log house near the big rock east of the house now belonging to the estate of Daniel Norton Lucas, and from that day till now that section has remained in the name and occupancy of this family.

* See Torrington history.

Thomas, Jr., had two sons; the elder, also a Thomas, Jr., was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, a young man of great promise, but gave his life for the new republic, dying of camp fever ten days after his return home.

The other son, Allen, remained with his father on Lucas Hill, married, and reared a numerous family, some of his boys scattering into the far West, one of his girls marrying into one of the Goshen families. His son, Thomas Allen Lucas, remained on the hill, as also did David, his brother, until his death.

The descendants of Thomas Allen Lucas now comprise nearly all of the Lucas name in Goshen, there being one exception, a daughter (Clarinda) of David Lucas.

Thomas Allen Lucas was killed while in the prime of life by being thrown from a load of hay during a thunder-shower, in 1837, while the oxen attached were running away. He left a widow and four children,—Daniel Norton, Henry Augustus, Elizabeth, and Polly Ann. His widow was the daughter of Deacon Daniel Norton, of Goshen, and a woman of sterling character, sound sense, and business energy. She carried on the large farm, with the aid of her children, the eldest being then eighteen years old, till her death in 1840.

Sept. 13, 1840, Daniel Norton Lucas married Marilla L., one of the twelve daughters of Benjamin Price, of Goshen, and, buying the real estate distributed to his sisters, which with his own made a farm of one hundred and sixty-five acres, began business for himself, being at that time twenty-two and his wife seventeen years old, she bringing him no worldly goods, yet rich in all other qualifications necessary for a happy, successful farmer's life.

For thirty years they worked their farm and bought additions to it, increasing their dairy of cows from twenty-five to fifty, and their cattle from thirty to sixty-five head.

At one time his real estate was one of the most valuable in the town, and consisted of more than six hundred acres, carrying one hundred head of cattle, part of which was managed by his son.

Lucas was a successful farmer, and owed much to his wife for her skill and energy in the management of the dairy and household affairs. About 1870 he retired from his farm to a residence in Goshen Centre, placing his son, Daniel Norton, Jr., on the farm. The quiet of his new house was very irksome to him, and he rode to the old farm almost daily, and worked with the men and directed the management until his death.

He was a man of decided opinions and bold to declare them, of an argumentative disposition, but very fair and honorable in business. His dealings for forty years with his neighbors were extensive in cattle, horses, and farm produce, but he never had a lawsuit. He cared very little for politics, and held very little public office: was a selectman one term. He was practical, plain, made no displays, cared nothing for fashion, and seldom went outside for business or pleasure.

He departed this life April 25, 1880, and was buried on his sixty-second birthday in the Centre cemetery in Goshen, and his heirs have erected a handsome monument to his memory.

He will long be remembered as one of Goshen's most enterprising and successful farmers.

We place on record a few leaves and twigs from the genealogical tree of this family.

James Lucas, in 1620, was a land-holder near Manchester, England, and held an appointment under the government similar to our trial justice. His son, Thomas James, died in Boston about 1650, and one of his sons, Thomas Augustus, died at sea, in command of a vessel, about 1665. This Capt. Lucas had a son Thomas, born in Boston in 1640, who died in Middletown in 1737, and whose son Thomas, Jr., born in 1700, near Boston, died in Middletown in 1749; and it was a son of this last-named Thomas, Jr.—who was also a Thomas, Jr.—that settled in Goshen about 1755. This man had two sons: the elder, born in Middletown, March 20, 1750, also a Thomas, Jr., was a soldier in the Revolution, and died in Goshen in 1783; while the other, named Allen, born in Middletown, March 1, 1753, died in Goshen, March 11, 1820. His wife was Sarah Thompson, born in Goshen, March 1, 1789; she died March 27, 1838. The children of Allen were John, Ezra, Augustus, Heman, Sarah, David, Olive, Betsy, Mary, and Thomas Allen. John and Ezra moved to the West, married, and have descendants in large number, which we must omit here. Augustus died in Goshen, a young man, leaving a widow, who afterwards married —— Towner. Sarah died while a young woman, and unmarried. Mary married Horatio N. Beach, on East Street in Goshen, and is yet living (March, 1881) in the home she entered so long ago, and has been a widow for fifty years. Her son Edward, who lived with her till his death, April 3, 1871, left a widow, now living at the homestead, Laura Johnson, and three daughters,—Mary E., born May 7, 1861; Laura Jane, born May 9, 1864; and Ella C., born Feb. 22, 1866. Heman was with Hudson, of Goshen, when he settled the town in Ohio which bears his name, and found an early grave there, and was the first white man buried in that town. Olive and Betsy never married; both lived in Goshen until their death a few years since. David remained in Goshen all his days, married Mary Merrills, and had children,—Esther, who never married, and died at home, Jan. 28, 1848; Jane, who married Virgil Collins, of Goshen, leaving at her death Evaline, who married Joseph Carter, of Plymouth, and afterwards —— Lindley, of Waterbury; and Mary, who married William Hotchkiss, of Plymouth. David, Jr., who married Eunice Davis, of Goshen, he dying Oct. 12, 1863, and his widow Aug. 25, 1867, leaving Charles, now married in New Haven, and Alice, now the wife of Elihu Carlisle, of Goshen. Clarinda, still living in Goshen, never married.

Thomas Allen Lucas was born in Goshen, Oct. 12, 1792, and died Aug. 30, 1837. His wife, Sally Norton, was born in Goshen, Jan. 28, 1793, and died Sept. 18, 1840. They were married March 19, 1817, and their children were, —

Daniel Norton[1] (see sketch), born April 28, 1818.

Henry Augustus,[2] born April 15, 1819, died May 19, 1875. He married Mary H. Pierson, of Richmond, Mass., March 27, 1844, and their children are Sarah Baldwin, born Jan. 14, 1845, wife of Seelye Hart, of Cornwall, Conn.; Elizabeth Melissa, born March 7, 1848, wife of Charles Blake, of Cornwall, Conn.; Henry Pierson, born Nov. 21, 1850, married Mary A. Humphrey, of Pittsfield, Mass., after whose death he married Lillian Wolleston, of Pittsfield, and is settled in business as a prosperous merchant in Pittsfield, Mass.; Joseph Allen, born Dec. 7, 1856, now living on the homestead in Goshen with his mother.

Sarah Elizabeth,[3] born July 12, 1822, died July 2, 1851, married Myron C. Gaylord, of Norfolk, Conn., Jan. 8, 1843, who died April 4, 1854. Their children were Mary Louisa, born Dec. 8, 1843, died Jan. 18, 1856; Sarah Elizabeth, born July 30, 1845, died May 14, 1870; Myron Lucas, born July 18, 1847, died Jan. 16, 1852; Henry Norton, born July 7, 1849, now living in Norfolk.

Polly Ann,[4] born Dec. 9, 1823, married Jonathan Wadhams, Jr., of Goshen, Feb. 22, 1842, who died Feb. 25, 1865. She married Deacon Addison Palmer, of Torrington, Conn., Oct. 27, 1869, and they now live on the Wadhams homestead in Goshen. Her children are Williard Norton Wadhams, born March 16, 1843, died in army hospital at Philadelphia, July 22, 1865, while in the service of the United States, and holding the position of color-guard in the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and he was a very fine soldier and a brave man; Henry Augustus Wadhams, born Feb. 26, 1847, died in Goshen, Oct. 10, 1867; Jonathan Edwards Wadhams, born Jan. 1, 1856, married, Feb. 19, 1877, Lavina F. Collough, of Morris, Conn., and has children,—Williard Henry, born May 9, 1878; and Darwin Addison, born March 13, 1880.

The children of Daniel Norton Lucas (sketch) are Frederick Allen[1] (see sketch in this history), Mary Elizabeth,[2] born Jan. 25, 1843, died April 4, 1866; Emma Lucretia,[6] born May 9, 1861, died May 1, 1871; Daniel Norton, Jr.,[3] born June 27, 1845, now a farmer in Goshen, married Addie Wadhams Tuttle, adopted daughter of Calvin Tuttle, of Goshen, Feb. 6, 1867, and has children,—Franklin Calvin, born Jan. 19, 1868; Daniel Edwin, born Jan. 3, 1871; Mary Addie, born Feb. 5, 1872; Charlie, born Oct. 2, 1873.

Benjamin Franklin,[4] born Aug. 24, 1847, died Feb. 5, 1875, in Goshen, married Kate L. Miles, daughter of Philo C. Miles, of Goshen, Oct. 3, 1870, and their children are Willis F., born July 17, 1871; Emma B., born April 4, 1873.

Anna Marrilla,[5] born July 22, 1851; married Charles C. Allyn, of Goshen, May 23, 1876, and lives in West Goshen, Conn.

FREDERICK ALLEN LUCAS.

Frederick Allen Lucas is the eldest child of Daniel Norton Lucas (referred to in this history with sketch and portrait), and is now the oldest living male representative of the Lucas family in Goshen. He was born in Goshen, Sept. 9, 1841.

During his boyhood, and until near his majority, he lived at home, and worked on his father's farm in summer, attending the common school in winter till he was twelve years old, when he entered Goshen Academy under the tutorship of James Q. Rice. At seventeen he taught a school in Cornwall Hollow, and continued to teach each winter and helping his father summers, till July, 1862, when he enlisted as a private soldier in Company C, Nineteenth Connecticut Volunteers (afterwards the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery), under his old teacher, Capt. Rice.

As a boy young Lucas was a great worker, energetic, and persevering; was never beaten at hoeing, haying, or milking; held plow and followed the team as soon as large enough to swing a whip, and for several seasons milked the "mean ones" to the number of fifteen, night and morning, in his father's dairy of forty-five cows.

When the civil war broke out he was anxious to enlist at the first chance which offered, but his father's protest and argument that he could not spare him prevented him from shouldering a musket for the Union till 1862.

At Camp Dutton, in Litchfield, he was made a corporal, and when his turn came for promotion, some months afterwards, was advanced to a sergeant. While serving as sergeant of the guard one day at Fort Ellsworth, Va., an order from Col. Kellogg, commanding, was read to the regiment on dress-parade, commanding every non-commissioned officer in the regiment to present a specimen of his handwriting at headquarters within twenty-four hours. Lucas did not know of this order until after "taps," when he went to his quarters for supper, and the "boys" told him. By the light of a candle stuck in an inverted bayonet, on a half-sheet of note-paper that was far from clean, he attempted to obey his colonel's command. He placed his first thought on paper, writing the first question and answer in "Artillery Tactics:"

"What is understood by the term artillery?"

"Heavy pieces of every description, with the implements and materials necessary for their use."

Signing his name he rushed to his captain's tent and handed in his specimen. Two days afterwards he was as much astonished as fifty other sergeants, whom he "jumped," to hear himself commanded by a special order to report forthwith to regimental headquarters and assume command of headquarters guard, brass band, drum corps, and others, in all about eighty-five men. Whether his penmanship had anything to do with this Lucas never knew. It might have been due to his skill as a drill-master in both infantry and artillery tactics, as for many weeks previous he had been detailed almost constantly on this duty, drilling the new men with which the regiment was being heavily recruited.

The best evidence we have that Lucas did his duty well in this new sphere is that shortly afterwards Col. Kellogg asked him if he had been home since his enlistment, and receiving the reply that he had not, he told Lucas to "go to Adjt. Vaill and tell him to make out a furlough." The colonel indorsed the paper with a few words of commendation, and an orderly was dispatched to Washington to get the same indorsed by the general commanding and the Secretary of War, as this was done in the days of "no furloughs," except in extreme cases. The time was for "seven days from date."

It was while home on this furlough that Lucas was made a "freeman," and cast his first vote on the first Monday in April, 1864.

His promptness to obey orders is shown by his return to the regimental headquarters in Virginia, twelve hours before his furlough elapsed.

On his return, Col. Kellogg met him with, "How are you, sergeant-major?" "Did you see your mother?" "Did you see the girl?" Receiving satisfactory replies, he added, "You want a new set of chevrons, sir." Lucas did not know what he meant by the last remark till, visiting the Goshen boys in Company C that evening, and going to witness their battalion dress-parade, he heard the special order read making him a sergeant-major.

He served as sergeant-major on the staff of Col. Kellogg at Fort Ellsworth and Fort Ward, and while the regiment occupied Arlington Heights, and it was at the latter place that he received from a messenger of the War Department, and passed to the hands of Adjt. Vaill and Col. Kellogg, at midnight of the 16th of May, 1864, the order to "go to the front" for his regiment.

Lucas held his position on the staff on the noted march to Spottsylvania, and in the engagement there; at Jericho Ford; the night-march along the Paumunkey; in that Aceldama, Cold Harbor, that cost every fourth man in the regiment; under that continuous "twelve days' fire." It was here that Col. Kellogg was killed, and Lucas selected four men to go with him outside, between the lines, and bring in the dead body of their beloved commander, on June 2, 1864, and Lucas held charge of the corpse till the team could be brought up, by which it was sent to the rear, and thence home for burial.

He was in that noted march with the Sixth Corps to Petersburg; helped to build the intrenchments at Harrison's House; was in the skirmish, so near a battle, of June 22, 1864; that dusty march to City Point; the trying marches and counter-marches under Sheridan in Maryland and the Shenandoah Valley; in the memorable battles of Opequan, Winchester, and Fisher's; the chase after the flying rebels to Harrisonburg; and in that most remarkable battle of the war, Cedar Creek, in which he was severely wounded by a minie-ball through his left thigh. This injury sent him to the rear for three months, but before it healed—in fact, it never healed till after the war was over—he rejoined his regiment at Petersburg, just in time to go into the fight at Hatcher's Run, where he was wounded again, but so slight as only to confine him to his quarters about a week.

At this date he was sworn in as a second lieutenant and assigned to Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, on a recommendation of Col. Mackenzie, on whose staff he had served since the death of Col. Kellogg. His commission from Governor Buckingham reached him while wounded, at Cedar Creek. Col. Mackenzie, in writing Governor Buckingham, said he "wanted Lucas commissioned for gallantry and soldierly conduct in the battles of Winchester and Fisher's Hill," and in this connection we copy from Vaill's "History of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery," page 210.

"Sergt.-Maj. (afterwards second lieutenant) Frederick A. Lucas received a wound in the left thigh at Cedar Creek which disabled him for several months. He returned to the regiment just in time to receive another wound—a slight one—in the affair at Hatcher's Run.

"He was promoted for gallantry at Winchester and Fisher's Hill, and Col. Mackenzie told the writer, just after those battles, that he never saw a braver man than Sergt.-Maj. Lucas."

He was immediately placed in command of his company, its captain being a prisoner in the enemy's hands since Cedar Creek, and remained its commanding officer till near the close of the war.

In March, 1865, his old colonel, now Gen. Mackenzie, who had been assigned to the command of Kautz' cavalry division under Sheridan, urged Lucas to accept a position on his staff, promising him speedy promotion through the general's influence with Governor Buckingham, which offers were declined with gratitude, a declination much regretted ever since.

Company B was then color company, and Lucas led his men in the engagement at Fort Fisher, where his company, with two others, were left to hold through the night the advanced line gained in the fight that day, Lucas in command of the advance. He had command of the picket-line in front of Fort Wadsworth, with three officers and one hundred and fifty men under him, on April 1, 1865, when Grant made his successful attempt to take Richmond and Petersburg, and witnessed that glorious sight of the night cannonading, he and his men being stationed between the lines of heavy guns, about midway between friend and foe; and as their position was on high ground, they were exultant spectators of next day's battle, where for the first time, after years of every sort of peril and trial, as Vaill puts it, "the faithful soldiers of the republic saw daylight."

He was in command of his company on the hard chase after Lee's flying army; in the fight at Sailor's Creek, where three of his men captured flags; and at the "great surrender at Appomattox."

He commanded the rear-guard of the Sixth Corps on the famous march from Danville to Burkesville after Johnston's surrender.

He was in the grand review of the Sixth Corps and Sheridan's cavalry at Washington, June 8, 1865; and it was after this trying march that he was stricken down with malarial fever, which malady clung to him long after his return to private life.

Lieut. Lucas has the satisfaction of being able to say, what few men can, that he was present with, participated in, and by virtue of his office held a prominent position in every engagement with the enemy by the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery. He was honorably "mustered out" Aug. 18, 1865.

Upon his return to Goshen he entered the store of Hart Bros. & Co., at West Goshen, as under clerk, beginning at the bottom of the ladder, on small wages, and doing the work of a green hand, building the fires, sweeping, etc. Here he was successively promoted until he received a salary equivalent to twelve hundred dollars per year. In the spring of 1869 he was elected a representative to the General Assembly, where he served on the committee on roads and bridges, and on other minor appointments.

In September of 1869 he was solicited to become a partner in the wholesale grocery house of Giddings & Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., which became Giddings & Lucas, but after six months an opportunity offered to purchase the business at West Goshen, and, preferring a country life, he withdrew from the Bridgeport house, and associated with Frederick E. Hurlbut and Wilbert M. Allyn (both of Goshen), forming the firm of Lucas, Hurlbut & Allyn, succeeding Hart Brothers & Co.

He is still the senior partner of the firm, which is now Lucas & Allyn, his present associate being Eugene E. Allyn, a native of Goshen, who also served his apprenticeship and learned the business "from the bottom round" in the same store.

This place of business has, for many years been noted for its trade in English dairy cheese, which are made by the farmers in Goshen and towns adjoining, and have for many years found a ready market at this store. This trade was originally conducted by Augustus Miles, father of Frederick Miles, the present member of Congress from this district, and later by Mr. Miles and his son Frederick, who established the "trade-mark" "A. Miles & Son," as well known in its proper market as "Lorillard's tobacco." The high prices of the war caused a temporary increase in cheese-making in this section, and Hart Bros. & Co. shipped more than forty thousand boxes from this point in one year. The trade is still strong and flourishing, and is nominally in the hands of Lucas & Allyn, who sell direct to the West India traders.

In 1877, Mr. Lucas made extensive changes in the old Miles homestead in West Goshen, repairing and enlarging the house and outbuildings, and has now a very pleasant, spacious, healthy home, finely situated, and overlooking the village in which he lives.

By dint of pluck, energy, perseverance, close and careful application, with the aid of competent partners, he has made his business a success.

Having little taste and less time, he has meddled but little with politics, and never sought an office, although now and then called to serve his town. He was one of the committee appointed by the town to compile a record of what Goshen did in the Rebellion, and furnished much valuable information. He has been at various times a constable, grand juror, chairman of the board of education, treasurer of the town deposit fund, loaning committee, etc.; has been postmaster at West Goshen for several years, and now holds that office; was the census enumerator in 1880 for his home district, and received a flattering letter of commendation from the census department after his work was examined. He was one of the committee appointed to arrange and conduct the centennial celebration of his native town in 1876, and was active and useful in making that event famously successful, collecting and securing by his personal efforts alone a large proportion of the funds contributed, and he was the orator of the day on that occasion, and delivered an address of one and a half hour's length to an audience filling the Centre church to overflowing.

He also, at the request of his friends, delivered a memorial address, as part of the ceremonies of Decoration Day, May 30, 1874, which was an eloquent and instructive production.

He is not over demonstrative on the question of "women's rights," but believes in giving woman the credit due her in all cases and circumstances, and we take the liberty to print his closing remarks illustrative of this on the public occasion last referred to:

"And now, old comrades, I have a sentiment to offer which all good soldiers will indorse: it is that tribute should be paid to-day to the patriotic women of Goshen,—no less a tribute than which we pay the other sex.

"It was not for woman to shoulder the musket, wear the sword, or carry the lance. Her sphere was at home, working, waiting, hoping, praying; to work for the absent soldier; to wait for the glad tidings of his success, or, it may be (and, oh, how often for Goshen women!), news of his suffering and death; to hope for his return and the close of the contest; to pray for his safety and the success of his arms. Her sphere to encourage by her love, strengthen by her faithfulness to duty, and cheer by her abiding faith in the future. As Goshen soldiers, we pay tribute to Goshen women, and each of us who had a loving mother, a trusting sister, a devoted wife, or cherished sweetheart either, are glad to-day in the memory of her patriotism, and proud of her love, her faith, her sympathy, and her prayers during the dark days of our absence.

"To the mother and daughter, to the wife and sweetheart of the late war belong a large share of victories won and laurels gained by son, brother, husband, and lover, as, while we waited around our picket-fires and watched with anxious thoughts our time at the vidette-post, while we faced death in the noise and smoke of battle, or struggled with disease and loathsome wounds in the hospital ward, we ever knew and remembered that she thought of us, that she prayed for us; and whether we came home upright in stature, as when we left, or feet foremost, whether mangled and broken, with loss of limb and crippled for life, we never failed to believe that she kept a 'light in the window' burning brightly always for us; and while we give honor to the strong arms and stout hearts of our heroes, the dead and the living, we divide the praises due to loyalty and devotion, and render brave woman her share, who by her very weakness, through love, faith, prayer, and patriotism, made the strong stronger, the brave braver, the cause more righteous, the end more glorious, the triumph more honorable."

Frederick Allen Lucas married Jane, the eldest daughter of Hon. John M. Wadhams, of Goshen, Aug. 7, 1867, and he owes much to his wife's tact, skill, and sympathy for his success in life. Their children are Frederick Wadhams, born Nov. 11, 1868; John Marsh, born Dec. 14, 1870.

F. E. HURLBUT.

Frederick Edgar Hurlbut, son of Horace and Hannah Hurlbut, was born in Roxbury, Conn., Feb. 6, 1830. His paternal great-grandfather was David Hurlbut, who died at Hinesburg, Vt., with his eldest son, Cornelius. His grandfather, Maj. Hurlbut, was born in 1768, and died Dec. 9, 1813, aged forty-five years. His wife, Phebe Jackson, was born in 1776, and died Aug. 30, 1856, aged eighty. They had four sons,—Horace, born July 25, 1800; William, born July 8, 1802, died in 1879; Ira, born July 4, 1806; George, born Oct. 14, 1809. Horace Hurlbut was both a farmer and a shoemaker. He married Hannah, daughter of Samuel Lee, of Dutchess Co., N. Y. They had nine children,—George L. (deceased), Erastus J., William E., Frederick E., Alfred H., Phœbe J., John (deceased), David, Roger (deceased). Mr. Hurlbut was a man of limited circumstances. In politics was an unswerving Democrat, and died Feb. 3, 1881, at the advanced age of eighty-one. Mrs. Hurlbut died April 18, 1861.

Frederick E. Hurlbut left home when eight years of age, and commenced upon his own account the struggle of life's battle by laboring upon different farms in Roxbury and Washington most of the time till he was twenty years of age, when he entered a store in New Haven as a clerk for two years, after which he entered into trade upon his own account at New Haven, and continued it till 1854, when he removed to Goshen and followed the business of farming, and as a cattle-drover, till 1870, in which year he formed a partnership with Frederick A. Lucas and William M. Allyn, at West Goshen, under the name of Lucas, Hurlbut & Allyn, in the well-known store formerly occupied by Augustus Miles & Son, at which place the subject of this sketch remained in business till the year 1879, during which year he removed to the village of Goshen Centre and built a house, where he now resides.

Mr. Hurlbut, though not having the benefits of anything more than a common-school education, has by his business habits and self-culture, and a life of industry and integrity, exhibited in a marked degree an example worthy of being copied by the young men of the county. He has represented the town of Goshen in the General Assembly two sessions, and the Seventeenth Senatorial District as its senator one term, serving one year as member of the judiciary committee. He has also served in various positions of public trust in the town of Goshen with great acceptance and faithfulness.

Mr. Hurlbut married Mary E., daughter of James E. and Esther D. (Bentley) Thompson, Jan. 10, 1853. Mrs. Hurlbut was born Sept. 10, 1832, in Goshen. Their children are as follows: (1) Adella F., wife of H. S. Scoville, of Goshen, Conn.; they have one daughter, Alice. (2) Lizzie H., wife of Samuel Riley, of Goshen; they have one son, Frederick C. (3) Clara E., (4) May G.

The great-grandfather of Mrs. Hurlbut was John Thompson, who came from Wallingford, Conn., and was among the earliest settlers in Goshen, Conn. He had one son, John, and three daughters. He was a farmer by occupation. John Thompson, the second son of John Thompson, was born in Goshen, Conn., married Pamelia Cowles, of Farmington, Conn., and had three sons and two daughters, of whom one was named James E., who was born April 7, 1792, married Esther D. Bentley, of Stonington, Conn., and had three children, viz., (1) Louisa D., resides in Goshen, on the old Thompson homestead; the second died young; and (3) Mary E., wife of Frederick E. Hurlbut.

HENRY G. WRIGHT.

Henry G. Wright is a lineal descendant of John Wright, who came from Wethersfield Aug. 13, 1740, and bought of one Joseph Bird a half-interest in his land right. He was first chosen to office here as surveyor of highways. Dec. 14, 1741, he settled at what is now West Goshen, and built a house some eighty rods west of the bridge. He raised a family, and among his sons was Jabez, born at Wethersfield, 1738. He was known as Capt. Wright; was a farmer about one mile southwest of the village of West Goshen, where he built the brick house where the family have since resided. He married Martha Baldwin, Feb. 11, 1767. Their children were Freelove, born Jan. 1, 1768; Martha, born March 24, 1770; Asaph, born Jan. 3, 1772; and Sybil, born March 4, 1776.

Asaph, the only son of Capt. Jabez Wright, married Prudence Moore, of Torringford. Their children were Canfield, Silas, John, Edward, Edmund, William, and Albert.

Edward Wright was born April 7, 1804, and died Sept. 17, 1860. He married Phebe Way, May, 1824. She was born Jan. 22, 1802. Their children were Eliza, born Feb. 5, 1826, died Oct. 8, 1881; Celina V., born Oct. 22, 1827; Asaph S., born Dec. 16, 1829; and Henry G., born Sept. 28, 1831.

Henry G. Wright, the youngest of the family, was reared on the farm, and after his father's death paid off the other heirs and took the old home, as his father had done before him. He was married, Feb. 10, 1863, to Louisa L., daughter of Philo Howe, who was the sixth generation from Jeremiah Howe, who came from England and settled in Wallingford, Conn. Joseph Howe, the grandfather of Philo, was the first of the family who came to Goshen. Six children have been born to Mr. Wright, four of whom are now living,—Edwin O., born Oct. 21, 1866; Flora E., born Aug. 8, 1868; Alfred H., born April 10, 1875; and Harry L., born Feb. 25, 1878. Henry G. Wright is a man well known in the community where he lives for his strict integrity and upright dealing; is frequently called as administrator, etc.; has held the office of selectman for several years, is at present first selectman; has filled other offices in his town; was a representative to the Legislature in 1878.

FESSENDEN IVES.

Fessenden Ives was born in Goshen, Aug. 17, 1826, son of Leverett and grandson of Asa Ives, who came to Goshen before the Revolution. He married Sally Marks; they had four children, three sons and one daughter, viz., Eben, Luther, Leverett, and Sarah. He died at ninety, and his wife at eighty years of age. Leverett Ives was born 1796, and died Dec. 5, 1877. He married Hulda Holbrook in 1822, oldest of eight children. The Holbrooks came from Mendon, Mass., settled in Torrington, where they remained some twenty years, then came to Goshen. The children of Leverett were Alderman, Fessenden, Sabin, Everardus and Bogardus were twins, the latter died at ten years of age; Hubert L. (he died 1868, at thirty-five), Mary E., Henry H., Florence, and Asa A.

Fessenden Ives lived with his father until he had attained his majority. At that important crisis his father gave him one thousand dollars, as was his custom with all his sons. Nov. 20, 1850, he was married to Mary, daughter of Thaddeus Cook, of Sheffield, Mass. She was the youngest, and is the only survivor, of ten children.

Soon after Mr. Ives was married he bought the farm where he has since resided, some two miles south of West Goshen. Here he has diligently worked for thirty years, and by his judicious management and industry, aided by the wise counsels and frugal habits of his wife, has secured an ample competency, and the reputation of having the best-cultivated farm in this part of the county. He has spent much labor and money in removing the stone from his fields, and placing them in substantial walls, which entirely inclose his large farm. He has paid especial attention to underdraining, and has more than five miles of tile-drain on his farm. His buildings are large and well built. He has a fine herd of Alderney cows, and his dairy has a reputation second to no other. Mr. Ives is a Republican; has held several offices of trust and honor; has been selectman nine consecutive years, and after a vacation of a few years is now serving in the same capacity; has frequently been called as trustee, conservator, etc. He represented the town in the Legislature, 1875. He has been the father of nine children, five of whom died in infancy; four are now living,—Thaddeus, born 1852, married Mary H. Pratt; is a farmer adjoining the old home. Mary J., born Feb. 14, 1854, wife of C. F. Ives, of Trumbull Co., Ohio; George C., born Sept. 27, 1855; and Fessenden L., born Feb. 12, 1868.

NORMAN NORTON.

Norman Norton, son of Andrew and Lorain Norton, was born in Goshen, Conn., Oct. 10, 1797.

Andrew Norton, son of David Norton, an early settler in Goshen, was a gold and silversmith by trade, and a farmer by occupation; in politics a Democrat. He died Oct. 28, 1838, aged seventy-three years. Mrs. Norton died May 27, 1851, aged eighty-one years. Their children were (1) Myron, a farmer, died Nov. 26, 1853, aged sixty-five years; (2) Andrew, a farmer, died July 4, 1865, aged seventy-three years; (3) Clarissa (Mrs. Joseph I. Gaylord), she died April 22, 1843, aged forty-nine years; (4) Norman; (5) Horace, was a merchant, and died in Chicago, Dec. 31, 1862, aged sixty-two; and (6) Lucretia, died young.

Norman Norton remained at home on his father's farm, receiving such advantages for an education as the district schools afforded, till he was twenty-one years of age, when he went to South Carolina and Georgia, where he was engaged in general merchandising some seven years with his brother Horace. At the age of twenty-eight, in 1825, he returned to Goshen, and built a store, where he sold goods three years, when he sold to a brother. At the same time he was a farmer, which he continued to follow.

On the 3d of September, 1832, he married Lucy, daughter of Lyman Tuttle, of Hamden, Conn. Mrs. Norman Norton was born Jan. 26, 1806. Her father was a substantial farmer, and a Democrat in politics. Mr. Tuttle died in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

As soon as Mr. Norton was married he settled on his father's farm, which he purchased. In politics, a Democrat of the Jefferson and Jackson school, he succeeded his brother Myron as postmaster in Goshen, and served through Pierce's and Buchanan's administration. Mrs. Norton is a member of the Episcopal Church, and Mr. Norton is an attendant on the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Norton is now an old man of eighty-four years, and, with the exception of deafness, retains much of the vigor of youth. He is esteemed wherever known, and justly takes rank with Goshen's best citizens.

WILLIAM NORTON.

William Norton, youngest son of Abram Norton, was born in Goshen, May 15, 1816. His father was a mechanic, and young William worked with his father till he married, March 14, 1839, Sarah, daughter of Hiram Griswold, of Goshen, when he settled on a farm formerly owned by Hiram Griswold, one and a half miles northeast of Goshen Centre. Here he remained sixteen years, when he settled on the farm formerly owned by his father, near Goshen Centre, and there he continued to reside till his death, Feb. 19, 1880.

He was a large and successful farmer; in politics a Republican. His town honored him with many offices. Mr. and Mrs. Norton united with the Congregational Church at Goshen Centre. As a citizen he was regarded one of the most substantial in town. He was a kind husband and good neighbor, and his memory will long be cherished by those who knew him.*

Eben, second son of Abram Norton, was born in Goshen, June 25, 1805. He spent his early life as a peddler till his marriage, April 29, 1834, to Clarissa, daughter of Thomas and Lovica Griswold. Soon after his marriage he settled on a farm on East Street, in Goshen, remained seven years, went to Bristol, Conn., remained seven years, and was then engaged in the manufacture of currycombs and candlesticks; then went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and remained some time, then across the Ohio River, and settled in Covington, Ky., where he died, July 9, 1855. In politics, a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Norton were members of the Congregational Church. In all benevolent enterprises Mr. Norton did his part. Respected at home and abroad, he enjoyed the confidence of the people wherever he went.

* See history of Goshen for further notice of his ancestors.

Thomas Griswold, born in Goshen, Conn., married Lovica Smith, and had five children, viz.: (1) Charlotte, wife of Isaac Crandall; (2) Hiram, father of Mrs. William Norton; (3) Harriet, wife of Hosea Crandall; (4) Clarissa, wife of Eben Norton.

Mr. Griswold was a farmer by occupation, and a Republican in politics. He died February, 1839. Hiram Griswold was three times married, first to Harriet Whiting, of Torrington, and had three children, viz.: (1) Sarah, wife of William Norton (deceased); (2) Louisa, died at six years of age; and (3) Thomas W., a farmer in Goshen.

CHARLES L. NORTON.

Charles L. Norton, son of Stephen and Hannah (Coy) Norton, was born in Norfolk, Conn., Nov. 15, 1804. His grandfather, Stephen, Sr., was the first of the name to settle in Norfolk, and was akin to the early settlers in Goshen by that name. Stephen, Sr., settled in Norfolk prior to the Revolutionary war, and was a soldier in that struggle. He was a farmer. Stephen, Jr., son of Stephen, Sr., was born in Norfolk in 1776, married Hannah Coy, and had thirteen children, twelve of whom grew to maturity. Mr. Norton was a farmer, and in politics Whig and Democrat. He died in 1843, and Mrs. Norton died May 20, 1848, having been born Nov. 25, 1773.

Charles L. Norton attended a district school winters till he was fifteen years of age, working summers on his father's farm. He remained with his father on the farm until he was twenty-one years of age. On the 24th of November, 1825, he married Ann Maria, daughter of Philo Bailey and Samantha Root. Mrs. Norton was born Feb. 23, 1806. Their children are Maria E. (Mrs. Harvey Johnson, of Norfolk), Mary A. (Mrs. Nelson D. Ford, of Winsted), Philo B., Albert C., Charles L., Jr., and Remus A.

Mr. Norton purchased a farm in Norfolk soon after his marriage, and remained four years, when he sold and settled in the northern part of the town of Goshen, where he bought some four hundred and eighty-five acres of land, which is well improved by his own efforts. In politics a Democrat. He served in many of the town offices, such as selectman, magistrate, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Norton are members of the Congregational Church. In January, 1875, he settled in Winchester, one and a half miles east of Winsted, on a place where he now (April, 1881) resides.

Philo Bailey, son of Andrew Bailey, a farmer, was born in Goshen, Nov. 29, 1781; married Samantha Root, of Canaan, and had nine children, who grew to maturity, the eldest being Mrs. Charles L. Norton.

Mr. Bailey was a Whig in politics. He represented his town in the State Legislature, besides holding other minor offices. He died Sept. 25, 1857, and Mrs. Bailey was born Aug. 7, 1784, and died April 14, 1880, aged ninety-six years.

Truman P Clark

TRUMAN PRENTICE CLARK.

Truman Prentice Clark, son of Joel and Candace (Bowns) Clark, was born in Winchester, Conn., May 28, 1826. Joel Clark was a resident of Winchester, Conn., married Candace Bowns, and had thirteen children. Eleven grew to maturity, and eight of them are living; names of children,—Emily (deceased), Mary A., Frederick J. (deceased), Lyman L., Marilla, Sidney H., Truman P., Henry J. (deceased), Sabra M., Edwin E., and Amelia, all born in Winchester. Mr. Clark was a farmer; in politics a Whig. He died July 1, 1850, and his wife died Aug. 10, 1854.

The maternal grandfather of Truman P. Clark was —— Bowns, an Englishman, who settled in America prior to the Revolutionary war. Truman P. Clark attended the district school winters, working on the farm summers, till he was seventeen years of age, when he began to learn the carpenter's trade, which he followed seven years. March 5, 1849, he married Mary J., daughter of Nathan Tibbals and Rebecca Green. Their children are Mary L. and Abbie R. Mr. Clark settled on the farm where he now resides immediately after his marriage. His farm, which was originally one hundred and sixty acres when he settled in Goshen, contains now more than two hundred and forty acres, which is in a good state of cultivation. His buildings are good, showing thrift and enterprise. He is a Democrat in politics, and as such has been a leading and influential man in Goshen for many years. He is now (1881) serving on his eighth year as selectman, and has been a magistrate several years, besides holding other town offices. In 1873 he was elected to the General Assembly of Connecticut. Mr. Clark is about five feet nine inches in height, and weighs about two hundred pounds. Of a genial and social disposition, sterling integrity, of great energy and force of character, a good citizen, a kind husband and father.

Nathan Tibbals, son of Abel Tibbals and Jane Kelsey, was born in Winchester in 1787, and died Aug. 15, 1851, aged sixty-four years. His wife died April 27, 1864, aged seventy-six years. They had eleven children, viz., Abigail, Lorain (deceased), Frederick, George, Harriet N., Huldah R., Nathan H. (deceased), Harmon (deceased), Sarah (deceased), Lyman (deceased), and Mary Jane, wife of Truman P. Clark.

Mr. Tibbals was a successful farmer in Winchester; settled in Goshen in 1833 or 1834, on the farm where he lived till his death. In politics a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Tibbals were members of the Congregational Church at Winchester, Conn.

Abel Tibbals was a farmer and drover by occupation.

WILLIAM L. GRISWOLD.

William L. Griswold, eldest son of Julius Griswold and Asenath Hall, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 5, 1816. His grandfather, John Griswold, was probably a native of Litchfield, or went there when a young man; married Rhoda Wetmore, and had the following children: Julius, John, Jarvis, Henry S., Rhoda (Mrs. Bradley Stewart), Almira (Mrs. John Wright), Minerva (Mrs. Amos Wright), Dotha (unmarried), Betsy (Mrs. John Wright), and Melinda (Mrs. Chas. Wickwire).

Julius Griswold, son of John, born in Litchfield, Conn., was twice married, first to Asenath, daughter of John Hall, of Litchfield, and had six children,—(1) Elvira, wife of Nelson Wadhams; (2) William L.; (3) Henrietta; (4) Louisa, wife of Geo. Bradley; (5) Horner W.; (6) Charlotte (deceased), wife of Philo Cummings.

Julius Griswold was a millwright by trade, in politics a Whig, and as such was magistrate and selectman several years. He died at eighty-six years of age. His wife still survives him, and is now (1881) ninety-three years of age.

John Griswold the second married Nabbie Bissell, and had one daughter, Cornelia, who graduated at Miss Pierce's school, in Litchfield, married Dr. Chas. Vail, and has two sons, Edward, a sea captain, and Charles, a physician.

Jarvis Griswold married Susan Page, and had a son, Horatio, a hotel-keeper, and a daughter, Cornelia, who married Henry L. Coe, a farmer in Litchfield.

Henry S. Griswold married Nancy Perkins, and had two children,—Darius, a farmer, and Gertrude.

Rhoda Griswold married Bradley Stewart, and had one son, John Henry, a minister.

Betsy Griswold married John Wright, and had three sons,—George F., an artist and journalist in Hartford, Conn.; Gustavus A., a land-agent; and Washington I., a physician in California.

Elvira Griswold, daughter of Julius, married Nelson Wadhams, and they had a son, Wilbur H., who married Julia H., daughter of John M. Wadhams, of Goshen, Sept. 3, 1875, and to them was born a daughter, Elizabeth, born June 24, 1877. Wilbur Wadhams is a merchant miller in West Goshen.

William L. Griswold received a common-school and academic education, and taught school when a young man. At eighteen years of age he commenced to learn the trade of a millwright, which he followed some eight years. At twenty-two he went to Tennessee, and spent two years at his trade; returned to Litchfield County; married, Dec. 7, 1843, Harriet L., daughter of Hosea and Harriet (Griswold) Crandall.

Mrs. William L. Griswold was born Nov. 5, 1821. They have a son, Frank William, born June 15, 1851. He is a farmer in Goshen; married Carolina R., daughter of Eliada Kilbourn, of Litchfield, and had two children,—William K. (deceased) and William F.

Mr. Griswold settled in Goshen soon after his marriage, and has continued to reside here ever since. In 1846 he purchased his present farm, where he now lives. In politics a Republican; he has been magistrate, selectman, and was member of the State Legislature in 1858, and again in 1879, serving on the committee of agriculture. He has often been called upon to settle estates, which he has done to the general satisfaction of those interested.

Mrs. Griswold is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Griswold is a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the same.

Homer Griswold married Mary Butler, and has three children,—William, Louisa, and Charlotte. He is a machinist by trade. He enlisted in the Nineteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers (afterwards known as the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery) as a private, rose to the rank of lieutenant, and was honorably discharged.

Charlotte Griswold married Philo Cummings, of Litchfield, and has two daughters,—Isadore, who married Harley Morse, a farmer in Litchfield, and Ida Cummings.

ACORS WELLS LAWTON.

The last of the Baptist pioneers in a church which once numbered a hundred and fifty members died Feb. 16, 1881. The church was in Cornwall Hollow. The deacon who was the pioneer and last pillar was A. W. Lawton. He was a native of Rhode Island, and brought to Goshen a good portion of Roger Williams' fire and the baptism of the spirit to guide it. He was born at Hopkinton City, May 1, 1797, the third son and seventh child of a family of nine, whose average age was sixty-five years,—the family of Joseph and Ann Lawton.

Young Lawton was seventeen years of age when Stonington was bombarded by the British, and seven years later his personal courage was tested in the bloodless victory by which he won a woman for a wife from the oldest house in Stonington,—the Cheesebrough, abbreviated to "Cheesebro'." The first man to settle in Stonington was William Cheesebrough. A descendant of his was Rev. Elihu Cheesebrough, whose niece, Mary C., was married to Lawton, Dec. 2, 1821. The newly-married couple retreated to the hills of Hartford the same year. The great misfortunes of mothers was hers, when, in giving birth to twin sons, Joseph and Zebulon C., June, 1823, her own life was the sacrifice. Mr. Lawton and Elizabeth Clark, of Hartland, were married in May, 1825, by which five sons—Ben, Wells A., Franklin, Giles M., and Nelson H.—were born, all but the third surviving.

In 1827, Mr. Lawton removed with his family to Goshen, purchasing a new farm, which has been his home ever since, and has supported him in honorable comfort and in the exercise of a hearty hospitality to the friends his good cheer and good works drew around him. His son Giles retains the farm. He was again bereaved through the loss of his wife, and again was married to a descendant of the Cheesebroughs — Mrs. Jane Bartholomew — in 1863. Although not the mother of, she has been a faithful mother to, his children, and rests in their confidence until she shall be released from her scene of faithful labors. In the concentric circles of his duties, Mr. Lawton's home circle was the first and dearest. He commanded his children in love. His memorials are in them. In his circle of relations he was admired for his excellent qualities. In his church circle he was a "pillar," essential to all its interests, giving his voice heartily to its "songs of lofty cheer," his money for its support, and for the support of the "Christian Secretary" from the first, 1824. He led in the organization of the Baptist Church, was treasurer of the Widows' Fund of the Baptist Association of Litchfield County until it disbanded, but was of too liberal a spirit and opinions to limit his support to his own denomination.

At his funeral a Congregational minister, Chas. N. Fitch, officiated, and the deacons of two Congregational Churches in Goshen and North Cornwall were bearers, and the large attendance of representative people of both parishes showed the high regard in which he was held.

In his circle of citizenship he was selectman of Goshen; represented his town in the Legislature in the year 1853, and served his town with credit and confidence in all his places of trust.

He has "finished the work which God gave him to do." He had a longer time in which to do it than is allotted to most men,—eighty-three years and nine months,—and he did it with a more spontaneous, free, and loving spirit than is common to man; so his friends loved Deacon Lawton, for the life of Christ was beautiful in him.

CHAPTER XXXV.

HARWINTON.

Geographical — Topographical — Original Proprietors — The Pioneers — Early Schools — Votes — The Revolution — Names of Soldiers, Etc.

THE town of Harwinton lies on the east border of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Torrington and New Hartford, on the east by Hartford County, on the south by Plymouth and Thomaston, and on the west by Litchfield. The surface of the town is elevated and hilly, and better adapted to grazing than the raising of grain.

ORIGINAL PROPRIETORS.

This town originally consisted of two half-townships, one belonging to Hartford and the other to the Windsor proprietors. The several companies to which the different parcels of land made out of Windsor people's moiety had been allotted were incorporated May 11, 1732, and the Hartford company in May, 1733. The original proprietors were as follows: Samuel Allyn, John Bancraft, John Barber, Joseph

THE PIONEERS.

To Daniel Messenger is inscribed the honor of having been the first white settler within the bounds of the present town of Harwinton. He located here in 1730. "Whether we think of him," says R. M. Chipman, in the "History of Harwinton," "as now keeping more closely to his tarrying-place, which must at the first have been so lonely, though near the road between Litchfield and Farmington, or as now crossing the line between the Hartford and Windsor proprieties, he for both East Harwinton and West Harwinton respectively, and so for us all, was 'the pathfinder.' Viewed in relation with merely such effects, consequent on his coming to Harwinton, as here, while he lived he saw accomplished; much more, viewed in relation with those results thence originating, which here since his death have been unfolded, he appears, even aside from any of his own purposes in the matter, to have executed a mission from God for the good of all other persons who should dwell here; so that, without intent to utter it punningly, far less profanely, one might say that to each of such persons Providence, in effect, affirmed of him (what was said of 'one greater than he'): 'This is he of whom it is written, Behold I send MY messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.' As to our 'pathfinder,' literally, 'before' him, respecting time and otherwise, was that 'way' prepared which has incidentally been twice mentioned. In the latter mention of it were quoted the words of a record which, one other excepted, is the oldest that Harwinton possesses.* This road which our annals present thus early was, previously to Capt. Messenger's taking his residence in the township, part of the route traversed and incipiently 'made' by such persons as, at Farmington, Hartford, and other places, had been interested in facilitating access and accessions to the plantation by them set forward at Bantam (now Litchfield). Chiefly by this did the people of Hartford and the other easterly towns gain entrance into a territory which, forming at present a large part of the largest county in Connecticut, and supplied now with agricultural products, manufactures, villages, and well-instructed inhabitants, was at that period a wilderness, known as 'the Western lands.' The said road, by Capt. Messenger and other 'East Harwinton Proprietors' put into fit condition, December, 1732, continued to be a main thoroughfare until long after the establishment of stage-coach accommodations; so that, by means of the travelers who used it, Harwinton had at that day, and for years afterward, a more extensive publicity than it has now. It was over this road that—with his suite, including Maj.-Gen. the Marquis de La Fayette, Gen. Knox, and several other American officers of distinction—passed our nation's 'pathfinder,' Gen. Washington. After his party had taken here refreshments, in presenting which the choicest of our young maidens honored themselves as well as their fathers' and their town's welcome guests,† the cavalcade went onward; and when, in its progress, it moved gracefully up the western ascent from the valley of Lead-mine Brook, and thus was in full view of persons assembled at the church standing then, it presented a pageant which, sixty years afterwards, aged citizens vividly remembered.

"It is not probable that our pioneer resident lived for any considerable interval wholly alone; but it does not appear, with any definiteness, how soon other persons made here their homes. Dr. Trumbull, giving of our first settlers only the surnames, says, 'The five first were Messenger, Hopkins, Webster, Phelps, and

† The repast was taken, aged people, my informants in 1837, said, in the house then occupied by a Mr. Bronson, in which (1860) is the office of Hon. Abijah Catlin. That building, however, was the first tavern-house kept in Harwinton. Whether it was so used at the time of Washington's passing through Harwinton does not appear. One of the fair servitors of the entertainment given was Candace, daughter of George Catlin, afterwards the wife of Lewis Catlin, Esq.

Wilson. These were on the lands before the division and sale of them in 1732.' The division which he refers to is the partition made between the towns of Hartford and Windsor of their moiety of the 'Western lands;' and the sale which he refers to is rather, as he had previously called it, 'provisions for the sale' of said lands. In saying 'before' 1732, he seems to have meant the year next preceding that. The first name that Dr. Trumbull gives, Messenger, might, in addition to our pioneer himself, include, as found here at the date assigned, two of his sons, Nehemiah and Samuel. Our records show, of these sons, that the latter belonged here in January, 1733–34, and the former in October, 1735, certainly, in January, 1733–34, probably. It may, from the circumstances of their father's age and position, and of their own age, both being then in their majority, be well inferred that these both were here as soon as their father was, although a Nehemiah Messenger—more than possibly this same person going thither after tarrying here and at Cornwall, and at Sheffield, Mass., for only a short time—was, somewhat after 1750, among the early immigrants of Egremont, Mass., the settlement of which township some one commenced about the same date that Capt. Messenger began to settle ours, 1730. The second name that Dr. Trumbull gives, Hopkins, may also include more than one person, since Ebenezer Hopkins, who, calling Capt. Messenger 'my father,' was either his step-son or, which is the more likely, his son-in-law, was a resident here in January, 1732–33; and Hezekiah Hopkins, who, found resident here two or three years later, took a deed of land here in April, 1732, the month indicating he took the deed with a cultivator's intent of putting the land into immediate occupancy, that he might live on it and live by working on it, rather than with a speculator's thought,—'I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it.' The third name that Dr. Trumbull gives, Webster, is scarcely more definite in respect of the persons intended, for, though Cyprian Webster had a deed conveying to him land here in November, 1733, yet Moses Webster appears, by our documents, as residing here nearly as soon as said Cyprian Webster does. The fourth name that Dr. Trumbull gives, Phelps, similarly ambiguous in this regard, may apply nearly as well to two persons, for, so far as our records disclose, Daniel Phelps and Samuel Phelps were both resident here in 1736. Of the five names that Dr. Trumbull gives there appears, as having neither a double nor triple applicability to persons, but one Wilson, yet John Wilson, in the records that we have, comes to view not earlier than in 1737. Conceding, however, that Dr. Trumbull was in this case accurately informed,—as he surely might have been, gathering materials for history at the time in which one at least of the five, John Wilson, was yet surviving,—the sum of the matter is this: Daniel Messenger ranked apart from the rest. Since, beyond doubt, he was established in the township in 1730, there may be taken as the primary inhabitants of Harwinton, Ebenezer Hopkins, Samuel Messenger, Daniel Phelps, Samuel Phelps, Cyprian Webster, John Wilson. These, and Nehemiah Messenger, possibly were on their 'claims' here, settlers, in 1731, and most probably in the previous year.

"In a memorial bearing date May 13, 1736, presented to the General Court by Nathan Davis, Daniel Messenger, and George Wyllys, as a committee of 'the inhabitants of Harwinton,' asking, through this their committee, permission to levy an additional tax, in order to pay arrearages due to a gentleman who had preached to them, and asking, also, 'authority to embody in church estate, and to be incorporated as a town,' it is stated that at that time the township 'contained one hundred souls, of whom twenty-one were heads (masters) of families.' No action, as respecting church embodiment and town incorporation, having been taken by the General Court on that memorial, another memorial, dated Oct. 4, 1737, signed by Anthony Hoskins, Daniel Messenger, and Zechariah Seymour, as agents for 'the inhabitants of Harwinton,' in which said inhabitants, through their said agents, renew their requests and gain their objects, states that 'the place, being daily increasing,' then numbered one hundred and sixty-one souls, of whom 'twenty-four were heads (masters) of families.' There are not sufficient data for designating these male heads of families with absolute certainty as to each of them, but, as nearly as the materials obtained seem to authorize a specification, the twenty-four such persons were Samuel Barber, Deacon Jacob Benton, Sr., Daniel Bissell, Jr., Daniel Brown, Esq., Thomas Bull, Lieut. Nathan Davis, Jr., Daniel Gillett (second), Nathaniel Hatch, Amos Hinsdale, Capt. Jacob Hinsdale, Sr., Ebenezer Hopkins, Jr. and Sr., Hezekiah Hopkins, Ensign Jonathan Hopkins, Sr., Anthony Hoskins, Jr., Noah Loomis, Sr., Israel Merriman, Capt. Daniel Messenger, Nehemiah Messenger, Samuel Messenger, Samuel Moody, Deacon Daniel Phelps (second), Lieut. Samuel Phelps, Jr. and Sr., Cyprian Webster, Sr., Esq., Samuel Winchell.

"In the latter memorial a statement is made that at the time when it was dated there had been fourteen children born within the territory,—a circumstance which, as various others do, indicates that many of the families then here were youthful ones. But more noticeable is the fact, seen by comparing together what both memorials say as to the whole population here, that in the interval between the dates of these memorials, seventeen months, wherein only three families were added, the sum total of persons, instead of increasing at the same rate, or becoming, at most, one hundred and fifteen, had increased more than four times as rapidly, and so become one hundred and sixty-one. This fact, accounted for by the supposition that wives of the settlers and young children, not previously here, had at this later period come in, shows that the preparations made for their comfort were now finished, and is thus significant of houses built, barns set up, harvests gathered, stores for the winter laid in, and progress made on every hand."

The following is a list of the first settlers from 1730 to 1740, inclusive, giving date of settlement and towns from which they came:

To the above extracts from the Town Book I. should be added as follows, from the records of "the West Proprietors of Harwinton:"

"March 20, 1753.—Voted, That the proprietors will dispose of the undevided Land the interest of S[d] money to Support a School in the west propriety of Harwinton."*

The last entry made in the records of the "Proprietors of East Harwinton" is under date of March 6, 1759, in these words: "ajurned to the first munday of march next."

The last entry made in the Records of the "Proprietors of West Harwinton" is under date of April 14, 1757 [1769 ?], in these words: "Voted, That this meeting be adjorned to the first munday of march, 1770."

The records of the proprietors, kept first at Hartford and Windsor respectively, at which places the first meetings of said persons were held, were kept, and said meetings were held in Harwinton after the organization of the town.—Manning.

THE REVOLUTION.

A number of persons from Harwinton, large as compared with the population of the town, were soldiers in what New Englanders term "the old French war," 1755–63. Some of these, as ascertained in 1837, were Charles Goodwin, Capt. Jacob Hinsdale, Timothy Homaston, Benoni Hough, Samuel Weston. Timothy Homaston, who had been under command of Gen. Amherst at the taking of Quebec, 1759, died, at a very advanced age, in 1829.

In the time of the great struggle which eventuated in securing our national independence, there were, as is known, individuals in nearly all parts of the country who took a view of that struggle differing from that of the mass of their fellow-citizens. There is remembered but one such as having belonged to Harwinton:

"John Marsh, 3d, of Litchfield, applied [to the Governor and Council of Safety, 11 Feb., 1777] for liberty to take Mark Prindle, of Harwinton (a tory [then] at Mansfield), and have him before the Court at Litchfield, in discharge of his bail bond, given for said Prindle in another case; which was granted by the Governor and Council with their order to return said Prindle, after his trial, to Amariah Williams in said Mansfield."†

In 1781, Harwinton was subjected to a penalty of fifteen pounds for a deficiency of one man in the number of men required for the war.‡

Incidents of a different character, as well as men more fitly representing the town at that period, were as given below.

While the people here were on a Sabbath morning, April 27, 1777, preparing to leave their homes for attendance on public worship, an express arrived through Litchfield from Danbury, announcing that Governor Tryon with his troops, the "Cow-Boys," as they were contemptuously termed by the Americans, had come from New York to the latter place. Mr. (afterwards Deacon) Webster, after receiving from the messenger the written message which was brought, gave it to Abraham Goodwin for conveyance to New Hartford. He ran with it, "post-haste," one mile to Lieut. Jonathan Goodwin, whom he found strapping to his horse a side-saddle. The lieutenant, a man who generally required ample time for deliberation on even small matters, and who otherwise was becomingly slow in his movements, now, catching by a glance the purport of the document, exchanged his saddle in a trice, and, urging his wonder-struck animal into no inferior rate of speed, let something other than his "moderation be known." Harwinton soldiers, with others from this vicinity, immediately sped to Danbury, reaching that place, distant some forty-four miles, early on Monday morning, though not until after the British detachment had effected the object of their coming by the destruction of the breadstuffs and other military stores there deposited. Mr. Abraham Goodwin gave to the writer this account in 1837, saying at that time that his age was eighty-three years. He then resided in Harwinton:

"In 1778, Levi Monson, of Harwinton,ǧ a sergeant in Capt. [William] Douglass' company, Col. [David] Wooster's regiment [made declaration to the Legislature of this colony that he], was taken prisoner on the Isle of Montreal, carried to Quebec, and thence, with [Amos ?] Green, a soldier, and Col. Ethan Allen, to Falmouth, in England [and that he], returned from Falmouth to Halifax [N. S.], about June 29th, 1776."‖

In the town records, for the years of the Revolutionary contest, various details show the interest felt, and the efforts made by this town regarding that endeavor. Many soldiers here died by camp sickness and otherwise, though it has not been found that any from Harwinton were killed while fighting in the Continental army. In 1837 were living in Harwinton, and then receiving, as Revolutionary soldiers,

*In the records of the "Proprietors of East Harwinton," the latest mention noticed of "undevided lands" is under date of 1746, at which time "deck [deacon] thomas richards" was allowed to "make his pitch" of them.

LIST OF SOLDIERS.

Benjamin Barber, Simeon Barber, Timothy Barber, Isaiah Butler, Jr., Solomon Butler, Abraham Catlin, Eli Catlin, Phineas Catlin, Daniel Cook, Jonathan Cook, Jabez Frisbie, Asa Griswold, White Griswold, Joseph C. Hemley, Allyn Haydon, George Jones, Christopher Jonson, Samuel Jonson, Samuel Lambert, Hezekiah Leach, George Loomis, Elijah Loomis, James Olcut, Jr., Hezekiah Phelps, Oliver Phelps, Samuel Phelps, Jr., Ashbel Porter, Jesse Potter, Enos Scott, Zimri Skinner, Samuel Wesson, Samuel Wesson, Jr., Abner Wilson.

The following is a list of "married men on service in the Continental army from Harwinton," who, March 8, 1779, had received supplies from the town:

Roswell Catlin, Ozem Cook, Caleb Elmore, Thomas Greene, Seth Gridley, Joseph Halsted, Joseph C. Hanley, Elisha Hinsdale, Samuel Hinsdale, Lieut. Asahel Hodge, Elijah Scott, Ethel (Ithiel?) Scott, Timothy Stedman, James Wilcox, and Benj. Catlin, quartermaster.

The latter seems to have enlisted at some place other than Harwinton, and was probably a son of Benjamin, Jr., and grandson of Benjamin, Sr., of Harwinton.—Manning.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

HARWINTON (Continued).

The Congregational Church—The Episcopal Church—Incorporation—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Representatives from 1757 to 1882—Military.

ECCLESIASTICAL, CIVIL, AND MILITARY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

THE following history of the Congregational Church is taken chiefly from Manning's "History of Harwinton," and is given in extenso, as the history of the church for a long time was really the history of the town. The first memorial asking to be embodied in church estate was presented Oct. 4, 1737, as follows:

"The inhabitants of Harwinton, presenting by their agents, Daniel Messenger, Zechariah Seymour, and Anthony Hoskins, a memorial to the General Court, in which they ask from that body what they had unsuccessfully sought from it May 13, 1736, 'authority to embody in church order' and 'to be incorporated as a town,' assign as reasons for their request that 'the place being daily increasing, it will be necessary for us not only to have a settled minister,' but 'also to build us a house' for divine worship.

"Dec. 20, 1737, at the first town-meeting, it was "Voted, That the Enhabitants of the town of Harwinton haue uery unanimusly A grieed to Build A Meteing House for Diuine Worship:—

"Voted, We agree thus that the Meeting House Shall be set in the Senter Line Between the Proprietors of Hartford and windsor Condishion that Windsor Propriators give their Proporshon of land Agreed for the Jncurrigement of our Minnistor and Pay half the Choost building the Meeting House and half the: 100: Pound Agreed to giue the Ministor In Labour:——

"Subsequent proceedings were had, as at the several dates below may appear:

"May 2, 1738.—Voted and unanimusly agreed to APlye our Selues to the Generall Assembly now in there Present Sestions to A fix A Place for the Meeting Hous for the tow town of harwinton to Stand in for diuine worship:——

"Voted, That Mr daniel Messinger and mr Jsreal Merriman Shall be A Commeete to make APlication to Jenerall assemBly att there Present Sestions to fix de termine and asartain the Place where A house to Meet in for the Publick worShiP of god Shall be Erectted and Built within the Bounds of Harwinton.

"May, 1738.—Daniel Messenger and Israel Merriman, acting as a committee of the town of Harwinton, present to the Legislature a request that that body will appoint a committee to designate a place for the site of a meeting-house in Harwinton. The request was granted.

"Oct. 6, 1738.—The committee appointed by the Legislature report that they have located the meeting-house 'where the Litchfield [and Farmington] road crosses the line of east and west proprietors.' Petitions of various persons are sent to the Legislature, expressing objections to the location selected, and dissatisfaction with those who had chosen it. The Legislature sustained the action of their committee. Harwinton takes other measures:

"Nov. 1, 173§.—Voted, To Chuse a Commeete of unJnterrastted Parsons to afix or State aplace or Placses whare the jnhabitants of harwinton Shall Meet it on the Sabbath day until there is A Meeting hous Built And Maad fit for the jnhabitants to Meet in on Said day to worship God in.

"Voted, That Mr John Burd: george Mayrch [Marsh?] and Edward Ph[e]lps:—Be the Men to fix or State the Place or Placses aboue Nameed —where we Shall Meet in on the Sabbath day to worship god in:——

"It is now uoted that Mr Daniel Messinger and Mr daniel Phelps Be A Commeete to lay the Surcomstances of our cases before these Men and to bring there return or answer to the inhabitants of the town of harwinton.

"Dec. 12, 1738.—Voted, That Joseph Richards and John Wilson Be tything men.

"Of such officers, not previously chosen in Harwinton, the need in present circumstances was very apparent.

"May 4, 1739.—Voted, That Mr daniel Messinger And Samuell Phelps bea commeete to A Plie our Selues to the general Court that the Place for A meeting House that was Picht on by the general Courts Commeete may be Confirmmed or a New Commeete be A Poyntted to A fixe A Place for te said town of Harwinton for their meetinghouse to Stand in or on.

"May 10, 1739.—Daniel Messenger and Samuel Phelps, agents in behalf of the town of Harwinton, make application to the Legislature for confirmation of the location, etc. The location, as selected per committee of the Legislature, is confirmed.

"Sept. 21, 1739.—Voted, That the Length of the meeting Hous for the Enhabitants of Herwinton Shall be fiffty foot in length and forty foot wid and the height to be twenty four foot between Joynts.

"Voted, That Mr Jsral Merreman Benjimen Catling and Jacob Benton Be A Commeete to order and Cary on or let out the Building of the Said Meeting Hous——.

"Voted, That A Rate Shall Be Mad of tweelue Pence uPon the Pound Jn the List be granted & Mad to Caryon the Building of the said Meeting Hous.

"Voted, That Jonathan Catling and Isaac Bull be Collectors to Jather the aboue granted rat for the Carying on the Building of Said Meeting Hous.

"Sept. 27, 1739.—The Legislature are apprised that Harwinton have a committee chosen to direct and 'contract' for building a meeting-house.

"Oct. 8, 1739.—A rate of land is referred to, probably in aid of the building.

"Dec. 14, 1739.—joseph Merremon and Moses Webster be tything men.

"Voted, To giue Mr jsrael merremon three Pounds for the use of his Hous one year to met in on the Sabbath day——.

"Voted, That the Meeting House as to the former width be mad fiue foot narrowwer than the former uot was——.

"May 7, 1740.—More difficulties are developed, as Pelatiah Mills, Daniel Bissel, Hezekiah Bissel, Josiah Higley, Ebenezer Tyler, Samuel Barber, Thomas Bull, Samuel Haydon, Daniel Phelps, Job Alford, Daniel Gillet, John Stoughton, and Noah Loomis petition the Legislature that 'they may be discharged from paying any tax on land lying within two and one-quarter miles from the south end of the town.' The meeting-house was by them, it seems, regarded as likely to be erected too far north for their convenience.

"May 13, 1740.—Other dissatisfaction is manifested, as Benjamin Catling, Israel Merriman, Jacob Benton, Jonathan Hopkins, Jonathan Catling, Jonathan Brace, Ebenezer Hopkins, John Coult, Samuel Phelps, Hezekiah Hopkins, Stephen Hopkins, Joseph Richards, Joseph Merriman, Samuel Catling, Nathan Davis, James Cole, Abijah Catling, Jonathan Butler, Zechariah Seymour, Jr., Nehemiah Messenger, Amos Hinsdell, and Samuel Moody certify to the Legislature that 'they had not been invited to a friendly conference in regard to locating the meeting-house, nor had they heard of it till after the meeting' for that purpose had been held.

"July 3, 1740.—"Voted, That arate of Eight teen Pence uPon the Pound in the list Be Made on the Ratable Estate that is in the town of Harwinton Now Set down in the list and it Shall be Put to the use of Carring on the nesesary Charges of finishing the Mee[t]ing House.

"Voted, That the glase for the meeting House shall be of the size that is Called Seven Enchs and Nine.

"Voted, That Mr daniel Messinger Shall haue one Pound eleuen Shillings and SixPence out of the town tressuror for rum yt was found for the raising of the Meting Hous.

"Dec. 22, 1740.—Voted, This town will not meet at the house of mr Jsrael merremans onthe Sabbath day under the Present Circumstances.

"Voted, That this town will meet on the Sabbath day three months next ensuing at Mr Beniamin Catlings haus and after that tomeet on Sabbath day three months at the house of mr Jsaac bulls or mr Samul Phelps.

"Jan. 20, 1741–42.—Up to this date the town-meetings had been attended 'at the hous of Jacob Benton,' or 'at the Hous of Mr. Jsreal Merremons,' one at the latter-named place so lately as Dec. 15, 1741; but now one is recorded as held 'att the meeting-hous on the 20 day of January year 174½.' Three such meetings, at least, were held thenceforward. Public worship, though under circumstances of inconvenience, was probably commenced there about this time.

"July 23, 1744.—"Voted, That wee will have But one Roo of pews Round the meeting Hewse——

"Voted, That the Joinners works of the Said Meeting House Shall Seace untill the anuall Meeting in Desember next insuing this meeting.

"Dec. 18, 1744.—Voted, That ye present Commetee Shall have Lyberty to agree with ye Joyners in this Town if they Can agree with them in order to finish ye meeting house So high as to Lay ye Galary floors.

"This building stood south of the present Congregational church.

"The First Preacher.—The earliest account discovered of social religious worship being attended publicly in Harwinton is contained in a document, preserved in the State archives at Hartford, bearing date May 13, 1736,—a 'Memorial of George Wyllys, Daniel Messenger, Nathan Davis, and the rest of the inhabitants of Harwinton.' After 'referring to a tax, granted' by the General Court in May, 1735, 'of one penny on a pound for the support of preaching, etc.,' it relates that 'The Memorialists have thereupon hired y^e^ very worthy M^r^. Timothy Woodbridge, Jun^r^, who hath for a considerable time preached to us, to the universal content, satisfaction, and approbation of us his hearers.' It further relates that 'they had agreed to pay him £104 per annum,—that is, 30*s.* a week and his board; [that] they were then in arrears to M^r^. Woodbridge for the preceding year; and [that they therefore] ask authority to lay another tax.' Of the last-named person, as connected with Harwinton, our State records have no other notice and our town records have none.

"The First Pastor.—In the State archives is a memorial, dated Oct. 4, 1737, addressed to the General Court by its signers, Daniel Messenger, Zechariah Seymour, and Anthony Hoskins, in behalf of themselves and of the other inhabitants of Harwinton,—

"'Asking authority to embody in church estate, to be incorporated as a town, and to lay a tax for support of a minister.' The memorialists relate that 'it will be necessary for us to have a settled minister (in regard to which we have applyed to a Gentleman who is well approved of by the Ministers &c. in the Gov^t^, and especially by us to preach for us some considerable time, to great satisfaction, and have as far as was consistent with our duty capitulated with him about a settlemen^t^) and also,' etc.

"From this memorial, as compared with the earlier one, it is plain that a second person as preacher is intended. The votes below quoted refer to him:

"Nov. 1, 1737.—Att a meeting of the Proprietors of east Harwinton held att the house of Mr. Daniel Messenger by a Jurnment

"Voted, That the Proprietors Give to the first man that is ordained in the work of the ministry amongst us one Hundred aCres of Land and that he may Chuse it where it Shall best Sute Him in our undevided Land in the manner & form as our Lotts ware Laid out in provided he Shall Continew in the work of the ministry and in Principels to wich he is ordained.

"Voted, That m^r^ Daniel Brown and m^r^ Daniel Messenger be a Commitee to go to Winsor Proprietors meting & to im form them what we have done at our Proprietors meeting and to make return of what they dow to our next meeting.

"Dec. 20, 1737.—The inhabitants of Harwinton, in their first town-meeting assembled, to their vote expressing their unanimous agreement 'to Build A Meteing House for Diuine Worship,' add an explanatory and restrictive one:

"Voted, We agree thus that the Meeting House Shall be set in the Senter Line Between the Proprietors of Hartford and windsor Condishond that Windsor Propriators give their Proporshon of land Agreed for the Incurrigment of our Minnister and Pay half the Choost boilding the Meeting ing House and half the : 100 : Pound Agreed to giue the Minister Jn Labour:——

"At this period the proprietors of East Harwinton held their meetings within their propriety here, but, as the next cited vote shows, the proprietors of West Harwinton were for the most part non-residents on their propriety still. Their meetings, also, were afterwards held here."

"Feb. 7, 1737-8.—In Windsor upon the Sevneth Day of Febr^y^: 1737-8.

"Voted, That M^r^ Daniel Bissell Jun^r^ Mr Nathan Davis & Roger Newbery or any two of them be a Com^tte^ to Dispose of to y^e^ first ordained minister Jn Harwinton Sixty Acres of Land Lying y^e^ North End of y^e^ Middle Tear of Home Lots & about twenty five acres of undivided Land Lying at y^e^ West End of the fifty acres already Granted to y^e^ first ordained minister upon such tearms as They Shall agree and Execute a Deed thereof to Him.

"Town records and proprietors' records, in the extracts above given, impart the date of the first pastor's induction Oct. 4, 1738. Compared with other churches in Litchfield County, the Congregational Church in Harwinton has a priority, the same as to its settling its first pastor with that before specified as to its formation. Precedence or subsequence of this kind helps no one greatly, harms no one much, is related distantly to one's responsibleness; but there is something through which, as duly regarded or not, persons within this church, and persons outside of all churches, are sure to find chief benefit or direst injury,—it is a matter which takes and keeps a direct hold of the conscience, presenting there the sort of precedence that all men are to seek for as vitally momentous to them; for to all men is the favor granted, on all is the obligation imposed, of rising daily to some higher position on that scale which exhibits the need of, as well as measures and announces, moral worth.

"Mr. Bartholomew's pastorate in Harwinton was by years longer than any which succeeded it there. It left scanty historic materials. There is in the church's possession no account of the church's condition and proceedings in his time. The town records have supplied most that is known of him. As these furnish no grounds for a different conclusion, the inference seems to be warranted that, until his ministry drew towards its end, the course of things relative to him and the church and the town moved on with a general uniformity and smoothness. Probably no peculiar sorrows saddened his mind, and no extra laborious exertions prematurely broke the springs of his energy. But these at length give way; his relation as pastor ceases. A year or two subsequently all his relationships on earth terminate.

"Nov. 26, 1772.—Voted, To Give M^r^ David Ely a call to preach three or four Sabbaths on probation.

"Dec. 1, 1772.—The Committee Report that M^r^ David Ely Would Not tarry to preach on the above [not mentioned] proposals. Voted to send for M^r^ David Ely to come and preach With us—Voted that Stephen Butler Should apply To M^r^ Ely.

"Oct. 11, 1773.—Voted, The Society Committee Shall apply to M^r^ David Perry to Settle In the work of the Ministry In the Town of harwinton.

"Jan. 10, 1774.—Voted, to Discharge The Rev^d^ Mr. Andrew Barthol^m^ From paying any taxes or Rates whatsoever During Life on Conditions He Continues in Harwinton.

"Feb. 2, 1774.—A vote was passed providing that Mrs. Bartholomew, if she should survive her husband, should in like manner be exempted.

"Dismissed from his relations to the Society, by an ecclesiastical council convened for that purpose, Jan. 26, 1774," the remnant of the first pastor's life was here spent, where, March 6, 1776, he died.

"Mr. Bartholomew was born at Wallingford in 1714. He graduated at Yale College in 1731. He was buried in the ancient graveyard in Harwinton, and a slab of gneissic stone bears the following inscription:

"'Here lies the Body of the Rev^d^ Andrew Bartholomew
The 1^t^ pastor of the church of christ in harwinton who
With filial regard for the Glory of god studiously Labored in the vineyard of christ 38 years. A lover of piety peace and good order and zealous for the faith
he died March the 6^th^ AD
1776 in the 63^d^ year of his age.'

"The pastors since Mr. Bartholomew have been as follows: David Perry, 1774–83; Joshua Williams, 1790–1822; George E. Pierce, D.D., 1822–34; R. Manning Chipman, 1835–39; Charles Bentley, 1839–50; Warren G. Jones, 1850–53; Jacob G. Miller, 1854–57; John A. McKinstry, 1857–63; Rev. Robert T. Searle, 1864–65; Rev. Charles H. Bissell, 1865; Rev. George Curtis; Rev. W. N. Meserve, 1878–80; Rev. Th. Douglas, 1880, present pastor.

"There is a small chapel in the southwest part of the town recently erected. A Sabbath-school is established, and a Sunday afternoon preaching service.

"An Episcopal Church was organized in this town about the year 1784. Among the early members were Alexander Alford, Luman Bishop, Lieut. Levi Munson, Mark Prindle, Capt. Eziekel Scoville."

THE HARWINTON AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY, successor of the old society, was incorporated Feb. 28, 1878. The following were the incorporators: Charles S. Barber, Abigail Fenn, Humphrey Wilson, Addison Webster, Cyrus E. Cook, Cyrus L. Barber, Henry D. Reynolds, and James M. Baldwin.

KENT.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indians—The Moravians—The Grant—First Proprietors' Meeting—List of Proprietors—The First Settlements—Grand List, 1745—The First School—The Congregational Church—St. Andrew's Church—St. Luke's Lodge, No. 48, F. and A. M.—Civil History—Incorporation of Town—The First Town-Meeting—First Marriage, Births, etc.—Representatives from 1757 to 1881—Military Record.

THIS town lies on the west border of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Sharon and Cornwall, on the east by Warren and Washington, on the south by New Milford, and on the west by Dutchess County, N. Y. The scenery of Kent is charming and picturesque. The river winds through a deep and fertile valley, while the mountains rise on either side, presenting one of the finest views of mountain and vale to be found in rugged New England.

* For list of Nineteenth Regiment, see Chapter V.

The town is watered by the Housatonic River, which crosses it in a southwesterly direction.

There is strong reason for believing that this town was the home of a race of beings that inhabited this country prior to the aborigines.

"There is in this town," says Dr. Trumbull, "convincing evidence that it was a grand seat of the native inhabitants of this country before Indians, who more lately inhabited it, had any residence in it. There are arrow-heads, stone pots, and a sort of knives, and various kinds of utensils, frequently found by the English, of such curious workmanship, as exceeds all the skill of any Indians since the English came into this country, and became acquainted with them. These were not only found when the town was first settled, but they are still found on the sides of the Housatonic River."

THE INDIANS.

The Indian history of this town is not that of the war-whoop and the scalping-knife, but of a quiet settlement of peace-loving and intelligent aborigines. It was the last home of the Schaghticoke tribe, they having removed from the town of Dover, N. Y.

"Gideon Mowehn, the king or sachem of the Schaghticoke tribe, was a Pequot Indian, and in one of his hunting expeditions came to the summit of the mountain which rises almost precipitously west of Schaghticoke, and, beholding the beautiful valley and river below, determined to make it the place of his future residence. It was indeed a lovely and desirable place; there were several hundred acres of excellent land, covered with grass like a prairie, with some few scattering trees interspersed. The river was well supplied with fish, and on the mountains on both sides was found an abundance of deer and other wild game. At this place Mauwehn collected the Indians and became their sachem, and here the Moravians had a flourishing mission."*

Dr. Trumbull, in speaking of the Indians, says,—

"Mowehn, a sachem, who a few years before had removed with his Indians from Newtown to New Milford, about the year 1728 built him a hunting-house at Schaghticoke, in the northwest part of Kent, on the west bank of the Housatonic River.

"He invited the Indians at New Milford, from the Oblong, in the province of New York, and from various other places, to settle with him at Schaghticoke; and it appears that he was a man of so much art and popularity among the Indians, that in about ten or eleven years, about the time when the town was settled, he could muster an hundred warriors. The whole number probably was about five or six hundred. These, like the other Indians in this State, and in most other States, have been greatly diminished. Their whole number at this time (1839) is not more than forty."

In 1744 and 1746 the Indians disposed of a portion of their land, and in 1775 the Legislature, at their request, assumed control of this estate, and appointed an agent to manage the affairs, which course has been pursued to the present time. The Indians still own about four hundred acres of land, which is occupied by half-breeds, as there is no pure Indian blood left among them.

THE MORAVIANS.

A Moravian mission was established among the Schaghticoke Indians about 1740, and a few years later, it is said, the sachem was baptized by them. Here they established a church or mission, and baptized one hundred and fifty of the Kent Indians. It is said that these missionaries were kindly treated by the people of the town, but the evidence of the missionaries themselves is that they were not only ill treated and persecuted, but imprisoned. Dr. Trumbull says, "But it could not be by the people of Connecticut."

Whither the Indians had flown who occupied this territory first before the advent of the English is unknown; but they doubtless joined Philip in his war against New England, and in the slaughter of Philip's warriors by Connecticut troops on the Housatonic, at the close of the war, were either slain or removed to Canada.

THE GRANT.

The first grant of the township of Kent was made to Joseph Fuller, Timothy Hatch, Daniel Comstock, Joseph Pratt, Ephraim Hubball, Nathaniel Berry, John Ransom, and others, in May, 1731, and enlarged and confirmed in the year 1747.

FIRST PROPRIETORS' MEETING.

The first proprietors' meeting was held at Windham, March 8, 1838, at which it was "Voted, To lay out into lots a part of said Kent, and to appoint a committee for that purpose.

"Voted, Humphrey Avery as agent to prefer to the General Assembly to ascertain and establish the south line of the town.

"Voted, That Ebenezer Barnum shall have the 49th lot, upon condition that he build a saw-mill and a grist-mill.

"Voted, That Elisha Perry and Jonathan Morgan shall not build mills on Mill Brook, to the detriment of each other."

LIST OF PROPRIETORS.

The following is a list of the first proprietors, as taken from the proprietors' records: Humphrey Avery, John Beebe, Nathaniel Benjamin, Josiah Barse, Abel Barnum, Ebenezer Barnum, Nathaniel Barnum, Nathaniel Berry, Thomas Beman, Thomas Casson, Philip Coverly, Daniel Comstock, Jonathan Dunham, Francis Fenton, Joseph Hatch, Ephraim Peter, Richard and Jonathan Hubbel, Philip Judd, John Knapp, Noah Rockwell, Samuel Lewis, John Mitchel, John Mills, Jonathan and Jonathan Morgan, Jr., Mitchel Kenell, Samuel Miner, John Mills, Thomas Newcomb, John Porter, John Smith, Thomas Skeels, Nathaniel Sloson, Zepaniah Swift, John Seeley, Josiah Starr, Thomas Tozer, Abel Wright, Elisha Williams, Jacob Warner.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

The first settlements were made in 1738, principally by settlers from Colchester, Fairfield, and Norwalk. The Slawsons, Canfields, and Bassetts were from Norwalk; the Comstocks from Fairfield; while Payne, Washburn, Wright, Ransom, and Platt were from Colchester. The settlement and improvement of the town generally was rapid, as evidenced by the following grand list of 1745:

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The first church in Kent was organized April 29, 1741, by the neighboring churches of New Milford and Sharon. The first members were Eben Barnum, Samuel Lewis, Abel Wright, Daniel Comstock, Nathaniel Berry, Azariah Pratt, Joseph Fuller, Eben Liman, Gideon Barnum, Samuel Bates. The first deacon was Joseph Benton. The present officers are Deacons John C. Berry, Levi W. Stone, and Samuel C. Conn.

The following is a list of the ministers: Cyrus Marsh, 1741; Joel Bordwell, Oct. 28, 1758; Asa Blair, May 26, 1813; Laurens Hickock, Dec. 10, 1823; Watson W. Andrews, May 21, 1834; W. W. Page, Dec. 7, 1853; Evarts Schudder, May 18, 1859; Edward Payson, Dec. 4, 1867; Arthur Crosby, Jan. 2, 1872.

The first church building we have any record of was built in 1774, one mile north of Kent plain. The present church building was erected, in 1849, on Kent plain. A church building was erected about 1741, but no record of it exists.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH.

The Episcopal society in Kent was organized Feb. 22, 1808. The following is a copy of the "warning" issued for the purpose of organizing the society:

HON. RUFUS FULLER.

Hon. Rufus Fuller was born in Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Conn., Nov. 13, 1810. He was the second son of Rufus Fuller, of Easton, Mass. Rufus, Sr., had four children,—Linus F., Rufus, Julia A.; the fourth died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch received his education at Union College, and graduated in 1835, receiving the degrees of A.M. and A.B., Dr. Knott being president at that time. He studied law with Judge O. S. Seymour, of Litchfield, Conn., and was admitted to the bar in 1839. He practiced his profession about twenty-five years, when he retired from active business life in consequence of ill health.

March 10, 1857, he united in marriage with Matilda, daughter of Louis St. John, of Sharon. They have two children,—Clarence L. and Florence A. Clarence resides on the farm with his father; Florence is an artist and a member of the Art League in New York City. Mr. Fuller, politically, is a Democrat; has been judge of Probate and postmaster, and was a member of the Legislature in 1848, and subsequently was the nominee of his party for State senator.

Mr. Fuller discharged the duties of the various positions to which he was called with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. Although having reached the age of threescore and ten, he still retains much of the vigor and elasticity of youth.

The present officers of the church are as follows: Wardens, E. S. Peters and J. F. Gibbs; Vestrymen, Wellington Watson, Sr., Linus B. Winegar, Perry Hufcut, Fitch R. Buckingham, and Wellington Watson, Jr.; Clerk, J. F. Gibbs.

ST. LUKE'S LODGE, No. 48, F. AND A. M.

The lodge was organized Dec. 1, 1806, with the following charter members: John Raymond, Nathaniel Berry, Jr., Philo Mills, Hopson Pratt, Abijah Berry, John H. Swift, Reuben H. Boothe, Lee Eaton, Jesse St. John, and Stiles Peck. The first Master was John Raymond; Nathaniel Berry, Jr., Senior Warden; Philo Mills, Junior Warden. The charter was revoked by the Grand Lodge in May, 1838, and was restored May 14, 1857.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

RUSSEL STONE.

This Stone family is of Welsh ancestry. Levi Stone married in Danbury, Conn., Mary Wildman, July 4, 1776, thus joyously celebrating the signing of the immortal "Declaration of American Independence." His father was William Stone. He had three sons, Daniel, Elon (?), and Levi, all of whom ultimately settled in Kent. Levi was a captain in the colonial army, and was detailed to take charge of a company of blacksmiths in Danbury, where he was captured by the British and confined in Danbury jail. Here he was taken violently ill, and begged for a drink of water, which was refused him. At last, after much suffering, he crawled into the jail-yard on his hands and knees, and from a spring there drank copious draughts which, no doubt, saved his life. He was an early settler of Kent, and settled finally on the place now owned and occupied by his grandson, Levi W. Mr. Stone had a large family, six children—Russell, Asa, Dolly, Samuel W., Nancy, and Ezra—living to maturity. He died Dec. 31, 1836, just as the clock was striking midnight, on the last day of the week, the last day of the month, and the last day of the year, at the age of eighty-two years. He was an active, industrious man, and the most of his life worked at his trade as a blacksmith. His wife survived him several years.

RUSSELL STONE was born in Kent, Conn., May 3, 1779. He received a common-school education, became a farmer, and held at various times the prominent offices of his town. He was interested in public affairs, and active and energetic in his advocacy for what seemed to him for the public good. He was for many years a member of the Congregational Church of Kent, and was held in high esteem by his fellows. He was of good judgment, was one of Kent's prominent citizens, and represented his town one year in the State Legislature, where he was the oldest member. In politics he was first a Federalist, next a Whig, lastly a Republican. His death occurred Oct. 5, 1864, at the age of eighty-five years. He was married four times, first to Jerusha Hurd, by whom he had four children,—Hiram, Mary A. (Mrs. Norman Hall), Betsy Minerva (Mrs. Jacob Shew, of Northampton, Mass.), and Jerusha (Mrs. David B. Fuller). His second wife was Mary Hurd, sister of his first. They had five children, one dying in infancy; those attaining maturity were Levi W., Fairchild W., Dolly (Mrs. John T. St. John), and Maria (Mrs. Edwin Skiff). His third wife was Rebecca Talcott, of Vernon, Conn. She only lived about a year. His fourth was Hannah Talcott, also of Vernon. They had no children, and she survived her husband two years. Of the eight children mentioned, only two have died, and all lived until the youngest was nearly fifty-six years of age.

Geographical—Topographical—Pioneer Settlement—Parish of South Farms Incorporated—History of Congregational Church—The Advent Society—James Morris and Morris Academy—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Extracts from Societies' Records—Representatives from 1860 to 1882—Military Record.

THE town of Morris* lies south of the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north and east by Litchfield, on the south by Watertown and Bethlehem, and on the west by Washington. Its surface is very hilly, the most elevated portion being twenty-five feet higher than the highest point of Litchfield Hill.

The town was early known as South Farms, in the southern part of Litchfield, and is believed to have been settled prior to August, 1723. The parish of South Farms was incorporated in 1767.

The first birth in Litchfield was a son to Zebulon Gibbs, at South Farms.

In this part of the town, and on the spot occupied by the barn of Mr. David Benton, was one of the four forts built to protect the inhabitants against the incursions of the Indians.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

At first the people of South Farms worshiped with the people at Litchfield, but there was early manifested a tendency to draw asunder, and in 1743, twenty-one years after the organization of the church at Litchfield, it was voted to have an orthodox minister here for three months during the winter season. In October, 1748, the Legislature granted them winter privilege, for three months, which in 1761 were increased one month; and an act was passed authorizing the inhabitants of South Farms to build a meeting-house, and tax themselves for the purpose, and to exercise all the powers of an ecclesiastical society for this one-third of the year, at the same time being exempted from one-third of their tax for ecclesiastical purposes at Litchfield. About this time they secured from the town of Litchfield a separate burying-ground. From year to year they voted to improve, or hold up their winter privileges, beginning the services with January. The place of meeting was at first movable, sometimes in a school-house and sometimes in private houses.

In 1753 there were only thirty families in South Farms.

Rev. Mr. Bartlett was the first minister stationed here on record. Rev. Mr. Dickinson was here from 1755 to 1767. The following ministers seem to have been their winters' supply: Noah Wadhams, Stephen Heaton, Ebenezer Gauls, Andrew Rowland, John Richards, and Jonathan Bird.

In 1764 the first meeting-house was built. It was a small affair, only thirty-five by twenty-five feet, and nine-feet posts. It was located nearly opposite the blacksmith's shop at the Centre. With a new meeting-house and an increasing population, they finally succeeded in being set off, and organized themselves as a separate religious society in 1767, at which time they had seventy families. In 1768 a church was organized with thirteen male members. Rev. Peter Starr supplied the pulpit in 1772. The first settled pastor was Rev. George Beckwith, a graduate of Yale College in 1766. He was ordained Oct. 22, 1772. He married for his wife a Miss Merot, of this place. He was dismissed in 1781. Mr. Caleb Hotchkiss, a graduate of Yale in 1766, was employed here from May 7, 1781, to April 1, 1784. He died in 1784.

In 1785 a new meeting-house was built fifty-eight by forty-two and twenty-five feet high. It was located on the green opposite Mr. S. M. Ensign's house. Rev. Daniel Brimsmade supplied the pulpit during 1785. Rev. Amos Chase, of Cornish, N. H., a graduate of Dartmouth College, was ordained here June 27, 1787. He studied theology with Rev. Levi Hart, of Griswold, whose daughter Rebecca he married; she was a granddaughter of Dr. Bellamy, of Bethlehem. Mr. Chase was second cousin of the late Chief Justice Chase. He was dismissed June 15, 1814, after a pastorate of twenty-seven years. Rev. Asahel Nettleton, the revivalist, preached here for several months in 1814. Rev. William R. Week, a graduate of Princeton College, and former teacher in the academy here, received a call to settle in 1815, but declined. Rev. Amos Pettengill was installed here April 17, 1816; born in New Haven, a graduate of Harvard in 1807, he was cotemporary with Dr. Lyman Beecher, at Litchfield. He was dismissed January, 1822. Rev. Henry Robinson, a graduate of Yale in 1811, and of Anderson Theological Seminary in 1816, was ordained here April 30, 1823. He was dismissed Oct. 27, 1829. Rev. Vernon D. Taylor was installed here Jan. 26, 1831. During his brief ministry of two years seventy-five were added to the church. He was dismissed Feb. 7, 1833. He was succeeded by Rev. James F. Warner, who was ordained July 31, 1833, and dismissed Aug. 12, 1834. Rev. Ralph S. Crampton was installed here Dec. 3, 1834, and dismissed June 7, 1836. From June, 1836, to 1837, Rev. Stephen Hubbell supplied the pulpit here, and Rev. B. Y. Messenger from 1837 to 1838; Rev. Richard Woodruff supplied the pulpit here from 1838 to 1841; Rev. David L. Parmelee was installed here Aug. 25, 1841, where he remained pastor for twenty-four years, until the time of his death, which occurred June 27, 1865. In 1844 the present meeting-house was built at a cost of two thousand five hundred dollars, and in 1856 the Conference room at a cost of one thousand dollars.

South Farms was set off from Litchfield and incorporated as the town of Morris in 1859. Rev. H. H. McFarland, a graduate of Yale, supplied the pulpit here for two years from 1869, the church being without regular supply for two years, Rev. Mr. Parmelee occasionally officiating. Rev. Cyrus W. Pickett, a graduate of Yale, was employed two years. On May 1, 1867, Rev. Daniel D. Tompkins McLaughlin, a graduate of Yale in 1837, and of Union Theological Seminary, New York, 1842, was installed here. In the early part of his ministry here the parsonage was secured at a cost of three thousand one hundred and twenty dollars. He was dismissed in 1871. Rev. Richard Gidman supplied the pulpit here from June 9, 1872, to July 1, 1875. Rev. Edwin Leonard came here Jan. 1, 1876. He is a graduate of Bowdoin College in 1847, and of Bangor Theological Seminary in 1850.

THE ADVENT SOCIETY

erected a chapel in the western part of the town in 1871, and maintain weekly services. Joseph Curtiss was their first preacher.

Among the old inhabitants are the names of Gibbs, Ensign, Marsh, Harrison, Hull, Benton, Camp, Emmons, Ray, Pierpont, Woodruff, Farnham, and Whittlesey.

JAMES MORRIS AND MORRIS ACADEMY.

James Morris was born in Litchfield South Farms, Jan. 19, 1752, graduated at Yale College in 1775, and soon after commenced the study of divinity with Rev. Dr. Bellamy, of Bethlehem, Conn. In May, 1776, while preceptor of the grammar school in Litchfield, he received from Gov. Trumbull an ensign's commission in the Connecticut troops for a six-months campaign in New York, which he accepted. In 1777 he was promoted as first lieutenant. In May he joined the army at Peekskill, and from there he marched in September with the army, under the immediate command of Gen. Washington, to Philadelphia. He was captured at the battle of Germantown, and detained as a prisoner of war for a period of three and a quarter years. He was liberated Jan. 3, 1781. After this he accompanied the army under Washington to Yorktown. At the close of the war he returned to Litchfield South Farms, and here spent the remainder of his life. In 1795 he was elected deacon of the church. He was often elected as representative to the Legislature of the State, and held other important offices in the town. In 1790 he commenced a school in South Farms, which gradually extended its representation and influence until Morris Academy became celebrated throughout the country. While under his care more than sixty of his pupils entered college, and nearly fifteen hundred children and youth had been members of it, from twelve different States of the Union, and from the Islands of St. Thomas and Bermuda. The academy was incorporated in 1819, and between 1790 and 1812 had more than fourteen hundred pupils of both sexes. He was assisted by able instructors, and many men of mark graduated here, among whom were John Brown, of Ossawatomie and Virginia fame, Rev. Dr. Edward Beecher, Rev. John Pierpont.

President Dwight, of Yale College, in his "Travels," gives the following interesting facts relative to this parish and the academy:

"Immediately above Watertown lies South Farms, the southern part of Litchfield. This parish is principally a collection of hills, which are high, moist, and excellent grazing-ground. The surface is pleasant, the houses good farmers' dwellings, of which a little village is formed around the church. The inhabitants are industrious and thrifty, and distinguished for good morals, good order, and decency of deportment. A flourishing academy has been raised of late, almost solely by the efforts of James Morris, Esq., who is at once its founder and preceptor. This gentleman, soon after he had finished his education at Yale College, became an officer in the American army, in which he continued throughout the Revolutionary war. After the peace, his parents and his patrimony being in this place, he was induced to establish himself here for life. At his return he found the inhabitants less enlightened and less refined than those of many other parts of the State. What in this country is perhaps singular, they regarded him, both as a man liberally educated and as an officer, with suspicion and alienation. At the same time he perceived, with not a little mortification, that they were in many instances ignorant and vicious. As he had been absent from his early youth, his influence among them was to be created. With a disposition which cannot be enough commended, he determined to commence in form the work of a general reformation. After various experiments, sufficiently discouraging, among those who had arrived at middle age, he turned his attention to their children, and hoped, by communicating to them the advantages of a well-directed education, to furnish their minds with both knowledge and virtue, and thus to transform their character into amiableness and worth. For this benevolent purpose he founded the institution which I have mentioned. In this academy it has from the first been the commanding object to inculcate the best principles of morality and religion, and to require of the students unexceptionable deportment. The youths of both sexes usually assembled here, from various parts of the country, are in number from forty to seventy. Mr. Morris has had the satisfaction of seeing his expectations more than realized. Not only were the benefits of his design realized by the inhabitants of South Farms, but they are spread also through most parts of the country, and extensively through this and the neighboring States. This is one among the proofs furnished by experience of the power possessed by an individual of spreading around him, if properly disposed, the best blessing of society."

Morris has an underlying strata of rock, cropping out continually at the surface. It is almost entirely free from low, swampy land; the air is pure, and free from all malaria, with good soil and excellent water, and very healthy, as the following statistics, compiled for the last five years, indicate. During this time but 55 persons have died in town; average number per year, 11. During these five years but 6 persons have died of consumption contracted here. In five years deaths into which paralysis entered as a factor were 8; deaths from old age, or into which old age was a factor, 7; casualty, 4; cancer, 4; heart-disease, 3; dropsy, fever, diphtheria, and pneumonia, each 2; all other diseases, each only 1; average age at time of death, 55 years; 3 were over 90, viz., 91, 92, 93; 11 were 80 or over; 13 were 70 or over; 8 were 60 or over; 4 were 50 or over; 2 were 40 or over; 8 were 30 or over; 4 were 20 or over.

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN—FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

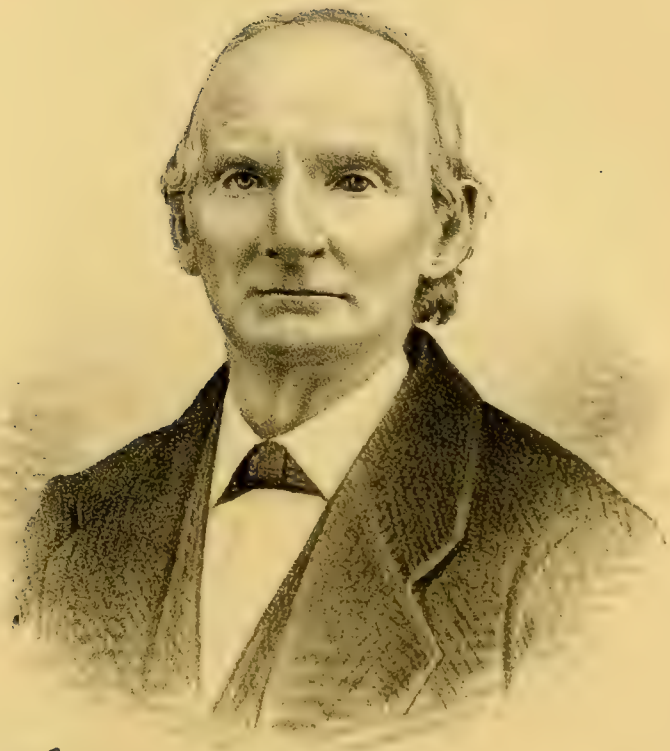
Morris was incorporated in 1859, and the first town-meeting was held June 27, 1859, when the following officers were elected: Phineas McCary, Moderator; William H. Lawrence, Town Clerk; W. L. Smeddley, Treasurer; Alanson J. Pickett, David Benton, George A. Smith, Selectmen; Joseph C. Peck, Daniel W. Waggoner, Frederick B. Hand, Constables; Alvah Clark, David Benton, C. H. Alvord, Grand Jurors; William M. Ensign, Samuel W. S. Shelton, William B. Ames, School Visitors; Nelson Edmonds, Henry Steel, Assessors; Ezra Judd, Charles A. Ensign, Bateman Smith, Board of Relief; Newton Smith, Garry H. Miner, Henry R. Ray, Justices of the Peace; Alanson J. Pickett, First Representative.

EXTRACTS FROM RECORDS.

The following are extracts from the records of South Farms society: March 14, 1759, the society voted "to pay Charles Woodruff six shillings for bears, to carry ye dead." In 1769 it was voted, "that we think the sealing ordinances are equaly sacred, and any person that is qualified for one is qualified for both." In 1770, "voted that we approve of the church vote,

DAN THROOP.

Dan Throop was a son of Benjamin and grandson of Joseph Throop, who was one of the first settlers of Litchfield County. Joseph Throop was of Scotch descent; was born in 1715; married Deborah Buel, sister of John Buel, one of the original proprietors of Litchfield; they came from Lebanon, where he lived until 1747, when he purchased land in Litchfield (South Farms), now Morris, where he raised a large family, several of whom emigrated to the Western States. He was identified with many of the early improvements of Litchfield. Soon after he came he erected a saw-mill on a stream running through his land, which is said to have been the first in Morris. The present mill, which is the fourth on that site, is using the dam he built. Some time later he bought land on the Bantam River, near where the Morris station of the Shepaug Railroad now is, and built a grist-mill, which was also one of the first mills in the county. The first mill he built was on a stream running by his log house, where he put up a small water-wheel which furnished power to drive the flax spinning-wheel of his wife. This pioneer couple lived to a good old age. He died Oct. 4, 1799, aged eighty-four; and his wife Feb. 11, 1811, aged ninety-four. Their children were Deborah, born April 22, 1741; Joseph, born April 22, 1743; William, born Dec. 26, 1745; Elizabeth, born Jan. 10, 1747; Dan, born Nov. 18, 1748; Benjamin, born Sept. 13, 1752; Martha, born July 12, 1755; Rhoda, born June 10, 1758; Samuel, born Nov. 8, 1760.



Benjamin married Mary Burgess, and remained on land given him by his father. He was a "Minute-Man," and was called to Danbury at the time that place was burned by the British. Their children were Samuel, born Aug. 12, 1776; Irena, born Jan. 14, 1778; Calvin, born Sept. 19, 1779; Polly, born Dec. 8, 1782; Benjamin, born Dec. 19, 1784; Joseph and Deborah, born April 8, 1788; James, born Jan. 19, 1791; Julina, born Nov. 29, 1793; Dan, born April 28, 1796; Abigail, born June 8, 1798.

Dan Throop, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, married Olive Smith, Jan. 1, 1818, daughter of David Smith. He served in the war of the Revolution; was brought home sick to his father's, in Litchfield. Dan Throop was a farmer, a man highly respected for his upright character and integrity. He lived and died upon the old homestead of his grandfather, and where his widow now resides with her son George. Monroe, the oldest son, lives upon the adjoining farm. They are carriage-makers and mill-wrights, and are among the most respected and reliable men of the town.

The children of Dan and Olive Smith Throop were Monroe, Altha, Elizabeth, Charles, George, Mary, Morris, and Amelia.

viz., that conversion should not be a term for admission for church communion." In 1776 the town granted to Thomas Waugh, and his heirs forever, the right to use a certain burying-ground in South Farms for pasturing, "provided he or they shall keep up and maintain convenient bars for the people to pass and repass for the purpose of burying their dead." In 1785 a new and commodious church was erected. In April of that year the society voted that "the meeting-house committee shall have good right to furnish rum, grindstones, and ropes sufficient for framing the meeting-house according to their best discretion;" and in June an overseer was appointed to direct the issue of liquor at the raising, and a vote at the same time was passed that said overseer "shall give two drams a day to the spectators, one a little before noon, and the other a little before night."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

PHINEAS W. CAMP.

Phineas W. Camp was born June 9, 1809, on the farm where he now resides, in the town of Morris (formerly Litchfield South Farms). His father, Abel Camp, was born at the same place. This was the original settlement of the family in Litchfield, and was made by Abel Camp, the grandfather of Phineas W., who came from Waterbury, where he was born, July 11, 1748. He came to Litchfield when a young man; married Sabra Marsh. Their children were Rebecca, born March 24, 1769; Sabra, born June 6, 1771; John, born March 19, 1773; Eunice, born Jan. 30, 1775; Phineas, born June 11, 1777; Lydia, born June 9, 1780; Susan, born May 8, 1782; Abel, born Dec. 28, 1787. Mr. Camp was a carpenter by trade, a man of good judgment and strong common sense; he commenced poor; raised a large family. Phineas died when a young man. Mr. Camp lived to see all the other children married and well settled in life. He died May 8, 1825, leaving a good name and an ample competency for his family. His father's name was also Abel, and in his old age came to Litchfield to live with his son, where he died at an advanced age.

Abel, the youngest son of Abel Camp, received such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools and Squire Morris' academy. When a young man he began teaching school winters; he became quite famous as a teacher. Was a member of the Congregational Church, and took an active part in all church work, and was a deacon for many years; a man highly respected for integrity and personal worth. He married Deziah Pease, Feb. 22, 1808. Their children were Phineas W., born June 9, 1809; Harriet Mariah, born April 15, 1811; Augustus P. P., born March 31, 1818. Abel Camp died Aug. 26, 1826, and his wife Aug. 26, 1876, on the farm where he was born, which has passed to the possession of their oldest son, Phineas W. Camp, who married Louisa B., daughter of Samuel McNeil, of Litchfield, March 18, 1835. The McNeils are of Scotch-Irish descent, and trace their genealogy to three brothers, —Archibald, Alexander, and Adam, who came to America previous to 1737. Archibald was a captain in the French war. He married Sarah Johnson, of Antrim, Ireland, of a noble family. They had four sons: the eldest was Archibald, born July 17, 1738 (as per town book of Litchfield); Isaac, the second son, was the father of Samuel, and grandfather of Mrs. Camp.

Phineas W. Camp is a farmer by occupation, an active and consistent member, a Sunday-school teacher, and deacon in the Congregational Church. His children are Lewis A., born April 15, 1836, married Lizzie James; Samuel P., born Sept. 18, 1839, married Mary E. Kenney; Cornelia L., born Feb. 14, 1841, married Virgil H. McEwen. All live in Seymour, Conn.

LYMAN L. GRISWOLD.

Lyman L. Griswold, son of Jonathan Griswold and Betsy Barnes, was born on the farm where he now resides, in the town of Morris, Litchfield Co., Conn., June 20, 1818. His grandfather, Jonathan Griswold, was a resident of Haddam, Conn., and came to Washington, Litchfield Co., Conn., where he married Elizabeth Weeks, of that town. Soon after their marriage, and before the Revolutionary war, they settled in Litchfield, now known as Morris. They were farmers by occupation, as the most of their descendants have been. He was a teamster during the Revolutionary war, and his eldest son, Midian, was a soldier in the same. Mr. Griswold died in March, 1821, and his wife survived him some two years. Their children were as follows, viz.: Midian, Mary, Nabby, Adda, Lottie, and Jonathan, Jr.

Jonathan, Jr., was born in Morris, formerly Litchfield, Conn., June 10, 1775; married Betsy, daughter of Amos Barnes, and to them were born the following children, viz.: Mary A., wife of Samuel Catlin; George W., John O., Horace B., Lyman L., and Frederick A.; all are dead except three. Mr. Griswold was a farmer in limited circumstances; in politics he was a Whig and Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Griswold were members of the Congregational Church of South Farms. She died Sept. 7, 1846, and he died March 27, 1861.

Lyman L. Griswold, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the home boy. His advantages for an education were such as the common schools of his day afforded. Soon after the death of his father he came in possession of the home farm, which consisted of eighty-four acres, to which he has kept adding from time to time until to-day he owns some one hundred and eighty-eight acres. He married Rachel Prindle, daughter of Warren Prindle, of Cornwall, Conn., March 25, 1844. She was born Sept. 28, 1823. They have six children, viz.: Dwight, William (both farmers), Caroline M., Matilda, Phebe A., and Bertha E. In politics he has always been a strong defender of the old Democratic principles as taught by Jefferson and Jackson. He has held nearly all the offices in his town, with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He is a man of great energy and indomitable perseverance. He has always practiced the most rigid economy, and resides still on the farm of his ancestors. He is a man esteemed by all. As a citizen and farmer, he is regarded one of the leading men of Morris.

ABEL C. TRACY.

Abel C. Tracy was born in the town of Washington, Litchfield Co., Conn., Jan. 15, 1820; grandson of Capt. Silas Tracy, who kept a public-house at New Preston at an early day.

His father, Francis Tracy, married Clarissa, daughter of Abel Clemens, who lived and died on "Mount Tom," in Litchfield. Abel C. Tracy was the youngest of six children, and less than three years of age when his father died, leaving the family in limited circumstances. By the energy and courage of the widowed mother the children were kept together until they were old enough to earn their living.

At the age of eleven years Abel C. left the maternal home to earn a livelihood for himself, and from that time has been entirely upon his own resources. He has by industry and sagacity so managed his affairs as to take rank among the substantial and influential men of his town. The business of his life has been that of a farmer. He has a fine farm, with pleasant surroundings; this has been secured by his own exertions. His first money was earned by working at thirty dollars per year. When twenty-five years of age he had saved seven hundred and fifty dollars. At that time he purchased the farm where he now resides, and with that money made the first payment; has since added other lands, erecting fine buildings, etc.

Mr. Tracy has been twice married, first to Caroline M. Bowns. She died June 2, 1858, leaving six children,—Morton, George, Edward (who died at eleven years), Cornelia, Cornelius, and Frances. Mr. Tracy was again married, to Lucia E., sister of the first wife. They were daughters of Jerry Bowns, who was the son of Joseph Bowns, who came from England before the Revolution and settled in Torrington, where the family still reside.

Politically Mr. Tracy is a Republican; has held several offices of trust and honor in his town, among them assessor, selectman, etc. In all public matters he takes a deep interest; contributed liberally towards the construction of the Shepaug Railroad. During the war of the Rebellion he took an active part to sustain the government. He enlisted in the Twenty-third Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and served for one year; was honorably discharged with the regiment in 1863.

WILLIAM H. FARNHAM.

William H. Farnham is a lineal descendant of John Farnum (as the name was formerly spelled), who emigrated from England and settled in Dorchester, Mass., at an early day. The Farnum coat of arms is still in possession of the family. He was made a freeman in that town May 13, 1640. At the organization of the Second Church of Boston he was a member, and was made a deacon at that time. His children were Henry, Jonathan, Hannah, and Joanna. Henry Farnham was born 1636; he married Joanna Rutke; he came first to Windsor, then to Killingworth, Conn. Their children were Peter and Elizabeth. Peter married Hannah Wiliuxen; their children were Joanna, Peter, Hannah, Nathaniel, Josiah, Phebe, John, Graves, and Loftus Newell. John was the first of the family in Litchfield County. He married Hannah Crittenden; moved to Gilford, Conn., from there to Litchfield South Farms (now Morris), about 1740. His children were John, born Nov. 24, 1726; Lucy, born Aug. 1, 1727; Ruth, born Sept. 12, 1731; Seth, born Sept. 28, 1733; Gad, born Aug. 10, 1736; Nathan, born June 19, 1738; Joseph, born Sept. 10, 1740; Benjamin, born March 1, 1742; Hannah, born Jan. 4, 1746. Seth, fourth child of John Farnham, married Dinah Gibbs, Jan. 23, 1766. Their children were Louis, born Dec. 13, 1766; Benjamin, born March 31, 1768; John, born November, 1770;

Wm H. Hanchett

ABEL C. TRACY.

Joseph, born July 10, 1773; Leman, born May 8, 1775; Seth, born May 17, 1777; Joseph, born Aug. 10, 1779; Leman, born May 8, 1781; and Sally, born Oct. 10, 1786.

Seth, son of Seth Farnham, married Asenath Bradley, Nov. 25, 1802. Their children were Emily C., born Dec. 10, 1803; Phebe M., born Dec. 22, 1805; Harriet B., born Sept. 8, 1809; William H., born Aug. 22, 1811. William H., only son of Seth Farnham, married Marinda H., daughter of Rufus Pickett, Sept. 8, 1837. She was born Dec. 17, 1811. Her father came from Danbury to Litchfield in 1816, settled at South Farms, where he raised a family of eight children,—four sons and four daughters; all grew to adult age, and were respected and influential citizens.

Deacon Farnham is a farmer by occupation, and resides on the farm where he was born, and where his father settled soon after he was married. He received such educational advantages as were offered by the common schools and a boarding-school at Bethel, Conn. He united with the Congregational Church at Morris in 1831, and has been an active and consistent member since that time; has held several important offices in the church, among them clerk, treasurer, superintendent of Sunday-school, and deacon for many years. Deacon Farnham has always taken a deep interest in educational matters; was a member of the school board of education for several years. He has three children, all of whom have received liberal educations. The children are Rosetta M., Seth T., and Edwin P. The sons graduated at Brown University in 1876, and at Rochester Theological Seminary in 1877; both are Baptist ministers. Seth T. married Julia M. Austin, of Suffield, Conn. They have two children,—Mabel A. and Mary C. He is pastor of the First Baptist Church of Malone, N. Y. Edwin P. married J. Adelaide Mather, of Providence, R. I. They have one child, J. Alice. He is pastor of Friendship Street Church, Providence, R. I.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

NEW HARTFORD.*

INTRODUCTION.

In 1878 the writer of the following sketch became greatly interested in the early history of New Hartford, concerning which no compilation had ever been made. At that time proposals were received from a journal in the State to furnish for its columns a series of historical articles. With that object in view, careful study was given to the matter, and material collected for carrying the history of the town to the beginning of the present century. The pressure of other cares and duties prevented the completion of the articles for publication, though the matter collected received additions from time to time.

Since consenting to prepare the sketch for the Litchfield County compilation the material has been newly digested, and research carried down to the present time. That portion treating of the "Early Settlement of the Town" remains substantially as first written; in the others it has been the aim of the writer to condense the information given into the fewest possible words, with no attempt at elaboration or literary effect. A history of such limited proportions must necessarily be the bare skeleton of facts, with but little filling and embellishing of anecdotes and supplementary incident. Some material has been held in reserve, but nothing which could be ascertained has been omitted that was necessary to a reliable outline history of the town. Every care has been taken to verify dates and statements, that a true narrative might be presented.

The writer acknowledges courtesies and assistance received from Messrs. Charles J. Hoadley, State librarian, and Addison Van Name, assistant librarian of Yale College, from Rev. William H. Moore, of Memorial Hall, from Hon. John Boyd, of Winsted, and from the custodians of the Connecticut Historial Library. Much that is valuable concerning his native town has been gleamed from the MSS. of Rev. Frederick Marsh, late pastor of the Congregational Church at Winchester, kindly loaned by Messrs. Edward Marsh, of New Hartford, and George M. Carrington, of Winsted.

Grateful acknowledgments are due to those who have furnished church records, to Deacon J. C. Keach, the courteous town clerk of New Hartford, to Mr. Ashbel Marsh, whose recollections have been invaluable, to Messrs. Wait Garrett, Darius B. Smith, Edmund Watson, and to all others whose personal recollections or family records have in any way contributed to this history.

The public will pardon an acknowledgment to one within the writer's own family circle, to Capt. Henry R. Jones, without whose assistance and encouragement these pages could never have been compiled.

To the descendants of the pioneer settlers, to whom trust in God and love of country were vital principles of life and action, who with persevering industry planted the seeds of civilization on these rugged hills, and to all who are now reaping in the beautiful town of New Hartford the harvest sown in toil and privation a century and a half ago, this sketch is hereby dedicated. S. L. J.

New Hartford, April, 1881.

EARLY SETTLEMENT OF THE TOWN.

We were wandering one bright autumn day in the old cemetery on Town Hill, when a friend remarked, pointing to a moss-grown slab, "There is the grave of the first white person ever buried in New Hartford." Interest and curiosity were at once aroused, and kneeling before the ancient brown stone, which had preserved its perpendicular while others of more modern appearance had yielded to frost and storm, with but little difficulty the following inscription was deciphered:

Here lies the Body of Mr Stephen Kelcy who died April 2 1745 in ye 71 Year of his Age as you are so was we as we are you must be.

The "we" in the couplet doubtless included "Mrs. Dorothy," his wife, who lay beside him, but upon whose tombstone the inscription was so nearly effaced that little was legible but the name and year of her death, 1746.

The adjoining plot of ground seemed to have been the family burying-place of the Kelcys, or Kelsey, as the spelling occasionally varied, for three generations of the name here repose side by side. Curiosity and interest deepened, and would not rest without some information concerning this pioneer tenant of the silent city. Who was he? Inquiry was made among the oldest inhabitants, but no one knew aught concerning him, and no representative of his name is now a resident of the town. Trumbull's "History of Connecticut" disclosed, among a few scanty bits of information, the name of Stephen Kelsey in a partial list of the first settlers of the town; meagre but encouraging was this, and the web which romance had begun to weave about the old man fastened on an ancient copy of the town records. On the very first page within the time-darkened parchment covers was the name of Stephen Kelsey as moderator of the first recorded town-meeting in New Hartford, Dec. 19, 1738, and the first business of the meeting constituted him one of three selectmen; the others were Deacons Martin Smith and Jonathan Marsh. Farther on, he was named, with others, a committee to secure a minister to settle in New Hartford,—church and town business went hand in hand in those days. The old manuscript held us with a spell, like a voice from the buried past; we read on and on, then, following out a train of investigation, we begged a sight of the old proprietors' book, a ponderous volume with the corners of its heavy pages thumbed into rags. One link led to another still farther back in the chain of events, until, to use a well-worn simile, Stephen Kelsey proved the pebble which we had at first somewhat aimlessly dropped into the stream of research, but around which the circles had widened and widened until they reached Plymouth colony and the "Mayflower," and, could we follow them so far, might have spread into the great ocean of history until they touched Christopher Columbus himself.

In 1686, when King James II. of England had determined to annul the colonial charters of New England, the General Assembly of Connecticut, fearing that Sir Edmund Andross would sequester all the unoccupied lands of the colony, made a hasty conveyance in trust to the proprietors of Hartford and Windsor of the lands "bounded north by the province of the Massachusetts Bay, east by Farmington and Simsbury, south by Woodbury and Mattatuck, and butting west on the Ousatunnack River." No need to repeat the familiar story of the "Charter Oak," where the charter of the colony was secreted when Sir Edmund came to Hartford in person to demand it, in 1687. In 1689, Andross was forced by the inhabitants of Boston to seek the safety in flight which had been forced upon his tyrannical master, King James, across the sea. The colonial government was again established, but, possession being nine points in law, after holding these western acres for a term of years, the Hartford and Windsor proprietors were loth to give them up, and after much litigation and trouble in the matter, in May, 1726, the General Assembly, wishing as far as possible to preserve the public peace, made a compromise, by which the lands in controversy were divided between the colony and the towns, the former to have the western portion and the latter the eastern portion. The eastern division had the advantage in location, and embraced the following towns, given in order of settlement: Harwinton, 1731; New Hartford, 1733; Torrington, 1737; Hartland, 1753; Barkhamsted, 1746; Winchester, 1758; Colebrook, 1765.

Deeds of partition between Hartford and Windsor, in 1732, gave to the former the territory now embraced in Winchester, New Hartford, Hartland, and the eastern part of Harwinton. At a meeting of the proprietors of these "four parcels of land, lying in that tract of land commonly known as the Western grant," at the State-house in Hartford, April 6, 1732, a valuation was placed upon them, as follows: The southeast portion, now New Hartford, containing by estimation twenty-three thousand nine hundred and forty-two acres, was placed in the list at fifteen shillings an acre; Winchester and East Harwinton were valued at ten shillings, and Hartland at only seven shillings and sixpence per acre. Each tax-payer of Hartford on the list of 1720, or his heirs, was proprietor of an undivided share in some one of these townships in proportion to his list. New Hartford fell to the share of one hundred and eighty-two proprietors. A committee was appointed to set off lands to such as wished to settle thereon, and all who entered their names for settling were obligated, "in two years next ensuing their agreement with the committee, to build a tenantable house of sixteen feet square on said land, and break up two or three acres of said land, and in one year more after said two years are expired personally to inhabit by themselves or family on said land, and to be obliged to continue inhabiting on said land for the space of three years longer after the first three years are expired."

A committee appointed to view the land in the southeast part of the four parcels and report how it would be best to lay it out to form a township, reported that a "certain hilly piece of land, northerly of a mountain called the Yellow Mountain, which is about a mile in width and between two and three miles in length, was the most suitable land in the whole tract to lay out home-lots to accommodate the proprietors, and that what land might be wanted more than said hill contained to lay out home-lots was near said hill, enough to accommodate the whole of the proprietors." According to this recommendation, surveys were made, and home-lots laid out half a mile in length and twenty rods wide on the easterly and westerly sides of a highway sixteen rods wide; also short lots, eighty rods long, where suitable land could be found as near as possible to the hill. In May, 1733, a committee appeared for the proprietors before the General Assembly, praying for some action to encourage and promote the settling of the township, and that a name might be given it, when an act was passed calling it New Hartford. In December, 1733, the home-lots were drawn by the proprietors at the State-house in Hartford; the rest of the land was laid out in divisions, and the proprietors took up or located their second, third, or fourth pitches in the same way after the home-lots were appropriated, the last division being drawn in 1742.

According to the records, highways were laid out, taxes levied, and lands surveyed with as great dispatch as possible, considering that the country was an unbroken wilderness infested by wild beasts and Indians. The summer of 1734 probably saw the settlers busily at work breaking ground and building their "tenantable houses," six feet square. New Hartford was the only one of the four townships colonized by the original proprietors. The pioneers of the town were, with very few exceptions, either proprietors or sons of proprietors, members of respectable and well-to-do families in Hartford, hence the peculiar propriety of the name New Hartford. The first settlers, as accurately as can be ascertained, were sixteen heads of families, as follows: Stephen Kelsey, Jonathan Marsh, Martin Smith, Zebulon Shepherd, Samuel Douglass, Eleazer Goodwin, Cyprian Watson, his son Zachariah, John Watson, Thomas Olcott, Noah Merrill, Joseph Merrill, John Merrill, John Andrus, Israel Loomis, Matthew Gillet, John Seymour.*

These pathfinders were soon followed by Elijah Flower, Isaac Kellogg, Joseph Gilbert, Daniel Persons, Samuel Wells, John Spencer, Samuel Benham, Jonah Richards, David Ensign, William Steel, John Edgecomb, Thomas Bidwell, Daniel Shepherd, Jonathan Merrill, and others.

The proprietors in Hartford took a fatherly interest in the little colony. They gave them a very liberal highway grant, most of which was sold from time to time for the benefit of the town, or exchanged for more convenient highways; also eighty acres for the support of a "gospel minister," and eighty more for the support of a school; also twenty acres as a gift to the first minister who should settle in town, and a grist-mill privilege.

To return to Stephen Kelsey, he purchased property in the town to the value of one hundred and nineteen pounds, forty-five pounds right of which he deeded to his son Ebenezer, of Waterbury, who came to occupy it at an early day. During the few years of his stay with them all the settlers deferred to Stephen Kelsey; he was moderator of almost every town- and society-meeting, agent to present the town interests to the General Assembly, and member of all committees, whether to covenant with a minister or to settle the town boundary. In December, 1743, one pound was "voted to Stephen for perambelating the line between New Hartford and Farmington." This is the last mention of his name upon the town records. In March, 1745, the town voted "to purchase a decent cloth for a burying cloth;" and as Stephen Kelsey died on the 2d of April, we can but infer that it was in view of his approaching end that such an appropriation was made.

"Perambelating" the boundary line mentioned must have been too much for the old man of seventy in the severe weather of December, and for more than a year previous to his death he was laid aside from the service of his fellow-townsmen, in which he had been so active, and in which his zeal had overrated his powers of endurance. We have no record of his funeral, the first in the little settlement,† but we can picture the mournful procession, the coffin covered with the "decent burying cloth," followed by the bereaved colony, perhaps one hundred adults in all, to its final resting-place when the snows were beginning to melt on the thickly-wooded hillside.

INDIANS.

There are on record but few deeds or conveyances of lands from Indians to the first settlers of New Hartford. A portion of this territory was probably included in that sold by Sequassen, or Suncquasson, sachem of Suckiage, now Hartford, in a deed of sale to the English settlers, which embraced "the whole region westward, including the territories of the Tunxis, as far as the country of the Mohawks."‡ Prior to 1750 the territory now embraced in New Hartford was used rather as an occasional resort for fishing and hunting than a permanent dwelling-place by the Tunxis Indians.

* Trumbull's history gives Joseph Gillet; he was an original proprietor, father of Matthew, but the earliest town records indicate that he must very soon have returned to Hartford, while careful search makes it evident that Joseph and John Merrill, Israel Loomis, and John Seymour were pioneers. John Seymour brought with him four sons,—William, Uriah, Hezekiah, and Elias.

† Noah Merrill died in 1739; his descendants in town are of the opinion that his remains were carried to Hartford for burial, but that seems hardly probable in the state of the country at that time.

‡ The original deed is lost, but this sale is confirmed in a renewal deed given by the successors of Sequassen in 1670 to the white settlers of Hartford.

In a note-book of Rev. Jonathan Marsh is an entry to the effect that in 1739 there were but three families of Indians living in the town. These were probably families who were sufficiently civilized to come under Christian influences.

Among the Trumbull papers in Yale College library is a letter, bearing date 1813, from which Mr. Trumbull gained information for the sketch of this town contained in his "History of Connecticut." The writer, Asa Goodwin, Esq., long town clerk of New Hartford, says,—

"The Indians in New Hartford when it was settled were not numerous, probably eight or ten families; but from its being a frontier town apprehensions were entertained by the inhabitants of being surprised by other Indians, so much so that several houses were fortified with palisades, to which the inhabitants used to resort for safety in the night, particularly the houses of Rev. Mr. Marsh and Deacon Smith.* There are to be seen to this day several caverns or pits from which the Indians used to dig cotton-stone, with which they made dishes or pots, in which they used to boil succotash and other food."

The house of Cyprian Watson, in the southwestern part of the town, was also fortified, and the early settlers carried firearms when at work in the field during the day.

Historical reminiscence locates the earliest settlement of the Tunxis Indians in New Hartford about half a mile southeasterly from the present "Kingdom" bridge, on the west side of the Albany turnpike, at Indian Hill (formerly in New Hartford, set off to Canton in 1806), so called to this day. This village embraced at one time perhaps eighteen or twenty wigwams, the sites of some of them having been visible within the memory of the present generation; the meadows in the vicinity were cleared and planted with corn and other crops. Articles of aboriginal manufacture have been found here,—pots, arrows, and hatchets, all of stone.

Another Indian settlement also grew up on the west side of the river, not far from Indian Hill, and this, after a time, was so recruited by negroes and renegade whites that, tradition says, it was the most populous portion of the town about 1780, and an asylum for criminals and evil-doers of all grades. From the lawlessness of its population, who lived by hunting, fishing, and stealing, this locality was called "Satan's Kingdom," which name it still retains. Such a community, containing an indiscriminate mixture of the blood of three races, could not long thrive, and by deaths and removals it was so rapidly diminished that in 1800 but two or three wigwams were left, and a few years later nothing but the ruins of the village remained. De Forest, in his "History of the Indians of Connecticut," says, "At the present time (1850) they (the Tunxis) have all disappeared from their ancient home. One miserable creature, Mossock, still lives, perhaps the sole remnant of the tribe." This Henry Mossock, sentenced to imprisonment for life at Wethersfield for participation in the murder of Barnice White, of Colebrook, was a descendant of Solomon Mossock, a Farmington Indian, who married the daughter of Chogham, chief of the Kingdom clan, and with others formed a small settlement about a mile above the gorge, near the confluence of the east and west branches of the Tunxis. A few Mohegans and Pequots came hither also. Among the former was one Oliver Delvon, whose wife, Mary, died some thirty years since, aged one hundred years or more. Rev. Samson Occom occasionally preached to his brethren in New Hartford, and it is said that several were converted through his labors to the Christian faith.

Early in the present century the Indians began to disappear from this settlement also. Humphrey Quomone, the last of the tribe, died years ago, and a few negro and mulatto squatters later on gave the locality its present name of "Niggertown."

There are on record deeds of sale of a portion of this property, one, in 1844, to the town of New Hartford, by heirs of Huldah Delvon, of thirty acres, for the consideration of ten dollars; another, in 1850, by selectmen of New Hartford, to Wilson B. Spring, of sixty acres, including the above-mentioned thirty, the other thirty having been taken by the town for the support of Mary Delvon in her old age.

* Town Hill and Hotel Corner, North village.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

As soon as the town was organized sufficiently to proceed to any business, at the first recorded town-meeting, Dec. 19, 1738, a committee was appointed to secure a minister to settle in New Hartford in the work of the ministry, and four candidates were named to whom application should be made,—

"Mr. Baulden, and if the s^{d} Mr. Baulden refuse to except of their caul, then to Mr. Robords, and if y^{e} s^{d} Mr. Robords Refuse then to Mr. Marsh sun to y^{e} Rev. m^{r}. Marsh of Windsor, and if he refuse then to Mr. Tim^{o} Woodbridge."

At the second town-meeting an agent was appointed to apply to the General Assembly for a committee to settle the place "for building a meeting-house for divine worship." Immediately following came instructions to "treat further with Mr. Marsh concerning settling in the work of the ministry." So zealous were these pioneers to see a tabernacle arise in the wilderness that they could not wait the pleasure of the General Assembly, but voted, "It is needful to proceed, and we will proceed to build a meeting-house in the town of New Hartford for Divine worship;" and again an agent was appointed to petition the authorities to settle the place for the meeting-house.

We get some insight into the money matters of the little colony from the vote, after still further proposals to Mr. Marsh, that "if he accepts the caul, to give him one hundred pounds for his salary for four years, and then advance five pounds a year until it amounts to one hundred and forty pounds;" also, "To give Mr. Marsh two pounds five shillings for each Lord's day that he shall preach in said town until he serve us, he to board himself." Probably the reverend gentleman thought that the increase of salary might not keep pace with his increase of family, for soon after a resolution was passed to "give Mr. Marsh one hundred pounds a year for three years, then advance ten pounds a year until it amounts to one hundred and fifty pounds, then advance according to his necessity and our ability."

In July, 1739, the committee settled the question of a building-spot,* and it was immediately voted to "proceed to build a meeting-house, the length of said house to bee fifty foots and the bredth forty foots." But "by further and betor consideration," it was thought best to add "five foots" to the length of the building.

Mr. Marsh having accepted terms of settlement, the time for his ordination was fixed for October, 1739; an appropriation was made to defray expenses of the ordination, "to caul ministers and messengers," and a committee appointed to provide "liquer" for the occasion. An old manuscript in Mr. Marsh's own hand, now in Memorial Hall, Hartford, states that he was not ordained until December 5th of the same year, the church at that time numbering twenty-nine members, and the population of the town being about one hundred and fifty souls in all, who were comprised in twenty-four families, including three families of Indians. The early records of the church being lost, it is difficult to give the exact date of its formation, but from Rev. Cyrus Yale's MSS. it is known that Mr. Martyn Smith was chosen deacon in the latter part of 1738; probably the church was then organized.†

In February, 1740, it was voted "to hire a carpenter from out of town to frame the meeting-house, and that the timber be got so it may be framed by March." In May came the "raising," for which also "sutabel preparation of liquer" was made. There were not able-bodied men enough in town to raise the massive timbers, and a number of persons came from Hartford to assist at the raising.

During the year 1741 some calamity seems to have befallen the settlers; we know not whether they suffered from depredations of hostile Indians, or disease, or contentions among themselves, there is only the simple record that they applied to the neighboring ministers for advice, and to appoint a day for humiliation, fasting, and prayer "for deliverance from present circumstances."

Solomon's temple in all its magnificence was only seven years in building, but it was nearly ten years after the much-longed-for meeting-house in New Hartford was raised before it was completed. During those ten years the brave settlers worked perseveringly on, never losing sight of the end to be attained. They appointed committee after committee, they levied a tax to purchase laths, and another for glass,—a luxury dearly paid for in those days. They cut, scored, and hewed timber, and here we quote from the records an item as to wages:

"Persons who have worked scoring timber for the meeting-house shall have six shillings a day, those who have hewed shall have seven shillings, and those who have worked at framing, seven shillings."

Dissatisfaction with workmen sometimes arose, as the following record shows:

"If the committee cannot agree with Asa Hopkins about labor that he undertook to do towards the meeting house, we will defend said committee in the law against said Asa Hopkins."

It seems to have been a hard matter to raise ye Rev. Mr. Marsh's salary during this period, and numerous are the records of taxes levied and votes passed concerning the expense of the "ministerial charge." There was some discussion on the silver question also, and a committee had to settle the price of silver per ounce with Rev. Mr. Marsh.

In September, 1749, the meeting-house was so nearly completed that Rev. Mr. Marsh was given a choice of pews for his family to sit in on the Lord's day.

December, 1749, the town reluctantly granted "liberty for building a pue in the galery for the Indians to sit in, provided it be built on perticuler men's cost," and in 1751 the Indians were allowed to sit in the "pue" named "only during the town's pleasure."‡ These sturdy Puritans, as uncompromising in religion as in politics, classed the red men with the Moabite and Ammonite, who, their Bible declared, "should not come into the congregation of God forever."

In December, 1749, we may safely conclude that the rejoicing congregation were found worshiping under the roof which they had built at such cost of time, labor, and sacrifice; it is then recorded that ten shillings were paid to Joseph Merrill for sweeping the meeting-house, and a sexton's fees would imply that the house was in use at that time.

Mrs. Abijah Loomis, the oldest resident in town (1881), has in her possession a plan of the original meeting-house, drawn for the convenience of the seating committee. This house, the site of which cornered on that of the present structure, was farther south and west, and, consequently, nearer the angle made by the highways. It was set by the compass, and fronted the south, a door on that side opening directly

* The report of the committee to fix the spot for building the meeting-house is not in the records of New Hartford, but in 1735 the proprietors of the town purchased of Eleazer Goodwin five acres three roods of land, bounded west and south by highways on Town Hill, and sequestred it to the public use of the town. Two acres of this purchase was laid out for a burial-place, which survey is recorded; and on the same page (189) of the old proprietors' book is the following vote: "That the piece or parcel of land belonging to the proprietors of New Hartford be sequestred for commons forever," which would seem to indicate that the ground on which the old meeting-house stands, with the land adjoining, is a legacy to the town from the fathers, which, with the burial-place, should be cared for and kept from encroachment forever.

† In August, 1737, at the first society's meeting of which there is any record, it was voted to hold meetings at private houses on the Sabbath, one-half the time at Town Hill, the other half one Sabbath at Jonah Richards', the other at Jonathan Merrill's, these places to be changed at each society's meeting.

‡ Rev. Cyrus Yale says, in his centennial sermon, that the pews in the galleries were not made until the house had been used about thirty years; so the Indian pew was an isolated sitting for that length of time.

into the audience-room. There were three aisles, or alleys then called,—one in the centre and one each side, with a row of narrow pews next the wall. There were also doors,—one on the east and one on the west sides,—which led by short passages into the side-aisles. The high pulpit with its overhanging sounding-board fronted the south door; on the right of the pulpit was the pew for the minister's family, on the left the widows' pew, while the deacons sat just under the droppings of the gospel on the left of the centre aisle. Two immense square front pews, one on each side of the broad aisle, were occupied by prominent citizens and their families, while the rest of the congregation were accommodated in pews of various size and shapes. Two inclosed pews near the centre of the house, which could be reached only by narrow passages from the side-aisles, were irreverently called "eel-pots." The galleries were on the east, west, and south sides, the latter being the singers' gallery, and the stairs were in the southeast and southwest corners of the audience-room.

There was not lacking instrumental music to accompany the singing, for Isaac Kellogg, presumably the chorister, was given "permission to appoint Seth Smith to tune the psalm (probably with a pitch-pipe) when he playeth." The town had previously voted "that we will sing Dr. Watts' psalms on the Lord's day, and that David Ensign read the psalm in time of Deacon Martyn Smith's absence." Books being scarce, the deacon read two lines of the psalm, the choir singing it after him, and so on through all the stanzas. In 1751 appears the first record of a committee to seat the meeting-house, which seems to have been very precious in the eyes of the community, who did not intend that it should be destroyed by fire if precautionary measures could avert that catastrophe. An "inspector of stoves" was appointed among the public functionaries,—perhaps it should be explained that his duties were confined to foot-stoves,—and the following resolution was passed in town-meeting:

"If any person presume to leave any stove in the meeting-house with fire in it, or empty it within twenty feet of the meeting-house, he (or she) shall forfeit the stove to the inspector and pay a fine of 10 shillings."

Strict and punctual attendance on public worship was insisted on, and a fine rigorously enforced upon all delinquents. Some persons, however, appear to have produced sufficient excuse for absence, and the authorities occasionally passed a vote like the following:

"To abate Sam Douglass' fine for not attending publick worship on Lord's day."

In 1761 liberty was granted "any inhabitant to set up a Sabbath-day house not nearer to the meeting-house than ten rods," and a rough but comfortable building containing two rooms was soon erected by the joint contributions of several families who came from a distance, and needed a warm place to thaw feet and fingers after a long ride, and to spend the intermission between services. One room was arranged with conveniences for cooking; here lunch was eaten, tea made, children cared for, and a decorous sort of Sunday picnic held.* In 1762 one hundred pounds were expended on the meeting-house, and soon after fifty pounds more, and it was "voted to do something to secure the meeting-house from racking." The first appropriation for "colouring" the house was made in 1784, and persons who worshiped there some sixty years ago remember the prevailing interior color to have been green, and the outer a "brindle brown."

During the one hundred and twenty years from the ordination of the first minister to the disbanding of the church on Town Hill, it had but four settled pastors; these were Rev. Jonathan Marsh, from 1739 until his death, in July, 1794; Rev. Edward D. Griffin, DD., from June, 1795, to August, 1801, when, on account of failing health, he resigned the pastorate; Rev. Amasa Jerome, from August, 1802, to December, 1813, when he also resigned, his health being unequal to the labor of the parish, but continued to reside in New Hartford until his death, in 1832, at the age of fifty-seven. Mr. Jerome lived on the place now known as "Esperanza," the summer home of the authoress, Mrs. Julie P. Smith.

The fourth pastor was Rev. Cyrus Yale, who was settled over the church in October, 1814, and remained until December, 1834, when he resigned and preached in Ware, Mass., until 1837, when he was recalled to the scenes of his early labors, and died in office in May, 1854. During the interim of Mr. Yale's ministry the pulpit was supplied by different individuals, one by the name of Case remaining with the church a year. Mr. Yale, or "Father Yale," as he was often called, was a tall, portly man, of much dignity of manner and suavity of address. He lived in the house now occupied as a summer residence by his children, Cyrus Yale, of New York, and Mrs. H. Pitkin and Mrs. E. R. Beadle, of Philadelphia.

There is extant no sketch or memorial of the first minister, whose term of service extended over more than half a century, and the value of whose lifetime influence on the pioneer settlers of this town can never be measured. With gleaning here and there a scattered fragment, the following brief sketch has been woven together, that the fast-fading memory of a good and useful man may not be wholly lost.

Rev. Jonathan Marsh was the son of Rev. Jonathan Marsh, long the honored pastor of the church at Windsor, and of Margaret Whiting, his wife, who came of an eminent colonial family. He was born at Windsor, 1714. He graduated at Yale College in 1735. After completing his theological studies he accepted the call to New Hartford, where he was ordained, December, 1739, where he spent his life, and where he died, in 1794, aged eighty years. He was twice married, first to Elizabeth Sheldon, of Hartford, Feb. 26, 1740–41, who died, after bearing him six children, May 20, 1749. On May 27, 1751, he married Mariana Keith, a young widow with two daughters, sister of John Lawrence, treasurer of the colony, a lady of many accomplishments, whose friends opposed her burying her graces in the wilderness of New Hartford. This wife, who survived her husband, was always called "Madame Marsh" by his parishioners; she also bore him six children. From MSS. of Mr. Marsh, the inference is that he was of an affectionate nature, fond of home, and charitable towards all men. The stricter tenets of the Calvinistic theology were too harsh for his gentle soul, and that may be the reason why he mingled no more freely with his ministerial brethren in those times of religious controversy between old and new divinity. The records of Hartford North Consociation during the fifty-five years of his ministry show that he never attended any meetings of that body. The following pen-portrait of him is from Rev. Frederic Marsh's recollections:

* Before the old church was taken down there were no less than three of these structures adjacent to it, one of which was moved to the North cross-road, on Town Hill, and is occupied as a dwelling-house by Hiram Harris, having been renovated and somewhat enlarged by its present owner. A chimney was never built in the old church, but a few years before it was removed two box-stoves were put in to warm the congregation, and the pipes were conducted out of doors in an improvised fashion.

"Mr. Marsh was above the medium height and size of men, well proportioned, grave and venerable in appearance, of a social turn of mind, and accustomed to wear a large wig. He was settled on the half-way* plan; was Arminian in his theological views. In his preaching, as I remember him when about fourteen years old, was not animated, and, as it seemed to me, never earnest and rousing. I remember to have been seriously affected on seeing and hearing him address the people on funeral occasions."

Of Mr. Marsh's twelve children, seven daughters and five sons, all but one, Jonathan, lived to attain maturity. The daughters all married, only one of whom, Elizabeth, wife of Jerijah Merrill, settled permanently in New Hartford. The oldest son, Joseph Whiting Marsh, was the first graduate of Yale College from New Hartford. He died at the West Indies, aged twenty-one. Daniel settled in New Hartford; Isaac, at Tyringham, Mass. It is not known to the writer where John Lawrence, the youngest son, located. So far as can be ascertained, none of Mr. Marsh's descendants are now living in New Hartford. In 1761 Mr. Marsh's note-book gives the number of church-members as 85, and in 1793 chronicles that 17 were admitted to the church and 52 baptized.

At the commencement of Dr. Griffin's ministry, in 1795, there were 92 members of the church, and in the powerful revivals which attended his earnest labors there were 153 additions to the number. Under the pastorates of Mr. Jerome and Mr. Yale there were also, from time to time, seasons of special religious interest; under the latter, large additions to the membership of the church.

As the facilities for manufacturing began to be developed along the Tunxis, the dwellers in the northern part of the town became more numerous, and felt the need of a place of worship nearer home than the old meeting-house on the hill, and in December, 1828, a colony of 62 members from the mother-church organized the North Congregational Church of New Hartford. The ground for the new building was given by Capt. Sylvester Seymour, and the present brick church was built the same year. This was a serious blow to the society on the hill, but, taking heart from Rev. Mr. Yale's encouragement, they laid plans for a new house of worship, which resulted, in 1829, in the building of the church now standing on Town Hill.

The old meeting-house was, at the expense of the town, moved farther back on the green, repaired, and used as a town-house for the transaction of public business until November, 1848, when it was voted in town-meeting to sell it and put the avails in the treasury. It was purchased for fifty dollars by John C. Smith and Maj. Sanford Brown. Its massive white-oak timbers, seasoned by the suns and storms of more than a hundred years, were used in the building of looms for the Greenwoods' cotton-mill; and it is said that portions of its frame-work are still in existence among the outbuildings appertaining to the late residence of Maj. Sanford Brown.

Much dissatisfaction with the location of the new Town Hill church was felt by the members resident at South End, who naturally wished to have it placed midway between the two settlements, waiving all attachment for the old site. This discontent gradually increased until, in 1848, the South Congregational Church of New Hartford was organized and the present church edifice built at Nepaug.

A second time depleted in numbers and strength, the old church organization struggled on until the death of Mr. Yale, in 1854, when public worship was suspended, and it disbanded in October, 1859, after an existence of one hundred and twenty-one years.

The deacons of this church were Messrs. Martyn Smith, Noah Kellogg, Joseph Merrill, Aaron Austin, Stephen Pitkin, John Brown, John Marsh, Elijah Goodwin, George Adams, James D. Thorp, James Merrill.

Religious services have been occasionally held in the church since that time. In 1860, Messrs. Cyrus and Richard Yale, sons of the former pastor, purchased the building from the surviving members of the old ecclesiastical society, and regard it as a filial duty to keep it in repair,—a fitting monument to their father's faithful and earnest life-work in New Hartford.

THE NORTH CHURCH, organized in 1828 with sixty-two members, has now, in 1881, a membership of one hundred and eighty. The fluctuations of a manufacturing population prevent many who are regular attendants on public worship from joining themselves to any religious organization, hence, in part, the disproportion of membership to attendance in all the churches of New Hartford village. This church has had ten settled pastors, viz.: Revs. Burr Baldwin, 1829–33; Wyllis Lord, D.D., 1834–38; J. Woodbridge, D.D., 1839–42; Alexander Leadbetter, 1844–49; J. A. Saxton, 1850–52; F. A. Spencer, 1853–63; J. B. Cleaveland, 1863–67; Alpheus Winter, 1868–69; S. S. Martyn, 1870–74; F. H. Adams, 1875, present pastor.

At different times since the building of the church, repairs and renovations have been made at an expenditure, in all, of about three thousand dollars. It is now a substantial brick building, with bell-tower, in thorough order, capable of seating four hundred persons. Five deacons have been ordained, as follows: John Brown, 1829; Charles B. Richards, 1833; Roger H. Mills, 1849; Jason C. Keach, 1849; Howell W. Brown, 1859. The semi-centennial was celebrated Dec. 25, 1878, by a memorial sermon by the pastor, Rev. F. H. Adams, addresses, music, and a collation in the portion of the adjoining building known as Academy Hall, now handsomely fitted up by the ladies of the society as lecture-room and church parlors, for religious, social, and literary gathering.

THE SOUTH CHURCH,

organized in 1848 with fifty-six members, has now on its rolls a membership of one hundred and twenty-one. It has been served by the following pastors: Revs. J. C. Houghton, 1851–54; Edwin Hall, Jr., 1854–69; J. Woodruff, 1870–71; Stephen A. Loper, 1872–74; Merrick Knight, 1875–79; Richard Scoles, April 21, 1880. The church edifice is of wood, with a tower and bell. It has a basement containing a lecture-room, where town-meetings have been held on alternate years. During the year 1880 about six hundred dollars were expended on the building, which is now in thorough repair. It will seat about two hundred and fifty persons. The deacons of this church have been Messrs. Selah Woodruff, George Adams, Edmund Watson, Andrew Clark, and James Lyman.

BAPTIST AND METHODIST.

The Baptists organized in the southwestern part of the town, and built the church in Bakerville as early as 1830. It was used by them, with the interior in a rough state, until about 1835, when, with the assistance of the Baker brothers, Methodists, and members of the Watson family, Congregationalists, it was neatly finished and called a union church, being open to religious services by clergymen of all denominations. Some years after, Mr. Anthony Baker repaired and thoroughly renovated it at his own expense, since which time services have been held with more or less regularity by ministers of the Methodist Conference.

THE NEW HARTFORD (NORTH) BAPTIST CHURCH

was organized in August, 1859, by twenty-two members resident in this town, formerly belonging to the Pleasant Valley Church. Until 1862 meetings were held on the Sabbath in the Greenwoods District school-house, but, objections having been made to that arrangement by persons in the district, the society soon after purchased the Baptist meeting-house in Pleasant Valley (then unused), brought it in sections to New Hartford, and rebuilt it on the hill overlooking the village, on the east bank of the river. This was done by the efficient aid of the late Rev. William Dennison, Baptist State missionary, himself a practical builder. The house was dedicated Jan. 30, 1867. It is pleasantly furnished in the interior, and has a tower and a bell. The church now numbers about forty members. Of the original membership, one, B. G. Loomis, alone remains; nine have been dismissed to other churches, and twelve are dead. The pastors have been Revs. S. S. Carter, installed August, 1859; N. R. Bennett, August, 1861; C. N. Nichols, August, 1862; L. H. Wakeman, January, 1867; Joseph Burnett, December, 1869; Ralph H. Bowles, May, 1878.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

In November, 1849, Rev. J. H. Betts was sent by Bishop Brownell to take charge of a Protestant Episcopal mission in Pine Meadow. For lack of a suitable place of meeting, services were not held on the Sabbath until June 9, 1850, after which time they were regularly held in Chapin's Hall until the completion of the church. St. John's parish was organized Nov. 20, 1850. The corner-stone of a house of worship was laid the following day, and the finished edifice consecrated as St. John's church, by Bishop Brownell, June 4, 1851. This church, which stood at the southern extremity of Church Street, was destroyed by fire Dec. 23, 1859, and with it a valuable pipe-organ, the gift of Herman Chapin, Esq. Services were again held in Chapin's Hall until the present church, which fronts the triangular park at the northern end of Church Street, was completed. Divine service was first held in the new edifice Christmas Eve, 1861. The church is of wood, in the Gothic style of architecture, with a bell-tower and spire; the interior is neatly and tastefully furnished. The rectors of the church have been Revs. John H. Betts, from Easter, 1851, to July, 1857; Enoch Huntington, from April, 1858, to May, 1860; Myron A. Johnson, from November, 1861, to October, 1862; T. S. Judd, from November, 1862, to March, 1863; De Lancy G. Rice, from May, 1863, to April, 1865; J. C. Heald, from 1866 to July, 1868; John H. Betts, recalled April, 1869, to May, 1880; Theodore Porter, ordained December, 1880, now pastor of the church.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

The Roman Catholic form of worship was first observed in New Hartford in March, 1849, when Rev. Luke Daly, of New Britain, was sent by the bishop of this diocese to hold services among the members of that communion. For a period of two years, Rev. Father Daly came once in three months to celebrate mass, after which time he was succeeded by Rev.

Thomas Quinn, Rev. Fathers Gilleck, Gorman, and Thomas Hendrickon, pastors at Winsted.

The church was then placed under the care of the resident priest at Collinsville, since which time it has been attended by Revs. P. J. O'Dwyer, John Fagan, Lawrence Walsh, and the present pastor, Rev. Bernard O'R. Sheridan, who has presided over the parish since 1870, with the following assistants: Revs. Michael O'Brien, John Russell, John Creadon, Thomas Mulvany, and the present associate, Rev. Luke Fitzsimmons.

The places of meeting were first at private houses, then at the brick machine-shop and Chapin's Hall, Pine Meadow, and then in the upper village, at the school-house now occupied by Miss Chloe Lankton, and at Academy Hall. The "Church of the Immaculate Conception," at the North village, was commenced in 1868, during the pastorate of Rev. John Fagan, and finished during the pastorate of Rev. Lawrence Walsh. It is the largest church edifice in town. There has never been a priest resident in New Hartford, but mass is celebrated every Sunday morning by one of the reverend fathers from Collinsville. The Roman Catholic population in town is estimated by the present pastor at one thousand souls.

SCHOOLS.

The school-house followed closely upon the meeting-house. In December, 1753, it was voted in town-meeting to build a school-house twenty-five feet long, sixteen feet wide, and seven and a half feet between joints, to be set within twenty rods of the meeting-house. A second vote of the same meeting provided for two school-houses,—one at the south part of the town,—which vote was afterwards revoked. The school-house on Town Hill was not completed until 1756, and the one at the south part of the town was delayed some years longer. It stood about a half-mile southwest of Judge Wait Garrett's present residence.

Previous to this time appropriation had been made year by year for "scooling" the children in New Hartford; at one time twenty-four pounds were voted "to hire a master." The schools were taught in different private houses designated by a committee appointed for the purpose.

Those who smile at the peculiar spelling of the old records, and the primitive manner of keeping account-books, should consider the limited advantages of the schools in those early days, and admire rather than wonder.

An old citizen, whose memory goes back to the beginning of the present century, says there were no arithmetics introduced into the schools of New Hartford until 1812, when Harold Wyllys came from Hartford to teach a grammar school on the Moody place, now owned by the heirs of Timothy Buckley, where the town poor are kept. Slates and blackboards were unknown; the multiplication-table was orally drilled into the children, who were taught to make figures in their copy-books; Dillsworth's speller, Dwight's geography, the "Columbian Orator," and the "New England Primer" were the text-books. The school-houses were warmed (?) by open fireplaces, supplied with wood furnished by the parents of the children in proportion to the number sent. The wages of male teachers averaged not more than ten dollars a month, and those of female teachers from three to six dollars per month, besides board, which was furnished by the parents, like the wood, in proportion to the number of children, the teacher going from house to house, or, as it was commonly phrased, "boarded around." The female teachers also gave instruction in needle-work.

In 1770 the town was divided into five school districts,—two at South End, and one each at North End, West Hill, and Town Hill. Mr. Goodwin's letter of 1813, before mentioned, says, "There are nine district schools, and for several seasons past there has been a school where the higher branches of literature have been taught," probably referring to Mr. Wyllys' school at the Moody place. In this connection another quotation from Mr. Goodwin's letter may be in order: "There are at present but two public libraries, containing from one hundred to one hundred and fifty volumes each." In the annual report of the Connecticut Board of Education for 1868 is published a letter from Prof. William C. Fowler, of Durham, from which the following is a short extract:

> "In reply to your favor, in which you request me to furnish some information concerning the town and village libraries, which in various parts of the State were the educators of our fathers, I have to say . . . these libraries are now numbered with the things that were, but for fifty or a hundred years they were a living power in the commonwealth, as we may still learn in the fast-fading light of tradition. Books were for a long time scarce in Connecticut, as elsewhere in New England, except in the libraries of some of the eminent clergymen. . . .
> "These book companies were voluntary associations of persons in the several towns who were desirous of establishing a library. A number of the intelligent men of the town would meet together, appoint a committee of four or five persons and a clerk, who was often the library-keeper. Each member contributed a certain sum, say twenty shillings, as an entrance fee, and an annual tax, say one shilling. The books were drawn out by the members, or by some of their families, to be returned in a fortnight or at some longer time. The question what books should be purchased was considered to be a very important one. . . . 'The Universal History,' Josephus' 'History of the Jews,' Watts' works, some of the poetical works of Milton, Pope, Thomson, Goldsmith, the sermons of some of the ablest English divines, some of the works of President Edwards, 'The Spectator,' 'The Vicar of Wakefield,' and many others, became familiarly known to more or less readers in many towns. The good influence of these libraries upon every class of the population, from the highest to the lowest, cannot be measured."

There are now three public libraries in town, largely composed of works of fiction, from which books may be drawn on yearly subscription or by payment of a small fee at each drawing. The Pine Meadow Library Association has a collection of some six hundred volumes, the Greenwoods Company Library has four hundred and fifty volumes in constant circulation, and the Roman Catholic society also sustains a small but well-selected library.

There are in New Hartford at the present time no schools of a higher grade than district school, where are taught the ordinary English branches. There have been efforts from time to time among the citizens to support academies and private schools, but such enterprises have never been for any length of time successful. In 1837 a number of gentlemen in the North village interested in the education of youth erected at private expense the building adjoining the Congregational church, long known as the "Academy," and sustained for a number of years a most excellent select school therein. The second floor of the building was used by the Congregational society for religious meetings, and was also leased for entertainments and town-meetings, hence the name Academy Hall. Subsequently the North End School District enlarged the building one-half, the Academy association taking the entire upper half, or hall, and the district taking the two school-rooms on the first floor. The gentlemen who composed the Academy association are nearly all dead, and the hall has come, partly by gifts of shares, partly by tacit consent, into the custody of the Congregational society.

An academy once sustained at Nepaug was years ago converted into a dwelling-house, and one built by subscription at Bakerville about 1835 is now used for a district school.

Efforts, so far unsuccessful, have been made to secure the establishment of a good high school, which is greatly needed in the town.

There are now nine school districts in New Hartford, designated as follows, with the number of pupils in attendance on each in 1880: North End (2 teachers), 105; Pine Meadow (2 teachers), 174; Greenwoods (4 teachers), 375; West Hill, 23; Southeast, 20; Bakerville, 26; Henderson, 26; Town Hill, 27; Merrill or Nepaug, 32. The second school-house on Town Hill was built in 1785. The first school-house at North End village stood about ten rods above the house now occupied by H. H. Stone. The second was the house formerly owned by old Mrs. Simons. In 1815 this was too small to accommodate the growing district. It was therefore sold, and the house now occupied by Miss Chloe Lankton* was built and used for a school-house until the rooms under Academy Hall were fitted up for the purpose.

The Greenwoods District school-house was built about 1850. A few years ago it was raised and otherwise enlarged and improved, making it the best school building in the town.

HIGHWAYS.

The home-lots for the first settlers of New Hartford were laid out on the east and west sides of a highway sixteen rods wide and three miles in length, running north from the foot of Yellow Mountain over Town Hill. Tradition relates that when Rev. Jonathan Marsh's house was raised, about 1740, he told his parishioners before they had anything to eat or drink they must cut down the white birches in this highway, so that he could see Mr. Loomis' house.† This first highway has been encroached upon from time to time, and its former generous width is constantly narrowing. Rev. Mr. Marsh's house stood on the line of the original highway, a little to the south and in the rear of Daniel Royce's present residence. About the year 1800 the town took action in the matter of highway encroachments, and gave those who had robbed the public the choice of paying for the land or removing their fences; but for some reason the money was never all collected, nor is there a probability that many fences were removed.

The necessities of the town demanded cross-highways, of which there were at first three, eight rods wide, running from Town Hill towards East Mountain. Two of these still remain,—the one running east from Town Hill Street, near the meeting-house and burial-place (which, continued, was the South country road), the other, farther north, intersecting the Steele road near the residence of Grove S. Marsh. The third came into Town Hill Street nearly opposite the residence of the late Isaac P. Steele, and was of great convenience to the farmers going to and from their lands at East Mountain.

In September and October, 1734, a survey was made of two country roads in New Hartford. The South road ran from Town Hill south-southeast until it intersected "the path leading to Litchfield," near the southeastern boundary of the town. The North road ran towards the river, and then mainly followed its course to the Simsbury boundary; the road, "so far north from the meeting-house as there are any inhabitants," was made passable in 1742.‡

The present line of highway from Town Hill to Spruce Brook was purchased of Pelatiah Allyn and Sarah (Moody) Allyn, his wife, in 1757. It runs through what was once the Moody farm. This road was again altered, within the memory of old inhabitants, from the house of H. H. Stone. It formerly described a southerly curve, avoiding the steep hill above the brook. In 1738 application was made to the County Court for a convenient country road from the town of Simsbury to the two country roads in New Hartford, which the appointment of a surveyor to keep it in order in 1742 indicates was granted. In 1744 the town "voted to view to see if we can have a road at the south end of Wongsunkmaug§ pond, to come

* Miss Lankton has been an invalid for nearly fifty years. A sketch of her life, written by Miss Harriet Atwell, of Pleasant Valley, has been widely read, and brings her correspondence and visitors from all over the country.

† This stood where the present Loomis house now stands on Town Hill, fast crumbling to decay, its stone chimney rising like a tower among the ruins. The "L" portion of this house, built by the pioneer Israel Loomis, is said to be the first building ever erected on Town Hill.

‡ This was probably as far as the hotel corner at the North village, where settled Deacon Martyn Smith. Matthew Gillet also lived in this part of the town: his house stood west of Mrs. Howard P. Marsh's house, on a highway now discontinued.

§ Wonksunkmunk, as the spelling varies, was the Indian name for West Hill pond, long known as Shepherd's pond, from Daniel Shepherd, the first settler on its banks in 1748, when he sold his Town Hill property and removed thither.

into the Town Hill road in that highway on the north side of Israel Loomis' lot." There is on record no report of this committee, but the highway "north of Israel Loomis' lot" was sold in 1756, and the one which comes into Town Hill road south of Mrs. Julie P. Smith's farm was purchased in its stead. An old resident remembers that this was formerly the only way for the "West Hill folks to come to meeting."

The year 1756 shows quite a highway record. Votes were passed to clear a road from the river to Jonathan Merrill's house (now Mr. Abram Chidsey's), also one in the Pine Meadow, and a road to Barkhamsted, the latter with the proviso, "if they can do it with pooting the town of New Hartford to but a little caust." This road was made the following year from "the east side of the river, by Deacon Martyn Smith's, to the highway in Barkhamsted, near the dwelling-house of Pelatiah Allyn." In 1758 highways were opened to Torrington and Harwinton, and also a highway to Kellogg's mill, on the Nepash, South End.

In May, 1758, the General Assembly having been advised of the great need of such action, appointed a committee to examine the country and report on a new and better road or way through Simsbury, New Hartford, Norfolk, and Canaan, on towards Albany. In May, 1759, a new line of road from the court-house in Hartford to Col. Whitney's, in Canaan, was reported. The result of this report was that the committee were directed "to lay out and make plain and certain the said new country road from the mansion-house of Samuel Humphrey, in Simsbury, to Col. David Whitney's, in Canaan." In May, 1760, the survey having been made, the road was ordered cleared and made passable for traveling before Nov. 20, 1761, by the proprietors of the towns through which it ran. This rugged thoroughfare, known as the "old North country road," entered the town at the Simsbury line, crossed the river at "Satan's Kingdom," ran through Pine Meadow and North End, about on the line of the present road, and at the corner near the hotel it ran westerly up the steep hill, past the residence of William Cook, and crossed the Greenwoods turnpike a little west of the old toll-gate, then on over Wallen's Hill, through Winchester, Colebrook, Norfolk, and Canaan, to Albany. Until 1800 this road was the great thoroughfare of the colony in the direction of Albany. Over it passed the troops and munitions of war of the Continental army, and the captured detachments of Burgoyne's soldiers, who encamped at New Hartford, near Charles Maxfield's new residence. The first mail from Hartford to Albany is said to have been carried over this road, on horseback, by Jacob Balcom, of Winchester.

The first turnpike through New Hartford ran "from the dwelling-house of Capt. Dudley Case (who kept tavern where Mrs. Olive Pike now lives) to the Massachusetts line, on the east side of the river," and was called the Farmington River turnpike. The company was incorporated May, 1780, and their first meeting was held at "the house of Aaron Richards, innholder in New Hartford," he being a member of the corporation. The act of incorporation authorizes a toll-gate within fifty rods southward of the house of Aaron Richards,* and specifies the rates of toll, from which were exempted "persons traveling on the Lord's day, and other public days, to attend public worship, society-, town-, and freemen's-meeting, funerals, people in town attending to farm business, also going to mill with horse, and militia going to attend reviews and exercises."

The town records show that in 1771–72, by a memorial to the General Assembly, the town vigorously opposed the report of a committee who had been appointed to view the land on the east side of the river with reference to a highway between New Hartford and Colebrook, and the probabilities are that this turnpike was the final outcome of the matter agitated at that time.

The Talcott Mountain Turnpike Company was incorporated in 1798, the road to run "from the west line of the city of Hartford to the house of Eldad Shepherd, in New Hartford." This was the hotel at North End, purchased of Seth Smith's heirs about this time. The most ancient part of this hotel, as it now stands, was built by Deacon Martyn Smith, who lived here at an early period in the history of the town. In 1799 the Greenwoods turnpike, a continuation of the same route, was opened from Eldad Shepherd's house, in New Hartford, to Sheffield, Mass., by a new route which followed, as far as practicable, the courses of the streams and avoided the high hills. Starting from the hotel, it diverged from the present road near the scythe-shop, and passed through the swamp near the old Jopp house, some rods to the east of the present thoroughfare.

In May, 1801, the Torrington Turnpike Company was incorporated, and the first meeting was held at the house of Moses Kellogg, innholder of New Hartford, in July of that year. This road passed through the villages of Bakerville and New Hartford Centre, now Nepaug, and followed, for the most part, the line of the old Torrington country road. It was generally called by New Hartford residents the Litchfield road, because used in going to and from the county-seat. Moses Kellogg, and afterwards his son, Col. Norman Kellogg, were for many years keepers of the tavern at the south part of the town, and the building so long kept by them as a public-house is still in good repair, and occupied by their descendants as a dwelling.

About a mile west of Bakerville, on the Torrington road, Levi Watson, son of Cyprian Watson, a pioneer settler of the town, kept tavern in the old colonial days. Two of his sons did brave service in the Revolutionary struggle, and one of his descendants relates that during the years of the war his house was often so filled with officers and soldiers traveling to and fro on duty that it was impossible to give them other accommodations than the floors, where they were glad to stretch their wearied limbs for a night's repose.

* Now known as the Miles Richards place, on the corner of Barkhamsted and Richards' roads.

The highway from the North village to South End, known as the "Steele road," was opened about 1808. The "New road," from the forks of the West Hill and Town Hill roads to the stone grist-mill at Stub Hollow, was laid out by county commissioners in 1830, costing the town a tax of five cents on a dollar. In 1848 the road was opened from the highway, past the Greenwoods Company's saw-mill and grist-mill, and in 1850 that running from Marquis Richards' place to Pine Meadow, known as "Black Bridge road." In 1853 it was voted to build a road through "Satan's Kingdom," one-half to be at the expense of individuals. In 1870 the road was opened from the bridge at the lower end of North village to the Steele road, coming out near the residence of E. R. Carter, and in 1871 the road over the hill, past the house of Henry M. Gates. In 1871 a sidewalk was made between North village and Pine Meadow.

In 1878 a new road was made to Barkhamsted town line, west of the river, the old one being dangerous by proximity to the Connecticut Western Railway track.

Keeping the highways in order has always been a great expense to New Hartford on account of the roughness of the country. In 1806 scrapers were first purchased by the town for use on the highways, and in October, 1843, keeping the roads in repair was first let out to the lowest bidder for five years. Previous to that time the town was divided into districts, and surveyors appointed for each district, who were responsible for the actual labor performed, or its equivalent in money, of each citizen's road-tax.

have also been a great item of expense to New Hartford. The first mention of any bridge in the town records is a vote passed in 1756 to build a bridge across the Nepash near Samuel Douglass' (southeast part of town). There is on file at the State Library a memorial from citizens of New Hartford, dated May, 1763, presented by Capt. Isaac Kellogg, praying for a lottery to assist them in building a bridge across the "Great River," in said town. This memorial sets forth that this river is a swift stream, about twelve rods wide, with a very rocky bottom, that it is at times impossible to cross this river at the place where the new road has recently been laid out at the expense of the colony, and that, as the traveling yearly increases on said road, persons have been from time to time drowned in attempting to cross for want of a bridge. The memorial also states that the petitioners are a poor people, very unable to pay their public taxes, that they have recently borne half the expense of erecting a bridge across the river at Suffrage, in Simsbury, and pray for a lottery to raise one hundred and twenty pounds to build the desired bridge. This was negatived by the Assembly, but another petition praying for a land-tax for the same purpose was granted, and the bridge was built, the first across the Farmington in the town. This bridge, and another built by the aid of a lottery in 1778, were probably carried away by freshets, and for a time there was a ferry at the "Kingdom" crossing. In 1784 the town applied to the General Assembly for aid in building a third bridge, and in 1796 it was substantially built with stone piers, but not until the matter had been considered of opening a road to Suffrage, on the west side of the river, and an effort made to turn over to the Talcott Mountain Turnpike Company the building of the bridge. In 1799 this bridge was repaired. An old citizen, Mr. Ashbel Marsh, remembers that his father carted timbers for a new bridge built in 1803–4, and the town voted in 1812 to repair the hard-worn structure and give it a new top and cover of plank. In 1832 another was built, and in 1856 the present one, which, repaired in 1880, has thus far withstood the destructive elements. The first bridge across the Farmington at the North village was built in 1786, the second in 1799, the third in 1810, and the fourth in 1823. A double-track bridge was built in 1850, to which a footwalk was added in 1871. The present riveted iron bridge, with a track twenty feet wide, and a footwalk six feet in width, was put up in 1878, at a cost to the town of ten thousand dollars. The Farmington was bridged at a third place when the highway was opened from Pine Meadow to the Marquis Richards place, in 1850. The first bridge did service until 1873, when the one was built which is yet in substantial order.

In 1783 five bridges were built in the town, four across the Nepash, which are not located in the records, and one across Spruce Brook near its outlet (between North village and Pine Meadow). This is the first mention of a bridge at this place. In 1802 two bridges were built across the Nepash, "one on the turnpike at the southeast part of the town, near a grist-mill formerly owned by Zebulon Merrill, the other on the turnpike in the east part of the town, near Uriah Edgecomb's."

In the spring freshet of 1866 much damage was done to the bridges in town, the one between North Village and Pine Meadow being carried away.

The flood of December, 1878, unequaled on the Farmington for forty years, carried before it the Canal railroad-bridge, piers, abutments, and spans, the temporary structure and trestle at North village, where work had commenced preparatory to building the new iron bridge, and the bridge over the East Branch, besides other lesser damages. It was only by the continued exertions of a large force of workmen, who were on guard one whole night, that the Greenwoods Company's dam was kept from giving way, the road along the side of the pond being four feet under water, and the top of the abutments nearly reached by the flood.

RAILROADS.

In 1870 the Collinsville branch of the Canal Railroad was extended as far as Pine Meadow, a temporary depot being fitted up near the entrance to the dugway, at the upper end of that village. In 1877 the road was again extended as far as the Greenwoods Company's mills, and commodious brick passenger- and freight-depots built on the east side of the river a little below the factory village. The Farmington was first crossed on a trestle-work, which gave place to a handsome iron bridge, carried away by the flood of 1878. A temporary trestle was again put up, and used until the present fine iron bridge was completed in 1879. The old station-house in Pine Meadow has been moved away, and a brick depot built at the south end of Church Street. The Connecticut Western Railway, which passes through the villages of New Hartford and Pine Meadow, was built in 1871, and the first engine passed over the road December 21st of that year.* The upper depot is located near the foot of Cemetery Hill, where the track crosses the Town Hill road, with freight-depots, coal-sheds, and water-tank farther south. The lower depot is opposite the residence of C. W. Gilman, in Pine Meadow. The track of this road runs on an elevated embankment above the highway between the two villages, entering the upper on a substantial wooden trestle some thirty feet in height. The Connecticut Western Railway has an iron bridge across the Farmington at "Satan's Kingdom" crossing, and the appearance of the gorge has been materially changed by tunneling for the road-beds of the two lines (Canal and Connecticut Western), one on each side of the stream.

TOWN-HALL.

After the removal of the old town-house on the hill, in 1848, the voters of the town were without a home on town-meeting days. They met one-half the time at the basement of the church at Nepaug, and the other half sometimes in the school-house, sometimes at Academy Hall, at North village. The "lock-up" of the town was a tumble-down, mouldy old building, formerly used by Wilson B. Spring as a carriage-shop, which stood just west of the Connecticut Western Railroad track, on the Town Hill road, an eyesore to the public, torn down the present year (1881).

From time to time the subject of building a town-hall was agitated, but every project had opponents, as was natural in a town where there are several little villages, with the principal business and manufacturing interests in one corner, instead of at a common centre. In 1872 it was voted in town-meeting to build, buy, or hire a suitable building or rooms for a lock-up and court-room for the trial of criminals and other cases before a justice of the peace, to be located in the North village. The site of the present building (a little above the hotel corner, on the east side of the Greenwoods turnpike) was purchased, and the substantial foundation laid, when, in June, 1873, other counsels prevailed, and the selectmen were instructed to sell the building lot and foundations, with the brick and building materials already purchased. The consequence was that the cellar and building materials lay exposed on the main street of the village for more than two years, until, in October, 1875, a vote was barely carried to instruct the selectmen to build a town-hall at a cost not to exceed ten thousand dollars. The present building, one of the chief ornaments of the town, was immediately erected on the foundations laid three years before. The building is of brick, with granite foundations and brownstone cappings and trimmings, forty feet front by seventy feet deep, two stories and a basement, with gables and a clock-tower. The basement-floor has a court-room, two cells, and a room now rented for a tailor's work-shop. The first floor has a handsome store in front, entrance-hall, ticket-office, town clerk, and probate offices, with vault, and two offices for rent. The town-hall, fitted up with stage and dressing-rooms, occupies the entire second floor.

The building was dedicated, with a grand centennial celebration, July 4, 1876, when the town records were removed in state to their new depository. A special feature of the occasion was the singing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" by Clara Louisa Kellogg; Judge J. B. Foster and others delivered addresses, and Capt. H. R. Jones read the Declaration of Independence.

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

The town of New Hartford was incorporated by act of the General Court, October, 1738. At the May session of the General Assembly in 1751 an act was passed removing seventeen towns in the northwesterly part of the colony from the counties of Hartford, New Haven, and Fairfield, and constituting them a separate county, to be called the county of Litchfield, with the town of Litchfield as the county-seat. This was a grievous affliction to the inhabitants of New Hartford, who could not become reconciled to being set off from Hartford County, and there is something pathetic in the language of the petitions which year after year they presented to the General Assembly, praying to be released from Litchfield County. That august body continued unmoved by the oft-repeated appeals setting forth the difficulties to the town by reason of the "roughness of the way" to Litchfield, and that, "as trade was mainly in Hartford, when any person went to court, other business could be transacted at the same time," which was no small consideration in those days of poor roads and unbridged streams. Col. Aaron Austin, of New Hartford, was judge of Litchfield County Court for many years—

* The town of New Hartford had just been heavily taxed by liberal subscriptions to the Canal Railway extension when the Connecticut Western was projected, and for that reason did not subscribe to the stock of the latter road, which occasioned much feeling for a time among those interested in the Connecticut Western enterprise, so much so that it was proposed to "go around" New Hartford, until surveyors found that impracticable.

family history says for twenty-five years—previous to his disqualification by age in 1816. The County Court, now a thing of the past, is in some part superseded by the District Court of Litchfield County. The judgeship of this district was held by Jared B. Foster, of New Hartford, from 1874 to 1877.

Col. Aaron Austin was for twenty-three years (1795 to 1818) one of the twelve assistants to the Governor of Connecticut, a body corresponding to the present Senate. Other senators from the town have been Roger H. Mills, in 1848; Henry Jones, in 1861; Edward M. Chapin, in 1872. Roger H. Mills was Secretary of State in 1849, and candidate for Lieutenant-Governor on the first Prohibition ticket put forward in the State. He removed to Beloit, Wis., in 1853, where he died in 1880.

The first justice of the peace in New Hartford was Capt. Isaac Kellogg, appointed by the General Assembly, on petition of the town, in 1745.

The town was first represented in the General Assembly in 1776; the representatives were Capt. Isaac Kellogg and Capt. Matthew Gillet. The town had previously been too poor to send deputies to the General Assembly,—all expenses of such representation being then borne by the towns,—but during the war of the Revolution, when the safety of this and sister-colonies was at stake, patriotism demanded representation in council at any cost.

Previous to 1808, New Hartford belonged to Farmington probate district, from which it was taken at that time and annexed to Simsbury district. Col. Aaron Austin, of New Hartford, was appointed judge of Simsbury probate district in October, 1813, and continued in office until disqualified by age, May, 1816. In 1825 the towns of New Hartford and Barkhamstead were taken from Simsbury district and constituted the probate district of New Hartford. Capt. Isaac Kellogg* was appointed judge, and served until 1833, when Launcelot Phelps, of Barkhamsted, succeeded him. The same year, 1833, New Hartford was constituted a separate district at its own request. The list of probate judges since 1833 is as follows:

Isaac Kellogg, 1834–35; Tertius Wadsworth, 1835–38; Roger H. Mills, 1838–42; Wait Garrett, 1842–44; Roger H. Mills, 1847–53; Jared B. Foster, 1853–57; Henry Jones, 1857–63; Orrin Goodwin, 1863–66; Fitch W. Burwell, 1866–78; Jason C. Keach, 1878–80; Henry R. Jones took office January, 1881.

Judges Henry Jones and Orrin Goodwin died in office, and F. W. Burwell and Jason C. Keach were disqualified by age before the expiration of their official terms of service.

TOWN CLERKS.

The first proprietors' clerk was John Austin, of Hartford, chosen in 1732, who served a year, when Nathaniel Hooker was chosen, and served from 1733 to 1739. Noah Merrill, of New Hartford, was the first town clerk appointed, but died before taking the oath of office. The proprietors then appointed Matthew Gillett, who served the town faithfully in that capacity for nearly forty years, from April, 1739, until 1778. His successors have been:

Joseph Merrill (2d), 1778–83; James Steel, 1783–86; Joseph Loomis, 1789–1805; Asa Goodwin, 1806–48; J. C. Keach, 1848–81, exclusive of 1854, when the office was held by Dr. Jerry Burwell, and 1855–58, when it was held by Norman B. Merrill.

The military history of New Hartford begins with a vote of the town in 1743 to expend twelve pounds to purchase colors (and a brand). In 1744 twelve shillings were paid to Matthew Gillett for warning a training, and in 1745 it was voted to purchase a town stock of ammunition. In May, 1752, the General Assembly confirmed Mr. Matthew Gillett, who seems to have been a knight of the sword as well as of the pen, captain of the company or train-band in New Hartford, and ordered that he be commissioned accordingly. The town records of this period, punctilious in giving titles, show that Israel Loomis was lieutenant and Thomas Olcott ensign of this company. Military organizations were kept up in New Hartford until the disbanding of the Lafayette Guards, not long since. Great pride was taken in the drill and appearance of these troops on parade- and training-days. A history of these military companies, from Capt. Matthew Gillet's time, would be of great interest to New Hartford readers; at some future time it may be written, but it would be too extended for these pages.

In 1739, New Hartford was designated as one of the towns in which the First Regiment of militia should be located. In 1774 the troops from New Hartford, Simsbury, Hartland, Barkhamsted, and Colebrook constituted the Eighteenth Regiment of militia, of which Abel Merrill, of New Hartford, was commissioned major. In 1820 the New Hartford troops belonged to the Twenty-first Regiment of militia.

The first record pointing to active service by New Hartford troops is a reference to powder taken from the town stock by Israel Loomis at the time of the expedition against "the fort at Lake George," from which it is gathered that a detachment of men under Lieut. Loomis were at the attack on Ticonderoga in 1758. The town records also mention the death of Nathaniel Seymour at Crown Point, Oct. 20, 1760; there were probably others who served at the same time who lived to return.

A detachment of sixteen young men from New Hartford went in the expedition against Havana, under Gen. Lyman, in 1762, only one of whom, Benjamin Merrill, lived to return. The records at the State Department of Capt. John Patterson's (afterwards Roger Enos') company, in which these men served, are incomplete, so that only a portion of the names can be found; these are Michael Merrill,† Eliakim * Great-grandson of the original settler of that name.

† Michael Merrill was the eldest son of Joseph Merrill, a pioneer of the town, who afterwards married the widow of David Chapins. Joseph Merrill gave to another son, born about this time, the name of Michael; he was a physician in New Hartford, familiarly called "Dr. Michael."

Merrill, David Chapins, Zebulon Shepard, Joseph Watson, Nathaniel Wilcox, Gideon Smith, John Miller, Joseph Whiting Marsh.*

This expedition, which reached Havana in the month of August, was fatal to more than two-thirds of the men who composed it, chiefly by reason of sickness incident to the climate at that season. Of a regiment numbering August 10th eight hundred and two men, but thirty-four were reported fit for duty October 2d, and part of those who lived to embark for home died on the voyage or suffered shipwreck.

In May, 1774, after the issue of the Boston Port Bill, and other hostile demonstrations of Great Britain, Governor Trumbull, of Connecticut, in view of the general peril which threatened the colonies, issued a proclamation enjoining a day of fasting and prayer. This was soon followed by an order to all towns to double their quantity of powder, ball, and flints.

At a town-meeting of the inhabitants of New Hartford, held Sept. 5, 1774, it was "voted to purchase two hundred pounds of powder, and flints answerable." Joseph Cowles, Capt. Seth Smith, Eldad Merrill, and Aaron Austin were appointed "a committee of correspondence to open subscription for the poor people of Boston and Charlestown," and spirited resolutions were passed, which were entered in the town records and published in the Connecticut Courant. These resolutions, after declaring that late acts of Parliament "were of dangerous tendency, and strike immediately at the foundation of the civil and religious rights and privileges of all British colonies in North America, and directly contrary to the English constitution," also expressing sympathy with the inhabitants of Boston, "now suffering under the cruel hand of tireny and oppression," and resolving to contribute to their relief, and to concur with and approve all measures adopted by the Congress at Philadelphia, close with the following sentiment:

"Also it is the opinion of this meeting that if any person shall, from any sinister views whatsoever, counteract the foregoing resolves, he shall be treated, not with open violence on his person or propperty, but with all the neglect, disesteem, and contempt which his character deserves and his conduct shall merret."

New Hartford at this trying season contributed her full share to the glorious record of Connecticut, which, out of a population of one hundred and ninety-eight thousand, furnished nearly forty thousand troops and militia for service during the war of the Revolution,—more in number than any other State except Massachusetts. Though the fifth in size of the original thirteen, she furnished more salt beef, pork, and cattle for the army than any sister-State. It was to her that Washington looked for help in the disheartening winter of 1778, when ten thousand soldiers lay naked and hungry at Valley Forge. Nor did the "Provision State" fail him then, but sent her commissary, in the dead of winter, through unbroken forests, to the relief of the suffering army. Capt. Phineas Merrill, of New Hartford, was with Col. Jeremiah Wadsworth, commissary of the State, in this branch of the service, and underwent many hardships while traveling with supplies from Connecticut to the army at different stations.

The following are but a few of the recorded votes of the town during the eight years' struggle:

March, 1777.—"Voted, That we will give ten pounds lawful money to each soldier belonging to New Hartford that shall inlist into the Continental Battalions."

September, 1777.—"Voted, That we will provide clothing for the soldiers that are inlisted and gone into the Continental army that belong to New Hartford."

"Voted, That the committee appointed by the town to make provision for soldiers' families that are gone into the Continental army, agreeable to the law of this State, do make ample provision for said families, and that the town of said New Hartford pay the overplus."

Jan. 7, 1777.—"Voted, That we do except of the articles of confederation and perpetual union between the states of New hampshire, Massachusetts bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia."

The taxes levied at this time, which called for money, were mostly paid in cloth, stockings, beef, pork, corn, and oats.

Beside those who enlisted for a term of service in the Continental army, the militia were repeatedly called out from Litchfield County to the frontier and sea-coast of Connecticut, and to Horse Neck, Peekskill, and other points on the Hudson, during the long and tedious struggle for the possession of the Highlands. Probably not an able-bodied man in town but was called out, some of them many times on this service.

Owing to scanty and incomplete records, it is impossible to ascertain the names of all New Hartford men who served during the Revolutionary struggle. Among the State archives at Hartford is a pay-roll of eighty-two men who marched under Capt. Seth Smith at the Lexington alarm, in April, 1775, and also five mounted men under Lieut. Uriah Seymour. Probably most of these saw other service.

The following are known to have served in the Continental army or State troops for a longer or shorter period:

Col. Aaron Austin, entered the service as a subaltern, and rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Col. Seth Smith, appointed by the General Assembly lieutenant-colonel of one of the battalions raised for the defense of the State, or sea-coast and frontier, in 1777; also again commissioned for the same service in 1778. Col. Smith also marched with troops to Peekskill at the call of Gen. Washington in 1777.

Capt. Abram Pettibone, served on frontier and in New York.

Capt. Phineas Merrill, conductor of commissary teams under Col. Wadsworth.

Lieut. Charles Goodwin.

Capt. Elijah Flower, entered as a private; was imprisoned at Halifax; promoted for good service.

Cyrenius Austin, died in service.

John Garrett, Levi Watson, Isaac Watson, Thomas Watson, Cyprian Merrill, Jesse Steel, Joseph Gilbert, Theodore Gilbert, Aaron Stephens, Elisha Roberts, Ezra Andrus, Cyprian Merrill, Aaron Merrill, John Taylor, Daniel Marsh, Jesse Steel, William Cook, Ashbel Marsh, Caleb Watson.

* The last-named young man was eldest son of Rev. Jonathan Marsh. His connection with this expedition is gathered from manuscript family history.

WAR OF 1812.

During the last war with England, in response to a call for troops for the defense of the State, a company was organized in New Hartford and Barkhamsted, of about equal numbers from each town. They left New Hartford in July, 1813, under orders for New London, where they served until September, 1814. The Sunday before their departure the company, dressed in uniform, attended church on Town Hill, where Rev. Mr. Jerome delivered to them an appropriate address.

The records of this company are lost, and the following facts concerning it were furnished by Judge Wait Garrett, of New Hartford, the sole survivor, now in failing health and memory. The captain of the company was Moses Hayden, of Barkhamsted. The names of New Hartford men, as far as can be ascertained, were:

Lieut. George McNary, Ensign —— Merrill, Riverius Douglass, Ira Seymour, Jesse Markham, Samuel Markham, Schuyler Holcomb, Jesse Steel, Segur Steel, Hezekiah Woodruff, Asa Woodruff, Martin Goodwin.

Maj. John Meigs, of New Hartford, also saw service during this war and the war of the Revolution, though not a resident of New Hartford until 1794.

THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

On Saturday, April 5, 1861, news of the bombardment of Sumter flew over the electric wires, and loyal hearts were stirred to action, as were the Revolutionary fathers at the tidings of Bunker Hill. New Hartford rose to the emergency. The first of her sons to respond to the call for seventy-five thousand volunteers for three months enrolled themselves, with recruits from Winchester and other adjoining towns, as Company B, Second Connecticut Infantry. The officers were Abram G. Kellogg, captain; Charles W. Morse, first lieutenant; Charles Warren, second lieutenant; all of New Hartford. The company left for New Haven April 21st, where they were encamped and drilled until May 27th, when they left for Washington and the scene of action. They were at Fairfax Court-house and Bull Run, but lost no member by death.

April 29th a special town-meeting was held to make provision for the families of soldiers who had or should enlist for the support of the government.

In July, 1861, in response to a second call for men to defend the government, Company C, Eighth Connecticut Infantry, was organized, composed almost wholly of New Hartford men. The officers who first commanded it were Charles W. Nash, captain, Samuel Glasson, first lieutenant, Robert Burnside, second lieutenant. This company, during their three years' service, were in twelve hard-fought battles. At the battle of Antietam they went into action with nearly fifty men, and came out with less than twenty, thirty having been killed, disabled, or taken prisoners.

Aug. 2, 1862, after Litchfield County had determined to raise an entire regiment in response to Lincoln's call for "three hundred thousand more," the town of New Hartford, at a special meeting, offered a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars "to all who may volunteer from this town to crush the existing wicked rebellion." New Hartford's offering to the "Mountain County Regiment" (the Nineteenth Infantry, afterwards Second Heavy Artillery) was a squad of thirty men, who were consolidated with recruits from Canaan and Colebrook to form Company F, of which Edward W. Jones, of New Hartford, was appointed captain, and afterwards promoted major of the regiment, and breveted lieutenant-colonel for bravery in action. This regiment also saw hard and bloody fighting; they were in thirteen engagements, and lost heavily in killed and wounded. Beside these companies, there were New Hartford men in almost every regiment from the State,—some thirty being distributed among the different companies of the Thirteenth Infantry,—in all, two hundred and sixty-seven.

In September, 1863, the selectmen of the town were authorized to pay a bounty of three hundred dollars to men drafted into the army, and the following was passed by the citizens:

"Resolved, That we, the citizens of New Hartford, will spend our money, and our lives if necessary, for the support of our government."

When the call came in August, 1864, for five hundred thousand men, when the patriots who were willing to risk their lives were already in the field, and volunteers were few and hard to find, yet the quota of the town was fifty-two, and must be raised, the authorities voted "a bounty of four hundred dollars to every volunteer or man drafted under said call."

At the close of the war, in 1865, came the return of the volunteers to their homes, to take up again the peaceful avocations left at the country's call. But not all returned: New Hartford's list of "killed in action or died in service" was forty-two; and who shall number those who came to their homes wounded or diseased, to find an early grave, or to carry through life the scars of the conflict?

MANUFACTURING AND BUSINESS INTERESTS.

In 1733 the proprietors of New Hartford sequestred for the benefit of the town two water-privileges, one for a grist-mill, the other for a saw-mill. The grist-mill privilege was at what is now known as "Stub Hollow,"* on or near the site of the present stone grist-mill, which was built by Lot Seymour about 1825. The saw-mill privilege was on Spruce Brook, on the southern slope of Cemetery Hill; but this was found to interfere with property already chosen by a proprietor, and was relinquished, with an injunction upon the inhabitants of the town that they should provide a suitable place for a saw-mill.

The first water privileges (except grist-mill above mentioned) improved were at "Satan's Kingdom" and Nepaug. There were both grist- and saw-mills at the

* First so called by the workmen who cleared the ground for Royal I. Watson's house in 1822, from the stumps of the trees left in the clearing.

"Kingdom" very soon after the settlement of the town. The date of building the dam is not known, but in 1751 Thomas Walling purchased of Jonathan Merrill both mills, with property adjoining; and the list of 1753 taxes Thomas Walling with a saw-mill valued at twenty pounds, and a grist-mill valued at fifteen pounds. The gorge at the "Kingdom" is about three-eighths of a mile in length, and the banks at the highest points are one hundred and twenty feet above the water, and in some places perpendicular or overhanging. The river flowing through this gorge, before it was obstructed by the two railroads which have narrowed its channel, was some twelve rods wide. The dam was near the Connecticut Western Railway bridge, and the mills were on the west bank of the river. Capt. Dudley Case, who came from Simsbury in 1784 and kept tavern on Mrs. Olive Pike's place, was the next proprietor of these mills. In 1753, Pelatiah Richards, and later Col. William Goodwin and his son, Caleb C. Goodwin, had a fulling-mill near Case's grist-mill, and a shop near by where they dressed the cloth spun and woven by the housewives of New Hartford.

Until 1832 the "Kingdom" bridge is mentioned in the town records as "the bridge near Case's mills," when the designation is changed to "near Salmon Merrill's." About this time Col. Salmon Merrill purchased the grist- and saw-mills, with property adjoining, and carried them on until the great flood in the winter of 1839–40 swept away the grist-mill, which was never rebuilt. The clothing-mill was carried away by the same freshet. In addition to the mills, Col. Merrill also had a turning-shop and bed-post-factory near the bank of the river. The saw-mill, with an occasional change of hands, continued in operation until it was carried away by flood, about the year 1869, after which the dam was demolished. The property at this time was owned by D. B. Smith, of Pine Meadow, who sold the right of way to the Canal Railroad, which destroyed the water-privilege.

In 1847, Messrs. Darius Camp and Caius C. Manchester built a puddling-furnace, for making cast iron into wrought iron, just above Wilcox's tavern, about three-quarters of a mile north of the "Kingdom" bridge, with a dam of but slight elevation on the river above the works. Tenement-houses were put up for the employees of the company, forming a little village, which has since borne the name of "Puddletown." The Connecticut Western Railroad track is laid in what was once the street through this settlement. The expense of transporting iron from Salisbury was so great that the business was not successful, and in 1852 C. C. Manchester, who had become sole proprietor, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the property passed into the hands of Herman Chapin, who conducted the business until 1863, when the furnace was burned. The business was never revived, as the improvement of the water-privilege had caused extensive litigation between the owner and D. B. Smith, whose large manufacturing interests lay farther up the river.

About 1845, W. McNary, a wheelwright by trade, had a turning-shop and melodeon manufactory on the east bank of the river, near the "Kingdom" bridge. These works were afterwards purchased by Caleb C. Goodwin, who fitted them up for a blacksmith's shop, which purpose they served for a number of years.

INTERESTS AT NEPAUG.

The first mention of the Nepash water-power being utilized for the benefit of the town is on the tax-list of 1753, when Zebulon Merrill is rated at fifty pounds for a grist-mill and one-third of a saw-mill. The other owners of the saw-mill were Ephraim Andrus, Abram Kellogg, Elijah and Abel Merrill, each one-sixth, valued at five pounds. These mills were not far from the site of the Henderson Manufacturing Company's works, near the place where the turnpike-bridge crosses the Nepash. They were kept up for many years; an old resident remembers that Noah Seymour owned the grist-mill about 1800. The primitive saw-mills often had, as accessories, rude facilities for making wooden bowls and trenchers, which utilized the slabs of the logs. New Hartford kitchens were no doubt supplied in the olden time with these and kindred articles of wooden-ware from the saw-mill manufactory.

In 1850, A. S. Atkins & Co. were running the Nepaug Wood-Turning Works, and J. V. Green a lock-factory, near the site of the old mills; and about a quarter of a mile to the east, where the turnpike again crosses the stream, L. H. & L. Burnham carried on an iron foundry, in which they were successors to Bates Brothers, who built the dam and started the business in 1832. All of these are now discontinued. About a mile to the southeast, on a tributary of the river, was J. M. Clements' turning-shop, near which Elbridge Curtis now has a saw-mill. Still farther on the Nepash was a saw-mill, now owned by John Healey, who has recently built a new dam and a small grist-mill.

In 1869 the Henderson Manufacturing Company, James F. Henderson president, was organized for the manufacture of furniture-casters, bed-fastenings, and general hardware, having purchased and enlarged the buildings and water-privilege of the Atkins' Nepaug Works. This business was afterwards purchased by Forbes & Clark (Rev. S. B. Forbes and Edward Clark), of Winsted, who carried it on a short time, when the shops of the company were burned, September, 1875, and the personal property and interest of the concern purchased by D. B. Smith, who removed them to his own establishment in Pine Meadow. Thus passed away the last manufacturing interest of Nepaug, which one hundred years ago was the business centre of the town.*

* Until a recent date the post-office at this place was New Hartford Centre, now changed to Nepaug.

The first store of any note in New Hartford was opened at Nepaug, or South End, by Col. Aaron Austin, who took as partner Elias Kellogg, in 1789. The store was connected with Col. Austin's house, which stood a little west of the Congregational church, and directly opposite Col. Norman Kellogg's tavern.

In connection with the mercantile business, they also carried on a potash manufactory. Successors to Austin & Kellogg were Nelson Brothers, who did not remain long in the business. In 1824, Messrs. Tertius Wadsworth and Harvey B. Elmore built a store somewhat to the west of Col. Austin's old stand, and carried on mercantile business until 1826, when they sold out to James F. Henderson, who continued for many years a prosperous merchant. At his death the business was taken by his son, James M. Henderson, who carried it on until the store was burned in 1866. Since that time different individuals have done trading in a small way, and the present postmaster, E. R. Merrill, keeps a few groceries and articles of household necessity to accommodate the neighboring families, who are mostly farmers or persons of independent means of living.

PINE MEADOW.

In April, 1806, Roger Sheldon, who kept tavern in what is now the "old boarding-house," bought of Chauncey Sadd a water-privilege in Pine Meadow, and built the dam across the Farmington River at that place. Mr. Sheldon also dug the raceway about half its present width, and built a grist-mill on the site of the building now occupied by A. N. Bragg & Co. Through pecuniary embarrassments, Mr. Sheldon was unable to hold the property. He left town in 1809, and it passed into the hands of Isaac and George C. Kellogg, who purchased of his creditors four hundred acres of land, comprising all of what is now Pine Meadow, from C. W. Gilman's farm (formerly Col. Wells') to the old carriage-shop, and from the top of the mountain on the west to the hills on the east, including the "Forks," which they cultivated. The Kellogg brothers added to the buildings, and put in machinery for the manufacture of woolen goods, and also an iron foundry. Previous to these purchases the brothers had been engaged with their father, Ebenezer Kellogg, in the manufacture of carding-machines; their shop is said to be now a part of Mrs. Lemley's house. In 1833 the Kellogg brothers divided their property, Isaac taking the foundry and the southern portion, and George C. the northern portion, and sold out one-half of their water-right to the New Hartford Manufacturing Company, who built a new mill for manufacturing woolen goods. In this business the Kelloggs retained a controlling interest, George C. Kellogg being president of the new corporation. The woolen business was carried on until 1844, when the factory was burned, after which George C. Kellogg built a machine-shop for the manufacture of cotton-pickers principally, and carried it on successfully, associating his son Edward with him in business, under the firm-name of E. Kellogg & Co.

After the fire of 1844, Smiths & Brown (John C. and Darius B. Smith and Sanford Brown) bought out the woolen-works property, rebuilt, and put in a cotton-mill. This firm was dissolved at the death of Maj. Sanford Brown, in 1857, and succeeded by D. B. Smith & Co., D. B. Smith eventually buying out the other partners (J. C. Smith and T. Polhemus) and becoming sole proprietor. In May, 1875, the cotton-mill of D. B. Smith was burned, but immediately rebuilt on a more extensive scale. In the latter part of 1875, his factories being then partially rebuilt, Mr. Smith purchased the personal property of the Henderson Manufacturing Company's Caster-Works, removing them to Pine Meadow, and carried on this business until 1877, when, having completed his building arrangements, cotton machinery was again put in, and his son, George W. Smith, associated with him, under the firm-name of D. B. Smith & Co.

The business now embraces the manufacture of cotton-duck, furniture, hardware, brass and iron foundry, and saw- and grist-mills. The firm employ about one hundred and seventy-five hands in all branches of business, and in the cotton factory three thousand spindles are in operation.

About 1845, Freeman Graham, formerly an apprentice to the Kelloggs, and for a short time engaged in the manufacture of pistols both at the North village and in the old Kellogg machine-shop, bought out the iron foundry of Isaac Kellogg's heirs, and carried on machine and foundry business in Pine Meadow until 1851, when he failed in business, and in 1852 his property was purchased by Herman Chapin.

After the death of George C. Kellogg, in 1847, his son, Hiram B. Kellogg, took his father's share of the machine business, which continued under the same name until May, 1865, when Edward Kellogg, the senior partner, sold his interest to Philip E. Chapin, when the firm became H. B. Kellogg & Co. In 1866, H. B. Kellogg sold his interest to Philip E. Chapin, who became sole proprietor, and so continued until the Chapin Machine Company, a joint-stock corporation, was organized in 1870 for the manufacture of knitting-machines, machinery, and all branches of foundry business. This company, of which P. E. Chapin was president and held controlling interest, enlarged the brick machine-shops formerly occupied by Freeman Graham, using the Kellogg foundry, and continued in operation until 1878, when they went into bankruptcy. In April, 1878, the Chapin Manufacturing Company, P. E. Chapin principal stockholder, was organized, taking the buildings and machinery of the original concern. This soon went into insolvency, and the buildings, purchased by Edward M. Chapin, are at present writing unoccupied.

In 1826, Messrs. Copeland & Chapin purchased a water-privilege and building in Pine Meadow of the Kellogg brothers, and opened an establishment for the manufacture of planes, rules, levels, etc. The senior partner remained in Hartford to attend to the sales of the planes, which were at first their sole products, Herman Chapin, the junior member of the concern, locating in Pine Meadow to superintend the business. In 1828, Mr. Chapin bought out his partner's interest, and soon after erected the present factory, which was then ninety feet front, with a one-story "L" twenty feet long. Extensions have been built from time to time until the building has now a frontage of two hundred feet, with three hundred feet in "L's," all two stories high, with all modern improvements as to heating, fire-pumps, etc.

In 1835, Mr. Chapin commenced the manufacture of rules, and was the first manufacturer who applied machinery to the making of these articles, by which improved facilities they are now sold for less than was paid the workmen for their labor forty years ago.

The present proprietor, Edwin M. Chapin, came into the ownership of the property and business in 1860, when the firm became H. Chapin's Son. After an exceptionally successful business career, Herman Chapin died in 1866 at Savannah, Ga., whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. About eighty hands are now employed, and about three thousand dozen rules per month are manufactured, besides planes, hand-screws, levels, gauges, handles, etc.

About the year 1848 a brass foundry was started by Philemon Allen in a frame building which stood near the Kellogg foundry. After carrying on the business a short time, Mr. Allen sold out his interest to his brother Samuel, who continued the foundry in operation about fifteen years, when the firm became Allen Brothers, Anson J. Allen having become a partner. This firm continued in business some four years, when their foundry was discontinued.

In 1854, L. C. Stephens & Co. commenced the rule business in Pine Meadow. In 1859 the business was removed to the North village, to a building erected for the purpose on the west bank of the river, to which power was carried from the lower Greenwoods mill by a cotton-rope band. In 1864 the business was removed to Riverton, where it is still in successful operation.

The firm of A. N. Bragg and Co., manufacturers of saddlery hardware,—snaps, bits, buckles, etc.,—was organized in 1878. The business, which now gives employment to thirty hands, male and female, began with two, and rooms were rented in a wooden building belonging to D. B. Smith. In May, 1880, the firm purchased a water-privilege and the old Kellogg machine-shop, fitted it up, and removed thither August, 1880. Trading interests were established at Pine Meadow some thirty years ago. The village now has two stores, kept by Allen Brothers and George Chapin.

NORTH VILLAGE.

Water-power was first used at the North village for a tannery in 1772, and a bark-mill in 1774, located near the outlet of Spruce Brook by Messrs. Webb & Denney, formerly of Wethersfield, who were by vote of the town exempted from taxes for seven years, or until their business should pay the cost of building. The inhabitants had heretofore been obliged to carry skins out of town to be dressed, and were pleased in this way to encourage the business of tanning in their midst. In 1797, Joseph Webb, who had returned to Wethersfield, sold the property; after passing through several hands, it was purchased in 1805 by Elisha Case, of Simsbury, who set up the business of tanning in the buildings erected by Mr. Webb, and carried it on until a short time before his death in 1824. Mr. Case's tannery was said to be the best establishment of the kind in the State. It had connected with it a large currying-room, which is now the dwelling-house of his daughter, Mrs. Maria Jones. It was purchased and removed about 1840 by H. H. Bartlett, who fitted it up for a pistol manufactory, and used it for that purpose a number of years; it was renovated for a dwelling-house by Deacon John Brown. The tannery, a large building, was used as a livery stable and barn until about 1850, when it was burned.

In 1786, Messrs. Ashbel Marsh, Sr., and Roger Sheldon built a grist-mill on Spruce Brook, on the southern slope of Cemetery Hill, a little west of the house now owned by Martin Driggs. The miller was Benjamin Skinner, who lived where William Cook now does. The mill continued grinding until it fell into decay. In after-years the water-privilege was used to run a turning-lathe by Whitehead Howd, who was thought by the last generation of boys to owe his name to the hoary locks which crowned his head.

In 1808 there stood a turning- and cooper-shop under the bank nearly opposite the junction of Brook Street and the Steele road. This was built and used by Mr. Howd, above mentioned. Here, also, Guy Miner, who built the first house on the Steele road, made tubs, pails, and other articles. In 1809 a blacksmith's shop stood on the site of Mrs. John C. Smith's present residence. In the rear of this was a lumber-yard, and still farther back a cider-mill and distillery, which furnished liquor for the hotel bar, of which Theodore Cowles was proprietor. Gordon W. Cook, who built the house now occupied by Dr. E. D. Curtis, had a blacksmith's shop just south of his house. A potash manufactory and a shoe-shop stood on the site of the Roman Catholic church, and Maj. John Meigs, who lived where Mrs. Dr. Hazen now does and made hats for the town, had his hatter's shop just south of his residence.

In March, 1816, Martin Driggs sold to Michael Kellogg the privilege of taking the water from Farmington River, "at or near the riffles in said river, about thirty rods above Mast Swamp Hill, so called," and of erecting a dam sufficient to carry a saw-mill, grist-mill, and any other water-works he should choose to erect, also land for buildings. This property extended from the old dam, which was about eighty rods above the present one, to "Sheep Rock," on which the lower cotton-mill of the Greenwoods Company now stands. Mr. Driggs reserved a right to put in a bark-mill, which he did. His tanneries were located near the iron bridge across the Farmington at North village. With his sons Andrew and Hiram, he carried on the business of tanning and shoemaking* successfully until 1844, when Archibald Ralston bought out the establishment. In 1844, Hiram Driggs again took the tannery, and, assisted by his son Martin, carried it on until 1850, when it was discontinued. The old tan-house was used as a barn until 1878, when it was torn down by Thomas C. Wilber, the present owner of the property.

Michael Kellogg erected the first dam on the river, at the upper village, on the privilege purchased of Mr. Driggs, and built grist- and saw-mills, but appears to have soon failed, for Kellogg, Brown & Chapin (George C. Kellogg, Sanford Brown, Herman Chapin) bought out the property, except bark- and grist-mills, and had a large machine-shop thereon until 1833, when the New Hartford Manufacturing Company succeeded to their interest and built a cotton-factory. This corporation failed, and the business went into the hands of the New Hartford Joint-Stock Company, organized in April, 1839, under the same management, viz.: George C. Kellogg, president; H. Chapin, Isaac Kellogg, directors. This company also failed, and in 1841 leased the cotton-factory to Smiths & Brown, who carried on the cotton manufactory until April, 1845, when the mill was destroyed by fire. After this fire Maj. Brown sold his interest in the concern to John C. and Darius B. Smith, who sold the property to the Greenwoods Company, in October, 1845, which was organized with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars, Edmund G. Howe, of Hartford, president; David F. Robinson, of Hartford, and John C. Smith, of New Hartford, directors; and John C. Smith, resident agent. This company made extensive purchases of real estate on the east side of the river, and immediately rebuilt the cotton-factory, and commenced the manufacture of cotton duck. In 1848 they received a special charter from the Legislature. In 1849 the present dam and new mill were built. The buildings then consisted of a brick mill, one hundred and fifty by fifty feet, five stories high, known as the sheeting-mill, and the lower mill, a frame building, one hundred and thirty-five by thirty-five feet, three stories high, with attic; also a saw-mill, since burned, and about twenty-five tenement-houses. Additions and improvements to the buildings of the company have been made from time to time. Another saw-mill has been erected, and the number of tenement-houses is now increased to seventy-five. In 1878 the dam was raised six feet. The number of persons employed varies from six hundred and fifty to seven hundred, and the number of spindles in operation is twenty thousand. The capital stock of the company is now three hundred thousand dollars. The president is J. E. Turner; treasurer, Elbert Brinkerhoff, both of New York. Robert R. Smith, son of John C. Smith, to whose energetic management for twenty-five years much of the success of the company is due, succeeded his father as agent in 1871. Howell W. Brown, of New Hartford, has been for thirty years secretary of the company.

Space will permit but a brief mention of the different manufacturing and industrial interests which have sprung up in the North village of New Hartford during the last fifty years. The manufacture of tinware has been carried on continuously since it was begun by Tertius Wadsworth, some sixty years ago. His successor was Henry Jones, whose shop was just south of Mrs. Frazier's present dwelling-house. He carried on an extensive business, and sent peddlers South with goods. Virgil S. Abbott and Henry T. Smith in turn succeeded to the business, the latter commencing as apprentice for Mr. Abbott, then as journeyman manager for the tinning-works of the Greenwoods Company, and finally proprietor of the establishment which he now manages, which embraces, besides the manufacture of tinware, plumbing and dealing in general hardware.

Carriages and wagons were made forty years ago by Wilson B. Spring, first near the lower end of the village, and afterwards in a shop, torn down this year, which stood at the foot of Cemetery Hill, on the Town Hill road. The New Hartford Carriage Company was organized in 1867, William Steele, president; Watson Giddings, H. M. Gates, directors. Their manufactory was on the south bank of Spruce Brook, where it enters the Farmington River. This business was in operation but a short time before it went into the hands of a receiver. Henry M. Gates, who has been a prosperous blacksmith in town for fifteen years, has a carriage manufactory in connection with his smithy, and employs a number of workmen. His shops are at the lower end of the village, directly opposite the New Hartford Carriage Company's works.

About 1840, Henry Jones and Isaac P. Frisbie (of Harwinton) started a clock manufactory near the dam built by Webb & Denney on Spruce Brook, and made clocks for the Southern market. Owing to heavy losses the business proved unprofitable, and was given up after about four years. In 1845, H. B. & S. Alvord, who came to town to keep store, rented the clock-shop, and carried on a wood-turning business. It was afterwards rented to different parties, burned, and rebuilt, and used in turn for a sash- and blind-factory, and for the manufacture of planes and gauges. It was a second time burned, and never rebuilt.

* The shoemaker, as distinguished from the cobbler, was also a tanner. The cobbler in town at this time was Thomas Gleason, who, with his bench and tools, went from house to house, making, mending, and repairing. He built the first house on Greenwoods turnpike above the hotel, now owned by Mrs. Howard P. Marsh.

A broom-factory and shook-shop for making sugar-hogsheads for the West Indies was started by William Steele, E. E. Clark & Co. in 1866, in the old clock-shop building. In 1867, Mr. Clark retired from the business, the shook manufacture was discontinued, and in 1874, on the death of Mr. Steele, George B. Bancroft, previously in the employ of the concern, became sole proprietor. Mr. Bancroft built a factory, fronting on a road opened in 1870, near his own residence. This was burned in 1876, but immediately rebuilt on the same site. The business gives employment to ten persons, and one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five dozen brooms are made per week, besides brushes, etc.

The manufacture of corset-springs was carried on from 1865 to 1869 by Messrs. Thompson & Purinton, in the building previously used by L. Stephens & Co., opposite the Greenwoods lower mill.

The Greenwoods Scythe Company was organized in 1864 for the manufacture of scythes, edged tools, and agricultural implements. The works of the establishment were at the upper end of the village, near the western abutment of the Greenwoods Company's dam. This continued in operation until the company was dissolved, in 1871–72, the water-power proving insufficient for the necessities of two large manufacturing establishments. The tools, machinery, and real estate of the concern were purchased by the Greenwoods Company.

On Trout Brook, a tributary of the East Branch of the Farmington, is a saw-mill, built by Capt. Aaron Richards about the year 1800; this has been enlarged, kept in excellent repair, and continuously running since that time. It is now owned and used for general sawing by John Richards, a grandson of the original proprietor.

West of the village were two old water-privileges, one, formerly used for a saw-mill, about ten feet above the bridge over Spruce Brook, where the new road diverges from the West Hill road; the other, just below the same bridge, where the site of a dam is still plainly visible. This dam, and a shop for the manufacture of saw-handles, were built by Samuel Judd about 1835, and used for that purpose some fifteen years. On East Brook was a good water-privilege, improved as early as 1800 by Jonathan Marsh (3d) for the manufacture of cider-mill screws. After this Edward Strong built a shop at the same place, where he made saw-handles. In 1849, Jeremiah Hallock bought the property and started a shingle-mill, which he ran for twenty years or more. A few years since, this privilege, with the grounds adjoining, were purchased by Mr. Nicholas S. Seleninoff, who has erected a residence upon it, and has an ornamental cascade in the old wheel-pit.

The first store at the North village was kept by Eliphalet Austin, probably built by him about 1780. This store stood on the site of the brick house at the cross-roads of the village, and was moved off when that house was built in 1818. Eliphalet Austin was succeeded in business by his nephew Montgomery, son of Col. Aaron Austin. Montgomery Austin was unsuccessful in business, and the property passed into the hands of the Seymour family.

Messrs. Thomas Lee and David Lusk came from Farmington about 1798, and set up the dry goods and grocery trade in a wooden building where the "brick store" now stands. They continued in business for many years.

The "brick store" was built by Tertius Wadsworth in 1823. This has been a trading stand since that time, and is now occupied by the firm of Smith & Spencer. There are at present in this village three stores for the sale of general merchandise, two drug-stores, a tailoring establishment, a harness-shop, two jewelry-stores, a meat-market, a fish-market, a livery stable, three millinery establishments, and four shoemakers' shops.

BAKERVILLE.

In January, 1752, the following vote was passed in town-meeting:

"Voted, That Datis Ensign may build a dam for a fulling-mill on his own land."

This has not been located with certainty, but, previous to 1752, Eliphalet Ensign, the father of Datis, purchased land on both sides of the brook, corresponding to the site which tradition gives to an old fulling-mill in Bakerville, near the building now occupied by Asa Goodwin as a dwelling-house, which was used some fifty years ago as a clothier's shop, where cloth was dressed by —— Lyman.

Bakerville, at one time a prosperous manufacturing village, in the southwestern part of the town, may be said to have been founded by Scott Baker, who came from Bridgeport in 1804. On coming to town he lived for a short time near the Harwinton line, then moved to what is now known as the "Spencer place," where he worked at his trade of shoemaking, and commenced the business of tanning in a tub. About 1812 he settled permanently on the bank of the stream, in what is now the village of Bakerville, in a house built by Cyprian Watson, a pioneer of the town, which was inclosed by a log fort, a relic of Indian incursions in the early history of the place. Here Mr. Baker built a tannery, and carried on the tanning and shoemaking business for the remainder of his life. His sons—Beach N., Anthony, and Garrison Baker—enlarged their father's tanneries, built a turning-shop and a clothing manufactory, opened a store, and built up a prosperous village at Bakerville. John S. Baker, the son of Anthony, put up a steam saw-mill and turning-shop in 1859. A condensed-milk manufactory was for a time in operation at Bakerville, of which the proprietor was Julius R. Pond. With the death of Anthony Baker, in 1855, the manufacturing interest of the place declined; the tannery was burned in 1856, and only the turning-shop and saw-mill are now in operation.

About a half-mile northeast of Bakerville, in what is locally called "Stub Hollow," the brothers Edmund and Royal I. Watson erected a paper-mill about 1830. This establishment for the manufacture of printing-paper employed about thirty hands, and the machinery and buildings were valued at ten thousand dollars. After it had been in successful operation for about three years the mill was burned, but immediately rebuilt. After running for two years longer the mill was again burned, when the business was discontinued.

A clock manufactory was started in this locality about the same time by Deacon Elisha Neal, of the Baptist Church in Bakerville, who sold out to one of his workmen by the name of Matthewson, afterwards an Advent preacher. About 1845 this business was given up, and the buildings rented to John S. Burwell, who made baby-carriages and hand-sleds. It is now used by Orvis Griggs as a turning-shop.

In 1850 there were two saw-mills in this part of the town, and members of the Watson family had a brick-yard near the Torrington line.

In the year 1800, Michael Kellogg built a saw-mill nearly opposite the present residence of Frederic Merrill, on what is now the "New road;" this was reached by a cart-path from the West Hill road, and afterwards owned by Capt. Norman Merrill. In 1832, Ashbel Marsh built a saw-mill on the Steele road above the residence of Grove S. Marsh. Both of these are now gone to decay, but are still traceable.

Besides the twenty-two manufacturing establishments, there were in town in 1880 one hundred and ninety-nine improved farms. The soil of New Hartford is well adapted for grazing, and in some sections it produces very superior crops of wheat, corn, potatoes, and tobacco.

In addition to those who represent the professional, agricultural, and industrial interests, there are many persons of leisure who, attracted by the beauty and healthfulness of the town, have located within its limits, whose beautiful homes contribute much to the attractiveness of its streets.

GROWTH OF THE TOWN AND MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

New Hartford lies twenty miles northeast of Hartford; it is six miles in length, and about the same in average breadth. Its eastern boundary was originally determined by Kimberly's line, but when the town of Canton was incorporated, in 1806, a strip about three miles in length and something over a mile in width, north and east of the Farmington River, was taken from New Hartford, and, with the western part of Simsbury, now forms the town of Canton. This strip, which is called in the old records "the east tier of lots," was annexed to the ecclesiastical parish of West Simsbury in 1762, for the convenience of the settlers, to whom the crossing of the river was a great barrier to attendance on public worship. The Simsbury boundary was always a matter of trouble to the early settlers of New Hartford, and numerous are the records of appeal to State authority, "perambulations," and "actions at law" in regard to it. Simsbury, which was settled some seventy years before New Hartford, did not take kindly to a well-defined limitation of privileges on her western border.

The town is hilly and mountainous, containing a mountain range of considerable elevation, of granite and other primitive formations. Ratlan Mountain, on the eastern boundary, Town Hill, in the centre of the town, West Hill, Yellow Mountain, and East Mountain are a few of the most important elevations. The Greenwoods, or evergreen region of Connecticut, begins in the northern part of the town; these forests are now mostly cleared by the march of civilization, but some of the highways in the sparsely-settled portions of the town are still bordered with the original growth of hemlock, beech, ash, and chestnut, with a dense undergrowth of kalmia or mountain laurel. White-oak and pine-trees have here attained enormous size. The natural scenery of the town is of romantic beauty and diversity. The Farmington or Tunxis River waters the northern portion of the town, and turns the huge wheels of its manufacturing interests. The Nepash or Nepaug, with its tributaries, flows through the southern part of the town. In the northwestern corner is a beautiful lake, called by the Indians "Wonkjunkmunk," now generally known as Shepherd's or West Hill pond. The northern shores of this lake, which is a little more than a mile in length, and a quarter of a mile in average width, lie in the town of Barkhamsted. Its banks are bordered with picnic groves, and it is a favorite fishing-resort for parties from this town and elsewhere. The Greenwoods Company have recently put in a bulkhead at the northern end of this lake, and raised the water for a reserve to draw from when the Farmington River and Otis pond reservoir are not sufficient for their manufacturing necessities.

The Greenwoods pond, at the upper end of the North village, one-half mile long and nearly one-quarter of a mile wide, overflowing the lower portion of what was formerly Mast Swamp, is an ornamental sheet of water, much frequented by the angler and the boating-club.

In the southeastern part of the town is a sulphur spring, said to possess excellent medicinal qualities, and visited every year by invalids, who drink the water at the original fountain or carry it away in bottles for future use.

The gorge at "Satan's Kingdom," referred to in a former chapter, is one of the natural curiosities of the place, where the scenery is wild and grand in the extreme. The town, though curtailed in its original geographical limits, has been of steady growth, and has colonized two other towns. New Hartford, Oneida Co., N. Y., was settled by Phineas and Solomon Kellogg, who emigrated thither with their families in 1788–89. They were soon followed by others from this town, and the new home was named for the native place of its settlers.

Austinburg, Ohio, received its name from Eliphalet Austin, of New Hartford, who removed there with his numerous family in 1800. Many others from New Hartford followed him to Austinburg, and were among the influential citizens of the new town. From 1780 to 1820, New Hartford, like other towns in Litchfield County, was retarded in its growth by the emigration of its citizens to the more fertile lands of New York and Ohio. The records of some of the old families—Kellogg, Watson, Marsh, and Austin—are a continued history of emigration to these then Western States.

In 1756 there were in New Hartford 260 white inhabitants. In 1761 the population was 674. In 1774 it was 1001. In 1870 it had increased to 3078, and in 1880 to 3303. Of these, 1670 are residents of the North village and 514 of Pine Meadow. The tax-list of 1739, the first on record, rates the taxable property and polls of the inhabitants at £1564 12*s*. An extract from this list may be of interest:

"Matthew Gillet.

1 head	18
2 oxen	8
2 horses	6
3 swine	3
2 acres and a half of pastur land	1
2 acres and a half of bush pastur		5
Total	36	5"

In 1799 the tax-list had increased to $44,334, and in 1880 the amount of property in the town was entered on the grand list as $1,042,976.

In 1809 there were only fourteen dwelling-houses in North village, two of which were taverns, and ten in Pine Meadow, from the pine-tree to the "Kingdom" bridge. On the east side of the river there was but one house between the bridge and the Miles Richards place. Matthew Gillet, Jr., had a house on the hill where Carlos Holcomb now lives. Cottage Street was a military parade-ground. In 1807 there was a regimental training in Pine Meadow, when all the fences were taken down from Carleton Seymour's present residence to C. W. Gilman's farm. In 1776 there were but two ox-carts in town, owned by Jonathan and Ashbel Marsh. The son of the latter, of the same name, relates that his father was offered twenty-five acres of land lying on the north cross-road on Town Hill for his cart, which he refused. About the year 1800 wagons were first brought into town; for a number of years there were but two of these, owned by Capt. Wm. Cook and David Lusk, which were rented far and near to the citizens for a consideration.

The first mention of a physician in New Hartford is in the town records of 1766, when an "account for doctoring" is allowed to Dr. Eldad Merrill. Dr. Michael Merrill also practiced in town at some time during the last century. The practicing physicians in town since 1790 have been Drs. Thomas Brinsmade, Roswell and Andrew Abernethy, Adam Kasson, J. P. Root, Calvin Cook, Sylvester Willard, Myron Hubbard, Geo. B. Elliot, Jerry Burwell, John H. Welch, and Thomas G. Hazen.

Dr. Burwell is still, and has been a practitioner in town since 1847. Besides these gentlemen, who were all regular practitioners of the old school, there have practiced in New Hartford the following eclectic physicians: Drs. Sidney Newton, Belden, E. D. Curtis, Theodore Brockway, Philip Chouinnard. The three latter are now practitioners in town.

The first practicing attorney in New Hartford of whom the writer has any knowledge was Uriel Holmes, Esq., in 1786. Mr. Holmes remained in town about eleven years, when he removed to Litchfield, and Joshua Henshaw, Esq., succeeded to his practice in 1797. Calvin Pease, Esq., was a lawyer here in 1800. Roger Mills came to New Hartford and commenced the practice of law in 1801. He died in 1844. His partner was Wm. G. Williams, who came in 1809; died 1837. Roger H. Mills was born in town, and succeeded to his father's practice; removed to Beloit, Wis., in 1853. Jared B. Foster came to town and commenced the practice of law in 1849. Nathan Morse, who came in 1875, and John B. Betts, a native of the town, are, with Judge Foster, the present representatives of the legal profession.

The veteran soldiers and sailors resident in town sustain an organization called the "New Hartford Veteran Association," which takes charge of Decoration-Day ceremonies and soldiers' reunions.

The Masonic order is represented in New Hartford by the "Northern Star Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons." There are also in town a "Temple of Honor," a temperance organization, and St. Mary's Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society, the purpose of which is indicated by its name. For lists of Revolutionary soldiers, soldiers who volunteered during the Southern Rebellion, and representatives from New Hartford, see below.

There are four post-offices in town,—New Hartford (at North village), Pine Meadow, Nepaug, and Bakerville. For many years after the settlement of the town, bears, panthers, catamounts, wolves, and deer were killed within its bounds. The old records show that frequent rewards were paid for the killing of wolves, and fines imposed for killing deer contrary to law.

The following is a list of those who marched from New Hartford for the relief of Boston in the Lexington alarm, April, 1775:

NEW HARTFORD VOLUNTEERS.

Loomis, Benjamin G., drum-major, 2d Regt.; enl. May 7, 1861; afterwards in 13th Regt.
Cruess, John, Co. D, 2d Regt.; enl. May 7, 1861; also Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.
Dowd, Marshall W., Co. D, 2d Regt.; enl. May 7, 1861.
Kellogg, Abram G., captain, Co. B, 2d Regt.; com. May 7, 1861; captured June 21.

* It is probable that these men were met by couriers who informed them that the British had retreated, and the necessity for immediate action had passed, and that most of them returned home after three or four days' absence. The names indicate that Capt. Smith's company had a few volunteers from adjoining towns,—Wilder, Tiffany, and Goss from Barkhamsted, possibly two or three from Farmington.—ED.

† After the adoption of the constitution, in 1818, the regular October session was discontinued.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN COTTON SMITH.

John Cotton Smith, one of the prominent business men and manufacturers of New Hartford, was born at East Haddam, Conn., March 12, 1810. Was of a family of fourteen children,—seven sons and seven daughters. All of the sons and six of the daughters lived to adult age. His father being a cotton manufacturer, John C. was trained to the same business. In early manhood he left his native place to reside at Housatonic, in Great Barrington, Mass., where he engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods. From this place, in the spring of 1841, he removed to New Hartford, entering into partnership with Maj. Brown, who was proprietor of a small cotton-factory.

In less than a year this structure was destroyed by fire, robbing Mr. Smith of nearly all his earnings; but by dint of self-reliance and courage he set out anew with a brother at Pine Meadow, where they established a prosperous business.

In 1845, Mr. Smith conceived the plan of organizing a large manufacturing company and erecting spacious buildings on the site owned by him and Maj. Brown at the North village. Capitalists of New York and Hartford, at his solicitation, incorporated themselves into the "Greenwoods Manufacturing Company," with a capital of two hundred and eight thousand dollars, making him their agent. He managed the affairs of the company with signal ability and unswerving integrity. On one occasion the directors manifested their appreciation of his services by presenting him a thousand-dollar silver set. Subsequently they elected him president of the company, and re-elected him agent on a salary of five thousand dollars a year. This position Mr. Smith occupied to the day of his death, which occurred Jan. 7, 1870. He was married at East Haddam, Nov. 11, 1832, to Ellen C. Fox, youngest of nine children of Capt. Aaron Fox, of that place. She is now in her seventieth year, has raised a family of seven children, five of whom are now living, and is a lady of rare excellence and personal worth.

Mr. Smith was a man of fixed principles and marked character. All the public local enterprises of his day have felt the influence of his capital and the benefit of his advice. His employees were his wards, and in devising plans to get through the "dry times" and the "dull times," their best interests were taken into account. He was charitable to the poor, and foremost in all enterprises that looked to the improvement of the village.

HON. HENRY JONES.

The subject of this sketch was born in Barkhamsted on the 24th of May, 1800. He was the second child of Col. Israel Jones, of Barkhamsted, and his second wife, Lois Wadsworth, of Farmington. On both sides his lineage was of pioneer Puritan stock. His grandfather, Capt. Israel Jones, came from Enfield to Barkhamsted in 1759, and was the second white man to make permanent settlement in that town. He was the son of Thomas Jones, whose father, Benjamin Jones, went from Enfield to Somers in 1706, and was the first settler of that town.

His mother was the daughter of Hezekiah Wadsworth, Esq., of Farmington, a descendant of William Wadsworth and Timothy Stanley, who were among the first English settlers and land-holders of Hartford. William Wadsworth had two sons,—John and Joseph. John, the grandfather of Hezekiah, settled in Farmington. He was a member of what is now the senate when his brother, the daring Capt. Joseph, secreted the charter of Connecticut in the historic oak.

Col. Israel Jones was eighteen times elected representative to the General Assembly. He was also town clerk and justice of the peace for a series of years, and for several years lieutenant-colonel commandant of the Twenty-fifth Regiment Connecticut Militia. He died Sept. 1, 1812, at the family homestead in Barkhamsted, which is still standing, and located very near the geographical centre of the town. His wife kept the family together for a year, until her death in 1813, when the children, Milo, Henry, Israel, Louisa, and Edward, found homes in Farmington among their mother's relatives.

It was necessary that Henry should earn his own livelihood, and after attending school a few terms he was apprenticed by his guardian, Mr. Thomas Youngs, to a jeweler in Farmington. That trade being distasteful to him the indentures were canceled, and he was apprenticed to a tinner in the same town, with whom he remained until nearly of age, when, with money earned by working over-hours, he purchased his time and started out for himself. At first he engaged in business, tinning and mercantile, at Colebrook River, but not liking that locality, after about a year he removed to New Hartford, where he established himself in business in 1821. Jan. 25, 1826, he married Catherine, the oldest child of Roger Mills, Esq., a lawyer who came to New Hartford from his native town of Norfolk in 1800. Mrs. Jones' mother was the daughter of Capt. Phineas Merrill, son of Joseph Merrill, a pioneer settler of New Hartford.

Mr. Jones and his wife Catherine had five children,—Charles Mills, Ann Eliza, Henry and Harriet Louisa (who died in infancy), and Henry Roger. The eldest son, Charles, for many years followed the sea. He served as ensign in the navy during the Southern Rebellion, and is now in the postal service of the government in New York City. Ann Eliza married Mr. James B. Crowe, who was a merchant both in New Hartford and Hartford. Mr. Crowe died in 1864, and his widow and daughter now reside in New Hartford. Henry R. left the study of law in 1861 to enlist in the volunteer army; he was promoted through the various grades to the rank of captain. In 1866 he was appointed in the regular army, and is now an officer on the retired list for wounds received in battle. His residence is New Hartford, where he holds the offices of justice of the peace and judge of the Probate Court of that district.

From the time of Mr. Jones' first arrival in New Hartford he was a prominent figure in the business interests of the town. As sole proprietor of a large tinning business, he sent out peddlers to the West and South. As a buyer and seller of real estate scarcely a name is more frequently to be found upon the land records of the town. He was for a number of years, in addition to his other interests, one of the mercantile firm of Brown, Jones & Elmore, whose place of business was in the store now occupied by Woodruff & Betts, near the corner leading from Main Street to the Congregational church. In the autumn of 1840 he organized in New Hartford a clock manufactory, in a shop owned by him on the south bank of Spruce Brook, in the lower end of the village. This concern—Jones & Frisbie—employed a large number of hands, carried on a prosperous business, but owing to heavy losses at the South, after a career of nearly five years, was discontinued. In 1841 he purchased a farm of thirty acres on the east side of the river. This farm, in addition to a large tract on the north side of Bare-spot Mountain, in sight of the village, and other tracts, he continued to cultivate until his death, and whenever called upon to state his occupation gave it as that of a farmer.

In 1829 he purchased the house and lot just above the hill in the south end of the North village, nearly opposite the house which his son, Capt. Henry R. Jones, built in 1874 and now occupies. Here he continued to dwell until 1853, when he purchased of his brother-in-law, Hon. Roger H. Mills, the Mills homestead, immediately north of Capt. Jones' residence. Into this larger house he removed with his family, where he resided until his death

April 4, 1837, an overwhelming loss befell him,—the death of Catherine, the wife of his youth, leaving to his care three young children, one an infant eleven days old.

Feb. 5, 1839, he was married to Aurelia, daughter of William G. Williams, Esq., a lawyer, and partner of the father of his former wife. Esquire Williams was grandson of Col. Thomas Williams, a distinguished officer of the Revolution, and grandnephew of Col. Ephraim Williams, founder of Williams College. By his second wife Mr. Jones had two sons,—Edward Wadsworth and Frank Williams. The former served as major of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and brevetted lieutenant-colonel during the war of the Rebellion, and is now engaged in mining operations in Idaho. The latter is superintendent of the Telephone Company of Brazil, and resides at Rio de Janeiro.

Although a successful mechanic, manufacturer, merchant, and farmer, Mr. Jones was chiefly known among his fellow-men as a public officer. From the year 1822, when he was first admitted to the freeman's oath, until his death his name was continuously identified with the interests of the town. He was for many years judge of the Probate Court of his district. As justice of the peace he tried most of the cases in town during a long term of office. He was repeatedly sent to the Legislature, and in 1861 was senator from the Fifteenth District. To him his fellow-citizens applied for advice on all questions, and through his arbitration many family and neighborhood difficulties were settled to the satisfaction of all concerned. He died very suddenly of angina pectoris, on the 14th of February, 1863, beloved and lamented by all who knew him.

A fitting close to this sketch will be an editorial notice of his death published in the Winsted Herald of Feb. 20, 1863. Similar notices were printed in Hartford papers and journals throughout the county and State:

"We chronicle to-day with sincere sorrow the death of Henry Jones, Esq., of New Hartford. He died suddenly on Saturday last without a moment of illness, or the slightest warning of the approaching change. He had been in usual good health during the winter, as he had been through the day on which he died. Previously to retiring on Saturday evening he wound his clock as usual, and then put wood into the stove; while engaged in this he was observed to fall over upon the floor, and before aid could be called almost in the same moment he ceased to breathe. Mr. Jones was widely known through the county, and was one of its best men. Modest and retiring in his manners, he was observant and shrewd; seeking no public position, he was rarely allowed by a community which knew his worth an interval out of its service. Either as selectman, justice, judge, member of the Legislature, county or court commissioner, or in some other capacity, he has almost always been in the public service. He filled every position honorably and well. He was a man of rigid integrity; in politics, when the severest morality too often relaxes, he was a man of the same firm convictions and unalterable purposes. His private life was equally amiable and exemplary, and from the school-boy to the patriarch, all the community in which he lived mourn his decease almost as a personal affliction. His loss is irreparable in New Hartford. Mr. Jones' funeral, on Wednesday last, was one of the most numerously attended in the town for several years, attracting as it did many from a distance, who gathered to pay their last tribute of respect to one they loved. His age was sixty-two."

CALEB CROSWELL GOODWIN.

THE GOODWIN FAMILY.

Ebenezer Goodwin was the son of Isaac Goodwin, and born in Hartford (now West Hartford) about 1743; died May 18, 1810, aged sixty-seven. His widow survived him some twenty-five years. He is supposed to be the descendant of Ozias (Hosea) Goodwin, who came with his brother, William Goodwin, from Braintree (other authority says Essex), England, in the ship "Sion" (Zion), Sept. 16, 1632, to Newtown (Cambridge), Mass. In 1635-36 they came to Suckiaug(e), the Indian name of Hartford, Conn. William had but one child, Elizabeth, who married John Crow. Ozias was born in 1596, and the numerous family of Goodwins in Hartford and vicinity and in the country are supposed to have descended chiefly from him; in fact, some families trace their lineage direct from him. The children of Ebenezer Goodwin were Ruth, born June 3, 1764. Ebenezer, born June 10, 1766; he married Ruth Goodwin, sister of Asa Goodwin, of New Hartford. Lucy, born July 18, 1768. James, born Sept 4, 1770. Seth, born Aug. 12, 1772. William (1st), born Jan. 5, 1775; died in infancy. Col. William Goodwin, the father of the writer (Rev. William Goodwin), born Oct. 15, 1776. Norman, born Jan. 16, 1778. Pitts, born Jan. 28, 1779. Horace, born Feb. 12, 1781. Polly, born Oct. 8, 1782. Amanda, born Oct. 15, 1783. Of these children, Ebenezer settled on a farm adjoining the old homestead on West Hill, which his son, Horace Goodwin, has since occupied. Col. William Goodwin became a clothier, and settled on the Farmington River, two miles below the village, at the southern extremity of Pine Meadow, or in the suburbs of the so-called Satan's Kingdom, near the bridge. Soon after he was comfortably established in his new home, his dwelling and shop, and the bridge standing near, were borne downward by the maddened waters in the great Jefferson flood of March, 1801; and occasionally since then he has lost his works, wholly or in part, by the angry floods of this turbulent stream. He married Abigail Croswell, sister of his brother Seth's wife, who were sisters to Dr. Harry Croswell, for a long time rector of the Episcopal Church in New Haven.

The children of Col. William and Abigail Goodwin were as follows:

Rev. Harley Goodwin was born in New Hartford, March 10, 1797, graduated at Middlebury College, Vt., and was ordained as pastor of the Congregational Church in New Marlborough, Mass., a colleague with Rev. Jacob Catlin, D.D. The council convened Jan. 3, 1826, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Cyrus Yale on the following day, January 4th. Here he remained for some years. His next settlement was in Warren, Litchfield, Co., Conn., where he remained but a short time. He next became the pastor of the Congregational Church in South Cannan, where he remained till his death, Jan. 31, 1855, aged nearly fifty eight years.

Orrin was born Sept. 3, 1799. He followed his trade as a harness-maker in the village of New Hartford, where he died Dec. 14, 1865, aged above sixty-six.

Hannah was born Oct. 14, 1801. She spent most of her life in New Hartford, where her husband, William Warner, still lives. She died at Winsted, July 30, 1854, aged nearly fifty-three.

Amanda was born Feb. 14, 1803. After marrying Carlo Smith they moved to Sidney Plains, on the Susquehanna River, in the State of New York, where they remained a few years; then returned to New Hartford. The widow, in a good old age, still lives in Pine Meadow.

Jennette was born July 16, 1806; died April 27, 1827, aged less than twenty-one years.

Caleb Croswell Goodwin, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, was born Feb. 14, 1808. He is still living on his farm which he purchased on the east and opposite side of the river from the old homestead, while he yet retains possession of the old house and adjoining lands.

Horatio Nelson Goodwin was born Jan. 27, 1812. He learned the trade of harness-maker of his brother Orrin, in New Hartford, and still follows this calling. For many years he has filled the office of deacon well in the Congregational Church in Collinsville, where he still lives.

Rev. William Goodwin was born Jan. 1, 1814. He entered Williams College, Massachusetts, in 1838, graduated in 1842, and finished his theological course in 1845 at the Theological Seminary in East Windsor, Conn.; since removed to Hartford. He received a license to preach, with other members of his class, at an Association in Ware Village, Mass., in 1844. The convictions on the subject of baptism which he entertained before entering college grew stronger, so that early in his ministry he became a Baptist. After various pastorates in Connecticut and Massachusetts, he was invited, in the spring of 1879, to return to his former field of labor, the Baptist Church in North Colebrook, where Elder Babcock labored so earnestly and effectually, and almost gratuitously, and left behind him not only the savor of his good name, but one of the best parsonages in Litchfield County to the church and society.

Charles F. Maxfield

"HIGHLAND FARM,"

RESIDENCE OF CHARLES F. MAXFIELD, NEW HARTFORD, CONN.

D. C. Gilman

E. M. CHAPIN.

E. M. Chapin, son of Herman and Catharine Merrill Chapin, was born in New Hartford, Sept. 5, 1833. He attended school in Litchfield in 1847 and '48, in Winsted in 1849, and at the Connecticut Literary Institution at Suffield in 1849, '50, and '51.

In 1851 he began business as superintendent in his father's plane- and rule-factory, which was established by H. Chapin in 1826, and continued until 1860, when a partnership was formed, consisting of H. Chapin, E. M., G. W., and P. E. Chapin, under the firm-name of H. Chapin & Sons, E. M. Chapin having the entire management. In 1865, E. M. and G. W. Chapin having secured the factory and business, a new partnership was formed under the name of H. Chapin's Sons. In 1868, E. M. Chapin purchased the entire interest of G. W. Chapin, and has since conducted the business under the name of H. Chapin's Son.

Mr. Chapin is an enterprising and public-spirited citizen. In 1868, and again in 1870, he was elected to the Legislature, lower house, and in 1872 was chosen to the Senate from the Fifteenth District. In 1856 he united in marriage with Mary E. Pike, and has two sons living.

CHARLES FRANK MAXFIELD.

Charles F. Maxfield was born in Winsted, Conn., July 13, 1853. He was educated at the Winchester Military School, the Cheshire Military Institute, and at the private select school of the Rev. Mr. Upson, in Washington, Conn. His school-days terminated before he was twenty years of age, and he then went to Brooklyn, and entered the mercantile establishment of T. K. Horton & Co. as clerk. Here he remained about three years, and then went traveling extensively in Great Britain and throughout Continental Europe. Upon his return he entered the employ of T. J. Briggs, manufacturer of fine decorations and wall-paper, and subsequently engaged with J. S. Warren & Co., the largest manufacturers of wall-paper in this country, as traveling salesman, and though the youngest of a large force of experienced salesmen in the employ of this firm, during the first year his sales amounted to over one hundred thousand dollars, strikingly illustrating his business tact and go-ahead-ativeness.

Nov. 20, 1878, he united in marriage with Georgetta Robbins, of Brooklyn, N. Y., youngest daughter of the late Daniel A. Robbins, a large builder and enterprising business man of that city.

In 1879, Mr. Maxfield purchased the old Maxfield homestead at New Hartford, and the year following negotiated for the place known as the old Hart place, formerly owned by Maj. Sanford Brown, on the hill north of the village, and immediately commenced the improvement of the locality by cutting off the forest. He carried forward the improvements with energy, graded, laid out walks and drives, etc., and began the erection of a residence which when completed will be one of the finest in interior and exterior decorations in Connecticut. It is charmingly located on a high eminence, commanding a beautiful view of the Farmington River and the valley, the village of New Hartford, and the hills beyond. It is an elegant country-seat, and reflects much credit upon the æsthetic taste of its owner.

Mr. Maxfield is an enthusiast in the breeding of fancy stock, particularly that of Swiss cattle, and has carried off numerous diplomas and sweepstakes at competitive exhibitions. He is the owner of the famous bull Conrod Tell, now considered the best bull in the United States by the best judges. He is a breeder of a high class of poultry, and has more than fifteen distinct varieties. He is a leading representative of a class of wealthy experimental and progressive agriculturists.

Politically he is a Democrat, and a member of the Church of the Redeemer, of Brooklyn, of which the Rev. William A. Leonard is rector.

Mr. Maxfield is about the average height, and his face shows intelligence, foresight, and decision as the chief elements of his character. He is a public-spirited citizen, of a genial and social nature, and very popular with the masses.

CHESTER W. GILMAN.

Chester W. Gilman was born June 8, 1818, in Hartland, Conn., son of George C. Gilman. His early life was spent on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years of age, when he commenced for himself. His first business enterprise was peddling clocks in Ohio, where he was engaged some ten months, when he returned to Hartland with two hundred dollars saved from his earnings, with which he purchased cows to stock a farm near the old home, which he contracted for at three thousand one hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. Gilman remained on this farm until 1854. At that time he had paid for the farm and built a good house and barn. Thinking he could better his condition, he exchanged for the large farm in New Hartford, where he has since resided, and which under his management has become one of the finest farms in that part of the country. His specialty being dairy and blooded stock, he has a fine herd of Alderney cattle and a good grade of horses.

Mr. Gilman was married when twenty-eight years of age to Antinett Smith, of East Haddam, Conn., youngest of fourteen children,—seven sons and seven daughters; all the sons and six of the daughters grew to adult age. Mrs. Gilman died in 1870, leaving five children, one daughter having previously died at eight years of age. Of the five children that survived their mother three are now living,—Jennie, married David W. Meeker, of Florida; Mary E., married George Spencer, a merchant of New Hartford; Henry lives at home. Two sons—Chester W. and Elias E.—were killed by a railroad accident at Tariffville, Jan. 15, 1877.

Mr. Gilman was a second time married,—June, 1872, to Julia A., daughter of Allen Jewett, of Winsted.

Politically Mr. Gilman is a Republican; has served several terms as selectman, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1872.

Mr. Gilman and his wife are active and consistent members of the Congregational Church. He has been superintendent of the Sunday-school, and is one of the substantial representative men of his town.

CHAPTER XL.

NEW MILFORD.

Geographical—Topographical—Indian History—Documentary History—Original Indian Deed, etc.

THIS town is located in the southwestern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Kent, on the east by Washington, Roxbury, and Bridgewater, on the south by Bridgewater and the town of Brookfield, in Fairfield County, and on the west by the towns of New Fairfield and Sherman, in Fairfield County. The surface is hilly and broken, and the soil generally good. It is well adapted to agriculture, and the raising of tobacco forms one of the chief occupations of the inhabitants. It is watered by the Housatonic River and its tributaries.

INDIAN HISTORY.

When Litchfield County was first settled at Woodbury, in 1672, the Potatuck tribe of Indians was the only and largest tribe in this part of Connecticut; and its existence had been known by the Connecticut colonists for more than thirty years. As civilization appeared, advanced, and caused the most powerful tribes of Southern New England—the Narragansets of Rhode Island, the Mohegans and Pequots of Western Connecticut—to disappear, the section not yet reached by the white man became the home of the aboriginal inhabitants. The Wepawaugs inhabited Milford when that town was settled, and the Poquassets resided at Derby, where their principal village was located. As Milford was settled in 1639, some fifteen years before Derby, those of the Milford Indians who did not go West to the Six Nations, or remained in the town, joined the Poquassets, and remained there till the white settler made his appearance, when the Indian seems to have immediately made preparations to leave for some wild and secluded locality where he could enjoy the solitude his nature so much craved. Thus the Poquassets, most of them, united with the Potatucks, whose principal village was in the present town of Southbury, on the Housatonic River, where they reserved a large tract of land in all their deeds to the first settlers of Woodbury, as also in the confirmatory purchase of the inhabitants of that town in 1706. At the time New Milford was settled Nomwag was their chief. That the tribes formed from the original powerful tribes found here by the first settlers of Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island, and Connecticut were less powerful, and that the growing disintegrating clans therefrom became of less consequence as the country became settled, may, perhaps, be true to a certain extent.

The fierce spirit of the Pequots was broken at the last battle at "Shoco Swamp," and they never afterwards were a terror to the whites. As was natural, the broken tribes would rally, if possible, after being driven back again and again into the shades of the primeval forest, and make a stand like a defeated army hotly pursued by a victorious enemy. History has recorded the acts of cruelty and deeds of daring and bravery exhibited by the natives when opposed by the first English footsteps on our shores; but, as the great tribes have been broken and scattered, they have had less power of resisting the advance of the white man, and the incidents of more local history have not been recorded. This probably accounts for the remark of De Forrest in his "History of the Indians of Connecticut," where he says of the Potatucks, "Their insignificance is sufficiently proved by the almost total silence of authors concerning them, and by their noiseless disappearance."

The Potatucks were a powerful tribe, with whom the white settlers never had any difficulty; but as the neighboring settlement of Woodbury increased in population they longed for some more congenial retreat, and in time most of them joined the clan at New Milford.

When the Weautenaugs of New Milford first became a distinct clan is not known. That they occupied lands here opposite the village prior to 1671 is quite evident; but how long before that we have no positive proof. That they were then an insignficant clan is evident from the fact that they were unknown in history and in song, only as the name of the place would indicate some knowledge of the locality by the colonial authorities. Afterwards, however, they became of more importance, probably as early as 1650. At the time of the settlement of New Milford there were probably small clans along the Housatonic River northward, refugees from larger tribes, and, if not making any permanent place their residence, roamed over the vast expanse of wilderness for purposes of hunting and fishing. There was, undoubtedly, quite an extensive clan in the southern part of Berkshire Co., Mass., on the Housatonic River; which had been there many years among those grand old mountains, the natural home of the red man, springing from the Mahikanders or River Indians, who lived on the east side of the Hudson River below Albany. But all these small tribes or clans were very insignificant and weak in comparison with that large and powerful tribe of Northern New York, the Mohawks, who claimed jurisdiction over all the territory of Western Massachusetts and Connecticut, and came down annually to collect tribute from them, which must be satisfied or a fierce army of blood-thirsty Mohawks would soon appear among them to enforce their demands. They were compelled to pay for fear of death or captivity. The cry, "A Mohawk!" caused all the signal-fires to be lighted on the mountain heights, and drove the peaceful Indians along the Housatonic River into their forts, or to the settlements of the whites for protection. The New Milford Indians had forts on both sides of the Housatonic River, probably in the vicinity of the Steep Rock, about six miles above the village, as appears from an ancient map of Weautenaug, found when the town was first settled. And there was also a fort somewhere in the locality of the residence of E. T. Brewer, from which circumstance the place has always been called "Fort Hill."

The Rev. Stanley Griswold, in a "centennial sermon" delivered in 1801, says,—

"The natives had sundry fortresses, or military stations, in and about this town to guard against attacks from distant tribes. Some spots in the town bear an allusion to them to this day, as Fort Hill, Guarding Mountain, etc. It has been said that all the tribes along the river, from its source to the sea, were in strict alliance and friendship, and that by means of certain sounds made on the guarding heights an alarm might be spread within the space of three hours through the whole line of the tribes, a distance of near two hundred miles."

Guarding Mountain, spoken of by Mr. Griswold, is on the west side of the Housatonic River near "Conetia Park," the grounds of the New Milford Agricultural Association. There has been some doubt expressed whether these Indian forts and guarding heights were of Indian or colonial origin. But it seems that there should be but little doubt that they were means of defense, and signals established by the Indians themselves, principally against the incursions of the Mohawks. The Western Massachusetts and Connecticut Indians were friendly with the white settlers, who almost invariably made satisfactory purchases of their lands, and the natives were never engaged in wars among themselves. There were mountains used for guarding heights in Woodbury and Litchfield, and all along up the Housatonic River. These forts and signal-stations were in existence and use when the whites first settled here. The first white settlers in New Milford never had any fears from the Mohawks, neither is there any historical account or tradition of any depredations upon the white settlements up the river. When the Mohawks came to punish our Indians for not paying tribute, they would fly to their forts, and, if they could not reach them, to the houses of the English for shelter. Sometimes their enemies would pursue them so closely that they would enter the houses with them, and kill them in presence of the family. If there was time to shut the doors they never forced an entrance, nor did they on any occasion do the least harm to the English, always being on the most friendly terms with them."* The garrisons authorized to be erected by the colonial government of Woodbury, Danbury, and Weautenaug in 1708, and also the Committee of War for the frontier towns in Fairfield County, and of New Milford in 1709, against the assaults of the enemy, were all independent of the efforts of the natives for their own defense before these acts were passed, and before the town was settled. The early colonists had fears of attacks from the Indians, and there were occasional alarms; but time proved that these alarms were generally groundless, and the forces sent for defense were soon removed.

Later, however, in 1722, the Eastern Indians and the Province of Massachusetts Bay were at war, and it was felt in Connecticut; and in 1723–24 there was a considerable excitement and alarm, when the English and French wars were prevailing and the frontier settlers were exposed to danger by the French inciting the Indians to attack them; but the excitement soon subsided.

From the ferocious and treacherous character of the Indians it is no wonder that the early settlers of the country should have fears of hostility and war from them. In 1675, at a meeting of the Council of the colonial government, they came to an agreement with our Indians here in New Milford, "who engaged to continue in friendship wth us, and to be enemies to o^{r} enemies, and to discouer them timely, or destroy them; that they would do no prejudice to the English." They never manifested a disposition of hostility to the colonists, and were always friendly to them after the town was settled.†

The colony was also suspicious of our Indians during the French and Indian wars; as, perhaps, they well might be, although subsequent events proved that their fears were groundless; although about five years before the settlement of our town the terrible border wars broke out in all their fury. A treaty of peace having been entered into between the government of Canada and the Five Nations in New York, the whole weight of the war fell on New England. Many towns on the frontier had been burned by the Indians,‡ and the colonial government at Hartford had fears that the enemies and Indians were preparing to make a descent upon the frontier towns of New England, by information which had been received from Col. Schuyler. At a council at Hartford, in February, 1706–7, a letter was read from Capt. John Miner and Mr. John Sherman to the Deputy Governor signifying their suspicion that the Potatuck and Weautenaug Indians were invited to join with the enemy."‖ There was, in the opinion of the government, danger that our Indians would be allured from their former agreement of comity and friendship, and be induced to join our enemies. Writings were presented relative to the matter, and the Indians were examined relative to the inducements held out to them to become the enemies of the settlers. For the preservation of the small frontier towns, and to prevent their revolt, the honorable the Governor and Council ordered Capt. John Minor and Mr. John Sherman, of Woodbury, "with all convenient speed to remove the said Indians down to Fairfield or Stratford, or both, as shall be judged most convenient." Provision was made that "if by reason of sickness prevailing among them they cannot at present be removed, then to take two of their principal persons and convey them to Fairfield, there to be kept safely as hostages to secure the fidelity of those that remain at those inland places."* But it does not appear that the tribes were removed by the direction of the Council, though hostages may have been taken to carry out the object of the order.

The only time when the Weautenaug Indians manifested a warlike spirit was about the year 1725, when it was reported to the Governor and Council at Hartford, that they and the Potatuck Indians had "lately had several dances, and sundry of them have painted themselves, as is usual for Indians to do that design war." In consequence of this act, and because painting was the badge of war used by the Indians that were then engaged in war with the English, an order was made declaring that if any Indian shall be seen painted after the 21st day of August, 1725, they shall be taken for enemies and provided against as such. It was supposed that there was a secret understanding among the Indians of the colony, and that they had been incited to acts of cruelty and murder by the English. Soon after the New Milford Indians had painted themselves and had had dances, the shepherd of Stratford was taken by two Indians, painted, and carried captive and stamped till he was breathless, and buried as dead, and David Lane, a child of Stratford, barbarously murdered and mangled. In consequence of these hostile developments, the Indians were restrained within certain bounds, to be considered as enemies if found without those limits, and could be summoned before any authorized English persons to give account of their rambles and business.

The planting fields of the Indians were on the west side of the river, opposite the village, and have to this day been known as the "Indian Fields." These fields were reserved in their deed to Milford gentlemen of Feb. 18, 1702–3, which appears in a former chapter. There were several Indian burying-grounds in the town, and it was in this reservation that the largest one is found. It was on Fort Hill, south of the residence of E. T. Brewer. The Rev. Mr. Griswold states that their graves were of a circular form, and that they were buried sitting up, as in a natural posture upon the ground. There were two other burying-grounds on the east side of the river,—one, the bluff, in the vicinity of West Street, in the village, and the other was, on the authority of the Rev. George S. Bennett, after crossing the Aspetuck River, on the river road which passes through it, where skeletons have from time to time been unearthed. A few years since, while digging the cellar of a dwelling-house on West Street in the village, the workmen found some parts of the skeleton of an Indian, where the second burying-ground spoken of was located, and near by were the relics buried with their owner, which might be needed in the fair hunting-grounds to which the departed had gone when he reached the spirit-land. There was a beautifully-formed tomahawk, a finely-modeled pipe, some well-preserved dishes, and several nicely-wrought arrow-heads and stone hatchets. Some years ago some of our citizens made excavations in the largest cemetery in the Indian fields on Fort Hill, and found many graves as described by Mr. Griswold, containing the implements of war and necessary utensils in their journey beyond the setting sun. The probability is that at one time they had quite a village on Fort Hill, near Guarding Mountain. They did not long retain possession of their planting-field. In 1705, John Mitchel, of Woodbury, purchased the Indian fields, and at the date of the settlement of the town their principal village was at the Trout Falls, on the Housatonic River, about two miles below the village, to which the natives had given the name Mitichawon. This is one of the most inviting places of residence for the red men that can well be imagined in this section of the State. The river seems to have broken through the mountain, leaving a deep gorge, of perhaps a quarter of a mile in length, through which the water descends quite rapidly, affording one of the best fishing-places on the river. Here were plenty of salmon, and in the spring of the year shad and lamprey-eels were found in great abundance. The Potatuck Indians of Woodbury finally sold a large part of their lands, and many of their leading men joined with others in forming the Weautenaug tribe.† It was not, however, till 1733 that they sold about three-quarters of their reservation in the southwestern part of Southbury, when they seemed to have all removed to New Milford. When they commenced coming to the Great Falls is not definitely known, but it must have been some time before the town was settled. The greatest man of the tribe was Wereaumaug, who came about 1715, and was soon chosen their chief. He had been a sagamore of the Potatuck tribe. There has been much speculation as to the size of this tribe. Mr. Griswold, in his "Century Sermon," states that when the town was settled there were about two hundred warriors connected with them. President Stiles, of Yale College, thought that there were three hundred warriors, while Mr. De Forrest, in his "History of the Indians of Connecticut," discredits both the above statements, on the ground that "tradition is always unsafe, and always exaggerates; and even our recollection, when it refers to events which happened in our youth, inclines us often to extend the truth, never to underrate it." Making all allowances for the uncertainty of tradition, it will probably be safe to say that they had one hundred and fifty warriors at the time to which these writers referred. It is quite probable that Wereaumaug brought many of his old tribe with him, and that about that time the tribe became more powerful, as it must have also been increasing quite rapidly before that time. It would be within the range of probability to place the number of warriors in 1715 at two hundred. At this time, and for a few years afterwards, it must have been larger than at any previous period. It would seem that at the time this great chief came here the tribe must have numbered one thousand population, one-fifth of whom were to be considered warriors.* I am, however, inclined to believe that there were that number here when the town was settled, as Mr. Griswold conversed with people whose memory extended back to the period, and the tradition, not coming second-handed, must have been more reliable.

Soon after Wereaumaug came to this tribe he built a "palace" on the bluff near the Great Falls, which was his residence. As this was the capital of the tribe, this house of their chief was a native resort. According to all accounts, nothing like it had before been seen. The Rev. Mr. Griswold says that "on the inner walls of this 'palace,' which was of bark with the smooth side inwards, were pictured every known species of beast, bird, fish, and insect, from the largest down to the smallest. This was said to have been done by an artist, whom a friendly prince at a great distance sent him for that purpose, as Hiram to Solomon."

The Rev. David Boardman, the first minister, was held in high esteem by Wereaumaug, and had a high opinion of "his great abilities and eminent virtues." The "distinguished sachem," as he termed him, seems to have been favorably impressed with the doctrines of the Christian religion under the instructions of the minister. Although the sachem's wife and all his tribe were not in sympathy with the religion of the first settlers, yet in his last sickness he desired to see Mr. Boardman, who he felt would give him some consolation of cheer and hope in his rapid flight towards the river of truth.

Hon. David S. Boardman, a grandson of the first minister, treasured an anecdote, which was related to Mr. John W. De Forrest upon his visit to New Milford, and first published in his "History of the Indians of Connecticut." He says that "once in particular, while Mr. Boardman was at the sachem's bedside, the latter asked him to pray, to which he of course assented. It happened that there was at this time in the village a sick child, whom a pow-wow had undertaken to cure by means of the usual writhings, grimaces, and hallooing. As soon as Mr. Boardman began his prayer, Wereaumaug's wife sent for this Indian clergyman, stationed him at the door, and bade him commence his exercises. The pow-wow immediately set up a prodigious shouting and howling. Mr. Boardman prayed louder, so that the sick man might hear him above the din. Each raised his voice more and more as he went on. The Indians gathered round, anxious for the success of their champion. The pow-wow was fully determined to tire out the black-coat, and Mr. Boardman was equally resolved that he would not be put to silence in his duty by this son of Belial. The indomitable minister afterwards declared that, according to the best of his belief, he prayed three hours without stopping before victory declared in his favor. The pow-wow, completely exhausted with his efforts, gave one tremendous yell, by way of covering his retreat, then took to his heels, and never stopped till he was cooling himself up to his neck in the Housatonic."

Wereaumaug died about 1735, the last chief sachem of the tribe, which was now destined to very soon disappear from the earth. He was buried on the mountain, near the place where he had resided so long. A pile of stones on an open plot of ground marks the place where his remains repose. The Indian customs were observed on his burial. The warriors, now few in number, painted their faces, and all that belong to the tribe deposited a stone upon the grave. The custom of placing a stone on the grave is kept up by the Indians when they visit the grave afterwards.

EARLY EXPLORATIONS AND PURCHASES.

IT is quite probable that very soon after the settlement was commenced at Windsor, in 1633, the colonists became somewhat familiar, under the spirit of exploration and adventure, with the territory now comprising the township of New Milford, although it was seventy-four years from that time before the first settler came to the locality. Woodbury, the nearest town, had been settled thirty-five years before a white man had made his home in these solitudes, and they were familiar with the locality. The attention of the people of Fairfield and Stratford was turned to Weautenaug, the Indian name of New Milford, in 1670, when, upon the petition of Capt. Nathan Gold, Mr. Jehu and John Burr, the General Court at Hartford granted them liberty to make the purchase of the place, "and the lands adjacent, of the Indians, to make a plantation, if it be capable for such a thing." Mr. Gold, Mr. Jehu Burr, Mr. Hill, Mr. Thomas Fayrechild, and Mr. Thomas Fitch were appointed a committee "for the well ordering of the planting of the same, and also to entertain inhabitants." And it was declared "that any of the honest inhabitants of this colony that are in want of land, may have liberty to be entertained there till the place is filled, provided, if the place be not planted in four years, it shall return to the court's disposal again."*

Whether the committee found it incapable of making a plantation or not we do not know, or whether the attempt ever was made. There was, however, no settlement made under this authority from the General Court.

In 1775 the General Court appointed Lieut. Joseph Judson, Mr. John Burkes, Edward Worenston, and William Judd "to view the lands of Derby, Woodbury, Mattatuck, Pootatuck, and Wyantenuck,† and the distances between place and place, and to consider what may be suitable bounds for each town, and present the same to the court in October next."

In 1679 the General Court ordered the committee appointed in 1675 "to attend the said service as soon as may be, and make report thereof in May next; and that no farm be layd out within eight miles of either of those places till the committee have made their return."

The seeds of a controversy are now sown which resulted in a conflict between the Indian and colonial title to the lands of Weautenaug, which was not settled for nearly ten years after the patent of the town from the colonial government was obtained, and which caused several years' tedious delay in the settlement of the place. Henry Tomlins, a freeman of Stratford, had purchased land, it is said, of thieves in a private way, to the prejudice of the Indians. Two deeds were given to Tomlins "of an island in, and of lands on either side of, Oautenock River, extending more than seven miles in length and six in breadth; one of these deeds was given in April, and the other in July, 1671,‡ by Pocono, Ringgo, Quoconecoe, and Whimta, and by Perainos and Cawkapotons," who professed to be the Indian proprietors.

In 1677, Scantemung, the first chief sachem of Weautenaug of whom we have any knowledge, made complaint to the General Court, then in session at Hartford, of these purchases, and of the trespasses upon the rights of his tribe. The whole matter in controversy was referred by the court to the Fairfield County Court. The ultimate decision was against Tomlins and those who came here from Stratford under their pretended Indian deeds, and they were obliged to quit the occupation of the lands of which they had taken possession, and make way for the claimants under the colonial patent and title.

Other efforts were soon made to establish a plantation at Weautenaug. In 1678 the General Court, at Hartford, granted the Honorable Deputy Governor, Maj. Robert Treat, with Mr. Bryan, Sr., or Jr., Capt. John Bird, Lieut. Samuel Eells, "liberty to view and buy convenient land for a plantation in those adjacent places about Pootatuck, Wiantenuck, or thereabouts; and when the said land is purchased, it shall remain to be disposed as the court shall see cause and reason to order for the planting of it." But it is to be twenty-five years more before the people of Milford take a decisive step towards the settlement of the town and actually secure a patent, and hold proprietors' meetings for ordering and regulating the new settlement.

In 1694 the wilds of Weautenaug were penetrated by white people from a distance, when commissioners of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, and New Jersey and the Five Nations of Indians met at Albany. Capt. Wadsworth, of Hartford, commanded a guard of sixty dragoons which accompanied the party from Boston to Albany. The Rev. Benjamin Wadsworth, afterwards president of Harvard College, was one of the attendants, and from his diary it appears that they returned through Weautenaug to Hartford, by way of Woodbury. He says, "About noon came to Ten-Mile River, called so from its distance from Wyantenuck,—runs into Wyantenuck, —by ye side of which we rode, I believe, six or seven miles, and passed ye same a little after sundown. Wyantenuck River is ye same yt passeth thro' Ousetonnuck; it is Stratford River also." He also speaks about some parts of the way being through "a hideous prowling wilderness," and that some parts of their road was "not so extreme bad." In August, 1696, Capt. Whiting came from Hartford to Wiantonock, and the General Court allowed five shillings per horse in cash for their hire thither.

It was seventy years after William Holmes erected the first frame house at Windsor, in 1633, before a patent was received from the General Court of New Milford. Woodbury, adjoining it on the east, had been settled twenty-one years, and Danbury, the nearest town on the southwest of it, had been settled nineteen years, and the remaining part of Litchfield County, as it is now divided, was a dense solitude, and known as the "Wilderness." The people of Milford, the town from which our town derived its name, had some years before taken steps to purchase the territory of the Indians, and had secured the authority from the General Court.

The time had now come for them to take hold of the matter in earnest, and sufficient numbers of their leading citizens were found ready to form a company to purchase the colonial title. The matter was agitated in their town-meetings, and Jan. 1, 1701–2, it was voted "to purchase Weautenaug of the heathen. And if any freeman not present have a mind to come in for a share, they have liberty to do so, and if any present have a mind to exempt himself from a share, he likewise has liberty to do so." A committee was chosen, consisting of Col. Robert Treat, Ensign George Clark, Ensign Joseph Treat, Mr. Thomas

Clark, Ensign Joseph Peck, Sergt. Jonathan Baldwin, and Sergt. Timothy Baldwin, to gain or purchase the land, to treat with the Indians, and to secure the town's interest there to the best of their skill. From this first practical effort made to commence the settlement, eighty individuals were soon obtained who were willing to hazard the doubtful experiment of opening up these dark wilds to become the abodes of civilized men.* It was the home of the aborigines, on one of the most beautiful streams of water in the State, where, at the Falls of Mitichawon, a most wild and romantic gorge through the mountains, the salmon sparkled in the sun as he was taken from the water, punctured by the dart of the savage, and where the red man had his council-fires, and was a strong and powerful nation. Its dense forests were full of wild game, and the panther, the bear, the wolf, and the deer roamed unmolested through its wild wastes. The committee made the purchase of the Governor and company, and received a patent of the tract, which is as follows, viz.:

PATENT, AND NAMES OF THE PURCHASERS.

The bounds of Weautenaug, by this patent, commenced at a small stream that empties into the Housatonic River at Gaylordsville, and is the present dividing line, in part, between the present towns of Sherman and New Milford, and from that northwest corner the line struck the Rocky River, and followed that river, and left it at the small brook, from which the line extended to the northeast corner of the town of Danbury, which point has never been changed. In running from that point to Woodbury, a portion of the town of Brookfield was included in the bounds of the patent. The north line was a straight one from the mouth of the brook, on the west side of the Housatonic River, at Gaylordsville, to the Bee Brook, as is supposed, in the present town of Washington, and then, following that stream, to the Shepaug River. There can be but little doubt where the east boundary line of New Milford ran upon an examination of the patent of the town of Woodbury, which was granted by the General Courts in 1686, and also a reference to the five Indian deeds of Woodbury, and the confirmatory purchase from the Indians of May, 1706, which covered all the former Indian grants. The west boundary line of Woodbury, by its patent, is very indefinite when it says "upon Potatuck River (the Housatonic), the middle of the stream, and the commons on the west." It is quite clear that it was west on the Potatuck till it came to the Shepaug River, before it reaches the New Milford patent. The only way to determine the commons on the west is by a reference to the Indian deeds. The first Indian deed of Woodbury, in 1659, does not give a clear idea of the west line, as it comprises a large tract in Litchfield County. The Shepaug purchase of March 17, 1685–86, which covered two-thirds of the present town of Roxbury, extended only to the Shepaug River on the west. By the confirmatory deed of May, 1706, seven miles, by estimation, at the north end, between Waterbury and Milford, "late purchase, about fourscore rods west of Shepaug River, at ye Steep Rock, and so running on ye west side of sd. river of ye same breadth westward to ye mouth of sd river to ye great river (Housatonic)."† This refers to the New Milford patent, but does not affect the west line of New Milford, on the Shepaug River, north of the point fourscore rods west of the river at Steep Rock. At the time the New Milford patent was granted, in 1703, the east bounds of the town, upon a comparison of the two patents and the Indian deeds, was mostly on the Shepaug River. The lines between the two towns have since, however, been perambulated and fixed where they are now.

According to the best estimate that can be made of the territorial area covered by the colonial patent, eighty-four square miles of territory were granted to the one hundred and nine original first purchasers and proprietors of New Milford. The price paid by each proprietor for his right was twenty-four shillings, or four dollars. A half-right cost twelve shillings, or two dollars. There were ninety-nine whole or twenty-four-shilling rights, and ten half or twelve-shilling rights. The number of whole rights, by making the ten half-rights into five whole rights, would have been one hundred and four. The whole rights then would amount to five hundred and sixteen acres and a small fraction of land, at four dollars for the whole, which shows what civilization does to affect the price of real estate.

The first Indian deed which the colonists received of Weautenaug was dated Feb. 8, 1702–3.

There seems to have been no action taken by the inhabitants of Milford under the authority granted by the General Court in May, 1702, and further authority was obtained at the October session in 1703, when the following act was passed:

* Lambert's History of the Colony of New Haven.

† Cothren's History of Ancient Woodbury, chap. ii. pp. 55–56.

"This Court doe grant to the towne of Milford, purchasers of a tract of land of the Indians (which land lieth at Wiantenuck) for a township, liberty according to their purchase to take out a pattent signed by the Governr and Secretary under the seal of the Colony: always provided it be not an infringement to any former legall purchases or proprieties, as also that they doe make a settlement upon said land within five years under the conduct of a comittee for the stating of the town plott and laying out the lotts. The name of the said town to be New Milford.

"This Court doe appoint the Honrd Colonll Robert Treat, Mr. Thomas Clark, Ensign George Clark, Ensign Joseph Treat, Ensign Joseph Peck, Serj't Jonathan Baldwin, and Serjeant Timothy Baldwin, they or any five of them, a comittee for the regulation of the township purchased by the inhabitants of Milford lying at Wiantanuck, they bearing the charges."

THE FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

The time had now come for the Milford proprietors to endeavor to settle the territory which they had purchased. Most of them did not probably expect to remove from their favorable location on the Sound to the wild region of the red man, some distance from there, in the wilderness, but were ready to enter into any speculation that might offer in the rights they had purchased. They had bought a large tract of land for a very small consideration, which some day they expected would be developed into rich and productive farms, supporting an increasing population of people of sturdy industry and valor. Most of them were from among the leading business men of Milford, and some were men of note in the colony, possessing great talents and indomitable energy of character.

FIRST PROPRIETORS' MEETING.

The first meeting of the proprietors and purchasers of New Milford was held at Milford, April 17, 1706, when the following votes were passed:

"Agreed and voted that the town plat and home lots of New Milford shall be speedily pitched & laid out by the committee chosen & established by the General Court according to & by the rules & orders that the Proprietors shall agree upon and prescribe for their direction.

"That there be but two ranks or sorts of lots, one a four and twenty shilling lot, and the other a twelve shilling lot, and that all the lots be laid out in twelve shilling lots. That what is wanting in the quality of the land in the several lots be made up in quantity. That there be two twenty four shilling lots more than the number of the Proprietors, laid out for the use of the Proprietors, to be disposed of by two thirds parts of the Proprietors. That those only who first go to settle there at New Milford shall draw lots and they shall take therein lots together, and they shall have liberty to begin where they please, & they that come afterwards, either by themselves or assigns shall take their lots as they come to settle there, next lot to him that went before him, he that hath a four and twenty shilling right to take the two next lots lying together.

Under these simple directions of the proprietors, the committee, consisting of Samuel Eells, Edward Camp, Joseph Treat, and Joseph Peck, after going to Woodbury to determine how they commenced their settlements and laid out their home-lots, made a report of their doings to a meeting of the proprietors held at Milford, Dec. 9, 1707, in which they say,—

"After the best advice we could come at or obtain from Woodbury men, have pitched the town plat on Asepetuck hill and have there laid out 16 home lots, seven acres and a half to a home lot for two half shares, in order to proceed according to the order and agreement of the proprietors."

It was also voted "that there be a division of ten acres of land laid out under the same rules as have been agreed upon about the home-lots."

Aspetuck Hill is the hill north of the present village, now called Town Hill. The Town Hill of the early days was what is now called Prospect Hill, where was quite an extensive park or common, laid out for the purpose of having sufficient pathways to the highways that might run out from it in the future.

In consequence of the conflicting claims between the Indian and colonial titles, arising from the Indian deeds given to Henry Tomlins in 1671, the proprietors, probably to encourage settlers to come to New Milford, at their meeting in December, 1707, decided,—

"That if any person or persons that claim not under us, shall presume to molest or disturb any person that settles there orderly, it is agreed that all the proprietors will defend him from those that shall molest him in a course of law, and that all the charges shall be born equally according to their proportions, that is of the charges in tryal of the title of the land in a course of law, and no further."

In 1708 an effort was made to settle these conflicting rights, and Mr. Samuel Clark, Jr., Ensign Joseph Peck, and Jonathan Law were chosen by the proprietors "to treat with the Stratford men about the lands which they claim at New Milford, and to agree with them fully and finally;" but this attempt to come to an understanding with them was unsuccessful, and the proprietors, in April, 1709, decided that "we will pay the charges that may be expended in managing the cause between Capt. Eels, Capt. Treat, Ensign Peck, and Sergt. Camp, and Mr. Read, Tomlins, Shelton, Blackleech, as there shall or may be occasion."

In March, 1707–8, the proprietors levied "three shillings upon every twenty-four-shilling right, and proportionally on a twelve-shilling right, for the defraying the charges aforesaid," and December, 1709, the powers of the committee for agreement with Mr. Read and his partners were continued. It was not, however, till after the termination of the litigation in reference to the title of the territory covered by the colonial patent, about the year 1712, that settlers commenced in any numbers to take possession of their lots and erect their dwellings. The first white settler who made this town his permanent residence was John Noble, of Westfield, Mass., who came in the year 1707. Col. John Read, one of the parties to the legal controversy as to the title of the Milford proprietors, came here quite early to defend his title from the natives; whether before Mr. Noble or not is unknown. He erected a dwelling-house in the town, northwesterly from the present residence of Dr. George Taylor, which was used as a church after the adverse decision of the lawsuit and his removal from the town, till the first meeting-house was erected, in 1720. All we know of him is that he preached the first sermon in the town, having once been a candidate for the ministry, and a few years after his removal from the town became an eminent attorney in the city of Boston. It is supposed that he resided in Reading, Conn., a short time after he left New Milford.

In December, 1710, Maj. Samuel Eells, Capt. Joseph Treat, Lieut. Joseph Peck, Sergt. Samuel Clark, Jonathan Law, John Noble, John Bostwick, and Sergt. Zachariah Baldwin were appointed a committee, any five of whom could act, "for ordering the settlement of New Milford, dividing the lands, considering how many families may be accommodated in and about the place where the town-plat is already pitched, leaving suitable commons, highways, etc."

This committee were all of them among the first proprietors and purchasers of the town, except Messrs. Noble and Bostwick, who were then residents of the town, all of whom were well calculated to perform the duties assigned them in a satisfactory manner. They "met and took a view of the land and situation of the same," and made a report of their orders to a proprietors' meeting held at Milford, May 29, 1712. A better scheme for dividing the lands and making the allotments to each one could not well be devised. They confirmed the division of seven acres and a half for a home-lot taken up, fenced, or built upon, and ten acres for a pasture, made Dec. 9, 1707, and made two new forty-acre divisions to a whole share, and twenty acres to a half share, and provided that one of the forty-acre divisions should be upland, and that they should be taken up in one entire piece.

For the purpose of getting a clearer idea of the method adopted for making choice of the different divisions, it may be well to insert several of the orders of the committee, as follows:

"That in the second division of 40 acres, the liberty of pitching or making choise shall be directly contrary to the pitch or choise in the first forty acre division, the last proprietor in the first choise shall have the first choise in the second division, and so on till the first proprietor in the first division cometh to the last in the second division; as also in the third division, and in the fourth, if any hereafter shall be, the liberty of choise shall be as in the first division.

"That in the first 40 acre division, the liberty of choise shall be first to those who have already settled or built here, with this limitation that they shall not make their pitch further Southward than an east and west line across the fishing falls, nor further northward than an east and west line half a mile above the mouth of Aspetuck River, excepting only Mr. John Nobles, who has already improved land at Rocky river, who has liberty to take his pitch in that place.

"The next thirty proprietors that shall here come to settle shall have liberty as they come, to take their home lots of 7 and ½ acres, on Aspetuck hill or plain northward, also their proportions of the 10 acre divisions, and their 40 acres to an whole share or half so much to an half share in order as they shall come to settle here, anywhere between the southermost line before mentioned & an east and west line one mile southward of the great mountain.

"That the rest of the proprietors as they shall hereafter settle their several properties, shall take up their home lots, and their ten acre divisions, and make their pitch for their first division anywhere within the whole bounds."

At this time there were but twelve families in the town; but under these rules and regulations, and after the legal victory they had achieved, settlers began to come here to make their permanent residence.

The twelve families were John Noble, Sr., John Bostwick, Sr., Roger Brownson, Zachariah Ferriss, Benjamin Bostwick, John Noble, Jr., Josiah Bartlet, Samuel Brownson, Samuel Griswold, John Bostwick, Jr., John Weller, Thomas Weller, sixty persons in all, none of them of the original purchasers and proprietors.

Col. Robert Treat, the first of the original first purchasers of the town, was one of the most eminent men of the colony. He became a colonel of the Connecticut troops in 1674. In 1683 he was chosen Governor of the colony, to which office he was re-elected for fifteen years. He married a daughter of Edmond Tapp, Esq., and there is the following tradition concerning the match: While making a call at Mr. Tapp's, he took the girl upon his knee and commenced trotting her. "Robert," said she, "be still that. I had rather be treated than trotted." He then proposed marriage, to which she immediately consented.* He never came to the town, and died in July, 1716. Upon a dispute with the Rev. Mr. Andrew, as to the title, by his last will, of his twenty-four-shilling right at New Milford, his four grandchildren—Joseph, Robert, Samuel, and Jonathan—deeded their interest in the New Milford house to Mr. Andrew in 1730–31. Samuel, Col. Robert Treat's son, deeded his interest to Joseph Treat, son of Lieut. Treat, in July, 1716. The home-lot to this right was laid northward from the town-plat, in the vicinity of Park Lane. Mr. Thomas Clark had a home-lot laid out on Long Mountain in 1723, but he did not come here to reside, and his right went into the hands of his sons, Thomas, Jr., and Jared. Thomas, Jr., deeded his interest to his son Thomas (4th) in 1761. They did not come here to reside. Among those who ultimately owned their right were John Warner, Thomas Noble, and Roger Sherman, who resided here.

Ensign George Mark sold his entire right to Nathan Talcot, who came here to reside, probably after 1720. He deeded a home-lot and dwelling-house to Ebenezer Fisk, situated northeasterly of the common, on Town Hill, and eastward from the meeting-house, which stood on Aspetuck Hill, a little northwest of the residence of the late John P. Treadwell. This same homestead afterwards passed into the hands of Eli Roberts, of Wallingford, about the year 1750, who afterwards removed here.

The whole of the original right of Lieut. Joseph Treat passed into the possession of his son John, who removed here probably after 1721. Where he resided when he first came is not known. As most of his land was laid out at the Shepaug Neck, the present town of Bridgewater, some of it near Hawley's Park, and some near Treat's Park, it is evident he must have resided there, as he owned a dwelling-house there in 1750.

The home-lot that John laid out in the right of his father must have been near the present residence of Stephen G. Beecher. He sold it to Eleazar Beecher in 1732, who came here to reside about that time, and it has remained in the Beecher family from that time to the present.

Ensign Joseph Peck's twenty-four-shilling right was owned by Enoch Burk in 1715, who came here to reside. His home-lot was the farthest one at the north end of Town Street, one of the sixteen on Aspetuck Hill.

James Flinn became the owner of the whole of the right of Jonathan Baldwin, and had his home-lot and all his divisions laid out in the Shepaug Neck, near the "planting-field."

The rights of Capt. Samuel Eells, Sergt. Edmund Camp, and Rev. Mr. Andrew passed into other hands, and there were no home-lots laid to them. Capt. Samuel Eells was a man of influence in the colony, having been a justice of the quorum and an assistant. The Rev. Mr. Andrew was at the time of the purchase and settlement of New Milford the third pastor of the church at Milford, where he continued in the pastoral office fifty-two years, dying in 1738, aged eighty-two years.†

Thomas Welch was an extensive operator in real estate about the time the New Milford purchase was made. He bought a thousand-acre right for eleven pounds, and also owned a large tract of land in Hebron.† Paul Welch became the owner of his father's right after purchasing the interests of his two sisters, after his father's decease. His house was at Park Lane, near the old Thomas Wills' place.

In the earliest times the village, or Centre, was on Aspetuck Hill, as it was then called, north of the present Centre, now known as Town Hill. There were no dwelling-houses on Main Street lower down than the residence of Walter Bostwick, on the west side of the street, and of the residence of the late Deacon G. W. Whittlesey, now the Episcopal church, on the east side of the street. The lower part of the present Main Street was a very miry swamp of trees and thick bushes, where, tradition says, the Indians caught their wild horses by driving them into it and surrounding them there.

It may be interesting to know who made this beautiful hill their home at this early period in our history, as far back as 1712, and exactly where their places of residence were. Of the twelve families who lived in the town in 1712, four of them then lived at the foot of Aspetuck Hill, on the town street or plat. Their names were John Noble, Sr., John Bostwick, Sr., Zachariah Ferriss, and John Weller. Benjamin Bostwick resided on Town Hill, now Prospect Hill;

* Lambert's History of the Colony of New Haven, p. 137.

† Ibid.

John Bostwick, Sr., resided in the vicinity of where John R. Bostwick now lives; Samuel Brownson lived the next place south; Roger Brownson the next south of his brother; John Noble, Jr., lived at the South Farms, now the iron-works, Brookfield, near Gallas Hill; Samuel Prindle lived on the west side of the run; Thomas Weller lived on west side of Great River; Jonah Bartlett; Samuel Griswold.

The tendency of the early settlers to build their villages on some sightly hill is clearly shown in New Milford, although there were many houses on low ground. The inhabitants of Town Hill could have a fine view of the houses on Aspetuck Hill, and imagination carries us back to the time when from either of these hills all the dwelling-houses of the people in the town could be seen with one sweep of the eye. The home-lots on Town Street (Main Street) were generally about twenty rods in breadth on the street. The Town Street, "beginning at John Noble's, Sr., home-lot shall extend so far northward as shall be necessary for building lots to be 20 rods wide, as it is to run up the hill against the front of Saml. Clark's home-lot, and in no place less than 14 or 15 rods wide, except where lots are taken up; and from John Noble's home-lot to extend southward, from thence winding as ye lots are already laid out on the westerly side till it comes to Samuel Holbrook's home-lot, to be 20 rods wide, when the circumstances of the place allows of it."

I will now name the first owners and occupiers of the houses on the west side of Town Street, commencing at the foot of the hill. The first dwelling-house was that of Stephen Noble, and was about where the mansion of Walter B. Bostwick stands. He received a deed from his father, John Noble, of one-half of the original right of Samuel Merwin, one of the first purchasers and proprietors of the town, who did not come here to reside. The second house was that of John Bostwick, Sr., which stood in the vicinity of the residence of Mrs. Frederick Boardman, and must have been erected at a very early date, soon after the lots on Aspetuck Hill were laid out. He was one of the twelve inhabitants who resided here in 1712. The third place was that of Samuel Clark, and stood near the brick house of William D. Black. This was the second lot laid on the west side of the street after the proprietors' meeting of April, 1706, when they decided to speedily pitch the town-plat. The next lot north was also owned by Mr. Clark, but there was no house built upon it for many years at least. The fourth house was the parsonage, the residence of the Rev. Mr. Daniel Boardman, which was about opposite the first meeting-house erected in the town. It was a home-lot laid out for the minister. The fifth residence was that of Jacob Griswold, and it stood in the vicinity of the lot of William D. Black. The sixth house belonged to David Griswold. The seventh residence was that of Benoni Stebbins, and his home-lot was laid out in 1713. William Gaylord owned a home-lot next north of that of Mr. Stebbins, which was afterwards owned by Benjamin Burrell. Mr. Gaylord bought this of Thomas Canfield, an original purchaser. The next house belonged to Roger Brownson, and was one he built himself. He was one of the twelve families here in 1712.

The first house on the plain at the foot of Aspetuck Hill, on the east side of the Town Street, belonged to John Noble, Sr., and was situated down as far as the residence of the late Deacon G. W. Whittlesey. He removed from his log hut under Guarding Mountain here. He was one of the twelve persons here in 1712. The next house was that of John Weller, who leased, and finally bought, the original right of Thomas Smith. The lease was for twelve years from Dec. 28, 1710, and one of the stipulations of the lease was that Mr. Smith should procure one hundred and fifty apple-trees from Woodbury for Weller to plant. It is believed they were set out, etc. His house probably stood in the vicinity of the first house south of the Congregational church, now owned by S. G. Beecher, lot of Thomas Smith.

The third house on the east side of the street was that of William Gaylord, where he resided. He bought the place of Thomas Canfield, one of the first purchasers of the town, in 1723, but had built his house and resided there before he received his deed. This house was on the corner lot of the residence of Dr. George Taylor.

The next place of residence was that of Zachariah Ferriss, of three acres and three-quarters. Where he lived when he first came here is unknown, but it is evident he finally built here on this place. His lot was twenty rods wide on Town Street, and seventeen rods wide on the east side. This was the place occupied by Col. John Read.

The next place of residence was that of Caleb Mallory, and stood about opposite the first. This original right was Richard Bryan, who was a merchant and a great speculator. The meeting-house was on the north of it, and the next lot was a parsonage lot.

The next lot north was that of Jonathan Buck, and was twenty rods wide on the street. The next house on the east side of the street was that of Theophilus Baldwin, an original proprietor. The next house belonged to John Welch, who received the title of the whole original right of Sergt. Daniel Baldwin in April, 1715, and had the lot laid the next day after he made the purchase. Enoch Burk's house was the farthest one at the north end of Town Street, on Aspetuck Hill. James Prince, Jr., had a lot on Aspetuck Hill.

Stephen Miles, one of the first purchasers, did not come here to reside.

The interests of Barnabas Baldwin, one of the first purchasers, came into the possession of John Noble, Wm. Kellogg, and Joseph Ruggles in 1734. It was situated at the iron-works at Brookfield, where a smelting-furnace was afterwards erected.

The right of John Woodruff was sold to John Noble, Jr., of Westfield, in 1706, who came here to reside, and was one of the twelve heads of families here in 1712. The original home-lot to this right was laid near the north bounds of the town, on the West Aspetuck River.

The home-lot to the right of Daniel Turrill, one of the first purchasers and proprietors, was in the Still River Neck. Samuel Brisco, one of the first purchasers, came here and lived on Second Hill about 1725; also Timothy Botsford, who resided at the Shepaug Neck about 1730.

The home-lots to the original rights of Mr. Robert Treat and Joseph Rogers were on the west side of Second Hill, on the highway, about opposite the village. Neither of them came here to reside, and their places passed into other hands.

The right of Mr. Robert Plum, who did not come here to live, was sold, and no home lot ever laid. Deacon Platt's lot was laid to Theophilus Baldwin, on Aspetuck Hill. Thomas Clark sold his interest in New Milford to his son, and the home-lot was laid to Samuel Clark. Samuel Clark, Jr., had no home-lot laid.

Samuel Buckingham, home-lot laid on chestnut land.

Thomas Buckingham, home-lot laid on Second Hill, east from town, probably where B. W. Buckingham now resides.

John Buckingham's home-lot was laid to the wife of Joseph Treat, Jr., son of Lieut. Treat, in Shepaug Neck.

Wm. Wheeler did not come here to reside. He died soon after the purchase.

Nathan Farrand's, Sr., interest passed into the possession of Zachariah Ferriss.

Geo. Allen did not remove here. The home-lot to this right was in the Still River Neck, near Danbury bounds.

Samuel Camp's (mason) interest went to John Bostwick, Sr. Home-lot on Town Street, etc.

John Smith (4th) and Samuel Clark, Sr., did not come here to reside, and their lots were laid out to others.

Ephrahim Burwell's home-lot was in Shepaug Neck, near Samuel Brisco's.

Joseph Beard had a home-lot laid out on the west side of Town Street.

Joseph Camp's home-lot was laid in Still River Neck, by the path towards Newtown, and was sold to David Luke in 1725.

Samuel Camp's (Land's End) home-lot was just north of Paul Welch's, Park Lane.

Nathaniel Farrand, Jr., and Thomas Tibbals had no home-lots laid out to their right.

John Merwin. The lots to this right were laid on Second Hill.

Wm. Gold's home-lot, where he resided, was on the Poplar highway which went north of Town Street, just above the village. Samuel Adkins lived near Mr. Gold.

The right of Joseph Wheeler came into the possession of Rev. Mr. Boardman.

John Prime's right was sold to Thomas Cushing, of Boston, and the home-lot was laid on West Aspetuck River, at south end of Great Mount Tom. Neither of them came here.

Andrew Sanford's home-lot was laid to Andrew Tuttle, on the northeast end of Bound Hill.

Samuel Camp's (son of Edward Camp) lot was laid to Joseph Garnsey, north of the village, on Poplar highway, since discontinued.

Eleazar Prindle's home-lot was laid to Ebenezer Fisk, son of Doc. Fisk, on east side of Town Hill.

Wm. Scone, Widow Mary Baldwin, and Nathaniel Baldwin, cooper, had no home-lots laid to their rights.

Samuel Baldwin, wheelwright, had a home-lot laid on Still River Neck.

Lieut. Joseph Platt had no home-lot.

Sergt. Miles Merwin's home-lot was laid on Bear Hill, east from Wolf-Pit Mountain.

Samuel Sanford's, Sr., right was finally the Rev. Mr. Boardman's.

John Beard's home-lot was on the east side of Shepaug Neck. The whole interest came into the possession of Joseph Ruggles in 1733.

Mr. Samuel Andrew's, Jr., home-lot was on south end of Bear Hill, on both sides of Cross Brook.

Geo. Clark and Joseph Clark had no home-lots laid.

Joseph Peck had a home-lot laid near Danbury line.

John Camp and Sergt. John Smith had no lots laid. Sold.

Jonathan's Law's, Jr., home-lot on Strait's Hill, west side Great River.

John Allen died, and Henry Allen, his brother, sold his interest to Samuel Clark in 1710.

Joseph Ashburn. This right was bought by Theophilus Baldwin, and the home-lot was laid to Samuel Burwell, who owned it.

John Summers had no lots laid out.

James Finn had his home-lots laid in Shepaug Neck, at the planting-field.

Zachariah Whitman had no home-lots laid.

Wm. Adams. The home-lot to this right was laid to Peter Peritt and Roger Brownson, north of Samuel Brownson's home-lot, west on Great River in part, and in part on Joseph Bostwick's land, west on Town Hill.

Joseph Rogers, home-lot on east side, Second Hill.

Samuel Stone's home-lot was laid to John Stone, and was northeast from Round Hill, on the east side of East Aspetuck River.

Jonathan Baldwin, Jr. There were never any home-lots laid to this right, and he never came here.

Jesse Lambert's right or home-lot was laid to his sons Jesse and David, at Shepaug Neck.

Jesse Lambert came to Boston and New Milford from England, where he settled about 1680. He had been an officer in the British navy. He was great-grandfather to Edward R. Lambert, author of a history of the colony of New Haven, giving a description of Milford, published in 1838.

Samuel Prudden had a home-lot in Still River Neck, near the south end of the bounds, but did not come here to reside.

Henry Summers and Samuel Smith Walter did not come here, and had no lots laid.

Sergt. Zachariah Baldwin. He did not come here; his son, Ebenezer Baldwin, resided here, and his father's home-lot was on Town Street.

Benjamin Smith, Sr., did not come here, neither did John Clark.

John Smith, Jr., had a home-lot in Still River Neck.

Josiah and Richard Platt had no lots laid to their rights.

William Fowler sold a portion of his land to Samuel Prindle and Joseph Bostwick, who came here to reside. Joseph Bostwick had a lot on Town Street, near Great Brook.

Samuel Prindle had his home-lot where he lived, on Town Street, near Great Brook.

Sergt. Samuel Northrop's right was deeded by his sons to John Turrill in 1714, and John deeded to his son Nathan in 1717. His home-lot was Town Hill probably.

George Clark, Jr., had no home-lots.

Samuel Coley laid to William Gaylord.

Samuel Marwin had no home-lots laid.

Lieut. Samuel Burwell's home-lot was on Aspetuck Hill.

Samuel Miles. Samuel Brownson had this lot, and it was north on lot John Bostwick, Jr., had built up, south on lot Roger Brownson had built upon.

James Beard had a home-lot laid on road to chestnut-land.

Samuel Nettleton did not come here, but his home-lot was laid out to his sons, John and Samuel, in Shepaug Neck.

Joseph Treat, son of Lieut. Treat, married a daughter of John Buckingham, and there were two home-lots laid in Shepaug Neck, one in the original right of each.

Jeremiah Canfield's home-lot was on the plain by the Round Mountain. His whole right went to his son, Jeremiah, Jr.

Thomas Smith, Sr., John Weller, etc.

Nathaniel Baldwin, Sr., Jeremiah Brand had no home-lots.

Buthuel Langstaff's home-lot was on Second Hill, on Woodbury road. Joseph Manning owned one-half of it.

Andrew Sanford, Jr., had no home-lots laid.

Nathaniel Sanford's right was sold to Benjamin Hurd, of Woodbury, in 1724.

John Marwin, Jr., had no lots.

Joseph Tibball's home-lots were laid in Shepaug Neck to Daniel Collins.

B. Baldwin's home-lot was laid in Shepaug Neck.

Samuel Mather had no lot laid.

The meetings of the proprietors were held at New Milford after 1723–24. In 1714 the town voted that there "should be a grist-mill set up and maintained for the benefit of the town," and in 1715 the proprietors voted that they should "agree with some person to build and maintain a grist-mill on some part of Still River or elsewhere," and that the committee "execute any instrument or instruments for the granting the stream and some land, in the name of the proprietors." John Griswold came, on the invitation of the committee, and built the mill on Still River, but did not long survive. The proprietors, however, carried out their agreement with his heirs by granting them a house-lot and other lands as a recompense for building the mill.

The early settlers also saw the necessity of having a blacksmith among them, and eighteen of them agreed with James Hine that, if he "do become our smith and faithfully endeavor to do our work for reasonable satisfaction for four years," they would give him a certain number of acres of land. He came.

It was not till 1728 that the effort to secure a cooper was successful. Jonathan Buck, Jr., was an apprentice to Benjamin Bunnell, of Milford, and about ten of our leading citizens,—such men as the Rev. B. Roger Brown, Benoni Stebbins, Nathan Talcot, and Paul Welch,—upon his desire to come here, made him a contribution of land, money, and labor, upon condition that he "settle in this town as soon as his time is out with his master, Bunnell, and also be obliged to supply the town with needful cooper-work,—viz., set work and rhine work,—at a reasonable price, so long as there shall be an occasion for his work, or while there is not another or others of his trade sufficient to supply said town, or while he shall have life and ability so to serve the town." Some gave land and some ten shillings in work, some two days' work, and his father, Jonathan Buck, agreed to give "considerable labor;" and so he came, and carried on his trade, the first cooper in the town.

The town charges, at the commencement of managing the affairs of the proprietors town-wise, were paid either in money or in grain, the price of which was fixed in town-meeting. At the annual town-meeting of December, 1715, it was voted "that grain should pass for paying town charges as follows: wheat at four shillings per bushel; rye at two shillings and eightpence per bushel; Indian corn at two shillings per bushel; oats at one shilling fourpence per bushel, and flax at sixpence per pound." These prices varied by vote of the town from year to year. In 1718 the price was fixed for Indian corn at three shillings per bushel (50 cents); wheat, six shillings per bushel ($1); rye, four shillings per bushel (66⅔ cents); oats, at one shilling per bushel; pork, threepence per pound (4 cents); flax, 7 cents per pound (9⅓ cents).

Every public matter in these early times was done either in the meetings of the proprietors, the town-meetings, or the meetings of the proprietors of the common fields. One of the hardships of pioneer life would have been the necessity of inclosing their divisions of land by proper fences, which would have caused a great amount of labor and expense. To avoid this difficulty in a measure, the earliest settlers had meetings of the proprietors of the common fields, as they were called, and decided to co-operate, under such rules and restrictions as might be agreed upon, in supporting common fences to inclose certain portions of their lands. These meetings were held from time to time, as might be necessary, called by a person designated for that purpose, either under his own or the direction of the meeting. Fences were thus established, and built under the direction of committees appointed for that purpose, and each of the proprietors paid his share of the expense. The length of fence was set in rods to each proprietor, for which he was liable to pay a pro rata share of the expense incurred.

The east side of the Great River, from the Great Falls to Aspetuck River, some ways back from the river, was thus inclosed by a general line of fence, and the west side of the Great River, from Rocky River, by the mountains, to Wood Creek, and north of the Still River meadows to the Great Falls, were all inclosed in one common line of fence, built and supported by votes in the meetings. In these meetings it was decided where the gates should be, at what time of the year or week the common fields should be open for pasturage of horses and cattle, and to make regulations about planting, etc.

In October, 1717, the proprietors decided "that the fields should be opened for cattle and horses upon Saturday, Oct. 5th, at sunset." They generally ordered that the fields should be opened from Saturday sunset till Monday morning or Sunday night, and some years they voted to keep them closed entirely. Cattle, sheep, or horses found in the fields at any other time than designated were to be considered "damage frusant," and were liable to be impounded. Sheep and swine were sometimes allowed in the fields.

As a result of thus allowing their cattle, sheep, and swine to run together, and from the necessities of these early times, the town established marks on the ears of the cattle, sheep, and swine, called ear-marks, which were made for each owner or proprietor, so that he could distingnish his animals from those of his neighbors. These marks were described and recorded in the town records to the individual. As early as 1728 this method of identifying animals was put into practical operation, and all the proprietors had their peculiar ear-mark made and recorded.

THE NORTH PURCHASE.

About the year 1721 the inhabitants of the town began to agitate the subject of enlarging the northern frontier, and the suggestion was received with such favor by the citizens that it was finally agreed in town-meeting, June 12, 1722, "that if in case we can purchase any of the land northward from our town, that we will divide equally to each man above twenty-one years of age; and also that we agree that every man that hath a son under age shall have liberty to purchase for one son that is under the age of twenty-one years, and no more, and that those so purchased for shall be equal sharers with the rest of the purchasers." A few days after this meeting a meeting was held to determine how many of the inhabitants of the town would agree to make the purchase, and sixty-four persons subscribed their names to a paper, which was entered on the town records, "that they would proceed to purchase one mile and a half across the north end of New Milford bounds." None of the purchasers were to have a share or interest in the land but those who paid the purchase money within two months after June 22, 1722, the date of the meeting. The purchase of this strip of land was made of a committee of Hartford and Windsor by Samuel Brownson, William Gaylord, and Stephen Noble, agents for the inhabitants of New Milford, for thirty pounds, on the 23d day of June, 1722, in the eighth year of the reign of King George I. Hartford and Windsor obtained a grant in 1686 from the colony of Connecticut of all the land on the north of Woodbury and Mattatuck, and on the west of Farmington and Simsbury, to the Massachusetts line north, and to run west to the Housatonic River, which covered the north purchase. The native right of the Indians, also, of this tract had been purchased by Hartford and Windsor before the New Milford purchasers received their deed.

NAMES OF PURCHASERS.

The names of the original purchasers of the "North Purchase" were Zachariah Ferris, John Ferris, Benjamin Bostwick, John Weller, Sr., Obadiah Weller, Thomas Weller, Enoch Buck, Lemuel Bostwick, Thomas Picket, Thomas Brownson, Daniel Boardman, Samuel Camp, James Camp, Abraham Bostwick, Ebenezer Bostwick, Benjamin Bunnell, Sr., Benjamin Bunnell, Jr., William Corns, Ebenezer Washburn, George Corns, John Bostwick, Jr., John Bostwick (3d), James Prime, William Prime, John Bostwick, Sr., Stephen Noble, Jonathan Noble, Paul Welch, Theophilus Baldwin, Benoni Stebbins, Ebenezer Picket, Samuel Brownson, Roger Brownson, Samuel Prindle, John Welch, Sr., John Welch, Jr., David Noble, Daniel Noble, Robert Bostwick, Nathan Bostwick, Samuel Hitchcock, Sr., Samuel Hitchcock, Jr., Jonathan Hitchcock, John Hitchcock, Samuel Prindle, Jr., Roger Brownson, Jr., John Weller, Jr., John Noble, Samuel Atkins, Gamaliel Terrill, Jonathan Buck, John Noble, Jr., Nathaniel Bostwick, Joseph Buck, Robert Bostwick, Jr., Nathan Terrill, Ebenezer Buck, Joseph Bostwick (2d), Henry Garlick, Ebenezer Baldwin, Sr., Ebenezer Baldwin, Jr., William Gaylord, Benjamin Gaylord, Joseph Bostwick, Sr.

July 25, 1726, the proprietors of the north purchase commenced to hold meetings, and at that meeting Ensign William Gaylord and Roger Brownson were chosen a committee to assist the surveyor to run the lines in bounding out the proprietors' land, and a rate of twelvepence for each proprietor was raised to defray the expenses, which was afterwards raised one shilling and sixpence on each right.

The land was laid out and surveyed by Edward Lewis, Esq., surveyor of the county of Fairfield, on Aug. 1, A.D. 1726.

It was not, however, till December, 1730, that the proprietors took steps to have the land laid out, and they then decided "that the lots should run but halfway through the tract; or thus, one lot on the north side and the other on the south side." In 1731 the proprietors had laid out the greater part of the tract into sixty-four lots, making suitable allowances for highways. There were thirty-two lots laid out on the north tier, the first to Benoni Stephens and the last to Mr. David Boardman. The other lots were laid out on the south tier, in accordance with the votes passed in proprietors' meetings.

The proprietors thought it would be to their advantage to secure the annexation of their purchase to the town, and thus have it under one government. They could then discontinue their separate meetings. The General Assembly was finally memorialized by Samuel Brownson and David Boardman in behalf of New Milford, and in October, 1731, a patent of the north purchase was granted, signed by Joseph Talcot, Esq., Governor, and it thus became a part of the town of New Milford. It is bounded in the patent "west on the Great River, one mile and half of a mile in breadth, from thence to run a parallel with the north bounds of New Milford, unto the land sequestered for the use of Wereaunaug." The remaining unsettled lands north of this tract in the wilderness were then claimed by the towns of Hartford and Windsor.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES OF SOME OF THE FIRST SETTLERS.

John Noble was born in Springfield, Mass., March 6, 1662, and was the first settler of New Milford, having made this town his place of residence in 1707. When he emigrated to this town he was an inhabitant of the town of Westfield, Mass., to which place he came with his father in childhood. His father, Thomas Noble, the emigrant ancestor of the largest family in the United States bearing the name of Noble, was born in England about 1632, and died at Westfield, Mass., at the age of at least seventy-two years. The names of his parents, the place of his birth, and the year in which he came to this country are unknown, but it is supposed he came to Boston in 1653. He came to Westfield about the year 1669.

John was the oldest of ten children. His first wife was Abigail Sacket, daughter of John and Abigail Sacket, of Northampton and Westfield, Mass., who died in 1683, aged nineteen, four days after the birth of his first child; and in 1684 married Mary Goodman, daughter of Richard and Mary Goodman, of Hadley, Mass., who was one of the first original members of the first church organized at New Milford, in 1716. He had eleven children.* "When he first came to New Milford he brought one of his daughters, then about eight years of age. He built his hut under what is called Fort Hill. It deserves to be mentioned to the credit of the natives, that he once left his daughter, when eight years of age, with the natives for three or four weeks, while he was absent from the town, and found on his return that she had been well cared for.† He had joined the First Congregational Church in Woodbury, Conn., in 1710. He was a very active and energetic man, serving faithfully in all the various capacities in which he was, of necessity, called upon to act in this new and undeveloped country. He was very active in securing town privileges; but in the midst of his greatest usefulness in the new settlement, and before his plans had been carried out, he was called away by death, which occurred Aug. 17, 1714. He was only fifty-two years of age.

The inventory of his estate amounted to one hundred and seven pounds, three shillings, sixpence.

John Noble, Jr., son of John, Sr., was born at Westfield, Mass., Feb. 15, 1685. He had three wives: 1st, Hannah Picket; 2d, Abigail Buck, of Wethersfield, Conn.; 3d, Sarah Slaughter, of Ridgefield, Conn. He had three children by his first wife, six by his second, and four by his third. He lived six or seven miles below the village of New Milford, next south of Gallows Hill, on the Danbury road, where he built a house and lived and died. He was one of the pioneers of the town, coming here to live soon after his father. He became a member of the Congregational Church in 1720. He was captain of the train band in New Milford in 1732. He died, 1783, at the age of seventy-one. His oldest son, Thomas, built the first house north of Gallows Hill, in New Milford, near his father, where he resided. He was for many years the owner of the iron-works known by that name, now in the town of Brookfield, then a part of New Milford. He was a member of the General Assembly five sessions, and filled many offices of trust. He died in the summer of 1773, aged eighty-eight years. Most of the facts in this sketch are taken from Boltwood's history of the family of Thomas Noble.

Capt. Stephen Noble, son of John, Sr., was born in Westfield, Mass., Aug. 15, 1686, and died in New Milford at the age of sixty-nine. He was a blacksmith by trade, and an extensive land-holder in the town, to which he probably removed as early as Jan. 24, 1714. He was a very influential man in the town, and was selectman fifteen years, and justice of the peace. He was one of the first representatives to the General Assembly, none having been chosen prior to 1725, and afterwards sent sixteen times.

He was the captain of the only military company in the town for twenty years after its organization. He joined the Congregational Church at New Milford in 1727. He married Abigail Morgan, Feb. 16, 1683, daughter of Isaac Morgan, of Enfield, Conn. He had seven children. The facts contained in this brief sketch of Capt. Noble are taken from Boltwood's "History of the Family of Thomas Noble," of Westfield, Mass., loaned me by Russell B. Noble, town clerk, and a representative of the seventh generation from the first settler of the town.

John Bostwick was the second person who settled in New Milford, and came in the year 1707. He was one of three brothers of Scotch extraction, Arthur and Zachariah being the other two, who came about 1668. He was one of the two persons who represented the town in the General Assembly, the first time in 1725, from the town of Cheshire, England, and located at Stratford, Conn. His seventh, and youngest son, Daniel, was the first white male child born in the town, and kept a public-house in the village for many years. Maj. John Bostwick, the oldest son of John, the second settler, was born in the year 1686. He married Mercy Bushnell, of Danbury, Conn., in 1712, and had five children.

Zachariah Ferriss was the third settler of New Milford, and came about 1709. He married Sarah Read, and had eight children. Sarah, the fifth, was the first female child born in the town, the date of her birth being Nov. 10, 1710. She married Stephen Noble.

Samuel Brownson was the fifth settler of the town, Samuel Hitchcock being the fourth. He was one of the first deacons of the Congregational Church; town clerk for years.—Bostwick Genealogy.

William Gaylord was born in 1680. He married Joanna Minor, of Woodbury, Conn., the sixth daughter of Capt. John Minor. They were both members of the Congregational Church, and removed to New Milford about 1712, from Woodbury, where, as one of the first settlers, his services were always in great demand. He sprang from a long line of illustrious ancestors, commencing in Normandy, France. The Château Gaillard was begun and finished in one year, by Richard Cœur de Lion, for the defense of the frontier of Normandy. It was entire at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and was then considered one of the most magnificent specimens of military architecture in Europe. Henry Quatre caused its destruction in 1603, for fear that it might fall into the hands of some more powerful enemy. The name can be traced back prior to 1250. Some of them were knights, and one, Lord Dunfort, an admiral in 1475; one a distinguished Protestant minister in 1659; one a provincial bishop from 1634 to 1695; one a historical writer of the seventeenth century; one an engraver in 1752; and one a distinguished composer of music and sporting songs, "which were the delight of every play-house and public place in the kingdom."

The Gaillard refugees, from whom have sprung all of that name in England and the United States, removed from France to Glastonbury, England, about 1550; and about 1630, William Gaylord, as it was now spelled in England, a native of Exeter, county of Devonshire, emigrated to New England, and was one of the pioneer settlers of Dorchester, Mass. He settled in Windsor, Conn., about 1638, which town he represented at forty-one semi-annual elections in the General Assembly. William, of New Milford, was the fifth son of Walter, the third son of William, of Dorchester. He removed to Gaylordsville, in New Milford, on the home-lot of the late David Gaylord, deceased, in 1720, and was the pioneer settler of that part of the town. The Schatacoke Indians, a few miles north, were very friendly, and he carried on an extensive fur-trade with them. He cleared up a dense forest, and lived in this secluded section until his own descendants gave him some social life. Some of the seventh generation of his descendants are now living near together in that part of the town where he settled. He died Oct. 25, 1753, aged seventy-three years. The facts contained in this sketch were taken from the history and pedigree of the sons of Gaillard, or Gaylord, in France, England, and the United States, by Wm. Gaylord, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Samuel Brownson was the first town clerk here, and held the office till 1733, when, at a special town-meeting held in November of that year, Roger Brownson, Sr., was chosen to fill his place.

He was also a deacon of the church; he was also a representative in the General Assembly in the year 1726.

John Bostwick was born in ———. He was selectman many times, and representative in the General Assembly eighteen different times, the last in 1740.

Stephen Noble was also one of the most prominent men of the early times. He took a very prominent part in the affairs of the town.

John Noble, Paul Welch, and Wm. Gaylord were also early settlers.

TOWN HILL AND TOWN STREET, Etc.

In the earliest times there was a highway from about where Jeremiah B. Brownson resides to the vicinity of the residence of H. W. Booth, or west of it probably, and it was in the vicinity of the dwelling-house of H. W. Booth, Esq., or the place where Watts lives, that Thomas Picket built his house about 1715. From Picket's home-lot land was sequestered for a common. This common was east of the town street, which passed by Picket's house south, twenty rods wide. Nathan Talcot and Ephraim Fisk lived northeast of Mr. Picket's, on the north end of the hill,—Prospect Hill now called. Nathan Bostwick and John Griswold had home-lots and dwelling-houses on the hill south, on the east side of the town street, and Benjamin Bostwick's dwelling-house was at the south side of the common. James Hinds, the blacksmith, had a lot and shop on Town Hill.

In 1719, Samuel Hitchcock had a dwelling-house between the path that crossed the Great River, where the railroad bridge is, and William B. Stilson's. Roger Bronson had a house, where he resided, north of Mr. Hitchcock's. The next one was Samuel Bronson's. The next one was John Bostwick's, Jr.

The island in Great River, below Great Falls, belongs to John Wescot and John Seeley. Wescot sells to Jonathan Hitchcock.

There was a saw-mill on East Aspetuck before 1733. See record of highways, May 23, 1733.

See Elisha Williams' deed of iron-works, Brookfield, to Alexander Wolcott, 1736, for four hundred pounds; Moses Knapp's deed to Elkanah Bobbits, in 1736; Indian Corkshure's deed.

Zachariah Baldwin's home-lot, on east side of Town Street, south on John Simons' home-lot, north on Samuel Buckingham's home-lot.

Samuel Buckingham's, L. Baldwin's, and John Simons' home-lots, on or near Town Street.

Robert Bostwick, Joseph Bostwick, Samuel Prinder have home-lots near Town Hill, or Great Brook.

Nathan Turrill's home-lot was on east side Town Street, south on Samuel Camp.

John Bostwick, Jr., Roger Brownson, and Samuel Brownson had lots east on Town Street, west on Great River.

Town Hill was what is now known as Prospect Hill and the hill east of it, and there were quite a number of residences there and in the vicinity.

Aspetuck Hill was just north of present village.

Benjamin Bostwick's home-lot was at the south side of this sequestered common, on Town Hill.

Samuel Hitchcock's home-lot was at the end of the twenty-rod highway laid out in 1714.

Thomas Picket's was bounded south on this sequestered common, and west on a highway that ran from about where Jeremiah B. Bronson's house stands to this common (H. W. Booth's place).

Peter Perit and Roger Bronson had a home-lot, land bounded north on Samuel Brown's home-lot.

Samuel Bronson's home-lot was probably this way from that of Samuel Hitchcock.

Roger Bronson's was the next lot north of Samuel Bronson's.

John Bostwick, Jr., was north of Samuel Bronson's. This was where John Bostwick now lives (Jared Bostwick's place).

The above were not on Town Hill, but south by the river.

Nathan Talcott was on north end of Town Hill and eastward of the meeting-house.

Ephraim Fisk, son of Dr. Fisk, was on Town Hill.

John Griswold.

Benjamin Bostwick was at the south end of Town Hill (Prospect Hill), laid south of the common. See record of first highway laid (Town Street).

John Griswold's home-lot was northward of the old mill lane highway, which runs up the hill from William B. Stilson's, and southward from the highway running up eastward from Benjamin Bostwick's home-lot.

Nathaniel Bostwick's home-lot on east side Town Street, and west side of highway running to Woodbury.

PROPRIETORS OF COMMON FIELDS.

"Nov. 24, 1715.—Voted, That there should be a general line of fence from the great falls, along up the front of all the improved land & home-lots until we come to north side of Jacob Griswold's house-lot, & then upon the north side untill it comes to the west end of s[d] Griswold's 10 a. d., & then running at the rear of the other 10 a. d., till it come s[d] fence, & then running in the most convenient place to the rock over west aspetuck, & the line of fence to be proportioned by all lands laid out within the fields & by all lands improved, though not laid out, from that place called the Straits down to Dibles' meadow, except home-lots & ten a. d.

"A committee was chosen to lay out & proportion sd fence, and that it be laid & completed by the 15th day of April next after this meeting. Nov. 24, 1715 (April 1, 1716).

"PHIL. B. BRADLEY, Col. Com'd.

"CAMP, 12th Feb., 1780."

"New Milford has always been loyal to the cause of freedom. In 1779 the town voted four bushels of wheat a month to every man who volunteered for six months, and three bushels a month to the militiamen who marched when ordered; but if they failed to report within eight days after marching orders, they forfeited this premium. The town also supported the families of men while absent in the Continental army. In 1778 the Articles of Confederacy proposed by Congress, styled "The United States of North America," were adopted in town-meeting, except part of the fifth article, which respects the mode of choosing delegates to Congress. It was "Voted, That the Freemen will always hold the prerogative and sole power of choosing our delegates in Congress by vote." Subsequently "said Articles of Confederacy were adopted in full by the meeting without a dissenting voice." In 1783 it was voted, and a committee was appointed to enforce the resolution, that all refugees, or "skedaddlers," as they would now be termed, as well as all who had voluntarily gone over to the enemy during the war, should be prohibited from returning and settling in the town.

"And yet these men of the past were not all saints and patriots. In 1776 there were some bitter Tories here. One of these was compelled by a company of riflemen to walk before them from New Milford to Litchfield, carrying one of his own geese the entire distance. At Litchfield they tarred him, made him pluck his own goose, bestowed the feathers upon him, and drummed him out of the place, after obliging him to kneel down and thank them for their leniency."

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.*

This church was organized Nov. 21, 1716, with thirteen members. The first sermon was preached here by Col. John Reid, who had studied for the ministry in his youth. Mr. Daniel Boardman, a preacher of the gospel, came here in 1712. The next year it was voted that the inhabitants should pay all the expense that had been incurred in obtaining a minister, also to lay out a pastor's lot, to dig and stone up a well for Mr. Daniel Boardman, if he became a settled minister in New Milford. Meanwhile, the town allowed five shillings sixpence a week for the minister's board. In 1715 the town agreed to petition the General Court to "attain liberty for the settlement of the worship and ordinances of God among us." This was the subject that then came up at every meeting of the inhabitants. It was not until 1716 that they made arrangements for laying out a burying-ground of two acres, but for four years before that they had been contriving and planning for the religious instruction of themselves and families. The poverty of the people appears in the resolution adopted as to Mr. Boardman's salary, one-third of which was to be paid in grain, two-thirds in labor, linen, or pork,—the established price of wheat was then four shillings a bushel; rye, two shillings eightpence; corn, two shillings; and oats, one shilling,—part of the agreement being that Mr. Boardman should sell the grain which he had to spare at the same prices to the inhabitants. In accordance with a vote of the town, Mr. Boardman was ordained Nov. 21, 1716.

There was no ecclesiastical society until after 1750. Until then the town was the society. It was the town that provided for the supply of the pulpit, for the installation of ministers, the erection and care of buildings, and all expenses connected with public worship. The church held meetings for the election of deacons, the discipline of members, and the spiritual interests of the people, but the town managed everything that now belongs to the society. It was the town that invited Mr. Daniel Boardman to labor here, and that settled him as a pastor, making all the arrangements for his installation; the town did the same in the case of Mr. Taylor. So far as the records show, the church took no separate action in calling its pastors until the invitation to Mr. Griswold, in 1790, when it formally voted, as has been the custom ever since, to concur in the society's action. From 1713 to 1750 a large part of the business in town-meeting was in regard to ecclesiastical affairs.

The first meeting-house, "forty feet long, thirty feet wide, and twenty-four feet between 'gists,' with suitable proportions," was built in 1718–19, but not opened for worship until 1720, and then it was in a very unfinished condition. In 1720 it was voted to wall up the "gists" before winter, and fill in between the laths and studs with timber and mortar. The floor was not laid until 1723. This building stood on the highway on Town Hill, a few rods north of the present residence of Mrs. J. P. Treadwell. The second house of worship, "sixty-four feet long, forty-four feet wide, and twenty-seven-feet posts," nearly twice the size of the first, was erected in 1754, the town applying to the General Assembly for power to sell the old meeting-house, and to tax non-resident land-holders for building the new one. This building stood on the village green, nearly opposite the present residence of Mr. Solomon E. Bostwick. The present edifice was erected in 1833, and, though much larger than the former, for several years persons wishing slips have been unable to obtain them. It would be a good centennial work to enlarge the building.

The "Sabbath-day house" was an institution that is unknown to the present generation. In 1745 the town voted "that any farmers inhabitants have leave to build a small house to repair to on Sabbath-day, on the common land, provided the public is not damnified thereby." This building was located "north of the meeting-house, on the side of the hill." After the erection of the church on the green, the "Sabbath-day house" was built on the spot were now stands the house so long occupied by the Rev. Mr. Acly. It is described to me by a lady still with us (Mrs. Eli Mygatt), who went through it more than seventy years ago, as a long, low building, with four large rooms, regarding which frightful stories were told of the ghosts that inhabited it. In this building farmers whose homes were distant stored loads of wood and barrels of cider, and here they warmed their bean-soup, replenished their foot-stoves, and regaled themselves in the hour between services. Until 1870 the services were held morning and afternoon; since 1870 the second service has been held in the evening.

The chapel was built by individuals, with permission of the society, in 1838–39. The meeting-houses were not heated until 1823–25, when two box-stoves were put in the second meeting-house. In November, 1833, the society voted to obtain "2 of Dr. Nott's stoves and one ton of anthracite coal for the winter." Furnaces were put in in 1860, when the church was improved at a cost of five thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars, and land for sheds was bought. The organ was obtained in 1860, at a cost of twelve hundred dollars.

The parsonage was bought in August, 1870, at a cost of six thousand dollars, paid for by subscription, and presented, with certain conditions attached, to the society. Originally the people were called to worship, as to all public meetings, by the beat of the drum, for which an appropriation was made in 1716. For many years after the first church building was occupied the town annually appointed a person to beat the drum, and voted him pay for his services. A church clock which hung in the steeple of the second meeting-house must have been bought about a century ago. In 1780 the liabilities of the society are thus stated: "Arrears yet due on account of clock £7 3*s.* 5*d.*, and due Widow Prudence Collins, for sweeping the meeting house, £1 10*s.*"

Until 1745 this was the only society, and every person in town was taxed for its support. From 1750 to 1790 persons who aided in supporting other societies were by vote relieved from the tax for the support of this society.

From 1752 until 1796 all the educational and religious affairs of the town were under the control of this society. It located the schools, fixed the tax, collected it, and superintended the schools through committees annually appointed. It was, in fact, the school society for the town, and as such received Benoni Stebbins' legacy. It fixed and collected the tax for the salary of the ministers, "for the sweeping out of the meeting-house." It also, in some measure, managed the financial affairs of the Episcopal society, for in 1771, after appointing Ichabod Bostwick to gather the minister's rate, it appointed "Solomon Hodkiss to gather a rate for Mr. Clark." And in 1772 this society issued a notice "to warn all the church people to meet together on Monday, the 13th day of instant April, at St. John's Church at 8 of the clock in the morning, then and there to consult such measures as they shall think proper to procure a Glebe house for the Rev. Mr. Clark, and to do such other business as shall be thought proper." The minutes of the meeting thus warned are recorded as "a meeting of the inhabitants of the 1st Ecclesiastical Society—holden by the Church of England." This was doubtless done, in a fraternal spirit, to give legal efficacy to the action of the Episcopal society in disposing of one glebe and purchasing another. This shows the kindly feeling that then, as now and always, has governed the members of this society. The *Church Review states that "Certain churchmen in New Milford were fined for refusing to attend the meetings of the Established Church. These fines were, by recommendation of Mr. Beach, paid, and copies of the proceedings taken, to be forwarded to the King and Council. The fact becoming known, the authorities refunded the money, and granted permission to build a church, which before had been refused."

"I do not know," says Rev. Mr. Bonar, "the authority of the Church Review for this statement, but I do know that there is no warrant for it in town or society's books. There is no record of any refusal to permit churchmen to build, nor of the remittance of a fine upon any person for being absent from the worship of this church, yet the books contain records of scores of votes remitting fines for breach of the Sabbath and other minor offenses. From 1752 to 1819 this society had all the legal rights in its own hand, but in all the records there is no instance of anything like intolerance, or a disposition to throw obstacles in the way of others, while there are numerous instances of its generosity and readiness to aid those who entertained a faith different from its own."

The list of pastors is as follows: Daniel Boardman, ordained here Nov. 21, 1716, and died Aug. 25, 1744; Nathaniel Taylor, was ordained pastor here June 29, 1748, and died here Dec. 9, 1800; Stanley Griswold, was ordained pastor here June 20, 1790; became a Unitarian, threw open the sacraments to all, and was censured by Consociation. He left town in 1802, and edited a political paper in New Hampshire. In 1805 he was appointed secretary of Michigan Territory. In 1809 he was sent to the United States Senate, was afterwards chief judge of the Northwest Territory, and died at Shawneetown, Ill., Aug. 25, 1815, aged fifty-two.

Andrew Elliot was ordained pastor here Feb. 24, 1808, and labored most successfully until his death, May 9, 1829; Heman Rood, from 1830 to 1835; Noah Porter, from 1836 to 1842; John Greenwood, from 1844 to 1849; David Murdoch, from 1850 to 1874; James B. Bonar, 1870, present pastor.

During the last century the church was sensitive as to the character of its deacons. Instead of electing brethren at once to the office, it chose them to serve during the church's pleasure. If acceptable after one or two years' trial, they were by vote "established as deacons;" and in 1750 the church voted that one brother, who had thus been on trial for two years, "should not be established in the office of deacon." Twenty-one persons have so far served the church in this office, viz.: Samuel Brownson, James Prime, John Bostwick, Job Terrill, Samuel Canfield, Bushnell Bostwick, Roger Sherman, Benjamin Gaylord, John Hitchcock, Sherman Boardman, Elizur Warner, Joseph Merwin, Dobson W. McMahon, John Beecher, Micanor Stilson, George W. Whittelsey, Geradus Roberts, Seymour B. Green, William Hine, John J. Conklin, and Ethiel S. Green. From 1716 to 1808 the Lord's Supper was administered four times a year; since 1808, every two months.

Nineteen men from this church have entered the gospel ministry, viz.: David Bostwick, Joseph Treat, David Brownson, Benjamin Wildman, Whitmon Welch, Gideon Bostwick, David Sandford, John Stevens, David Baldwin, Daniel Marsh, Nathaniel W. Taylor, Charles A. Boardman, Orlo D. Hine, Merrit S. Platt, Elizur Beecher, Asahel Bronson, John Treat Baldwin, George Todd, George Sterling.

At least four men in this town have been active in national affairs. The most distinguished was Roger Sherman, a native of Massachusetts, who came here in 1743. He was clerk to this ecclesiastical society from 1753 to 1761, and established in the office of deacon in 1757. Here he wrought as a shoemaker, aided his brother in the store, and in 1745 was appointed land surveyor for the county. Removing to New Haven in 1761, he became judge of the Court of Common Pleas, a member of the Upper House in the Legislature, and judge of the Superior Court. In 1774 he was appointed a member of the first Congress, in which he continued until his death, at which time he was in the Senate, to which he was elected in 1791. He was a member of the Governor's Council of Safety, and mayor of New Haven from 1784 to his death, July 23, 1793. In the Congress of 1776 he was a member of the committee appointed to draft the Declaration of Independence, as well as of many of the other most important committees; and he was also a member of the board of war, and of the board of treasury. His services to the country were invaluable, and few of his contemporaries left their impress more clearly upon American institutions.

Elijah Boardman, third son of Deacon Sherman Boardman, and grandson of the first pastor of this church, was born March 7, 1760. In 1821 he was elected to the United States Senate; he died Aug. 18, 1823. Mr. Boardman's earlier years were in connection with this society, but, having married a daughter of the aforementioned Dr. Whiting, a zealous Episcopalian, who engaged in a pamphlet controversy with Dr. Billamy, he afterwards identified himself with the Episcopal Church, and died in its communion.

Perry Smith, who died in 1852, was elected to the United States Senate in 1836, and served one term. He was connected with the Episcopal society.

Orange Merwin, born here July 3, 1776, was in Congress in 1826–27, during the administration of John Quincy Adams; he died Sept. 5, 1854. He was a member of this society.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.*

In 1822 a permanent preaching-place was fixed at Pleasant Valley, now Lanesville. Rev. Laban Clark and Rev. Eli Barnet, preachers of the Stratford Circuit, preached here. In 1833 the name of New Milford for the first time occurs as a preaching-place in the Conference Minutes. In 1850 the present church was built, under the pastorate of Rev. William McAlister. The church was dedicated by Bishop E. S. Janes, LL.D. The following ministers of the New York East Conference have been appointed to the church since 1850: A. B. Pulling, W. H. Russell, Ira Abbott, S. J. Stebbins, William Silverthorn, William Ross, George W. Allen, William R. Webster, A. Booth, E. L. Bray, James H. Crofut, James H. Lightbourne.

In 1826, at Northville, a church was built, and in 1828 a church was built at Lanesville. These churches have been superseded by the New Milford church, the membership having coalesced.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, GAYLORDSVILLE.†

This church was organized in 1824, by Rev. C. Silliman, with the following members: Benjamin B. Soule, Homer Waller, Martha Waller, Peter Gaylord, Elizabeth Gaylord, Truman Gaylord, John Gaylord, Spencer Ward, Patty Ward, Herman Stone, Laura Hendrix, Polly Paine, Clarissa Judd, Sally Judd, William Terry, James A. Hungerford, Patty Hungerford, Rufus Burnan, David Jones. The church building was erected in 1826. The following is a list of pastors: John Reynolds, William Juett, Fitch Reed, Samuel Cochran, Uriah Fisher, Aaron S. Hill, Francis Donoly, J. O. Worth, Charles Stearns, Alonzo Sellick, William H. Barnes, David Nash, D. T. Littlewood, John H. Gaylord, Frank Lockwood, G. S. Gilbert, Samuel Weeks, Benjamin Redford, William Ross, Frederick Brown, Seth W. Scofield, Alexander McAlister, Joseph Henson, B. M. Genung, Uriah Simons, William A. Dalton, R. F. Elsden, Robert Kay.

The present officers are: Trustees, Charles Pomeroy, Clinton H. Pomeroy, James Paine, John Flynn, A. H. Barlow; Stewards, John Gaylord, S. C. Ferriss, John Flynn, C. H. Pomeroy, W. J. Buckingham, Sherman Benedict, H. O. Ward, John T. Underhill, Ezra Barnum. Present membership, eighty-eight.

Originally this charge was a part of the large Amenia Circuit. When the New York East Conference was formed by a division of the New York Conference, Gaylordsville fell to the New York East Conference, but a few years ago it was connected to the New York Conference, where it now belongs.

BAPTIST CHURCH, NORTHVILLE.*

On the 7th day of January, 1814, a company of believers holding Baptist principles met at the house of Asabel Baldwin, in the western part of the town, and after free deliberation,

"Voted, 1st.—To organize themselves into a society to be known as the New Milford Bap. Ch.

"Voted, 2d.—To invite a council from Sister Ch^s^ to meet with them on the 9th day of Feby to consider the propriety of recognizing them as a regular Bap. Ch."

Feb. 9, 1814, the Council met at the same place, composed of pastors and delegates from the churches in Newtown, Litchfield, and Roxbury, and, after examining their articles of faith and covenant, voted unanimously to recognize them as a sister-church in the Lord. The following are the names of the constituent members: Eleazar Beecher, Dorcas Wright, Nathaniel Terry, Lydia Phillips, Martha Terry, Patty Phillips, Mary Baldwin, Betsy Davenport, Elizabeth Baldwin, Leman Garlick, John Ferris, Mrs. Garlick, Sally Ferris, Elijah Canfield, Mary Canfield, Mrs. Canfield, Phebe Hallock, Esther Baldwin, A. Titus, Isaac Wooster, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Wooster, Asahel Baldwin.

February 19th the church voted to license Eleazar Beecher, a man of the people, to preach the gospel to them, and on the 15th of September of the same year he was ordained to the work of the ministry, and assumed the pastoral care of the church, and served them in that capacity till 1821. The Rev. Seth Higby was then called to the pastorate, and remained with the church one year. During that and the following year their present house of worship—located in Northville, four miles from New Milford village—was built; and in 1823 another house of worship was built in Merryall, four miles distant. In 1822, Elder Beecher again took charge of the church, preaching alternately at Northville and Merryall, and so continued till about the year 1832. During his pastorates over one hundred members were added to the church. Their next pastor was Rev. Nathan D. Benedict, who settled with them in 1832, and remained two years. Twenty-eight members were added during that time. In 1835, Rev. Elijah Baldwin moved into the place, and the church voted to invite him to take the pastoral oversight during his stay with them. The invitation was accepted, and he served the church until the spring of 1840. From 1840 to 1850 the church had no settled pastor, but the pulpit was regularly supplied by Rev. E. N. Jenks, Rev. L. Atwater, E. C. Ambler, and others, all non-residents.

Under the labors of Rev. Mr. Jenks, in 1841, there was a very interesting revival, and eleven were added to the church by baptism. In the winter of 1850 another revival was enjoyed, and eleven more were admitted to the fellowship of the church.

From 1850 to 1866 there were no additions by baptism, and none by letter that proved of any lasting service to the cause of Christianity. During that period the church enjoyed the pastoral labors of Rev. H. M. Barlow two years, Rev. J. F. Jones two years, Rev. J. Hepburn three years, and then Mr. Hepburn supplied the pulpit two or three years after moving from the place.

In 1868, Rev. C. W. Potter accepted a call from the church, and continued with them about three years. A very extensive revival was enjoyed during that time; ten were added to the church as a result of it, while other churches received their full share of the converts. From 1871 to 1875 the church had no pastor, the pulpit being supplied a part of the time by Rev. Arthur Day and others. In the spring of 1875, Rev. E. Beardsley accepted a call to the pastorate of the church, and is with them at present.

During its early history its members were scattered over three or four townships, and meetings were held at different times in localities that best suited the convenience of the worshipers, but gradually out-stations were abandoned, the congregation in Merryall dwindled, the house of worship was sold and for a number of years their meetings have all been held in the meeting-house in Northville.

The church has never been strong, either in numbers or wealth, but, to its praise, it may be said that it has been a united and peace-loving church. Only one serious division has marred its history, and that was of short duration. Its location, being in the country, where the population is gradually dwindling, has always been unfavorable to its growth in numbers. Besides this, its pastorates have all been short, the result, probably, of never having owned a parsonage.

Several of its members have been licensed to preach the gospel, among the number Rev. N. M. Baldwin, DD., for a number of years pastor in New York and Philadelphia.

Synopsis: whole number received by baptism, 195; by letter, 73; total, 268. Present number, 40; constituent members, 23.

The Baptist Church at Gaylordsville was organized in about 1830. The Universal Friends, between 1780 and 1785, the followers of Jemima Wilkinson, who is described as a remarkably comely woman, with dark hair and sparkling black eyes, built a house in what is now the old cemetery, on the hill on the road towards New Preston. They soon sold this building to the Episcopalians, and moved to Yates Co., N. Y., where Jemima lived and died.

The Quaker society was organized in 1831, with twenty persons. They built a house in 1742, and have continued their worship from that time until the present, though at this date there is but one family of them residing in the town.

THE PRESS.

THE first paper established in this village was the New Milford Republican, in 1845, by J. K. Averill, who continued until some time during the following year, 1846, when it was removed to Litchfield.

THE HOUSATONIC RAY.

In 1872, Messrs. Bailey & Donavan, publishers of the Danbury News, deeming New Milford one of the best localities in Connecticut for the establishment of a rural newspaper, began the publication of the New Milford Journal there. They sent one of their workmen, named E. W. Addis, to this village to secure local items, and supplied him with sufficient type to set the items up; but they made up the balance of it, and printed the paper in Danbury. After about a a year they disposed of it to J. R. Johnson, who put the whole inside in type, but carried the forms to Danbury every week, and the original owners worked them off,—that is, the inside forms, the outside of the paper being "patent," and supplied by New York parties. Mr. Johnson published it about one year, when it passed into the hands of Mr. M. L. Delavan, its present editor and proprietor, who changed its name to The Housatonic Ray, under which it still lives, and it has met with a degree of success wholly unexpected at the outset. The Ray aims to be not neutral but independent in the expression of its opinions, and allows nothing to interfere with their expression. It has a feature—that of questions and answers—which is wholly unknown to the other papers of the State, and which has been pronounced by eminent men a very important feature, which, for the information imparted, should be adopted by all other newspapers. It is able to say that since it has appeared under its present name not a sentence has been published which could give offense to modesty. It aims to be thoroughly truthful and reliable, and under the able editorial management of Mr. Delavan has taken front rank among the leading local journals in the State.

THE NEW MILFORD GAZETTE

was established by Gee & Hale in January, 1877, by whom it was published until August, 1877, when it passed into the hands of Robert Erwin, who has since been its editor and publisher. It is a lively local journal, and justly merits its present prosperity. It is Democratic in politics.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW MILFORD

was originally a State bank, called the Bank of Litchfield County, with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars. The first meeting of stockholders was held Dec. 6, 1852, and the following board of directors was chosen, viz.: F. Chittenden, Eli Mygatt, George Taylor, Walter D. Sperry, Solomon G. Bostwick, Noble S. Bennitt, Daniel Marsh, George Briggs, and Glover Sanford. The banking-house was the small brick building now standing next door south of the residence of Mrs. Harriet Boardman, on Main Street. A. McAlister, of Bridgeport, was the first cashier, and held the position until the appointment of George W. Whittelsey, of New Milford, April 25, 1853. Mr. Chittenden was compelled to resign April 7, 1853, and thereupon Eli Mygatt was elected, and at the same time Henry W. Booth was chosen a director. Mr. Mygatt voluntarily retired from the presidency in 1855, and Henry W. Booth was chosen as his successor. Mr. Booth was succeeded by Daniel Marsh, who continued in said office until Jan. 1, 1878.

In March, 1865, the Bank of Litchfield County was converted into a national bank, with a capital of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. Daniel Marsh was continued in the presidency, with the following directors, viz.: Daniel Marsh, Glover Sanford, George Taylor, John Hopson, John G. Noble, Henry W. Booth, Lyman Smith, S. G. Bostwick, George Briggs. In 1858, John J. Conklin was made cashier, to succeed Mr. Whittelsey, and remained in office until October, 1867, when Henry Ives, the present cashier, was appointed.

The present officers of the bank are A. B. Mygatt, President; Henry W. Booth, Vice-President; Henry Ives, Cashier; Henry S. Mygatt, Assistant Cashier; Charles C. Barlow, Clerk.

The following is a statement of the condition of the bank Dec. 18, 1880:

Dr.		Cr.
Bills discounted	$240,667 77	Capital stock	$125,000 00
Overdrafts	341 84	Surplus fund	25,000 00

While a State bank, and very soon after its organization, the Bank of Litchfield County sustained heavy losses on account of the misdoings of its president, Frederick G. Chittenden. It necessarily became the chief care and effort of the next president, Eli My-gatt, and the board of directors, to repair the damages, as far as possible, occasioned by the mismanagement of Chittenden. Slowly but surely, under their administration, they began to regain a comparatively sound and satisfactory condition. Under the administration of the third president, Henry W. Booth, the bank was well and judiciously conducted, and became a prosperous institution, and paid satisfactory demands. He left the bank on a sound basis, possessing the confidence of the public, and with a rapidly augmenting business. This state of affairs continued while Mr. Marsh held the position of president, until the close of his term of official and most honorable service, Jan. 1, 1878. In 1867, John J. Conklin proved to be a defaulter to the amount of about $40,000. The bank was able to bear it without any very serious embarrassment, and is now in a very strong and prosperous condition, doing an active and constantly increasing business.

THE NEW MILFORD SAVINGS BANK

was organized in July, 1858, with the following board of trustees: Eli Mygatt, David C. Sanford, Silas Erwin, Gerardus Roberts, Albert N. Baldwin, James Hine, William J. Starr, Andrew B. Mygatt, Sheldon Blackman, Jehiel Williams, Noble S. Bennitt, Albert Pickett, Daniel Marsh, William B. Green, Charles H. Booth, John S. Turrill, Isaac Hine, Levi S. Knapp, and Charles Randall. The first officers were Eli Mygatt, President; Silas Erwin, Vice-President; Charles Randall, Sheldon Blackman, James Hine, Noble S. Bennitt, Gerardus Roberts, Directors; John S. Turrill, Secretary and Treasurer. The presidents have been as follows: Eli Mygatt, Silas Erwin, and James Hine. The first secretary and treasurer was John S. Turrill, who was succeeded by Charles Randall, the present incumbent.

The present board of trustees are Albert N. Baldwin, James Hine, William J. Starr, Andrew B. Mygatt, Daniel Marsh, William B. Green, Charles H. Booth, John S. Turrill, Levi S. Knapp, Charles Randall, William Roberts, Cyrus A. Todd, Ralph E. Canfield, Van Renssalear Giddings, Isaac B. Bristol, Turney Soule, Charles M. Beech, and George W. Anthony. The present officers are James Hine, President; Ralph E. Canfield, Vice-President; Charles Randall, Secretary and Treasurer; Isaac B. Bristol, Charles H. Booth, Van Renssalear Giddings, Levi S. Knapp, and John S. Turrill, Directors.

The first deposit, $39, was made Aug. 23, 1858.

The amount of deposits Oct. 1, 1880, were $566,646.-97.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.*

The first meeting for the formation of an agricultural society was held in Wright's Hall, New Milford, July 3, 1858. The society was organized under the name of "The Housatonic Agricultural Society." At first the fairs were held on the lot to the rear of the present residence of Dr. James Hine; afterwards the society rented grounds of F. S. Richmond, about one mile south of the village of New Milford, on the west side of the Housatonic River.

At a meeting of the society held March 3, 1879, it was voted to merge the society into a joint-stock organization, and at a meeting March 22d a temporary organization was effected. At a meeting June 21st, two-thirds of the stock having been subscribed for the organization, under the name of the "New Milford Agricultural Association," the organization was completed by the election of a board of directors, as follows: William D. Black, Nicholas Staub, Noble Bennitt, George W. Squires, Turney Soule, Samuel Thornhill, J. Leroy Buck, Homer L. Wanzer, Walter B. Bostwick, George A. Barnes, H. O. Warner, Charles E. Beeman, and Burr Mallett. W. D. Black was elected President: J. Leroy Buck, Vice-President; W. B. Dayton, Secretary; Charles Randall, Treasurer. Subsequently Mr. Dayton resigned his position, and Robert Erwin was elected to fill the vacancy.

At the annual election in 1880 the old board of directors and officers were re-elected. In 1881, Messrs F. J. Turrill and Charles N. Hall were elected directors in place of George A. Barnes and Charles E. Beeman. At a meeting of the board of directors held May 7, 1881, Col. C. D. Blinn was elected secretary in place of Erwin, resigned.

The grounds of the association are to the west of the village, about a mile distant, and are well located. The track is a good one, and suitable buildings for the exhibition of goods have been erected. In 1880 a grand stand was put up. For the two fairs held so far the association has been quite successful, each year leaving a surplus after paying its premiums in full. In 1879 the attendance at the fair and the articles entered for premiums were double those of the old society. There are also stables for the accommodation of owners of horses. No liquors are allowed to be sold on the grounds. So far the association has not allowed gambling in any form. In consequence of improvements the association is somewhat in debt. The capital is ten thousand dollars, and nearly all the stock has been taken.

LIBRARY.

The Union Library of New Milford was established in the Centre of New Milford, Feb. 18, 1796. The first meeting of the proprietors of said library was held at the dwelling-house of William Clark, and the following are the names of the original subscribers: Sherman Boardman, Elijah Boardman, David S. Boardman, Mathew Brownson, Nathan B. Buckingham, Samuel B. Buck, Clark Blackney, Benjamin Bostwick, Elijah Bostwick, Samuel Bostwick, Reuben Booth, Gerardus Booth, Asa Brownson, Daniel Camp, William Camp, Samuel Bostwick, Ithamer Canfield, Herman Canfield, William Clark, Stephen Chittenden, Jr., William Doan, Daniel Everitt, Stanley Griswold, Ebenezer Gaylord, William Gaylord, Nathan Gaylord, Daniel Gaylord, Abner Gunn, Epinetus Gunn, Abel Hine, Noble Hine, Beebe Hine, Solomon Hill, Abraham Hayes, C. Lowry, J. Lockwood, Daniel Lines, Truman Marsh, N. S. Masters, Stephen Miles, John Miles, Stephen Merwin, Noadiah Mygatt, Jonathan Mygatt, David Noble, Jeremiah Platt, Daniel A. Pickett, Joseph Ruggles, John Roberts, Philo Ruggles, John Speary, Benoni S. Sanford, Isaac Stone, Eli Starr, Nathaniel Taylor, Nathaniel Taylor, Jr., William Taylor, Gideon Treat, Thomas Wells, and Philip Wells.

ST. PETER'S LODGE, No. 21, F. AND A. M.,

was reorganized Nov. 23, 1863. A number of the fraternity met at Lewis Allen's hotel, in New Milford, on the evening of said day. Jarvis Polley was appointed chairman and F. Richmond, Jr., secretary. The brethren then proceeded to ballot for officers, with the following result: Jarvis Polley, W. M.; T. Richmond, Jr., S. W.; F. N. Allen, J. W.; Geo. Lockwood, Treas.; H. Hertz, Sec.

The lodge-room was first located in the post-office building, on Bank Street, and on their first regular communication, Jan. 4, 1864, the remaining officers were chosen, as follows: Chas. M. Booth, S. D.; Oliver S. Hartwell, J. D. It was voted to hold the regular communications on the first and third Tuesday evenings in each month. The charter members were Jarvis Polley, F. Richmond, Jr., L. N. Jennings, F. N. Allen, Frederic Percey, Robt. Townsend, Lewis Allen, Isaac Newman, Chas. M. Booth, Oliver S. Hartwell, H. Hertz. March 19th the first death occurred.

The following are the Worthy Masters in regular succession: Albert S. Hill, Dec. 19, 1865; C. M. Booth, Dec. 15, 1868; H. O. Warner, Dec. 20, 1870; A. H. McMahon, Dec. 15, 1874; S. C. Landon, Dec. 18, 1877; T. M. Trowbridge, Dec. 17, 1878.

The present officers are T. M. Trowbridge, W. M.; Nicholas Staub, S. W.; Geo. S. Beers, J. W.; T. T. Marsh, Treas.; Geo. H. Jackson, Sec.; J. A. Northrop, S. D.; Henry Adams, J. D.; Albert Turrill, Tyler.

Albert Turrill has held the position as Tyler since the organization of the lodge, with the exception of one year, during which time he has not been absent from his post but three or four times.

At the dedication of the Masonic Temple in Philadelphia, April 25, 1873, the lodge sent C. M. Booth to witness the ceremony and report to the lodge. On his return Mr. Booth gave the lodge an interesting account of the dedication, with a description of the building, and also presented to the lodge photographs of the Temple. Jan. 1, 1870, the lodge was removed to Schoverling's Building, on Railroad Street, near the depot, and Oct. 1, 1879, it was again removed to its present rooms, on Bank Street.

Present membership, ninety-four.

OUSATONIC CHAPTER, No. 33, R. A. M.

This chapter was organized as Weantinaug Chapter, March 3, 1870. May 19, 1870, it was legally constituted as Ousatonic Chapter, under warrant of John H. Barlow, G. H. P. The charter members were Jarvis Polley, G. W. Anthony, T. T. Marsh, Chas. D. Blinn, D. W. Knowles, A. H. McMahon, A. H. Knapp, Eli Hamlin, Ira Keeler, and John E. Knowles. The first officers elected were Jarvis Polley, M. E. H. P.; D. E. Knowles, E. K.; A. H. McMahon, E. S.; M. L. Frost, C. H.; S. C. Landon, R. A. C.; H. O. Warner, P. S.; T. T. Marsh, Treas.; Geo. W. Anthony, Sec.; Wm. Schoverling, G. M. 3d V.; John E. Knowles, G. M. 2d V.; Oliver S. Hartwell, G. M. 1st V.; Albert Turrill, Tyler.

The following is a list of succeeding M. E. H. Priests: A. S. Hill, Dec. 28, 1871; S. C. Landon, Dec. 28, 1876; A. S. Hill, Dec. 27, 1877.

The present officers are A. S. Hill, M. E. H. P.; T. M. Trowbridge, E. K.; S. C. Landon, E. S.; T. T. Marsh, Treas.; G. W. Anthony, Sec.; W. F. Bennett, C. H.; J. G. Foster, P. S.; G. S. Beers, R. A. C.; Alex. Levy, G. M. 3d V.; F. A. Bennett, G. M. 2d V.; J. A. Northrop, G. M. 1st V.; Albert Turrill, Tyler.

The chapter held its meetings at first in the Masonic Hall, on Railroad Street, but removed, with St. Peter's Lodge, F. and A. M., to its present rooms, on Bank Street.

Present membership, forty-five.

GOOD SHEPHERDS' LODGE, No. 65, I. O. O. F.,

was instituted July 2, 1877, with the following charter members: John F. Williams, Nathaniel A. Williams, John B. Boughton, Thos. D. Barlow, Geo. S. Beers, and James R. Ferris. The officers chosen were Thos. D. Barlow, N. G.; John B. Boughton, V. G.; Jas. R. Ferris, Sec.; John F. Williams, Treas. The place of meeting was Beach's Hall, corner West and Bridge Streets. On July 1, 1878, it was moved to Masonic Hall, on Railroad Street, near the depot. Oct. 1, 1879, it was again moved to New Masonic Hall, on Bank Street, where it now remains.

The Noble Grands have been as follows: John B. Boughton, January, 1878; Nathaniel A. Williams, July, 1878; Chas. B. Botsford, January, 1879; Geo. E. Eddy, July, 1879; Geo. S. Beers, January, 1880.

The present officers are Lewis W. Mosher, N. G.; Chas. Planz, V. G.; T. M. Trowbridge, Sec.; John B. Sharpe, Treas.

Nov. 13, 1877, Schuyler Colfax delivered a lecture, under the auspices of the lodge, to a large audience, from which the lodge received a handsome profit, a part of which was donated to the yellow fever sufferers in Memphis, Tenn.

Since its organization the lodge has lost but two by death. The present membership is forty-six, with an average attendance of sixteen.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The first fire company in this town was organized May 8, 1830. The old company was finally disbanded, and in February, 1863, Water Witch Engine Company, No. 2, was organized. The foremen have been as follows: Frederick Boardman, L. N. Jennings, S. L. Erwin, and N. Staub.

THE WATER WITCH HOSE COMPANY was organized May 1, 1876. The present officers are as follows: N. Staub, Foreman; Charles Edwards, First Assistant; Philip Planz, Second Assistant; T. M. Trowbridge, Secretary; R. B. Noble, Treasurer; H. E. Bostwick, Chief Engineer; A. H. McMahon, First Assistant; S. L. Erwin, Second Assistant.

THE ADELPHIC INSTITUTE.

The Adelphic Institute was opened at North Cornwall, by Ambrose S. Rogers, in 1847, and continued there until 1860, when it was removed to New Milford, and taught there until 1876, a period of twenty-nine years. This institution was highly prosperous, and had a patronage extending to all parts of the United States, the West Indies, and South America. It had over five hundred different pupils, and during the whole period of its continuance not a student sickened and died. The locality is one of the most healthy and beautiful in New England. During the civil war it was a military school, having the best-drilled teachers to drill the young cadets. Several of its pupils became officers in the United States army. The institution was a great benefit to the town of New Milford, bringing there several thousand dollars yearly. The students had ground allotted them to cultivate, and they were required to furnish some of their best productions for the press, and to take part in a debate once a week. Some of the highest positions in the country are now filled by them.

THE TOBACCO INTEREST.

As early as 1852, George McMahon commenced the raising of tobacco and manufacturing cigars in a small way. In 1868, E. A. Wildman erected the first tobacco warehouse in the town, and in that year five hundred cases were packed. In 1869, Schoverling & Warner also erected a large and commodious warehouse. These two concerns were the pioneers of the present immense business. The business is at present (October, 1880) represented by the following firms, and during the past year about five thousand cases were packed: Warner & Myers, W. M. Schoverling, E. A. Wildman & Co., P. Soule & Bro., Bristol & Staub, N. Lachenbruck & Bros., Hall & Friedman, Robert Irwin, B. J. Stone, F. S. Richmond, Martin L. Hungerford, and Duane Gaylord.

T. Soule & Bro.—This business was commenced in the fall of 1866, under the firm-name of T. Soule & Bro., doing the first year about six thousand dollars of contract building, besides some day-work. The business rapidly increased, and for eight years prior to 1879 the contract-work amounted to thirty-five thousand dollars annually. The firm until this time had consisted of Turney Soule and Daniel E. Soule. They had also for the last eight years been packers and dealers in leaf tobacco, packing annually from four hundred to seven hundred cases. In January, 1880, the firm sold out a half-interest in the building and lumber, flour, feed, etc., to George H. Lines and Frederic A. Lines, changing the firm-name to Soule Bros. & Co. The old firm still continued the tobacco business, under the firm-name of T. Soule & Bro. They built in New Milford village, during fourteen years, some seventy-five dwelling-houses, ranging from one thousand to eight thousand dollars each, besides several large tobacco warehouses, store blocks, etc.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

AMBROSE S. ROGERS.

Ambrose S. Rogers, principal of the "Adelphic Institute," was a native of Cornwall, Conn., and was graduated at Union College, under Dr. Eliphalet Nott, in 1840. Records in the British Museum trace the Rogers family to Thomas Rogers, sergeant-at-law, of Bendford, county of Wilts, England, who died in 1485. He was great-grandfather of John Rogers the martyr. The Rogers family was cradled in Bendford, and the name Noah has been handed down in direct line for seven generations. Noah (3) and Edward, his brother, came to Cornwall in 1760. They were men of sterling worth, of whom their descendants are justly proud. Noah Rogers (3) was the sixth generation from the martyr, and was one of the most active pioneers of Cornwall, and first in every enterprise. He was engaged not only in agriculture on five farms, but in everything else that would advance civilization or the town, running two forges, a grist-mill, and two saw-mills. Although exempt from military service, he yet volunteered and served as a soldier in the Revolution. His son, Deacon Noah Rogers (4), had four sons—Daniel, John, Noah, and Ambrose—and five daughters,—Lydia, Rhoda, Abigail, Eliza, and Amanda,—all of whom attained maturity, married, and had children. (In 1864 there were three of the sons, the five daughters, thirty of their children, and thirty-three of their grandchildren living.) For several years the four sons owned farms adjoining in Cornwall. Deacon Rogers was a man of good judgment, of great enterprise, like his father, and filled often the various town offices, and represented Cornwall in the Legislatures of 1813–14–15–18. He was in every respect a noble and upright man. He gave his children good educational advantages, and there was no man who was more willing to help every good cause, and his ample fortune was used for the benefit of the needy and unfortunate. He paid a large share of the original cost of the church in North Cornwall, besides furnishing a large amount of timber and lumber. He was a man of deeds, not words, a character fit for his age and generation. And right well did he do his work. So well that when, at the age of seventy, he was stricken with apoplexy, a "shock," as it was called, it was said by one of the town's best citizens "that the society had received a 'shock.'" We are happy to add that his sons, Daniel, John, and Noah (Ambrose being then at college), most honorably filled the vacuum caused by their father's death. They were worthy sons of a worthy sire, true to society, true to their church, true to their God. Their father invariably, on the failure to raise funds for the minister's salary, always paid the deficit. They, following his example, did the same, and during their lives the minister of North Cornwall could safely rely on his full salary being paid.

Since the martyrdom of John Rogers, there has not been a period when some of his lineal descendants have not stood forth to battle boldly and strongly for the right, by the pen or in the pulpit, in the courts of justice or the halls of legislation. They have filled not only positions of highest trust in the British government, but in America they are occupying places of trust and honor, and at the bar and in the pulpit are earnestly following the martyr's spirit, and are more in number probably than can be traced to any other stock. Ten nobler women than the five daughters of Noah Rogers (3), Sarah, Abigail, Rhoda, Irene, and Amanda, and the five daughters of Deacon Noah Rogers, named above, were never reared in New England.

Mrs. Ellen (Thompson) Rogers is twin daughter of the late N. F. Thompson, New Haven, Conn. He was for many years director of the Mechanics' Bank in that city; afterwards he was for over fourteen years its president. He was ever true to this position of trust, and in his death the bank lost a man of strict integrity and remarkable business capacity, whose opinion was of great weight, and whose judgment was unerring in all financial matters. His nature was kind and affectionate, true to his family, true to his church, and true to his God. He was born in 1803, and in 1876 he passed triumphantly away to the shining heights beyond. His wife, Jane Caroline Street, preceded him to the tomb a few years previous. She was granddaughter of Rev. Nicholas Street, who was for fifty years pastor of the church in East Haven. She was connected back through generations of clergy to the associate first minister of New Haven, and inherited their noble traits of character, blended with the most gentle and unobtrusive piety. Grandly gifted with an intellect that delighted itself in art, a heart thoroughly allied to the beautiful in nature, her genius found fit expression in transferring the varied tints of wood and sky, or delighting with graphic pen by her quaint originality of thought. She reared a family of nine children, who were wisely governed, and whose spiritual training brought all into the fold of Christ. She kept herself well informed of the political, social, and religious issues of the day. Her kindred esteemed her highly for her many virtues. "Her children rise up and call her blessed, her husband and he praiseth her." Although eventually Mrs. Rogers left the "home-nest," none realized the gap it made in her life, when, with the exception of two beloved sisters and one brother, the Thompson family had at the writing of this sketch gone to their eternal home. Her twin sister, Lottie, "fell asleep" June 28, 1880. The sisters, so closely allied from birth, were similar in personal appearance, taste, and spiritual aspirations, which made the bond very close and strong, when New Milford became the home of both. To give an adequate idea of the picturesque surroundings of their residence, it seems desirable to allude to the high estimation in which it was held by such an enthusiastic lover of the grand and sublime in nature as Miss Thompson. When shadows came so unexpectedly in the form of sickness not a murmur escaped the sufferer's lips, and she still manifested an interest in family details, in the children so tenderly loved, and in the rural charms of her adopted home. As an artist, she possessed an inherited talent and a brave industry, giving more than medium value to her labors of love in the art of painting. Her mind was enriched by study and travel, which gave vigor and originality to her facile pen, while her choice social qualities made her inexpressibly dear to a large circle of friends. Gifted with a rich voice, she was never weary of singing gospel songs, or indulging in the study of elocution. But, more than all, her deep-toned piety showed itself in the daily exercise of the Christian graces. The poor were succored by her, the bereaved comforted by her prayers and sympathy, and the wandering guided by her to the Master's feet. Shortly before the dark shadow of death came, this ardent lover of nature was raised in her bed to behold once more the beauty of one of lovely June's closing days, through the opened windows of that "upper chamber," her own loved room. It seemed a picture fit for paradise. She gazed through a vista of living green beyond to the placid river (Housatonic), supplemented by mountains smiling down upon her, as they seemed to touch the clouds which reflected in the mirrored surface of the river a gorgeous sunset, presenting a scene of unsurpassed loveliness, with their blendings of amethyst blue and deep tints of crimson and gold. In this sweet tranquillity, her mind at perfect peace dwelt on the Scripture text, "I swear unto thee I will glorify the earth." As the clouds were again bathed with their summer glory, her happy spirit passed to the fairer world of endless day.

The residence of A. S. Rogers, of New Milford, Conn., is located on an eminence one hundred and twenty feet above the road, and commands a fine view of the Housatonic River. Surrounded by adornments which nature has prepared with a lavish hand, it is admirably adapted for what it was at first designed (a private school for boys), but for several years the owner and his family have been the sole occupants. We do not propose to describe all the advantages of this locality by its beauty and healthfulness, but give a brief sketch of its artistic attractions. The main building, with its north and south wing, is perfect in symmetry, with a broad veranda extending three sides, which constitutes a pleasing addition, with its trellis-work adorned with climbing roses, which in the "leafy month" contribute to the floral kingdom their wealth of fragrant blossoms. Among the flowering shrubs that beautify the north piazza, the "Garland Deutzia," with its abundant blossoms, affords a pleasing screen and ornament. In the late autumn these are superseded in the background by the coral berries of the gorgeous "Burning Bush," adding cheer by their brightness and abundance. Introducing the visitor when the earth is robed with her summer verdure, let us approach from the front entrance, and ascend about a hundred stone steps, resting a moment at "Cozy Nook," on the rustic seat which invitingly tempts one to pause and take breath. If on entering we failed to admire the rows of gigantic maples which line the fence, and which, if possessed of the power of speech, could unfold the tale of the fate of their companions when the crackling sound of the axe, laid vigorously at their huge trunks, had caused banishment. The view from this point, no longer obstructed, gives a glimpse of the cars as they rush onward, sending the echoes of their shrill whistle sounding over hill and valley. Here, with nature's carpet, dotted with wild-flowers, at our feet, beneath the shadow of the evergreen fir-tree, with its rustic hanging-baskets well supplied with gracefully-drooping plants, and surrounded by clumps of trees and snarled trunks, with a thick growth of vines festooning their mossy sides. The dark urns, standing firm on their marble bases, retain their floral treasures lovingly within, gladdening the eye with their cheerful beauty. A few steps and the lawn is exchanged for the broad graveled walk leading to the house, and bordered on either side by evergreen fir-trees, which justly entitle it to the name of "Evergreen Avenue."

So ornamental in appearance, it presents a cheerful aspect even when locked in the icy grasp of winter, and at that season affords, in its stiff green branches, both food and shelter to the blue-jays who resort hither, giving cheer by their sweet and exhilarating warbles. These favorite winter-trees, loftily standing in tasteful arrangement, fairly look down upon the old chestnut-tree. This ancient celebrity stands, the pride and glory of the mansion,—

"Come rest beneath its grateful shade,
The grand old chestnut-tree;
The beauties of yon hill and glade
Are not so dear to me.

"Majestic in thy grandeur, tall,
Well hast thou done thy part;
By poet loved, admired by all,
Grand imagery of art.

"Gay, happy childhood loves to seek
Thy nuts, which strew the ground,
Or climb to yonder lofty seat
In intertwining crown.

"Dear, cherished tree! long may'st thou live,
Be loved as now thou art;
And inspiration ever give
Its impress on the heart."

We may tarry beneath its grateful shadow, or receive ample compensation for the labor of ascending the steps by finding a second seat in readiness within its green branches. Now, seated high in air, a peaceful feeling steals over the heart,—of gratitude, in the devout mind, to the Giver of all good for his endless tokens of love in the gifts of nature. Even the birds catch the enthusiasm, and, clearing their tiny throats, lead off in glorious songs of praise to their Maker.

Having paid our respects to this venerable tree, let us descend and turn our steps southward towards the apple-orchard, which in bloom is surpassingly lovely, and produces abundant harvests of luscious fruit, which well rewards for its cultivation. With no intention of slighting the pear-trees and other varieties of fruit, we pass on near the boundary of the kitchen-garden, rather prosaic in appearance, but deserving honorable survey of those who have an eye for utility and a relish for fresh vegetables. To please the "little folks," we proceed through "tangled juniper, beds of weeds," down impromptu stepping-stones, where the "weeping willows" grow, to the tiny streamlet, which is navigated only by miniature boats on account of its circumscribed limits, but is an unfailing source of pleasure for the bright eyes and busy hands of childhood. Perhaps a lesson of industry is taught by the busy bees (to whose hives we come by a side-path), who yearly afford "nectar sweet," as well as prove a standing monument of rebuke to all idlers. We now come to what was formerly the school building, and which possesses the qualification of being transformed to a gardener's lodge. Directly in front is a graceful maple of tender growth, called the "Thompson centennial tree," from the fact that it was planted by the sisters bearing that name in the centennial year. The ceremony was superintended by A. S. Rogers, the worthy head of the family, and by the noble youth at that time members of the institution. The address, expressing gratitude that our country had enjoyed the blessings of freedom for a hundred years, and that the tree might grow, flourish, and live to witness a second centennial year, was given by Miss Lottie Thompson, who now beholds the "Tree of Life," whose "leaf shall not wither." The maple now stands, a living monument to her memory, around which cluster tender reminiscences of her worth and excellence. In the rear of this building is "Molly" pasture, a fertile, sloping meadow, where the meek-eyed cows are quietly grazing, seemingly content to live and die on the broad acres. At noonday in midsummer they never fail to seek the shade of the accommodating trees for shelter from the heat and glare of the sun. Let our noble steeds come to the front, and show their willingness to vacate the barn buildings, to receive the attention bestowed upon them. They are pronounced a most valuable addition to the comfort and enjoyment of the owner and family. The beautiful pony "Fannie," so intelligent and docile, is noted for her adaptation to saddle or harness, and her partiality for the juveniles of the household. Proceeding onward to the north, through the gateway, we may enjoy a stroll through "Home Avenue," the driveway of which is ornamented with maple-trees of vigorous growth. We may stand at some favorable point and witness one of the finest views in Litchfield County, and when bathed in the lights and shadows of a glorious summer afternoon it presents a picture of charming magnificence. On retracing our steps, we may tarry a moment on the north side and explore the "Rockery," a grotesque and romantic little nook, which the combination of art with nature renders attractive. Various specimens of stone from Mine Hill have been utilized by an arrangement, piled together in the form of a pyramid, so placed as to give foothold to the potted plants which adorn its sides. Graceful ferns delight in the damp earth at the base, while soft green mosses cling lovingly to the interstices, where many a protruding wild-flower grows spontaneously. Within its brilliant coronal of green is secured a pot of ivy, with its creeping vine of polished leaves, which find support on the trees in close proximity. We may inhale the exquisite fragrance emitted from the delicate blossoms which embellish the spot while enjoying the repose offered by iron chairs of durable construction, or seek yon vine-clad bower as we emerge from the labyrinth of rural beauty. Leaving the grounds, not yet fully explored, we adjourn to the house to take observations from its upper windows, which is, perhaps, the crowning joy of all. The dazzling glories of summer's closing day heighten the beauty of the landscape. Openings through the dense drapery of green foliage reveal glimpses of the thickly-settled village, with its church-spires pointing towards the azure sky, which looks smilingly down on woody dell, waving fields, and verdant meadows. The river curves silently and gracefully onward, its banks bordered by trees and shrubs, which shower their leaves into its smooth surface or on nature's carpet of richest green. The artistic effect is completed by the encircling hills, which stand in dignified grandeur, like silent sentinels guarding the lonely scene, while their summits seem to touch the clouds, and harmonize with their richest tints of amber and gold, blended with violet and crimson. As the liquid stream of light gradually fades from the enraptured vision, these soft shadows lengthen over the valley, and the dim twilight as it descends spreads its mantle of gray over the glowing earth in solemn benediction.

DR. GEORGE TAYLOR.

George Taylor, M.D., was born in New Milford, Conn., Aug. 24, 1802, and died Jan. 14, 1881, aged seventy-eight years. His maternal great-grandfather, Rev. Daniel Boardman, was the first ordained clergyman of New Milford, and his grandfather, Rev. Nathaniel Taylor, was the second. The emigrant, John Taylor, who was the first American ancestor of Dr. Taylor, arrived at Windsor, Conn., Aug. 17, 1639. He was a person of property, character, and influence, and was lost at sea in 1645, while on a voyage to England. His will, made before his departure, was not probated till 1694. The history of ancient Windsor has an account of him and the land he owned. Thomas Taylor married Rebecca Ketchum, of Norwalk, where he lived till he was forty-one years old, when he moved to Danbury as one of its seven first settlers. He was a worthy man, and represented his town in the General Assembly a number of years. His son Daniel married a Benedict, by whom he had two daughters, and then a Hoyt; they had two sons, Nathaniel and Daniel. Nathaniel was born at Danbury, Conn., Aug. 27, 1722. He married Tamar Boardman in 1749, having graduated at Yale in 1745. For more than twenty-six years, from 1774 until his death, Dec. 9, 1800, he was a member of the board of trustees of Yale College; had the management of the college farms, and in various ways rendered important service. He was a zealous advocate of the American Revolution, and during that contest remitted one year's salary, and also served as chaplain to a regiment of Connecticut troops. He came to New Milford to preach, Jan. 3, 1748, and was ordained on the 29th of June following, and faithfully, for over fifty-two years, exercised the duties of his sacred calling. He was in his seventy-ninth year when he died, and his family is exceptional in point of longevity. This inscription, which he designed for a monumental tablet over his grandfather's grave in Danbury, but which was never completed, is worthy of preservation:

"Marble may tell Posterity that Mr. Thomas Taylor, a first settler in Danbury, died Jan. 1735, aged 92. He had Ten children by one wife. The eldest, Thomas, died aged 90; Joseph, 90; John, 70; Daniel, 94; Timothy, 56; Nathan, 100; Theophilus, 90; Deborah, 80; Rebecca, 98; Eunice, 98; in all 858. This stone erected by Rev. Nathaniel Taylor, son of Daniel."

Col. William Taylor was youngest child of Rev. Nathaniel Taylor. He was born in New Milford, March 20, 1764, and married Abigail Starr, of Danbury, Dec. 3, 1786. He was an eminent citizen, and died, universally mourned, Feb. 24, 1841. Dr. George Taylor was their youngest child. His early education was acquired at private schools in Litchfield, Sharon, and Salisbury. When but a small boy he accidentally cut one of his eyes with a knife, permanently destroying its sight. He was graduated at Yale in 1824, and commenced practice as a physician in New Milford at once. He practiced allopathy until 1837, when, through Dr. Vanderbergh, of New York City, he was converted to homœopathy, and became its first practitioner in Connecticut. He conducted a very large practice over a very wide circuit for more than half a century, and, until disabled by age, with great skill and great success. He won, as he deserved, the perfect confidence and warm love of all his patients, for he put forth his strongest efforts and wisest skill for rich and poor alike.

Dr. Taylor was much in public affairs. He was sent to the State Senate in 1832. This was his first public office. He represented New Milford many years in the Assembly, and was sent again to the Senate. He was judge of probate for a long time, and town treasurer for many years. Democratic in politics, he was one of the pillars of that party in this section of the State. He was nominated for member of Congress in 1847, and defeated by Hon. Truman Smith. He was at one time a candidate for Lieutenant-Governor. In 1864 he was sent as delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago, which nominated Gen. McClellan for President. In 1876 he was chosen member of the Electoral College, and cast his vote for Samuel J. Tilden.

Perhaps no man in Litchfield County was more widely known in social, political, or professional circles, and surely none ever stood higher in esteem and confidence than he.

His children are Charles Taylor, M.D., for years a homœopathic physician in New Milford, and Mrs. Thomas E. Stewart, of New York City.

Nothing can more faithfully portray the estimation in which the citizens of New Milford hold his memory than the following extracts, the first from an article contributed to the Bridgeport Farmer by Henry S. Sanford, Esq., and the second from an obituary in the Housatonic Ray:

"Born in New Milford, the son of an eminent citizen, Col. William Taylor, and the lineal descendant of the two first settled Congregational clergymen of that town, he was in every respect a son of the soil, a product and an exponent of the Housatonic Valley in its calm repose, and of its high hills, which guard it in their silent strength. . . . In politics, during many years, Dr. Taylor stood forth as the main manager and foremost factor of the Democratic party in New Milford. Nay, he often seemed not merely the leader there of the Democratic party, but almost its veritable and living embodiment. In council, in caucus, and in convention his advice, discreet, temperate and honorable, was always listened to and followed. All my early life was spent in New Milford, and it was my fortune, as that of my father before me, to act always with the party opposed to Democracy, and I take the greater pride and the more pleasure in bearing witness to the manly manner in which Dr. Taylor invariably conducted political contests. His integrity was white as the snow, his fairness plain as the day. He scorned all treachery, trickery, and baseness. Firm in his fealty to his party, he yet respected the opinions of others who differed from him, and blended no bitterness with the strife. He said once that my father, the late David C. Sanford, and himself had lived opposite to each other, across the village green, for many years, and had always and at all times opposed each other strongly in politics, and all matters allied to politics, but that no unpleasant word and, he believed, no unpleasant look had ever been exchanged between them. The truth is the doctor believed steadfastly in his political principles, and was at bottom, and at heart, an ardent patriot and a public-spirited citizen. He believed his party to be in the right in the main, and in most points; so he adhered to it, and honored it, and it honored him. But he has gone. His noble, commanding figure, crowned with snow-white locks, standing and sitting like a Prime Minister, will no more adorn the village and the valley, yet love for the man, and respect and tender regard for his memory, shall remain while the river flows and the valley smiles for us who knew him and are left behind."

"He occupied from early manhood a prominent place in this community, including various positions of honor and trust. His record has been one of perfect integrity; his public career has been without a stain of venality. In the conduct of personal affairs he was just and true in his intercourse with his fellow-men; indeed, he was faithful and true in all the relations of life. He had a kind and sympathizing disposition, and was exceedingly gentle and painstaking in the discharge of his professional duties; and during his long career he answered thousands of calls from the poor and the afflicted, from whom he could expect no other recompense than gratitude. The characteristics to which we have alluded ran like golden threads through his life, and inspired in a marked degree the respect and confidence of all who knew him."

DAVID E. SOULE.

David E. Soule was born on Long Mountain, in the northwestern part of the town of New Milford, and lived there with his father, John Soule, until he was nearly seventeen years old. Having received a common-school education, he now began the world for himself. After having served an apprenticeship of three years as carpenter and joiner, he set out at New Milford and vicinity, working at his trade until August, 1862, when he enlisted as a private soldier in Capt. George Williams' Co. H, of the Nineteenth Connecticut Volunteers; served as color-bearer in several battles, —namely, Hanover Court-house, Cold Harbor, before Petersburg, Weldon Railroad, etc.,—after which he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant; was in the Army of the Potomac and Shenandoah Valley; was engaged in eight different battles, besides several skirmishes, and was never wounded. When discharged, after the close of the war, he returned home and engaged in building, in connection with the lumber business, with his brother, T. Soule. He is also extensively engaged in the tobacco business. In January, 1866, Mr. Soule married Sarah M. Sullivan; they have three children,—Frank E., Florence A., and Willie W. His wife is a native of New Milford. From his labor and skill Mr. Soule has amassed a comfortable fortune. He is yet in the prime of life, and so conducts his business as not only to furnish employment to a goodly number of men, but ornamenting his town and the surrounding country with beautiful designs of architecture. A view of his residence may be seen elsewhere in this work.

HON. A. N. BALDWIN.

Albert N. Baldwin was born in New Milford, Conn., Sept. 28, 1811. He is descended from an old Saxon family often mentioned in early English history, and traces his ancestry in an unbroken line to John Baldwin, of Aylesbury, England, who was sole inheritor of his brother Richard, who died in 1480. Sylvester Baldwin, the emigrant, came to Milford, Conn., in 1632, there settled, and reared sons and daughters. The family has ever been a reputable one, possessed of industry, integrity, and liberality. Theophilus Baldwin came from Milford to New Milford in the early part of the eighteenth century, and his son Isaac, born in New Milford, in 1735, was grandfather to A. N. Baldwin. He married Hannah Davis, Jan. 2, 1765, and died Dec. 16, 1811. They had ten children, eight attaining maturity. At twenty years of age he settled on the same place now occupied by his grandson, and thereafter, for fifty-six years, made it his home.

Noble Baldwin, his third son, was born on the old homestead, Dec. 25, 1779. He lived there over ninety-two years, and died, much regretted, March 23, 1872. He was a man of strong physique, a quiet agriculturist, caring nothing for public places or honors, but was prominently connected with the Baptist Church of which he was a zealous member for years. He married Mary Hinman, of Oxford, Sept. 17, 1803. Their children were Norman, Elmer, Albert N., and Harriet E. (Mrs. F. G. Bennet, of New Milford). Mrs. Baldwin died March 9, 1859.

Albert received a common-school education, and taught winter terms of district school from the age of sixteen to twenty-nine, working on the farm in summer. He has never moved from the old homestead, which, nicely located in the beautiful valley, has been a pleasant home for several generations. Oct. 20, 1835, he married Eliza, daughter of Jeremiah and Sarah E. (Merwin) Baldwin. She was born in New Milford, April 8, 1816. Their son, Francis G., born Feb. 27, 1840, now resides in New Milford.

Mr. Baldwin is a man of extended public service. He has been called to fill nearly every position of trust and responsibility in his town; has represented New Milford many years in the State Legislature, was member of many important committees; was State's prison inspector, and largely instrumental in establishing the reform school. Always deeply engaged in education, he has been for years a member of the board of education. He was formerly a Whig, but on the breaking up of that party he became a Democrat, and has always acted with its leaders, believing that in a close adherence to the Constitution existed the perpetuity of the republic. His local attachment makes him largely interested in New Milford. His economy, business qualities, prudence, and success have placed him in good financial circumstances.

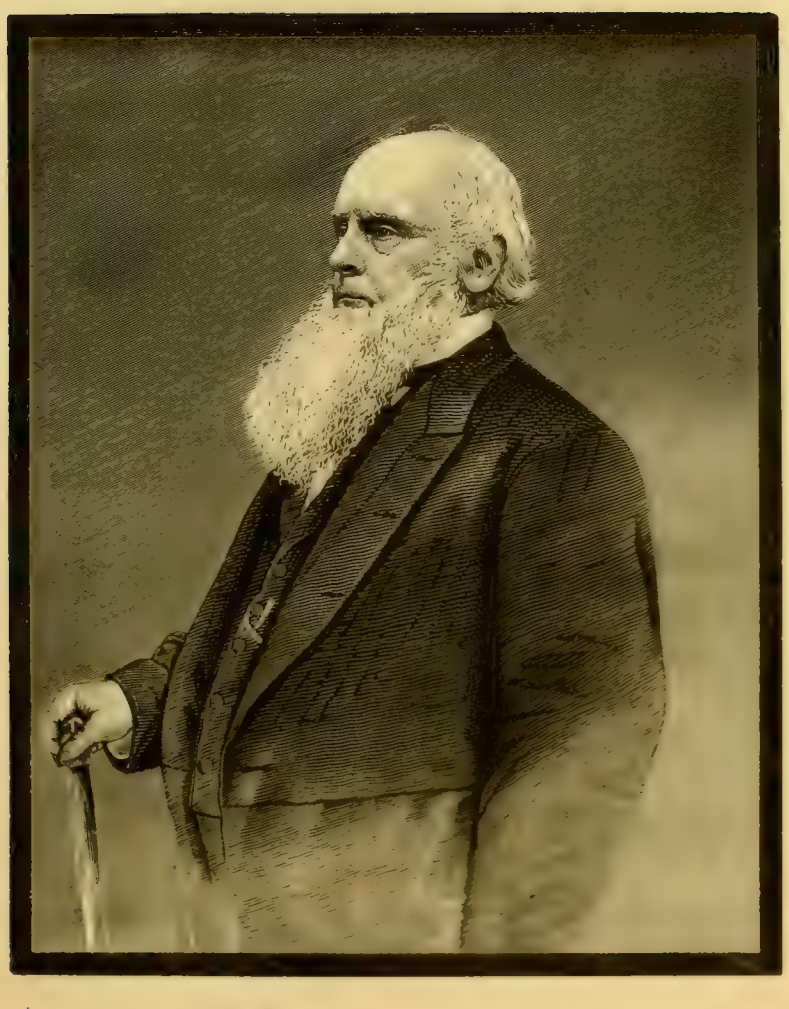
Both Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin are consistent and valued members of the Baptist Church, joining it in 1850.

GEORGE H. NOBLE.

The Noble name is of great antiquity in England, from which country Thomas Noble, the first American ancestor, probably came about the middle of the seventeenth century. He was a resident of Boston in 1653; became one of the early settlers of Springfield, Mass., and afterwards removed to Westfield, Mass., where he died, Jan. 20, 1704.

His son John was born in Springfield, Mass., March 6, 1662, and died in New Milford, Conn., Aug. 17, 1714, aged fifty-two years.

The same spirit which led Thomas Noble, Sr., to brave the dangers of the ocean and the wilderness inspired his eldest son to become the first white settler in the rich valley of the Housatonic, at New Milford, Conn. June 22, 1706, John Noble, then of Westfield, purchased land at New Milford, Conn., of John Woodruffe, of Milford, an original proprietor, and moved thither in 1707. The incidents concerning his settlement appear in their proper place in the history of the town. He was one of the committee chosen in 1710 by the proprietors to divide the lands of the settlers, and the same year joined the First Congregational Church of Woodbury, and was one of the petitioners to the General Court for an organization of a church in New Milford, which was organized in 1716, two years after his death.



Ensign David Noble, son of John, was born in Westfield, Mass., Jan. 25, 1696; joined the Congregational Church in New Milford in 1720, and died about 1760. He was selectman 1736–37, representative to the General Assembly for six sessions, and was chosen, Oct. 11, 1743, ensign of the North military company, in New Milford. He married for his second wife Susanna, daughter of Hon. John and Elizabeth Sherman, of Woodbury.

Their oldest child, Zadock, was born in New Milford, Sept. 17, 1723, and died Jan. 13, 1786. In 1761 he was selectman. Under date of March 31, 1777, the records of New Milford show that it was "Voted, 2d, That a committee be appointed, according to the advise of his Hon^{r} the Governor, etc., for the purpose of furnishing the Quota of Soldiers in the Continental service of s^{d} New Milford," and Lieut. Zadock Noble was chosen first on said committee. Dec. 8, 1777, he was chosen one of the New Milford committee of inspection and correspondence. He married Freelove Dibble, of Danbury, Conn., and had numerous children.

Their son, Ezra Dibble Noble, was born in New Milford, Conn., Jan. 3, 1749; was a farmer, and died March 26, 1808. He was twice married, and had many children. His son Ezra was born July 9, 1779, in New Milford; passed his life and died there, June 1, 1855. He was selectman 1815–17, and justice of the peace from 1825 to 1849. He was a man simple in his habits, of great modesty and sterling integrity. He died, probably of heart-disease, while sitting in his chair. He married Amelia, daughter of Benjamin and Rachel Hickok, of Danbury, Conn. They had two sons—Hiram B. and George H.—and four daughters.

George Henry Noble was born in New Milford, Conn., March 12, 1814, and was seventh in direct line from Thomas Noble, of Westfield, Mass., and sixth from the first settler of New Milford. He was engaged as clerk in New Haven from 1828 to 1838, where he married, Jan. 6, 1835, Henrietta, daughter of Abel and Henrietta (McCracken) Burritt, of New York City. She was born in New Haven, Conn., June 25, 1816. After about four years passed in merchandising in New York City and Augusta, Ga., Mr. Noble returned, in 1842, to New Milford, and became associated with his brother in the manufacture of boots, under firm-name of H. B. & G. H. Noble. They made a specialty of goods for California trade, and did an extensive business.

Mr. Noble was extensively known and respected throughout the State, and at various times during his long and prosperous business career occupied positions of public responsibility and trust. He was postmaster of New Milford from 1853 to 1856; acted with the Republican party from its formation, and was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1860, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President. Previous to this he was for several years bank commissioner for Connecticut, and filled the position with credit and ability. He was for nearly ten years (1862–71) assessor of internal revenue for the district where he resided, and was for several years a director of the Housatonic Railroad. He was a member of the Congregational Church of New Milford, a constant attendant at the sanctuary, and a valued member of the society. His death occurred Dec. 10, 1872, after a long and wasting illness.

Geo. H. Noble

His two surviving children are Alfred Henry and George Belden. They are engaged in the manufacture of buttons in New Milford, with firm-name of Noble Bros. Alfred was born June 3, 1841, in New York; married, Oct. 27, 1864, Eleanor Dacy, daughter of Rev. Charles Gardner and Elizabeth C. (Elting) Acly, of New Milford; they have two children. George was born in New Milford, Oct. 25, 1848. He married, Dec. 19, 1878, Caroline L., daughter of Dr. James and Catharine (Northrup) Hine, of New Milford.

HORATIO GILEAD SPERRY.

Horatio Gilead Sperry was born in New Milford, Conn., Sept. 5, 1806. He was oldest child of Wilmot and Dolly (Averill) Sperry. The Sperry family is of Welsh extraction, and the original spelling of the name, which was continued till about one hundred years ago, was Speary. Deacon Sperry's great-grandfather, Gilead, came from Wales to New Haven with his father and family. He was a splendid mechanic, and when about twenty-one years old came to New Milford to superintend the building of the Congregational church, became acquainted with Mercy, daughter of Rev. Daniel Boardman, married her, and became a lifelong resident of the town. Jared, his only son, was born Dec. 25, 1750, on the farm purchased by his father, in the north part of the town; lived there as a farmer all his life, and died April 12, 1812, in his sixty-second year, a victim of the terrible epidemic which devastated New Milford in that year. He was an Episcopalian. He married Mrs. Amy Wheaton, whose maiden name was Stone. His only son, Wilmot, was her child. He afterwards married a Widow Camp, by whom he had one daughter, Henrietta, who married Hon. Stephen B. Leonard, of Owego, N. Y., and whose children occupy high financial and social positions. Wilmot Sperry was born on the same farm as his father; was educated for an Episcopal clergyman, but became attached to the Congregational Church, and settled as a farmer on the home farm. He was an active business man; was a tanner and currier, and for several years was merchant in Merryall, with Elijah Bennett as partner, under firm-name of Bennett & Sperry. He steadily refused to accept public office, "preferring," as he said, "to attend to his own business rather than that of others." He was a Democrat of the old school. He married Dolly, daughter of Col. Perry Averill, of Washington. Their children were Horatio G., Amy M. (Mrs. John Angevine, of New Preston), Flora (Mrs. Harvey P. Turrell, deceased), and Dolly M. (Mrs. Harvey Whittlesey, of Farmington, deceased). He afterwards married Anna, daughter of Capt. Joseph Whittlesey, of Washington, by whom he had four sons and one daughter,—Jared, Orlo, Walter D., George (deceased), and Harriet P. (Mrs. C. W. Bennett, of Bridgeport).

Horatio was brought up on the old homestead; was educated at common schools, supplemented by a long course of instruction under that veteran and able teacher, Minor Turrell. From about his majority, for several years, Horatio was engaged during the winter in teaching, and went to New Jersey also as a teacher. Returning to Connecticut after some time, he commenced merchandising at Marbledale, where he remained over ten years. Here he married, Oct. 20, 1834, Eliza, daughter of Rev. Abijah Tomlinson. Her mother's maiden name was Betsy Tomlinson. She was of good old Puritan stock, that has ever occupied important positions in Connecticut and elsewhere from the early days of the Commonwealth. In the spring of 1841 they moved to the old place so long occupied by Mr. Sperry's father, and from which he was just called by death, and here they have lived a long life of usefulness, and grown old together, and have the satisfaction of knowing that their life has been one of content. Their children are Anna H. (Mrs. John C. Ackley), Caroline Averill (Mrs. George B. Ackley), Jared Boardman, Charles Tomlinson, Eliza T. (Mrs. Irwin J. Beardsley, of Kent).

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sperry have been members of the Congregational Church for over half a century, and are among the most valued and active members. Mr. Sperry has been deacon since 1854, and clerk of the society from 1854 to 1879.

Deacon Sperry has been unambitious of public distinction, but has consented to take various town offices, among them justice of the peace. He has, as was his father before him, often been called to administer and settle estates. In politics he was a Henry Clay Whig, and is now a Republican, joining that party on its organization. His sons and sons-in-law are all of the same political faith.

THIS town lies in the north part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Massachusetts, on the east by Colebrook and Winchester, on the south by Goshen, and on the west by Canaan and North Canaan. The surface of the town is elevated and mountainous, and the soil is a gravelly loam. Blackberry River, which is formed by the junction of two rivers at Norfolk, and flows west into the Housatonic, affords an excellent water-power for manufacturing purposes.

This town belonged to what was known as the Connecticut colony, and was appointed to be sold at Hartford on the second Tuesday in April, 1738. The sale, however, failed, and in 1742 it was again offered for sale, when a portion of it only was disposed of. In May, 1750, an act was passed by the General Assembly ordering the remainder to be sold at public vendue at Middletown in the December following, and to continue the sale until the lands were disposed of, which was effected in 1754.

In 1758 there were but twenty-seven families residing in the town. There were fifty proprietors of the lands, and as it was a condition among them that each should settle one family upon his respective right within five years, the population rapidly increased, and in 1761 numbered about seventy families.

THE PIONEERS.

Among the pioneers were George Palmer, William Barber, Jedediah Richards, John Turner, Ebenezer Knapp, Cornelius Brown, Aaron Aspenwall, Samuel Gaylord, Ezra Knapp, Isaac Pettibone, Edward Strickland, Samuel Cowles, Ebenezer Burr, Elijah Barber, Ebenezer Pardia, Cornelius Dowd, Joseph Mills, Gideon Lawrence, Ashbel Case, Justis Gaylord, Rufus Lawrence, Eli Pettibone, Samuel Mills, Thomas Knapp, Ebenezer Knapp, Jr., James Hotchkiss, Samuel Ransom, Abraham Knapp, James Benedict, Stephen Baker, Joshua Whitney, Jacob Spalding, Stephen Comstock, Jedediah Turner, Samuel Strickland, Jabez Rood, Samuel Monross, Luther Barber, Timothy Gaylord, Elisha Richards, Giles Pettibone, Jonathan Strickland, Amariah Plumb, and David Turner.

The second sale of the town was effected through the agency of John Turner, who was appointed by the town to make application to the Assembly for its sale. He was a determined and energetic man, and at the same time the application was made secured its incorporation; also a land-tax, to continue two years, to assist in defraying the ecclesiastical expenses.

The population of the town rapidly increased, and upon the breaking out of the Revolution it was one of the most prosperous settlements in Litchfield County.

FIRST PROPRIETORS' MEETING, ETC.*

The first meeting of the proprietors of the town of Norfolk, under a warning by Benjamin Hull, Esq., assistant, was on the 18th of December, 1754, at the house of Jonathan Humphry, Simsbury. At said meeting John Humphry was chosen proprietors' clerk. At said meeting it was voted to lay out one hundred acres on a right, there being forty-nine individual rights, one school right, one right for the first minister that should settle, and one right to be appropriated for the support of the ministry. The hundred acres were to be laid in two fifty-acre lots, and to be called first and second divisions, the fifty-two best lots numbered first division, the others the second division. A committee was appointed to size the lots, so as to make the first fifty-two lots as nearly equal as they could by adding the number of acres, and so with the second division. The committee to lay said lots were first to lay convenient highways. The committee were William Willcockson, Jonathan Pettibone, John Patterson, David Phelps, Daniel Lawrence, Jr., Benajah Douglass, Joshua Whitney, Cornelius Brown, Samuel Gaylord.

"Voted, To adjourn this meeting to first Wednesday in May next, to meet at the House of Cornelius Brown, in Norfolk."

The second proprietors' meeting was held in Norfolk on May 7, 1755:

"Voted, Whereas, John Turner, Junr, Samuel Gaylord, Cornelius Brown, Ezra Knapp, Ebenezer Knapp, William Barber, George Palmer, James Hotchkiss, and Samuel Monross are now in the improvement of lands, and are residing in this Town, And by purchase have become proprietors of rights, shall, if they chuse, hold the lots on which their improvements are made, and not draw for their lots.

"Voted, To now proceed to draw for our lots."

The following are the names of the persons: Samuel Flagg, Hartford; John Beebe, Esq.; Gideon Thompson; John Humphry, William Willcockson, Michael Humphry, Simsbury; David Phelps; Jonathan Pettibone, Simsbury; Timothy Hosford; William Barber, Simsbury; Joshua Whitney, Canaan; Ezra Knapp, Ebenezer Knapp, Danbury; Cornelius Brown, Samuel Gaylord, Samuel Monross, James Hotchkiss, James Lusk, William Warner, Benjamin Phelps, John Turner, Jr., Hartford; George Palmer, Isaac Pettibone, Simsbury; Daniel Lawrence, Jr., Benajah Douglass, Canaan; Bavel Seymour, Jeremiah Case, Daniel Willcockson, Jonathan Humphry, Noah Humphry, Simsbury; Edward Griswold, Windsor; Samuel Butler, Phinehas Lewis, John Patterson, Hartford; Joseph Phelps, Jr.; William Walter, Goshen; John Beach, Noah Griswold, David Griswold, Windsor.

* From unpublished manuscript by the late Michael F. Mills.

The lots were designated on the records as lot No. 1, first division, first going over; lot No. 1, first division, second going over.

A meeting was held May 21, 1855:

"Voted, To lay One hundred acres on each right in two fifty-acre lots, called second division, first and second going over.

"Feb. 22, 1757.—Voted, To lay one hundred acres on each right, to be called the third division, in two fifty-acre lots, first and second going over.

"May 24, 1758.—"Voted, To lay out the white-pine timber land, &c.

"Sept. 5, 1759.—Voted, To make a further division of our common land; that each person holding a right shall have a right to pitch sixty acres in two thirty-acre pitches, and the proprietors to draw for the day of pitching, beginning on the first day of October, and continuing until the fifty-two days expire. The person drawing No. 1 has the first day, and so on. No person has but one day to make his first thirty-acre pitch. Then reversing, so that the last shall be first and the first last, they make their second thirty-acre pitch. They are to make a survey bill to be signed by two committee men and a surveyor.

"June 9, 1762.—Voted, To lay forty acres on a right by pitching."

Since that time they have passed several votes giving right to make further pitches:

"Dec. 18, 1754.—Voted, We lay a tax or rate on the forty-nine rights purchased, of eight pounds a right, to be paid in bills of credit of the old tenor, to defray expenses, &c.

"May 21, 1755.—Voted, To lay a rate or tax of £9 on each of the 49 rights, &c., payable in bills of credit of the old tenor.

"Nov. 29, 1757.—Voted, Our Committee for laying land, &c., shall be allowed 3*s*. 6*d*. a day, chain men 2*s*. 6*d*., and work on the road from 1 May to 1 Oct^{r}, 2*s*. 3*d*. a day. That we will lay out 150 days' work on the road the coming season.

"Feb. 22, 1757.—Voted, To appropriate a piece of ground for the burial of the dead, being the same now used for that purpose, about half a mile North of the Centre.

"Voted, To give the mill privilege, about a quarter of a mile North of the centre Meeting-House, and a certain number of acres of land to the person who would build a grist-mill and have the same ready for Grinding by the first day of Sept^{r} next, and keep said mill in good repair."

Joshua Whitney accepted the offer, and began to build, but it was not completed for some time, and was finished by Abel Phelps about 1760.

"May 2, 1759.—Voted, To give 8 acres of land to the person or persons who would build an Iron work a few rods North of the grist-mill, and have it ready to make Iron within four years."

Daniel Lawrence, Jr., Thomas Day, and Samuel Ransom accepted the offer, and began to build, but the works were not completed until 1766.

THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

The sympathies of the people here were from the first strongly with the patriots, and against the Ministerial usurpations, and June 30, 1774, the town ratified by vote the resolves passed by the representatives of the colony at Hartford the previous May. At the same time they voted to send relief to their "poor and distressed brethren at Boston," which was then under blockade. September 30th a rate of one half-penny on the pound was laid to procure a town stock of powder, and on December 26th they accepted with equal readiness the articles of agreement passed by Congress the previous September, and voted to abide by them, "not one appearing in the negative." These resolves were chiefly to abstain from importing any articles from Great Britain, or exporting to them, to discontinue the slave trade, and to encourage in general frugality, economy, and industry. Prominent among the items was the agreement to abstain from that execrable herb, English tea, on which a duty had been paid. A committee of faithful men were charged by the town with the duty of seeing that the resolves were not broken.

When the English fired the first shot of the war at Lexington, in April, 1775, the militia all through New England started for the scene, and remote Norfolk was not behind the rest,—Capt. Timothy Gaylord with twenty-four men started for Boston. They were needed but a short time, and were soon sent home. These volunteer efforts, before the army was organized, showed the temper of the people. One other deserves mention: everybody has heard of Col. Ethan Allen's famous surprise and capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point,—"in the name of the Lord Jehovah and of the Continental Congress,"—but not all are aware that that expedition was originated by Connecticut men at Hartford, most of whom were in the Legislature, and still fewer know that Norfolk was represented in it, not indeed by a man, but by a horse. Capt. Edward Mott, of Preston, was sent with sixteen men from Hartford to take these forts, and ordered to gather more among Warner's men in Berkshire, and among the "Green Mountain Boys" under Allen at Bennington. Of course speed was essential to insure success. Norfolk was directly in their path to Berkshire, and when they reached the town one of their horses gave out, and Mott applied to your selectmen for another. Samuel Knapp, grandfather to the present justice of the peace, was the prompt and patriotic man who complied with their request. His horse was loaned, being first appraised at sixteen pounds ten shillings, Mott paying fifteen shillings cash down. On the return of the animal, a few weeks later, bearing ample evidence of having been to war, the appraisers judged that the owner ought to receive five pounds, "the horse being so much damnified." The bill was sent into the colony treasurer, with the fifteen shillings honestly deducted, and was promptly paid. Knapp's receipt for four pounds five shillings is still extant at Hartford.

But more extensive war measures were now on foot. While Washington was investing Boston, after the battle of Bunker Hill, an expedition to Canada was also planned, and placed under Gens. Schuyler and Montgomery. To this Connecticut sent two regiments, and one of them, under Col. Hinman, was recruited from this part of the State, in which the first regular Norfolk soldiers were enlisted, in May, 1775, for seven months. Their captain was John Watson, of Canaan. We have the names of at least twenty of his company who were from this town, and there were probably more. They participated in the siege of St. John's, and in a variety of other actions. Three of them were with Ethan Allen in his brave, though irregular and foolhardy, attempt to take Montreal by surprise, September 25th of that year, and were taken prisoners with him. Their names were Peter Noble, Ebenezer Mack, and Levi Barnum.

Peter Noble was a sharer of Ethan Allan's privations. They were kept in irons during much of their captivity, and experienced constant indignity and insult from those who had the care of them. They were shipped from Quebec to England, and thence to Ireland, and were kept there some time, being constantly threatened with hanging. They were finally sent back to this country as prisoners of war, in a fleet which anchored in Cape Fear Harbor, North Carolina. Noble, either by nature or by association with Allen, was a plucky fellow, and embraced his first chance to escape from his vessel, the "Sphynx," while at anchor, and, by what Allen describes as "extraordinary swimming," reached the shore in safety, and thence made his way home as best he might, and was probably the first to give information concerning the harsh treatment received by the prisoners. Through his affidavit, Daniel Mack, father of Ebenezer Mack, above mentioned, was enabled to draw his son's back pay; and on learning, at a later time, that the latter was still a prisoner at New York, sent him on a portion of the money, by the aid of which he made his escape and reached home in safety, after fourteen months' imprisonment.

Meantime, the Canada campaign was vigorously prosecuted; but the difficulties were great, the troops poorly disciplined and ill fed, suffering much from smallpox and dysentery, and many a Norfolk boy in this first campaign lost his health or his life from these causes. Montreal was taken, but the attack on Quebec, late in December, failed, and the gallant Montgomery's death sent a thrill of discouragement through the land. The British troops in Canada, however, were few, and early in 1776 the work was pushed again, in order to reduce the province before reinforcements could arrive from England. The Norfolk men had been discharged, with the other Connecticut troops, when their time was out, in December, but their ardor was not cooled. A new regiment was enlisted in this part of the State, to serve in Canada for a year from Feb. 1, 1776, of which Charles Burrall and Nathaniel Buel, of Salisbury, were made colonel and lieutenant-colonel, and John Sedgwick, of North Cornwall, major. Titus Watson, of Norfolk, who had been lieutenant the previous year, was made captain, and gathered a company largely composed of Norfolk men, and many of them his old comrades. This was a large contribution for the town to make, and, crowning the whole, Mr. Robbins was given up to become chaplain for the regiment. He was earnestly patriotic, but the controlling motive which led him to go was his desire to advance the moral and spiritual interests of the men while exposed to the demoralizing influences of the war. His diary during the campaign, which has been published, reveals this very clearly. His work among the sick and wounded, his manner of alluding to the preaching services he held, his sadness at the numerous excesses that passed before his eyes, his discouragement at seeing petty rivalries and animosities among the officers, burdened his mind quite as much as his anxiety for the result of the conflict. He was not at all a "fighting chaplain,"—indeed, some of his contemporaries appear to have considered him somewhat deficient in the strictly soldierly qualities,—but he was faithful to his duties so long as he continued in the service, and was respected among his brother officers. Lieut.-Col. Buel was a specially intimate friend, and they tented together much of the time.

This campaign was a disastrous failure, and entailed unusual hardship, as well as discouragement, on the soldiers. This regiment suffered greatly from smallpox, camp fever, bad generalship, and poor accommodations on their way to the front. When they reached Dechambalt, within forty miles of Quebec, the arrival of the English fleet with reinforcements turned the whole army back on the 7th of May, and the utmost that could be done was to cover the retreat so that it would not become a rout. This disorderly falling back of a dispirited and sickly army increased the hardships of all. They withdrew from point to point, making a stand occasionally and skirmishing with the enemy, but were finally obliged to retire up Lake Champlain, and were defeated in two naval actions in the autumn, and were barely left with force enough to hold Ticonderoga and Crown Point during the winter. The Norfolk men suffered greatly during these events, and Chaplain Robbins, utterly unused to such hardships, was soon worn out, and was obliged to return home twice during the summer to recruit his strength. On his second furlough, about August 1st, he wrote as follows, which indicates at once his patriotism and his piety:

"I am peculiarly unfitted for the duties of a chaplain on account of my bilious constitution. I envy Mr. Avery (a brother chaplain) his health. He will go through the hospital, when pestiferous as disease and death can make it, with a face as smooth as a baby's, and afterward an appetite as healthy as a wood-chopper. I cannot. After inhaling such diseased breath am sick and faint; besides, their sorrows take hold of me. I would not shrink from the work. Our war is a righteous war; our men are called to defend their country; whole congregations turn out, and the ministers of the gospel should go and encourage them when doing duty, attend and pray for and with them when sick, and bury them when they die. I hope to return to my work."

He did so, but soon gave out again, and was discharged November 1st, as being unable to continue. The following spring a radical change took place in the conduct of the war. No more short enlistments were made, but the Continental line was organized, for which each State was required to furnish a certain quota, and they were enlisted for three years or the war, bounties being offered by Congress, and often by the States also. Upwards of thirty enlisted for that term from Norfolk in the early part of 1777, and a large share of them were in the regiment of Col. Heman Swift, of South Cornwall, and served under Washington in the battles of the next three years, in the vicinity of New York and New Jersey. Norfolk's number for the Continental line was kept up till the close of the war. But besides these there were occasions of special alarm, when the militia were called out and served for short terms, as in the burning of Danbury, and especially when Burgoyne marched from Canada and sent terror into New England by retaking Ticonderoga and Crown Point, in July, 1777. The plan was to sever New England from the rest of the country by a march down the valley of the Hudson, to form a junction with Gen. Clinton from New York. Litchfield County, being so near the line of march, was thoroughly roused, and Norfolk sent her militia along with the rest, who were present at the famous surrender of Burgoyne's army at Saratoga in October. More traditions now remain in the town concerning that battle and its consequences than concerning any other during the war. A portion of the surrendered army passed through here on their way to Hartford, and were encamped for a time on the green. There were among them both English and Hessians. It is said that Mr. Robbins and other citizens gave the soldiers liberty to sleep in their barns. Two Hessians remained behind when the rest left. One was sick, and was kindly cared for by a good mother in Israel, Mrs. Michael Mills, until he died. The other married and settled here.

After this battle New England was at quite a remove from the scene of active operations, and Norfolk's soldiers were at a distance from home until peace was concluded. The sending of soldiers, however, was not the only contribution of the town to the war. Besides all the indirect privations of hard times, heavy taxation, and an irredeemable currency, the home department of the service was not a slight one. A special committee was appointed to take care of the families of the three years' men, and, moreover, individuals made great sacrifices in bringing home and caring for their sick and wounded relatives. The work of keeping their quota full was not easy, and required constant attention from the town officers. During the winter of 1777–78, Washington's army, in camp at Valley Forge, was in distress for sufficient clothing, and Col. Heman Swift wrote to the towns of Kent, Sharon, Canaan, Cornwall, Norfolk, and Goshen, from which his regiment was recruited, asking for help for the men at once. Norfolk moved promptly, and gathered a quantity of woolen clothing, as follows: 32 pairs overalls, 32 pairs shoes, 59 pairs stockings, 35 pairs mittens, 32 flannel shirts, 2 frocks. The whole were valued by the government at £162 6*s.* 9*d.*, and were sent on at once to the great relief of the soldiers.

The furnace at Salisbury furnished the government with cannon and ball and other army supplies, the transportation of which often gave employment to the townspeople. Nine Norfolk men, with their teams, were engaged in the autumn of 1776 in carrying cannon and ball from Salisbury to Hartford. In 1781 the town, according to an order from the Legislature, gathered a quantity of commissary stores for the army, and deposited them at a convenient place for safe-keeping. The next year it was found that for some reason these provisions were damaged in keeping, and the loss was estimated at fifty pounds. A heavier loss than this, however, was occasioned in 1777–78, when the camp fever, now called dysentery, became prevalent and carried many to the grave. The number of burials in town—recorded by Mr. Robbins—for 1777 is 56, for 1778 is 37, against 12 in 1776 (besides 8 in the army) and 9 in 1775, while there were but 6 in 1779 and 9 in 1780.* Verily those years, which were called the midnight of the Revolution, were also years of domestic darkness at your fathers' firesides.

Of individual prominent men in the home department of the Revolutionary service, Col. Giles Pettibone deserves mention, who was the leading spirit in carrying out all the measures required. He held several offices in town during the whole eight years, and was put upon most of the committees raised upon matters pertaining to the war, besides serving as representative at four sessions of the Legislature. He was also himself at different times in the service at the front. He is mentioned only as captain, and finally major, during the Revolution; his title of colonel would therefore seem to have been obtained at a later period as an officer of the militia.

Jacob Spaulding, the ancestor of the present Spaulding families here, did perhaps more still. "He had himself been in the French war, and was present at the taking of Quebec by Gen. Wolfe. His two sons, Isaac and Daniel, his only children, were Revolutionary soldiers; but, not content with that, he hired a man at eight dollars per month all through the war, and took care of his wife and two children. He once collected one hundred and twenty cattle and took them to the army, five of which were his own contribution. His house was also a retreat for sick and wounded soldiers; thirty were sent to him on one occasion to be kept for the winter, and were so well cared for that twenty-eight went back to the army in the spring." Such was the spirit of the town in the Revolution.

A complete list of the Revolutionary soldiers of the town it is impossible to prepare at this distant day, yet one hundred and twelve names have been found of those who are known to have been in the service, though this includes some who served for short terms as militia only. The pay-rolls have in some cases been lost, and it is particularly regretted that that of Capt. Titus Watson's company, who went with Mr.

* Dr. Roys, in his history, states that 56 were swept off by the camp distemper in 1777, and 38 by the same disorder in 1778. As these figures correspond almost exactly with the whole number whom Mr. Robbins buried in those years, Dr. Roys would appear to have fallen into error, for it is next to impossible that every death in town for two years should have been caused by dysentery.

Robbins to Canada in 1776, has not been found. After the return of the first three years' men in 1780, the town sent, at the requisition of the colony, thirty-one additional men in the Connecticut Line, besides at least fifteen as militia for a short time. The names of these have not been found, and many of those who previously enlisted are unknown. It is safe to infer, therefore, after making all due allowances for re-enlistments, that the town furnished one hundred and fifty men for the service. Now the population of the town in 1774 was nine hundred and sixty-six, in 1782 twelve hundred and forty-three; taking the average for the period as eleven hundred, which includes women and children, we have the fact that one-seventh of the whole population were Revolutionary soldiers for longer or shorter periods. This was a very large proportion.

REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

This list has been gathered from a variety of sources, and is by no means complete. It does not follow that a given man served only during the term given below. It has been thought best to record what is actually known, and leave the rest for further investigation by any who are interested. Of some it is only known that they were afterwards pensioners. The two sons of Jacob Spaulding do not appear here, as they resided over the line, in Massachusetts, and therefore do not count for Norfolk.

Rev. A. R. Robbins, chaplain in Burrell's regiment from March 18, 1776, to Oct. 31, 1776, in Canada.

Ozias Bingham, served in Canada May, 1775, to Sept. 3, 1775; was put in jail at Litchfield for debt the next winter, and in order to be released enlisted in Col. Heman Swift's regiment Feb. 2, 1776, and on application to the Legislature was permitted to leave jail and join the regiment upon his giving a note for the debt.

Levi Barnum, in Canada in the campaign of 1775; was taken prisoner with Ethan Allen, and sent to England in irons, and returned only after great hardships.

Peter Noble, enlisted in May, 1775, in John Watson's company, Hinman's regiment, and was taken prisoner with Allen, as above.

Ebenezer Mack, of same regiment, was also taken prisoner with Allen, and remained in close confinement nineteen months, was sick much of the time, lost all his baggage, was carried to Quebec, to England, and Ireland, thence to Cape Fear, S. C., Halifax, and finally New York, whence he escaped, and came home in April, 1777.

Jesse Tobey, sergeant, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Sept. 28, 1775.

Samuel Hotchkiss, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Sept. 28, 1775.

Roger Orvis, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775.

Jasper Murray, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775.

Daniel Pettibone, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775.

Andrew Lester, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775, besides answering Lexington alarm.

Nathaniel Field, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775, and Lexington alarm.

Freedom Wright, private, Hinman s regiment, May, 1775, to Sept. 4, 1775, and Lexington alarm.

Abraham Beach, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Sept. 6, 1775, and Lexington alarm.

Jehiel Hull, private, Hinman's regiment, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775; also served five months in 1780, in Swift's regiment, Capt. Converse's company, at the Highlands.

Amariah Plumb, answered Lexington alarm; was private in Canada campaign, May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775, during which he was wounded at the siege of St. John's and his thigh-bone broken, was captured, and held as a prisoner there a few days, till the fortress surrendered, then made his way home with great difficulty; received twenty-five pounds special grant from the State, and died March 1, 1778.

Jotham Parker, served under Hinman from May, 1775, to Nov. 20, 1775, as private; re-enlisted as captain of teams in 1777, in the commissary department, and served a long time.

Darius Phelps, served May, 1775, to Sept. 7, 1775.

Eden Mills, served in latter part of the war.

Jedediah White, pensioner.

Ephraim Coy, served some time, and afterwards deserted.

Charles Walter, in Connecticut line three years, Bradley's regiment.

Eleazar Holt, present at Burgoyne's surrender.

Nicholas Holt, enlisted in 1775 in Watson's company; took smallpox in crossing Lake George and leaped into the water, which caused the disease to settle in his hip and made him lame for life.

Stephen Holt, present at Burgoyne's surrender in October, 1777, and also at burning of Danbury.

Thomas Curtis, enlisted February, 1776; took smallpox in the army, died, and was buried at Stillwater, N. Y.; also had marched after Lexington.

Hopestill Welch, probably in French war, as well as Revolution.

Salathiel Dunbar, May, 1775, to March 19, 1776.

Josiah Hotchkiss.

Solomon Curtis, a short term, when under age, in latter part of war.

Titus Watson, lieutenant in John Watson's company, under Hinman, in 1775; captain in Burrell's regiment, February, 1776, to February, 1777; and afterwards was captain in Col. Heman Swift's regiment for three years; also marched after Lexington.

John Trowbridge, private, May, 1775, to Nov. 26, 1775, in Hinman's regiment; afterwards enlisted in Connecticut line for three years, where he was corporal.

Moses Turner, corporal, Connecticut line, was in service three years, April, 1777, to April 6, 1780.

Elijah Knapp, corporal, Connecticut line, three years.

Aaron Aspinwall, private, Connecticut line, three years.

Asahel Adams, private, Connecticut line, three years.

Caleb Aspinwall, private, under Hinman, May to Sept. 6, 1775, in Canada, and marched after Lexington, and in Connecticut line three years.

Joel Hamblin, private in Connecticut line three years.

Nathan Tubbs, private in Connecticut line three years.

Levi Norton, private in Connecticut line three years.

Reuben Stevens, private in Connecticut line three years.

Samuel Orvis, private in Connecticut line three years.

Caleb Sturtevant, private in Connecticut line three years.

John Walter, private in Connecticut line three years.

Elnathan Seward, private in Connecticut line three years.

Abraham Knapp, private in Connecticut line three years.

Rufus Trall, private in Connecticut line three years; also five months and nine days, in latter part of 1780, at Highlands.

James Benedict, Jr., a minor, enlisted in May, 1777, for three years, in Titus Watson's company, Heman Swift's regiment; marched to Peekskill, taken sick, suffered much, tried to march, reached White Plains and Rye, sick again; no friends to help him there, and was finally brought home to Norfolk at his father's expense with a broken constitution; Assembly granted him special relief.

Hiland Hall, in Connecticut line for three years; was deputy commissary.

Bates Turner, in Connecticut line April, 1777, to April, 1780, and afterwards in short levy, five and a half months, at Highlands, July to December, 1780.

Silas Cowles, in Connecticut line for three years.

Edward Fuller, in Connecticut line three years.

William Turner, in Connecticut line three years.

Jonas Hubbard, in Connecticut line three years.

Lemuel Sperry, in Connecticut line three years.

Eliezer Orvis, enlisted for three years in 1777, but died Nov. 15, 1778.

Nathan Sturtevant, also enlisted for three years in 1777, but died Oct. 1, 1777.

Daniel Hoskins, was in service four months.

Thomas Tibbals, first was drummer in Theodore Woodbridge's company, Wooster's regiment, from Nov. 18, 1775, to Feb. 29, 1776; then was drum-major in the Northern Army, in Col. Elmore's regiment, from April 15, 1776, to April 27, 1777; afterwards re-enlisted more than once as teamster in the quartermaster's service, and was out, in all, nearly four years; spent one winter at Fort Stanwix, one at Mount Independence, and one in Canada.

Samuel Tibbals, an older brother of Thomas, was captain of teams in the quartermaster's service for a year from March, 1777, and was then discharged on account of broken health.

Elizur Munger was a teamster.

Reuben Munger was sergeant; time of service unknown.

Arial Lawrence served two short terms in special calls on the militia; was at Saratoga on a four months' term when Burgoyne surrendered; was a man of great physical endurance; is said to have walked from a point six miles beyond Troy, where he was discharged, to Norfolk in one day.

Daniel Canfield, pensioner.

Abiathar Rogers, pensioner.

David Heady, pensioner.

Jedidiah Richards, Jr.

Josiah Hotchkiss.

Ebenezer Plumbly.

Jeremiah W. Phelps, a short term.

Asher Smith.

John Beach.

Giles Gaylord, served in New York in 1782; also under John Watson, May to November, 1775, in Canada.

Lieut. Phelps, served in New York in 1782; possibly was the same as Elijah Phelps, mentioned below.

Simeon Mills, was in Burrell's regiment with Rev. Mr. Robbins in 1776; had smallpox, not properly cared for, and it became chronic, producing large, foul ulcers, which remained a long time; was sent home in September, 1776, and was confined to his bed and chair till autumn, 1779; Assembly of Connecticut voted him then three hundred pounds to pay his bills, of which two hundred pounds was doctor's bill.

Isaac Butler, five months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

William Leach, five months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

John Minor, five months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

James Sturdivant, five months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

Silas Seward, five and a half months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

Samuel Taylor, five and a half months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

Abraham Barden, four months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

Roswell Grant, five months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

Giles Thrall, four and a half months at Highlands, 1780, Swift's regiment.

Luther Lawrence, four months and twenty-one days at Highlands in 1780, in Philip B. Bradley's regiment.

Arial Strong, five months, July to December, 1780, at Highlands.

Deacon Samuel Cowles, ensign, was in skirmish at White Plains, and perhaps also in the Canada campaign; he marched after Lexington also.

Noah Cowles, son of Samuel, entered service very young as musician, probably a drummer; was at Burgoyne's surrender at Saratoga.

Jared Abernathy, marched at the Lexington alarm; was in Burrell's regiment, 1776-77, a full year in Canada; had hospital expenses, seven pounds eight shillings.

Ludd Gaylord, son of Justis, enlisted at the age of seventeen, in what portion of the army is unknown; there were many who conspired together to desert, and in the paper drawn up wrote their names in a circle so that the leaders might not be known; the plot was discovered, and all were searched; one who had the paper slipped it into Ludd's pocket; he was offered pardon if he would reveal the leaders' names; on his refusal he was condemned to die; his friends obtained a pardon from Washington, which had almost reached the boy when he was executed.

Ambrose Gaylord, another son of Justis, was in the Continental line in the latter part of the war.

—— Gaylord, a third son of Justis Gaylord, was with Ambrose at the same time.

Elijah Phelps, was in Northern Army in 1776.

Andrew Moor, lieutenant, went to Canada in February, 1776, and died June 9th following.

Eli Pettibone, was in Col. Warner's regiment in 1776.

Giles Pettibone, was captain of the Norfolk militia company when the war opened; besides his home-work for the service, he led his company to Saratoga in the alarm of 1777; probably all those here mentioned as present at that fight were under him, besides many others; with the same company he served one or two terms a little later under McDougal, on the Hudson below West Point, keeping a look-out between the American and British lines, a work requiring peculiar vigilance and skill; at the end of his term he received public approbation from his commander in the presence of the army; he obtained the rank of major before the war closed.

Samuel Pettibone, served in Canada and other parts.

The following (besides those already mentioned) marched towards Boston immediately upon the Lexington alarm, in April, 1775. It is not known how far they went before they were sent back; the time during which some of them served would indicate that they reached Boston. Their pay was sixteen pence per day.

Captain Timothy Gaylord, fifteen days.

William Hewet, fifteen days.

Ephraim Parker, sixteen days; also in French war.

Elijah Pettibone, sixteen days.

Samuel Hotchkiss, Sr., sixteen days.

Jeffrey Murray, fourteen days.

Ebenezer Hoyt, five days.

Titus Brown, four days.

Brotherton Seward, forty-seven days.

Timothy Gaylord (2d), thirty-two days.

Phineas Norton, thirty-two days.

Benjamin Tuttle, thirty-two days.

David Orvis, thirty-two days.

Michael Mills, captain, at West Point, eleven days in June, 1780.

Joseph Jones, served from May to Nov. 26, 1775, and afterwards three years in the Connecticut line.

In October, 1780, Norfolk was required to furnish twenty-two more men for the Continental service, and in November following three men were sent as quota to cavalry company. It also furnished six recruits for the guard at Horseneck, in May, 1781. Capt. Michael Mills' company of Col. Hutchins' regiment was ordered to West Point in June, 1780, and remained there eleven days, of which company fifteen were Norfolk men. The names of none of these have been found, though some of them may be the same who appear above in other enlistments.

A boy, Stephen ——, was servant to Mr. Robbins in the campaign of 1776, and was probably from Norfolk.

With regard to the last war, it is of interest to note that John Brown, the famous leader of the Harper's Ferry insurrection, came from an old Norfolk family; his grandparents lived in South End district, as also his parents, for a time. He was himself born in Torrington, but is said to have spent a portion of his early years in Norfolk.

The work done by the ladies of the church for the "Boys in Blue" was no slight item. It was done chiefly by furnishing or making shirts, socks, drawers, quilts, and sheets for the use of the Sanitary Commission. The whole amount done by them in the two years from June, 1863, to June, 1865, was valued at $680.18. Contributions in aid of the freedmen at the South have been regular ever since that charity came before the churches, and not seldom have the ladies sent boxes of clothing for them, chiefly through the American Missionary Association.

LABOR REGULATION OF 1778.

In 1778 the General Assembly ordered each town in the State to appoint a committee vested with full power, and directed to establish a uniform price through the State for labor per day, the price of produce, etc. The committee for this town consisted of Giles Pettibone, Michael Mills, Titus Ives, and Timothy Gaylord. Labor per day was fixed at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 4½*d.*, and 5*s.* 3*d.*, specifying the different seasons of the year or the kind of labor; a good narrow axe and scythe, each 11*s.* 3*d.*; a good broad hoe, 7*s.* 6*d.*; joiners, per day, 5*s.* 3*d.* and 6*s.* 1½ d.; carpenters, 7*s.*; masons, 7*s.* 10½*d.*; tailors, 5*s.* 3*d.*; tailoresses, 2*s.* 2*d.*; tavern-keepers, for a good meal of victuals, 1*s.* 2*d.*; for a mug of cider, 7*d.*; good West India rum, per gill, 1*s.*; New England rum, 8*d.*; a mug of flip, made of good West India rum, 2*s.* 4*d.*; other rums, 1*s.* 8*d.*

SCHOOLS.

In 1839 an academical school was opened in this town, with Rev. John F. Norton as teacher. In the following year a building was erected at a cost of two thousand dollars. It was dedicated Aug. 31, 1840.*

THE FIRST POST-OFFICE.

The first postmaster in Norfolk was Michael F. Mills, who received his appointment from President Jefferson in 1812 or 1813. At that time the mail only arrived twice a week, and only two newspapers were received at the office; these were the Connecticut Courant and the Litchfield Monitor.

THE RAILROAD.

Norfolk was truly an "inland" town before the building of the Connecticut Western Railroad. Stage-coach drives of a number of miles were necessary to bring the people of the charming "hill town" into communication with the outside world. It was ten miles to the Naugatuck Railroad on the east, and ten to the Housatonic on the west. But the building of the railroad changed all this, and Tuesday, Sept. 12, 1871, was a memorable day in the history of Norfolk,—the celebration of the laying of the track of the railroad to that place. A large concourse of people from adjoining towns were present, and the event was celebrated in an appropriate manner. Addresses were made by the late Dr. Eldridge, John K. Shepard, E. T. Butler, the "father of the road," George H. Browne, of Dutchess Co., N. Y., and others. A happy event was the presentation, on behalf of the citizens, of a superb gold watch and chain to Mr. E. T. Butler. On the outside of the case was engraved the monogram "E. T. B." and a train of cars, while the inside of the case bore the following inscription: "Presented to E. T. Butler, Esq., by the citizens of Norfolk, in recognition of his services in the originating and completion of the Connecticut Western Railroad." Ten years previous to this time the idea of proposing a road through Norfolk would have been deemed Quixotic, but now six passenger-trains pass through the town daily.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

The rude cabin of the pioneer had scarcely been erected ere a movement was started for the purpose of securing the preaching of the gospel ministry. In the memorial asking for the incorporation of the town, Sept. 1, 1758, the one reason given for desiring town privilege was, "so that we may have power to set up the order of the gospel among us." Inasmuch as the history of the church for nearly half a century is largely a history of the town during that period, that of the Congregational Church will be given in extenso.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The Congregational Church of Norfolk was organized Dec. 24, 1760, with twenty-three members, by the Rev. Daniel Farrand, pastor of the Congregational Church at South Canaan. Previous to this, however, Dec. 20, 1758, an itinerant clergyman named Treat preached the first sermon ever delivered in this town. The church had occasional preaching until Jan. 8, 1759, when they hired a Mr. Peck. On the 26th of the following November the Rev. Noah Wetmore was invited to preach on probation, and March 31, 1760, the inhabitants united in giving him a call to settle. For some reason, which does not now appear, he was rejected, and Rev. Noah Benedict, who was subsequently called, was not obtained.

June 21, 1760, the Rev. Jesse Ives was invited to preach on probation, and December 24th of the same year he was called as their minister. He was offered the ministerial lot, with a salary of sixty-two pounds ten shillings annually for three years, and after that time seventy pounds per annum. Some trouble subsequently arose, and Mr. Ives was not settled.

In January, 1761, Mr. Ammi Ruhamah Robbins, a young man who had graduated at Yale College the year previous, and who had been studying at that famous school of the prophets in Bethlehem, under Dr. Bellamy, was invited to preach here. He was invited, by unanimous vote, to become pastor of the church September 16th. On the 28th of October, 1761, the ceremony of ordination and installation took place for the first time in this town. Without doubt that was a great day here. However much the ceremony may have lost its meaning with some in our time, it had a great deal of meaning then. Notwithstanding the special difficulties of traveling, people came up from neighboring towns, and from those that were not so very neighboring. The meeting-house then was only partially finished, but it had on that day, we may be sure, a very deeply interested audience. Dr. Bellamy was present to help introduce his young student into the pastoral office in the new settlement. He offered the ordaining prayer, and gave the young pastor his charge. His relation made it eminently proper that he should take this part in the services, and he doubtless did his part well. Rev. Mr. Champion, of Litchfield, the youngest pastor officiating, having been settled eight years, gave the right hand of fellowship. The father of Mr. Robbins, pastor of the church in Branford, preached the sermon, which was published.

He was at that time twenty-one years of age, having been born in Branford, Aug. 25 (O. S.), 1740. His father, Rev. Philmon Robbins, was pastor of the church in that place from 1733 until his death in 1781. He entered Princeton College at the age of sixteen, but at the death of President Burr, about two years afterwards, he took a dismission from that institution and joined Yale College, where he graduated in 1760, under the presidency of President Clapp. He evinced superior scholarship, which he found of good use to him in after-years, not only in his ministerial studies, but also in the instruction of young men, of whom he taught a large number; among them was the late Dr. McEwen, of New London. Of him, in early years, Dr. Lee, of Colebrook, who preached his funeral sermon, says, "In the tender years of childhood he discovered that sprightliness of genius and sweetness of temper and manners by which he was distinguished through life." In October, 1811, he preached his half-century sermon, which was published. At that time all the ministers who took part in his ordination had died, and but two persons were living who were then members of the church. In this sermon he stated that the whole number of church members from the first was 549, that he had baptized 1277 persons, had attended 760 funerals (about 15 each year), had married 276 couples, and had preached about 6500 sermons. He had taken "texts from every book in the Bible except the Epistle to Philemon and the Second Epistle of John." That venerable warrior had looked the armory pretty thoroughly over for different weapons. If his experience was like most, he was less at a loss for a text at the last than at the first. The more he gathered the more he found to gather from the wonderful treasury. Mr. Robbins preached a great deal out of town, and is reported to have preached in every town in the State except three. He also did not a little missionary work. In the years 1794–96, by the appointment of the General Association, he made five tours of missionary service in the new settlements of Vermont and New York, two of them in company with his brother-in-law, Rev. Peter Starr, of Warren. In these he gathered three churches, assisted at three ordinations, baptized thirty-eight children and adults, and preached one hundred and forty-five sermons, besides doing a great deal of visiting. This was almost at the very beginning of home missionary labor. He was a chaplain in the Revolutionary army in 1776, during the Northern campaign, where he endured hardships which undermined his health for a time, and compelled a resignation of his chaplaincy.

He began to grow feeble under the effects of age about the time he preached his half-century sermon, but continued his labors for two years. His last sermon was preached the first Sabbath in May, 1813, when he administered the Lord's Supper for the last time. He was with his people again three weeks later. This (May 23d) was to be the last day for the occupancy of the old church. Not being able to enter the pulpit, he stood in his pew, and made an address to the people appropriate to the occasion of their leaving the sanctuary which had been so long their endeared place of worship. That night a tumor began to show itself upon his face, which resulted in his death on the 31st of October, at the age of seventy-three.

Says Dr. McEwen, in an address upon the ministers of Litchfield County, given at Litchfield in 1852,—

"It would be difficult to select a minister in Connecticut who has been more popular with his people, or has exercised over them a more complete and useful control, than Mr. Robbins."

He was a member of the corporation of Williams College, and greatly interested in education. He married, soon after his ordination, Miss Elizabeth Le Baron, daughter of Dr. Lazarus Le Baron, of Plymouth, Mass., and granddaughter of Governor Bradford. He had thirteen children, five of whom died young. His widow, with six sons and two daughters, survived him. Three of his sons were educated at college, of whom two became ministers. One of his daughters was the wife of Joseph Battell, Esq.

It was nearly two years before his successor was secured. Mr. Ralph Emerson, born in Hollis, N. H., Aug. 18, 1787, a graduate of Yale College, with its first honors, in 1811, under the presidency of Dr. Dwight, and at that time a tutor in that institution, was unanimously called to the pastorate of this church in 1815. His grandfather was a clergyman, his father a deacon. His early life, as has been the history of so many other strong men, was spent upon the farm, which he left when he was nineteen years of age, when he fitted for college in one year's study. After graduation he became connected with Andover Theological Seminary in the study of theology. After that he was tutor in Yale College two years. His ordination and installation took place on the 12th of June, 1816. At that time a revival of great power was in progress among his people, into which he entered with all his heart, and which resulted in an ingathering of one hundred and twenty-six. In 1821 there was another season of especial interest, and one still more marked in 1827, the former adding fifty-five, and the latter one hundred and eleven, to the membership of the church.

It seems unfortunate that a pastorate which was being so greatly blessed should be broken off. In 1828, Mr. Emerson was invited to the presidency of Western Reserve College. To his acceptance of this appointment his people made earnest opposition, and the Consociation thought it best that he should decline it, which he did, and continued on in his labors here. The year following he was called to a professorship in Andover Theological Seminary. The same unwillingness to release him from his pastorate here was felt as before, and the Consociation declined at first to dismiss him, but afterwards yielded.

Mr. Emerson filled the chair of history and pastoral theology at Andover, Mass., for twenty-five years with great honor and usefulness. He then resigned, and removed to Newburyport, in the same State, where he remained five years, preaching occasionally, and occupying his mind with such studies as he was most interested in, growing old gracefully. He removed to Rockford, Ill., in 1859, where he remained until his death, May 20, 1863. Dr. Emerson was succeeded by Rev. Joseph Eldridge. (See biography.) The present pastor, Rev. John F. Gleason, was settled Sept. 5, 1876.

Until 1814 there was no ecclesiastical society here, but, as was common then, the externals and finances of the church were managed by the town. Before preaching was established by the town the settlers attended church chiefly in Canaan, of which church some of them at least were members.

CHURCH BUILDINGS.

The heaviest financial burden these men had was, of course, the building of their meeting-house. We have seen that they voted to build in less than a month after the first town-meeting. At the same time they summoned a committee of the County Court to set a stake for the house. The carrying out of this vote was evidently delayed, or else failed altogether, for nothing appears to have been done about it till Sept. 18, 1759, when the following vote was passed, which is a curious illustration of the method employed in those times to designate a spot of land:

"Voted, That we judge it necessary to build a meeting-house in said Norfolk, . . . and do agree that the place shall be at the east end of the Seventh Lott, in first Division, first going over, and that on the hill where Mr. Sam^{ll} Munross formerly laid up sundry loggs in order for a barn place, and said vote was had and obtained by more than two-thirds of the inhabitants assembled in public town-meeting."

This would seem to be a mere general locating of the house, for they immediately applied to the court to fix a stake at that place, and on October 8th appointed a committee to ascertain the centre of the town, and lay the true state of the town before the committee appointed by the County Court in September for this purpose. This was done, and the town accepted their decision in December, and then voted to build "a meeting-house of forty feet wide and fifty feet long, a suitable heighth for gallering."

The building committee were Abel Phelps, Isaac Holt, Samuel Gaylord, Isaac Pettibone, and Samuel Mills. The timber was prepared and drawn that winter and the following spring. On June 3, 1760, the town voted to move the location to a point about fifteen rods westward from the stake, because the town had bought a piece of land there convenient for the purpose, and they sent to the County Court to have the alteration indorsed. Only three voters objected to the change. A committee of six was appointed "to prouid victals and drink for the hands that raise the meting-house," who were to "consult among themselves and make so much provision as they shall think necessary, on the town's cost." The house was raised a few days after, and we can easily imagine with what enthusiasm and satisfaction the townsmen must have gathered from far and near to do that work. Tradition speaks of some difference of opinion between the northern and southern sections of the town as to the location, but after that point was settled there is no evidence that any ill-feeling prevented their hearty co-operation with each other; therefore we may assume that the raising was a hearty and joyous occasion, and that the "victals and drink" were not deficient, either in quality or quantity. As this house was on the same spot with the present one, the original stake was evidently set in the eastern part of what is now the green.

A town-meeting of June 24, 1760, held a portion of its session at the meeting-house frame, and there voted that the committee "should go on to cover the same as soon as may be conveniently." This was done, but no entire session of town-meeting was held in it till a year later, June 29, 1761. Underpinning and flooring for the lower part were added about the time of Mr. Robbins' ordination, October, 1761, and apparently temporary seats were provided at the same time, and thenceforward the house was in use for public worship. The building committee was discharged, and nothing more was done towards completing it for five or six years.

Up to this time one-half the proceeds of the land-tax before mentioned had furnished the means of building. This ceased, by limitation, in 1763, and the finishing, which was performed at intervals from 1766 to 1772, was provided for as follows: A vote would be passed in town-meeting specifying what work should be done, and laying an extra tax on the grand list sufficient for that purpose, and made payable "in good and merchantable pine-boards, or in good bar iron, to be delivered at the meeting-house" by a certain date, and sometimes other "species" were allowed. The appointment of a committee would follow "to receive said boards and iron, and improve them for the above said use." In this way the gallery-floor was laid in 1767, the pulpit made, and the lower part of the house finished by building permanent pews in 1769, the galleries finished in 1771, and in the latter part of that year a final rate of "one half-penny on the pound" put on the last touches. April 8, 1771, it was voted "that the selectmen shall consult Mr. Robbins, and procure a sutable cushen to lye on the pulpit on the town's cost."*

There is no record or tradition that any formal dedication of this building took place, and that it was first occupied for worship in the autumn of 1761 is only a probable inference. Yet there is no doubt that a house of this size, built by a young, struggling town, and requiring about twelve years for its completion, received the Christian endeavors and fervent prayers of all the members. The process of dignifying the house and seating the people was apparently a more perplexing problem than the building itself. It was done as soon as the seats were made, in the latter part of 1769, and involved more than three months' time, five town-meetings, three rival committees, and not a little dissatisfaction before it was completed. Yet in this, as in everything else, the fathers were able to differ without any permanent breach.

Stopping work on the meeting-house while it was yet barely inclosed did not proceed from lack of interest, but from the desire to distribute the heavy burden over a series of years, and also from the need of attention to another but equally important work, —the providing a house for the newly-ordained minister. The lot of land set apart by law for the first minister was deeded to Mr. Robbins, and he proceeded to erect his house upon it. This was, of course, to be his own, and was paid for by him; but the work of erection took the time of his people from their work, and the accounts we have make it evident that not a little of what they did was generously done without pay. His diary shows that they worked long and cheerfully, getting out the timber during the winter of 1761–62, and the building was raised April 22, 1762, on which occasion the whole town was present, and a great entertainment provided. May 16th following the young minister married, at Plymouth, Mass., Elizabeth Le Baron, daughter of a physician of that place, a very gifted young lady. He brought her to his father's, in Branford, where she spent the summer, apparently waiting for the house to be finished. This was ready in October, and Mr. Robbins went for his bride. A three days' tedious ride on horseback brought them from Branford. Dr. Bellamy, who had been Mr. Robbins' theological instructor, entertained the young couple at dinner, in Bethlehem, the second day. Concerning the arrival in Norfolk, Mr. Robbins' brief entry suggests far more than it tells, and makes us anxious to complete the picture:

"Oct. 20, 1762.—Rode to Norfolk; it rained violently; we wet; the people met us; a great supper and congratulations."

The second church edifice was dedicated Aug. 30, 1814. It was repaired and improved in 1846, and in 1880. The first bell lasted until 1829, and the second until 1874. The present one was placed in the steeple Dec. 22, 1874. The quarter bell was hung June 22, 1875, and exchanged for the present one Aug. 1, 1876.

The following is a list of the deacons:

Michael Humphrey, chosen Nov. 19, 1761; died in office, January, 1778.

Abraham Camp, chosen Feb. 6, 1765.

Joseph Mills, chosen Feb. 27, 1772, "in room of Deacon Camp, removed from town." He died in office, July 25, 1792.

Abraham Hall was made a third deacon March 13, 1777. He resigned in January, 1797, being about to leave town.

Samuel Mills, chosen the latter part of 1792, or early in 1793, accepted in February, 1793; died June 22, 1804.

Jared Butler, chosen the same day with Samuel Mills, accepted at once; died in office, June 4, 1822.

David Frisbie, chosen Sept. 10, 1790; removed to Winsted in the latter part of his life, where he died in 1837, aged eighty-seven.

THE SOCIETY'S FUND.

The "Norfolk Ecclesiastical Fund" was established in 1817. Previous to that time the "Parsonage Fund," so called, existed. This was derived from one of the original fifty-three proprietary town rights reserved for the support of the gospel. One right was also reserved for the support of schools, and one was set aside to be given to the first settled minister. Rev. Mr. Robbins received this right. The land located under it he exchanged for the land he occupied and upon which his house was built. The amount of the parsonage fund in 1817 was $869.67. This then became a part of the ecclesiastical fund.

The fund derived from the right reserved for schools has been kept distinct, and is now in amount $1442.50.

In 1816 there was added to the ecclesiastical fund the sum of $145.11, which was received from the State, under an act of the Legislature passed at the October session, 1816, entitled "An act for the support of literature and religion." The following persons made early subscriptions to the fund: Joseph Battell, Rev. Ralph Emerson, Moses Cowles, Mrs. Jerusha Spaulding (legacy).

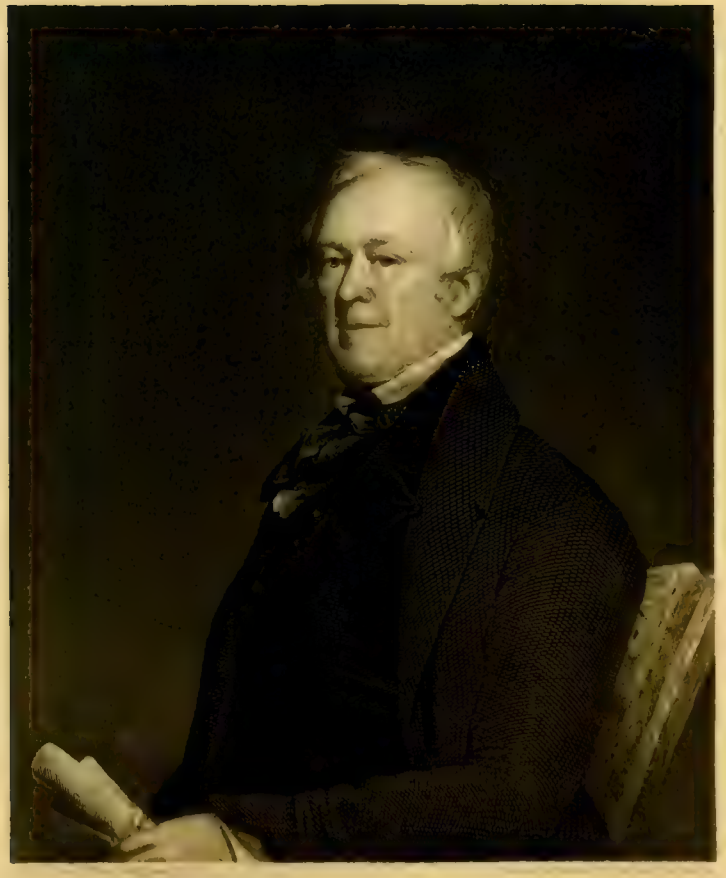
In the year 1834, Mr. Ephraim Coy died, and in his will bequeathed a large residuary legacy to the ecclesiastical society, to become a part of the fund. On the 6th of June, 1844, when by the conditions of the legacy the income from it became available, it amounted to $4821. The accumulating fund at the same time had reached the amount of $4885.37. These amounts combined, $9706.37, from that time constituted the principal of the ecclesiastical fund. As by the constitution of the fund the principal must be invested in stock of incorporated banks or stock in the funds of the United States, the value varies somewhat with the market value of the securities in which it is held. The present value is over $10,000. A loss to the fund of $1000, by the failure of the Eagle Bank of New Haven, was made up to the fund by a subscription of the same amount by Mr. Battell.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was organized in 1840 with the following members: Franklin Bramble, Mrs. Amanda Bramble, Russel Pendleton, Alwina Pendleton, Anson Gaylord, Almeda Gaylord, Sheldon Tibbals, Jennette Tibbals, Aaron Tibbals, and doubtless others. The pastors have been Revs. A. Bushnell, Daniel Coe, Thomas Lodge, Mr. Gunn, J. Horton, L. Warner, G. C. Bancroft, T. Hollister, A. Vail, M. Jerolds, J. Robinson, I. Lent, A. Davies, W. E. Hill, J. Croft, D. Lyman, J. Elliott, E. B. Pierce, B. Wilson, G. C. Esray, W. E. Clark, P. Gemond, T. Elliott, S. R. Free, C. Sagar, J. Millett, and S. S. Vail.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

In 1829 a branch of the Litchfield County Temperance Society was organized, auxiliary to the State Society, of which all the members agreed as follows:



"We will abstain from the use of distilled spirits, except as a medicine in case of bodily hurt or sickness, and we will not allow the use of them in our families, nor provide them for the entertainment of our friends, or for persons in our employment, and in all suitable ways we will discountenance the use of them in the community."

This agreement was taken by a large number, the list being headed by the pastor, deacons, and other prominent men in the town. In 1831 the number of names was three hundred and forty,—one hundred and forty-four men, one hundred and thirty-six women, and sixty in the juvenile department.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

REV. JOSEPH ELDRIDGE.

In presenting a sketch of one whose activity in life was so remarkable, and whose career of usefulness extended over so long a period, a detailed narrative would be impracticable in a work of this character; but it is proposed to give the salient points in the life of one who was so long identified with the moral and religious interests of the territory treated in this work, the late Rev. Joseph Eldridge.

He was born in Yarmouth, Mass., July 8, 1804. He was prepared for college at Phillips Academy, in Andover, and in September, 1825, entered Yale, and graduated, with the second honors, in the class of 1829. He immediately entered upon his professional studies in the Theological Seminary of Yale College, and April 25, 1832, was ordained as a Christian minister, and installed as pastor of the church in Norfolk, in which capacity he officiated until Nov. 1, 1874, when impaired health demanded his resignation.

Dr. Eldridge was a man of marked individuality and strong intellect. He looked every subject and question squarely in the face; his mind was eminently comprehensive, and his judgments were sagacious and penetrating. Next to theology, history and politics interested him most. Whatever was curious in human nature, and touched upon the singular and humorous, awakened his responsive sympathy. As a preacher he was characterized by simplicity, good sense, and manly strength. He was powerful in argument, and says Dr. Noah Porter, "It might be said very truly of him that in natural gifts and tastes he was better adapted to the bar or the forum than to the pulpit and the prayer-meeting." But these tastes by no means disqualified him for the profession which he had embraced, but rather increased his power and influence. He was a man of strong and ardent feelings, eminently social; kind, generous, and sympathizing, tender-hearted towards the suffering, and in all respects a truly generous man.

Dr. Eldridge also manifested a decided interest in educational matters, and there are not a few young men now in the ministry and other professions whom he has assisted, by his counsel and sympathy and contributions, to begin and persevere in a course of study. His interest in education, and his loyal affection for his Alma Mater, made him a zealous and most useful friend to Yale College, of whose corporation he was for more than twenty-seven years an honored member.

What Dr. Eldridge was to his parish they do not need to be told. "The forty years and more," says Dr. Porter, in a discourse on his life and character, "which he has given to this parish have not been without abundant blessings. The simplicity of his aims, the constancy of his labors, the wisdom of his counsels, the fidelity and tenderness of his exhortations, and the integrity and spirituality of his life, have formed the characters and strengthened the faith, have cheered the lives and blessed the deaths and saved the souls of many who will forever rejoice in the pastor who led them to Christ, and guided their feet in the ways of Christian living. The influences of this long and successful pastorate will remain for more than another generation, as the name of this beloved and honored servant of Christ shall be repeated with love and thankfulness."

At the time of his resignation he was the oldest of the pastors in active service in the State of Connecticut. He died March 31, 1875.

The Religious Herald, in speaking of Dr. Eldridge, says, "A wise counselor, a genial companion, a diligent student, a cogent reasoner, always an instructive, and often a thoroughly eloquent, preacher, he probably came nearer to the true ideal of a gospel minister than some who are more widely known and more loudly proclaimed."

The New York Tribune says, "The Rev. Joseph Eldridge, D.D., of Norfolk, was one of the ablest and most prominent of the New England clergy," and the following, from the New York Independent, is a just tribute to this worthy man, "A man of fine culture, keen wit, and sound sense, his influence in the whole region has been commanding, and his home has been the centre of all beautiful and gracious ministries for many a year."

AUSTIN A. SPAULDING.

Austin A., youngest son of Austin Spaulding, was born at New Marlboro', Mass., Feb. 18, 1819. His father died Nov. 4, 1818. At the age of eleven years young Austin was apprenticed to an uncle who was a farmer living in Norfolk. He remained with the widow of this uncle, who died in 1830, until 1834. When he was seventeen years old he went but a short distance from his uncle's home to live with his oldest brother. When of age he began the world for himself. Mr. Spaulding married Louisa J., daughter of Truman Hart, of Norfolk. He purchased a farm in the southern portion of Norfolk, where he now resides. Their children were Sarah E., Adelaide E., William A., and Frederick S. Sarah E. married James L. Bragg, of Winchester, Conn.; they have one daughter, Louisa. Mr. Spaulding represented his town in the Legislature in 1852. In 1854 he connected himself with a company manufacturing machinery. In 1858 the company reorganized, and began the manufacture of hoes, doing an extensive business in the Southern States until the beginning of the late war, when they became prostrated. The company then began making Springfield muskets for the government; in this they were successful. At the end of one year of the latter business, Mr. Spaulding withdrew from the firm and turned his attention to farming and stock-raising. He has many times held the position of selectman and other town offices; was a director in the old Norfolk Bank, was also appointed as one of the receivers of the same. He is at the present time a trustee in the Norfolk Savings Bank. Has held numerous offices in the church. A view of his residence may be seen elsewhere.

EGBERT T. BUTLER.

Egbert T. Butler, son of Calvin Butler,* was born in Plymouth, Conn., Dec. 21, 1813. He was educated at the common schools in his native town, and in about the year 1841 removed to Norfolk, where he has since resided. Mr. Butler has ever been a leading citizen of the town, and all measures tending to advance its interests have found in him an earnest advocate. He has at various times represented Norfolk in the Legislature, and while a representative, in 1856, secured the charter for the Norfolk Bank, of which he was the first president, and Asa Pettibone cashier.

As mentioned above, Mr. Butler has ever been alive to the development of this section of the State, but the crowning act of his life may be written in three words, "Connecticut Western Railroad." He has justly been styled the "father" of this road. He was the first to agitate the subject, and it was chiefly through his indomitable will that the building of the road was commenced and carried to successful completion. After succeeding in getting the survey, in the spring of 1866, he was sent to the Legislature to secure the charter, and during that session was made chairman of railroad committees on the part of the House. In referring to this road and the active part Mr. Butler had taken in its inception and completion, the Hartford Times, under date of Dec. 14, 1871, says,—

"In February, 1866, Mr. E. T. Butler, of Norfolk, while sitting with his wife and family one evening, started up and said he must write that article about the railroad through the northern part of the State, and, suiting the action to the word, he wrote a communication to the Winsted Herald, which waked up an interest in the project, which many thought ridiculous. Meetings were subsequently held in Norfolk and Winsted, and Mr. Butler set about the work of raising a sum for a survey of the proposed road from Collinsville to Canaan. 'The raising of this money,' he says, 'was the hardest work of all.' Men of wealth refused to give him a dollar, and one who said he had no money to throw away is now a large owner of the stock of the road. Mr. Butler soon after presented his plans to some of the rich men of Hartford, but met with little encouragement from them. He suggested that it would be for their interest to start a survey and secure a charter from this city, but this was objected to. In June, 1866, the road was surveyed from Collinsville to the State line in East Sheffield, the cost of the survey being paid by private subscription secured on the line of survey, and the same year a charter was granted for the 'Connecticut Western Railroad,' a name given it by Mr. Butler.

"Ground for the road was broken in Winsted on the 20th of October, 1869, by Mr. E. T. Butler, of Norfolk, and on Thursday last, Dec. 7, 1871, the same gentleman drove the last spike in Canton."

The Hartford Courant of Dec. 14, 1871, says,—

"The credit of first suggesting plans for the road belongs to Mr. E. T. Butler, of Norfolk, now a director of the road, and always one of its most earnest friends. Early in 1866, Mr. Butler wrote an article for the Winsted Herald, unfolding his plan. Soon after meetings were held in Norfolk and Winsted to discuss the project, and about the same time Mr. Butler met a few Hartford citizens at the office of Howe & Mathers, and laid the subject before them; said he should take steps to secure a survey from Collinsville to Canaan, and apply for a charter, and suggested that it might be well to ask for a charter from Hartford. But no encouragement was proffered from this quarter.

"Work on the road was commenced at Winsted Oct. 20, 1869, and the last rail was laid on Thursday of last week, December 7th, at Canton, Mr. E. T. Butler throwing out the first spadeful of earth and driving the last spike."

In this connection the Winsted Herald of Dec. 15, 1871, says,—

"The last spike was driven on Thursday last, at Canton, by E. T. Butler, he who shoveled the first shovelful of earth, at Winsted, on the 20th of October, 1869, than whom no man was more worthy so to shovel and so to drive."

The citizens of Norfolk appreciated the services of Mr. Butler, and at a railroad celebration held here Sept. 12, 1871, he was presented with a superb gold watch and chain. On the outside of the watch-case was engraved the monogram "E. T. B." and a train of cars, while the inside of the case bore the following inscription:

"Presented to E. T. Butler, Esq., by the citizens of Norfolk, in recognition of his services in the originating and completion of the C. W. Railroad."

May 1, 1839, Mr. Butler united in marriage with Jennett Porter, of Norfolk, who died Dec. 23, 1862, leaving a son and daughter,—Egbert J., who resides in Buffalo, N. Y., and Harriet R., who died Nov. 17, 1877. Jan 17, 1864, Mr. Butler married Celia E. Hall, of Sandisfield, Mass., and their children are Jennett P. and Charlotte.

The residence of Mr. E. T. Butler is considered one of the finest farm residences in Litchfield County. It stands near the line of Berkshire Co., Mass., at an elevation of fourteen hundred feet above the sea, commanding a fine view of the village of Norfolk and the many picturesque hills and valleys in the vicinity. It was erected about the year 1790 by two brothers named Jedediah and Jeremiah Phelps, who occupied it with their families as long as they lived. Capt. John Phelps, the father of the two brothers above named, settled on the farm in 1762, and it has always been held in the family since that date, Mr. Butler now owning it, being the grandson of Jedediah Phelps.

During the life of Jedediah and Jeremiah Phelps they worked the farm in common, with no division of farm or crops. The room now used for dining-room was formerly the kitchen, and in it the two families did their ordinary work by the same fire. On one side of the kitchen was a large fireplace, two large brick ovens, and two pantries. In the fireplace were three andirons, and a crane for hanging pots and kettles was hinged on each side of the fireplace. The family of Jedediah Phelps cooked their meals on the south side of the middle andiron, and set their table in the south end of the kitchen; and the family of Jeremiah Phelps set their table in the north end of the kitchen, and cooked their meals on the north side of the middle andiron; and in this kitchen, as was the custom in those days, the two families reared their children, three daughters and four sons. The main house, standing in front, being forty by thirty-six feet, is constructed with a large hall three yards wide running through the centre of the house on both first and second floors, and on each side of the hall above and below are two rooms five yards square; and open fireplaces are now in use in the four lower rooms and the two front chambers. A never-failing spring of pure, soft water supplies the premises. For several years past Mr. Butler, in addition to his farming, has made his home a pleasant resort for many city families during the warm summer months.

south by Canaan, and on the west by the Housatonic River, which separates it from Salisbury. The surface of the town is hilly.

THE REVOLUTION.

Canaan had many noble representatives in the war of the Revolution. "Among these was Nathaniel Stevens, who enlisted in 1775, and served as commissary-general until the dissolution of the commissary department in 1782, and Capt. John Watson, a native of Canaan, who raised a company in Norfolk, and did good service in the war.

"Capt. Gershom Hewitt served under Col. Ethan Allen when he surprised and captured Fort Ticonderoga, May 10, 1775. Capt. Hewitt, acting as a spy, entered the fort and reconnoitred its condition preparatory to the assault. Assuming the dress and manners of a simple-minded man in search of an old aunt, of 'Varmount,' Hewitt so successfully personated the character as to awaken no suspicion on the part of the garrison. He was permitted to enter the fort and to wander about at his pleasure; indeed, he was rather hospitably entertained. Pretending never to have seen a cannon before, he inquired what those long iron things with holes in the end were for. Having gained the necessary information, he left the fort and returned to the camp of Col. Allen, who selected him to lead the assaulting party. When Col. Allen demanded of the commander of the fort a surrender, he was asked by what authority he made the demand, and replied, 'In the name of the Great Jehovah and of the Continental Congress.' Hewitt was told by the captain of the guard of the fort that if he had known who he was when he entered the fort the day before he would have shot him. Jonathan Gillette, eighteen years of age, was, while on military duty at Horseneck during the Revolutionary war, taken prisoner, in company with several others, and carried to New York, and confined for ten months in a sugar-house, where he suffered severely from hunger and disease.

"A small fortress on the St. Lawrence, called the 'Cedars,' was garrisoned by about three hundred men; this fortress, by the treachery of their commanding officer, was delivered into the hands of the English, who kept the garrison close prisoners, employing a force of Indians to guard them, the prisoners being treated with all the indignity and cruelty which the savages could devise.

"A force of Americans were sent to their relief, but on their approach they were met by a flag from the British commander, stating that if the Americans should fire upon them the whole of their prisoners would be massacred, and proposing terms of release for the prisoners. The terms were most humiliating to the Americans, but they were obliged to accept them in order to save their imprisoned comrades from a terrible death.

"When the British were ready to release them the Indians refused to let them go, being determined to set on fire the building in which they were confined, and thus destroy them all, and they only consented to release them by the exchange of cattle for the American prisoners. Thus the ancestors of many of us were literally exchanged for cattle, for this garrison was composed in part of a company raised in Canaan, their captain being John Stevens. Oliver Stevens, Jedediah Smith, and Benjamin Stevens were members of this company." *

Among the early settlers in this town was Isaac Lawrence. Soon after coming he built what is known as the old Lawrence tavern-stand, a large house near North Canaan depot, still in excellent repair, and owned by Mrs. Wm. Adams, whose wife was a descendant of Isaac Lawrence.

INCORPORATION OF NORTH CANAAN.

The town of North Canaan was incorporated in 1858, and on October 14th of the same year the first town-meeting was held, when the following officers were chosen: Moderator, M. T. ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.*

This church was organized in 1769 by a colony from the Congregational Church in the south part of the town, then under the pastoral charge of Rev. Daniel Farrand. It appears from the records of that church that a request to be dismissed from that church for the purpose of being formed into a separate church was made by the following persons: Capt. Isaac Lawrence and his wife, John Franklin, Jared Huxley and his wife, Samuel Hobart and his wife, Simon Tubbs, Elisha Baker, Andrew Bacon and his wife, Samuel Forbes and his wife, and James Adams. This request was granted Dec. 1, 1769, and on the 5th of the same month the male persons mentioned above, together with Allen Curtiss, Jedediah Richards, Stephen Rice, Ebenezer Mudge, Justice Gaylord, Nehemiah Lawrence, and Abiel Fellows, adopted a confession of faith and articles of church government, and were organized into a church, Rev. Daniel Farrand presiding. The church was organized by the men; after organization the women were admitted by vote, viz.: Mrs. Stephen Rice, Mrs. Jared Huxley, Mrs. Samuel Hobart, Mrs. Isaac Lawrence, Mrs. Andrew Bacon, and Mrs. Abiel Fellows.

The first pastor was Rev. Asahel Hart, who was installed March 14, 1770, and died June 28, 1775. After his decease the church had no pastor for seven years, it being during the troublesome times of the Revolution. In 1770, Elisha Bucar and Andrew Bacon were chosen deacons.

The first church building was erected in 1768, a wooden structure forty by fifty feet, and twenty-four feet posts. It was built by Capt. Isaac Lawrence. The present house of worship was erected in the year 1822, and has been subsequently repaired.

In June 8, 1782, Rev. Amos Thompson was installed pastor of this church. Mr. Thompson was from Virginia, and brought North several slaves. During his pastorate he and his wife spent a winter at the South. Previous to leaving they deposited their silver and various delicacies in the parlor, under lock and key, and had also taken with them the key of the wine-cellar. On their return they found that the slaves left in charge of the establishment had found means to gain access to these apartments, and had without scruple made free use of their contents for their own enjoyment and in liberal entertainments given to their friends.† After all the difficulties connected with the Revolutionary war had subsided, Mr. Thompson and his wife were disposed to return to their Southern home, and they desired to take their slaves back with them; but they refused to go, fled to Norfolk, and lay in concealment, and had to be left behind. It does not appear that Mr. Thompson was formally dismissed from his pastoral relation to this church. Before leaving Canaan, Rev. Mr. Thompson manifested a practical interest in this church and society by presenting to the ecclesiastical society his house and farm, worth then about eighteen hundred dollars, on condition that they should raise enough to make five thousand dollars, to be held as a permanent fund, the interest of which should be appropriated to the support of the minister. This sum was raised, and thus originated the permanent church fund.

In 1791, Rev. Joshua Knapp was ordained as pastor of the church. How long his ministry continued is not recorded.

In 1798, August 24, Rev. Solomon Morgan was installed. He died Sept. 3, 1804, aged sixty years, after a pastorate of six years. His successor, Rev. Pitkin Cowles, was ordained Aug. 29, 1805. During his pastorate five deacons were chosen; in 1806, Jacob Hinsdale, Abiel Fellows, and Anson Lawrence; 1821, Rufus B. Dunning; 1822, William Pierce. In the war of 1812, Rev. Pitkin Cowles served for a time as chaplain, under Gen. Sterling, stationed at New London. Deacon William Pierce was drafted at the same time, and appointed sergeant; also Gersham Hewitt, Jr., and Nathaniel Dean. In 1820, Rev. Mr. Cowles organized a Sabbath-school, among the first in this State. He presented to each member of the school a Bible. A branch Sabbath-school was organized at the Corner, under the direction of Miss Maria Gillette. Maria I. Watson, now (1869) Mrs. John Lawrence, was one of the pupils. Rev. Mr. Cowles was pastor of this church between twenty-seven and twenty-eight years. He was dismissed a few months previous to his death, which occurred Feb. 3, 1833. Mr. Cowles labored here in the ministry much longer than any other pastor of the church during the century of its existence.

In 1833, Oct. 23d, Rev. H. H. Woodbridge was ordained pastor of this church. He sustained the relation of pastor here till 1842, when he ceased to be a minister of the gospel. During his pastorate, in the year 1836, Dennis Rood and Sereno B. Gillette were appointed to the office of deacons. After his removal the church was without a pastor about three years, when Rev. D. D. Francis was installed, June 4, 1845. He was dismissed in 1850. While he was pastor the church appointed, in 1848, Amos Pierce and George K. Lawrence deacons.

* Condensed from a centennial sermon delivered at North Canaan, July 28, 1869, by the late Rev. Joseph Eldridge, D.D., of Norfolk.

† At the time Mr. Thompson was South, he left his house in care of Jupe and Fan, when they broke open his wine-cellar and made a dinner-party, and, being seated, began to help themselves. Jupe stopped them, saying, he "Must first ask a blessing like Massa Thompson. Oh, Lord, good a bittle on a table, a bean and a quash, meat in a pot, tunder in a heaven, lighty on a gospel, knock down a dry tree, ebermore. Amen."

"Jupe," said one of the guests, "I tink you pretty able." He replied, "Oh, I dunno; I tink I say him putty much as Massa Thompson do."

On June 4, 1851, Rev. Elisha Whittlesey was ordained pastor of the church, and after filling the office about two years resigned, his health demanding a respite from labor and a milder climate. In the interval between his dismission and the settlement of his successor, and while the church was without a settled pastor, but supplied by Rev. Hiram Eddy, occurred a powerful revival of religion. Thirty-nine were received at a single communion season, April 6, 1856.

Rev. Hiram Eddy was installed June 25, 1856, and remained pastor of the church four years. He was dismissed in 1860. In 1858, A. A. Wright and Charles Kellogg were appointed deacons.

Rev. H. M. Grant succeeded Mr. Eddy, after an interval of about three years. He was ordained Nov. 17, 1863, and was dismissed in 1866. Horace B. Stevens was chosen deacon in 1865. Rev. Isaac P. Powell was installed pastor of the church July 28, 1869, having previously supplied the church one year. He resigned May 25, 1874, since which time the church has had no settled pastor. The present supply is Rev. Hiram Eddy.

CHRIST CHURCH.*

The parish of Christ Church, North Canaan, was organized about the year 1846. The church building was erected in that year, and was consecrated by Bishop Brownell, Sept. 22, 1847. The work was originated by Rev. Mr. Fash, a missionary supported by the Litchfield County Missionary Association, and has been of a more or less missionary character ever since. The old law did not recognize the term "parish" or the organization which it designates, the usual name for an ecclesiastical body or corporation being "society."

The persons who associated themselves together to form the legal corporation or society were Fitch Ferris, Harman Peet, Edward Thorp, Oliver P. Root, John P. Camp, Jonathan C. Stevens, Abraham Thorp, Alfred C. Isham, and R. S. Potter.

The parish being weak, and partially dependent on missionary aid for support, has been served in connection with other points, and not unfrequently vacant. The mission was begun, and parish was organized by Rev. Mr. Fash, succeeded by George L. Foote and William Atwell in 1847. These two held services every other Lord's Day until Easter, 1850. From this date until Easter, 1854, the Rev. G. H. Nichols, of Salisbury, ministered to the parish. From Easter, 1854, to Easter, 1855, Rev. H. V. Gardner was the rector. The Rev. H. S. Atwater had charge for the greater part of the two succeeding years, in connection with St. Andrew's Church, Kent.

Since 1858 the following have been in charge: 1860–61, Rev. Clayton Eddy; 1863, William Williams; 1865, H. C. Stowell; occasionally, C. I. Potter. In 1871, Rev. Elisha Whittlesey became rector, and during the six years of his rectorship he rejuvenated the whole work and renovated the church building, making it both comely and comfortable. In July, 1877, he was succeeded by Rev. Harry L. Bodley, who is rector at the present time.

Only one of the original signers of the articles of association remains with the parish, Mr. Oliver P. Root. The others have died or removed. The present wardens are Joseph W. Peet, Senior Warden; Miles T. Granger, Junior Warden. The vestrymen are —— Watson, Samuel A. Bennett, Jacob B. Hardenbergh, and Henry G. Williams, Clerk and Treasurer.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The origin of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canaan, Conn., should be dated as far back as the pastorate of Rev. David Phillips, in the year after 1866. He is properly the founder, though the church building was not commenced until the year after his removal. Under the administration of his immediate successor, Rev. M. R. Lent, the building of the edifice was begun and completed. It was dedicated on the 16th day of January, 1868, and cost eleven thousand and fifty dollars. The present trustees are D. P. Strong, J. S. Corbit, N. C. Ward, E. S. Roberts, and J. L. Bragg. The present membership is one hundred and fifteen.

The following is a list of the pastors: Revs. David Phillips, 1866; Marvin R. Lent, 1867–68; William Hall, 1869–71; John H. Lane, 1872–74; Robert Hunt, 1875–77; E. H. W. Barden, 1878; W. A. Mackey, 1879–81.

THE CONNECTICUT WESTERN NEWS

was established at Salisbury, July 14, 1871, by Joseph L. Pease, as a neutral journal devoted to local interests. In October, 1876, it was moved to North Canaan, as being a better business location in point of accessibility. The editor and founder, Mr. Pease, died on July 30, 1878, and his widow retained proprietorship of the paper, intrusting the management to John Rodemeyer, Jr., until its purchase by the present owner, Hon. J. B. Hardenbergh, a prominent lawyer and ex-State senator, which was effected Dec. 1, 1878. The News has a circulation far in excess of the average country journal, and ranks among the first throughout the county. It publishes each year a daily edition during the week's session of camp-meetings at Pine Grove, in the vicinity of Canaan, having established the custom in 1877.

Canaan is a pleasant village, with churches, numerous stores, two hotels, and a newspaper, and is an important station on the Housatonic and Connecticut Western Railroads.

East Canaan is a small hamlet in the eastern part of the town, and a station on the Connecticut Western Railroad.

MILITARY RECORD.

Canaan responded promptly to the call for troops during the late Rebellion, and the following is the list of volunteers:

Rev. James Deane, Isaac F. Daboll (died), William Twiss, Edward D. Lawrence, Albert P. Briggs, Miles H. Day (died), Amos L. Ives (died), Edward H. Roys, Samuel S. Beach, Henry Sims, Sydney Hart, Frank A. Cummings, P. C. Cummings, Eugene Decker, Philander Emmons (died), William Gorman, Bennet Hines, James Mullen, John W. Coon (died), Walter D. Hoag, John Lemley, John Rodemyer, John Carrol, Abram Coons (died), William Linahan, Henry Root (died), Ensign Butts, Fred Reill, Robert Gardner, Alfred June (died), William Hart, Heman H. Coons, Charles Long, Neziah Demars, Patrick McGrath, Thomas Noonan, Edward Morton, Alexander Waters, Allen B. St. John, James Keith, Gen. H. Morgan, Charles Thompson, John Warner, Samuel T. Rowlson, William H. Morris, James Linahan, Charles Morris, James Reill, Ira C. Bailey, Burton B. Everts, John Hillyer, Edward Fuller (died), Jacob Scamerhorn, James F. Bigelow, surgeon.

Col. David S. Cowles, a native of the town, son of Rev. Pitkins Cowles, entered the service as colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment New York State Volunteers, and was killed at the assault on Port Hudson, May 27, 1863. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he was a lawyer in Hudson, N. Y. He was a grandson of Ebenezer Smith, a captain in the army of the Revolution, a right-hand man of Gen. Washington, in whom he reposed so much confidence that he placed Maj. Andre after his capture under his charge.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

WILLIAM BENNETT.

William Bennett, of North Canaan, Conn., is a son of Samuel and Lydia (Paine) Bennett, and was born on the farm where he now (1881) resides, in North Canaan, Conn., Dec. 27, 1809. The grandfather of William was Abijah Bennett, who was born in New Milford, Litchfield Co., Conn., married Abby ———, and had children, one of whom was Samuel. The father of Abijah was an early settler in Milford, Conn., and a farmer by occupation.

Abijah Bennett was a blacksmith by trade and a Revolutionary soldier. He settled in Canaan (now North Canaan), Conn., in April, 1806, with his family, and continued to reside there till his death.

Samuel Bennett, son of Abijah and Abby Bennett, was born in New Milford, Conn., Oct. 15, 1778; married Lydia, daughter of Barnabas Paine, for his first wife, and had the following children, viz.: Jarvis (deceased), Susan (deceased), Harriet (deceased), wife of J. W. Bostwick, of Syracuse, N. Y.; William, and Charles F. Mr. Bennett married for his second wife Falley Griswold, and to them were born one son, Samuel, an enterprising and respected citizen of Canaan, Conn., and a soldier, an officer, in the great civil war. Samuel Bennett, Sr., settled in Canaan, Conn., in April, 1806, where he owned a very large tract of good land on the Four Corners, within the present limits of North Canaan village. He was a Whig and Republican in politics, and died, October, 1865. His wife died in 1841.

William Bennett received a common-school education, supplemented with a few terms at an academy. He was reared a farmer, which business he has continued to follow successfully. He has been quite extensively engaged in buying and selling stock, which, added to his farming interest, has made him independent, and justly entitles him to be numbered among the most prosperous of Canaan's citizens. He owns the old homestead, which is beautifully situated. In politics a Republican.

He has been three times married, his last wife being Adeline Kellogg, widow of Charles Kellogg, and daughter of Maj. Peck, of Canaan, Conn. They were married Jan. 23, 1868.

CHAPTER XLVIII.*

PLYMOUTH.

THE settlement of New England dates from the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, Mass., in 1620. The first settlement in Connecticut was made in 1634 and 1635, at Wethersfield, Windsor, and Hartford. In 1640 people from Hartford came over the mountain, and commenced a settlement at Farmington, being the first in the State, away from navigable waters, and before we reach the thread of Plymouth history.

The original proprietors of the territory of the town were the Tunxis or Farmington tribe of Indians. As early as 1657 some of the inhabitants of Farmington, on hunting excursions, had penetrated the wilderness west as far as the Naugatuck Valley, and had discovered what they thought to be a mine of black lead, and applied to the Indian owners for the right to work it, which right was conveyed to them by the following deed, which is recorded in the Farmington records:

"This Witnesseth that Wee, Kapaquamp & Querrimus & Mataueage have sold to William Lewis and Samuel Steele, of ffarmington, A psell or A trackt of Land called Matetacoke, that is to say, the hill from whence John Standley & John Andrews: brought the black lead & all the Land within eight: myle: of that hill: on every side: to dig: & carry away what they will & To build on y^t^ for y^e^ vse of them that labor there: & not Otherwise To improve: ye Land In witness whereof wee: have hereunto Set our: hands: & those: Indians above mentioned must free the purchasers from all claymes: by any other Indians:

"William Lewis,
"Samuel Steele,
"The mark of Kapaquamp,
"The mark of Querrimus,
"The mark of Matueage.

"Witness: John Steele.
"febuary: y^e^ 8^th^ 1657."

This is believed to be the earliest title of white men to the region. It embraces the entire territory of the town of Plymouth, the traditional site of the lead-mine being a little north of the Harwinton line, on the east side of the highway running past the house of Alfred Cleveland, in the woods, about half a mile back of his house. The marks are still apparent of rock-blasting, which could only have been for mining purposes. There is a spring which from time immemorial has borne the name of the Lead-Mine Spring.

No immediate settlement seems to have resulted from this discovery. The anticipations of wealth to be derived from the mine were not realized, and it was abandoned,—one of the earliest of the many mining delusions that have left their traces on the New England hills. The original settlement of the valley was begun down the river, at what was first known as Mattawuck, and afterwards as Waterbury. The interval on which that city stands seems not to have been discovered by white men till some sixteen years after the lead-mine deed was given, the first recorded report of it bearing date of Oct. 6, 1673.

At the October session of the General Court in that year the following petition was presented from twenty-six citizens of Harwinton:

"Octob^r^ 9, 73.

"To the honored General Court now sitting in Hartford:

"Honored Gentlemen and Fathers,—We, being sensible of our great need of a comfortable subsistence, doe hereby make our address to yourselfs In order to the Same, not Questioning your care & faithfulness In y^e^ premises: also hoping of your freeness & readyness to acomidate your poor suplicants with y^t^ which Judge to be: In your hands: acording to an orderly proceeding, we, therefore, whose names are hereafter Inserted to humbly petition your honors to take cognisance: of our state who want Land to Labor upon: for our subsistance, & now having found out a track at a place called by y^e^ Indians Matitacooke: which we aprihend may susfetiently acomidate to make a small plantation: we are therefore bould hereby to petetion your honors to grant vs y^e^ liberty of planting y^e^ same, with as many others as y^t^ may be: capable comfortably to entertain & as for the purchasing of y^e^ natives with your alowance we shall take care of: & so not to trouble with farther Inlargements, only desireing your due consideration & a return by our Loving ffriend John Lankton."

This petition to the General Court was based on the report of a committee of their number whom they had sent to view the place, which report is as follows:

"We whos names are here under written, partly for our own satisfaction & for the satisfaction of some others, have been to uiew Matitacooke in refarans to a plantation, do judge it capable of the Same.

"Thomas Newell, Sr.
"John Warner, Sr.
"Richard Lemar.

"Octtober: the 6: 1673."

Of the signers of this report, the second, "John Warner, Sr.," was the ancestor in direct line of the Warners of Plymouth, being the great-grandfather of John Warner, the third deacon of the Northern Church. The third signer, "Richard Lemar," was the leader of the first company that went over the East Mountain from Farmington in 1686, and made the settlement at the Great Swamp, now Berlin. Of him the following singular incident is recorded in the old Farmington Church record, in the handwriting of Rev. Samuel Hooker, first pastor of the Farmington Church, illustrative of the hardships and perils of those early times. It is in the form of a note appended to the entry of the baptism of his daughter:

"On the same day that this child was born, the father, viz., Richard Lemar, went early into the woods to look for horses six or seven miles off; found and followed them homeward, but had liked to have perished ere he got home; was so feeble that he remembered nothing of coming down the East Mountain, his sight and memory and strength in a manner gone. But God, who leadeth the blind in a way that we know not, directed him to John Norton, Jr., who was thrashing in his barn, and he took him in, put him to bed, called friends about him, who were diligent in the way and means for his relieving. After some time spent betwixt hope and fear as not knowing whether he would die or live—he lay in a sad manner, grating his teeth, and eyes rolled in his head—it pleased God that he revived and came to rights again. The day in which this followed was June 8, 1823, a snowy Saturday, especially the latter part of it. Had the man not been directed home, in all likelihood he had perished in the wilderness, and perhaps have been so far covered with snow as not to have been found till wild fowls or beasts had preyed on him."

In response to the above-named petition, the General Court appointed a committee to view the lands at "Mattatock," and report "whether it be judged fit to make a plantation." This committee reported to the General Court at the next or May session, describing favorably the lands, and concluding with the expression of their "apprehensions that it may accommodate thirty families." It proved to be equal to the accommodation of several more than that number. The committee in their estimate of the capabilities of the valley took into account only the land, the river being reckoned an obstruction and a peril rather than a resource. In the result, Mattatuck, like most of the manufacturing towns of New England, has been saved, as was Noah and his family, "by water" rather than by land. The present population of the city of Waterbury is upwards of twenty thousand.

The early history of the town of Waterbury, in which Plymouth was originally included, has been fully written and need not be repeated here. Suffice it to say that the General Court, upon the report of its "viewing" committee, granted the petition of the Farmington people, authorized "the settling of a plantation at Mattatuck," and appointed a committee "to regulate and order it." This the committee proceeded to do. Articles of association and agreement, bearing date of June 6, 1674, were drawn up and signed by the proposed settlers. A site was selected for the village; and after a delay of three years, caused by the great Indian war of New England, known as "King Philip's war," in 1677, a settlement was begun.

At the outset the "Grande Committee," as the committee of the General Court appointed to superintend the settlement was called, ordered that, "for benefit of Christian duties and defense against enemies," the inhabitants of the new plantation "should settle near together." Accordingly, prior to the year 1700, all the inhabitants lived in the town centre or its immediate neighborhood. But as the lands at the Centre were taken up, the new settlers had to find room in the remoter parts of the town. It is not till 1725 or 1730 that we get trace of settlers in the northern part, and here the history of Plymouth as a distinct community begins.

The first settler of the town, so far as known, was Henry Cook. He came with a family about 1728, and had a farm on the west bank of the river, not far from the Litchfield boundary. He was the great-grandson of Henry Cook, of Plymouth, Mass., before 1640. He had a grandson, Samuel, who was one of the last pensioners on the roll of the Revolutionary war, and who lived to be over one hundred and five years old. John Sutliff appears to have been the next settler. He came with a family from Branford about 1730, and built on the west side of the river on what is known as the West Branch. These two men are mentioned in a vote of the town of Canterbury, Dec. 14, 1730, providing outside schools, as living at "Wooster Swamp," a term by which all the northern and northwestern part of the town was designated. Mr. Sutliff was a leading man in all the early history of the new community. After him came Thomas Blakeslee, Northbury's first "captain," an office in that day second in rank and honor only to that of minister; Isaac Castle, from Westbury; Barnabas Ford, the chief land-owner, from Wallingford; Gideon Allen, from Guilford; John Humaston, from North Haven; Ebenezer Richason, from Westbury; Lieut. John Bronson, from Canterbury; Samuel Towner, Ebenezer Elwell, Jonathan Foot, and others. These were called "up river," or "northern people," by the inhabitants at the centre of the town, and they soon began to organize as a distinct community.

In all the early New England towns the first movements towards distinct organization were in the direction of church privileges. The earliest organization was ecclesiastical. The first public body organized was the church. The first public building erected was the meeting-house. The first public officer provided for was the minister. As an old writer says,—

"In the first Settlement of New England, when the people judged their number competent to obtain a Minister, they then Surely seated themselves, but not before, it being as unnatural for a right New England man to live without the minister as for a Smith to work his iron without fire."

The earliest history of the town, therefore, is the history of the church. This is true of the early history of Plymouth. No sooner had the "northern" inhabitants become numerous and strong enough to do something independently for themselves than they began to move for independent religious provision, independent of the church at the centre of the town, to which, by law, they were required to pay taxes for the minister's support. At first, in 1732, they joined themselves with the "northwestern" inhabitants, now Watertown, in the endeavor to obtain independent "winter privileges,"—that is, the privilege of hiring a minister to preach among them during the winter months, with exemption, during the period, from parish rates at the Centre. But soon after the settlement west of the river, settlers began to locate on the hills east, and before long the west-side settlers found it for their advantage to combine with their east-side neighbors, and the united sections began to act together as one community.

In 1734 they opened their campaign for independence. In October of that year Henry Cook, Ebenezer Elwell, and Samuel Towner, on the ground of their living so far from the meeting-house, requested the town to allow them and others to hire preaching the ensuing winter, and to abate their parish rates while they should thus hire. The town curtly voted "to do nothing in the case." Two years later, Sept. 27, 1736, Thomas Blakeslee, Henry Cook, Jonathan Cook, John How, Jonathan Foot, John Sutliff, John Sutliff, Jr., Samuel Towner, Samuel Frost, Barnabas Ford, Ebenezer Elwell, Gideon Allen, Isaac Castle, Daniel Curtis, and John Humaston, fifteen in number, united in the following touching appeal to the town:

"To the inhabetaunce of ye town of Waterbary, convened in townmeting, Sept. 29, 1736.

"Whair as it is well known to you all that we, whose names are hearunto affixed, have our place of abode at such a distance from ye fixed place of publique worship in this town, and that ye circumstances of ye way are such as yt it is with difficulty yt we come to ye house of god at any time of ye year, and especaly in ye winter season is extreamly dificult and sumtimes wholy imposable, and being much consarned for our poor children, yt they also might have ye opportunity of atending ye publick worship of god more conveanantly, and nothing douting of your readiness to shew cindness to us and to our children, we do therefore hearby pray and ask for yor wilingness consent and approbation, yt al those who live within Bounds hearafter mentioned,—that is to say, begining at Deep reuer and ruuing westrly to ye line stated by ye town for ye northwest society, as may appear of record in Waterbeary, and from ye said Deep reuer eastwardly to ye north end of John Warner's farm, at hancock's brook, from thence a northeast line to farmingtown line, and by farmingtown line to ye north end of Waterbary bounds, and then by ye line of said bounds to lichfeald bounds, and further westwardly by lichfeald bounds to ye west branch, may at our own cost and charg have ye preaching of ye word of life among ourselves in ye three winter months of desember, ienewary, and febeuary, and be freed from paing ministeriel charg with ye town for ye said three months (being wiling to pay our proprotien and ministeriel dues for ye other nine months of ye year), which privilidg to be enjoyed from year to year, and every year for such term of time as ye honourable generel asembly in their wisdom and goodness shall grant and determine, wherby you will much oblige your christian brethren and neibours."

It would seem that such an appeal must have prevailed. But it did not. The original petition is in existence in the possession of B. B. Satterlee, Esq., through whose favor we are able to present it here. It is signed by each of the petitioners in their own handwriting; is inscribed on the back "Appeal to ye town."

"The within petition negatived att a town-meeting in Waterbury, Sept. 29, 1736.

"Attest, JOHN SOUTHMAYD,
"Town Clerk."

But the petitioners did not give it up. Indeed, it seems, from some after action, that the town at this meeting did take some action in their favor. But whatever it was, the town either recalled or denied it, and the privileges asked for were refused. A month later, Oct. 26, 1736, the request was repeated, in writing as before, signed by twelve persons, asking that all living "within two and a half miles of Barnabas Ford's new dwelling-house" be allowed the privilege of hiring a minister for three years three months in each year, — December, January, and February,—with exemption from ministerial rates at the Centre for the time. The town voted to grant the request. But, as before, either through misunderstanding or change of views on the part of the town, the proposed exemption was denied, and the "up-river" people were back where they were before. At a town-meeting, the next spring, April 18, 1737, "it was asked whether the said northern inhabitants shall be exempt from ministerial charge by the town for so much time as they shall hire a gospel minister among them, in addition to a grant made them, September 29th," and an answer was given by vote in the negative. Still the northern people did not give it up. Despairing of the consent of the town, they now, at the May session, 1737, applied by petition direct to the General Assembly, which in those days was supreme in affairs of church as well as State. They state they live "on a tract of land about five miles square, whereof Barnabas Ford's dwelling-house is the centre;" that "the town voted, Sept. 29, 1736, that they might have a minister for three months for three years, with exemption from ministerial charges the said term;" that they had supplied a preacher, and now are obliged to pay rates. They asked winter privileges, and the usual exemption from taxes. The petitioners are seventeen in number, the same as those who signed the petition to the town, on September 29th, except that three new names, those of Amos Mathews, Ebenezer Richardson, and Phineas Royce, appear, and Jonathan Cook's does not. The town resisted the application, and it was denied. At the October session of the same year, however, the petition was renewed, John Branson, Obadiah Warner, and John Garnsey being new signers, and the General Assembly granted it, and so the new community scored one in their effort at independence. The following is the act of the Assembly, as recorded in the colonial records:

"Upon the memorial of Henry Cook, Barnabas Ford, and others, inhabitants of the town of Waterbury, showing to this assembly the difficulty that they lye under in attending the public worship in said town, & that said town, in their meeting in said Waterbury, Sept. 29th, 1736, upon application made to them, granted to the memorialists liberty for themselves & others that should live within two miles and a half of the dwelling-house of sd Barnabas Ford to hire a gospel minister in the months of Dec., Jan., & Feb., with exemption from any ministerial charges in the town Soc. in said time, & said liberty was granted by said town for 3 years next after said meeting,—praying this assembly that the vote of said town might be confirmed with them, &c. Whereupon the assembly order and enact that during sd three months granted by the town of Waterbury to the memorialists in the three years then next ensuing, the memorialists shall be exempted from paying any charges to the support of the minister in said town society, provided they maintain a gospel minister amongst themselves.

"Oct. Session, 1737."

This act of the General Assembly was the first charter of the town of Plymouth. It was the first official recognition of it as a distinct community, and from it all the rest of its full investment as a town naturally follows. The dwelling-house of Barnabas Ford, here specified as the centre and landmark of the new community, stood on the street leading past the academy, in what is now Thomaston, on the west side of the road, about where the academy stands. There was a spring of water near it by the roadside, which doubtless determined the site of the house, as it did the location of the dwellings of many of the early settlers, before they had time to dig wells, at which spring the boys who went to church in later years on "The Hill" used to drink, as they footed it back and forth from Thomaston Hill, in the hot summer days.

Mr. Ford was the first clerk of the society when it came to be organized, and appears, from the many deeds bearing his name, to have been an extensive owner of lands in the vicinity. His body lies in the old burying-ground (in Thomaston). His tombstone bears this inscription:

"Here lyeth ye Body of Barnabas Ford; he dyed March ye 10, 1746, in ye 53 year of his age."

Encouraged by this initial success, the northern people petitioned the General Assembly at the next May session (1738) for exemption from ministerial charges "for such time only as they had the word dispensed." The petitioners represent that they live, the nearest seven miles, the greater part eight, and many nine or ten miles from the meeting-house, on the way to which they were obliged to cross the river, often deep, and dangerous, nine times. The signers number nineteen. The names of Jeremiah Peck (afterwards first deacon of the church), Caleb Thomaston, afterwards one of the most prominent members of the society, and who gave the name to Thomaston Hill, and others, appearing for the first time. This application was denied, but at the October session following it was renewed, twenty-three signing. They say that the three years' privilege which had been granted them expires the February ensuing, and ask that it may be extended for two years. They allege that they have a population of one hundred and thirty-nine; that to get to meeting at the town centre they have to remove bars and open gates at ten different places.

At this time the only road to Waterbury from the northern quarter was a path through the fields, guarded by bars and gates between the different inclosures. The present river road was not constructed and opened as a public highway till 1802, and was considered a great undertaking in its time. A cart bridge—the early settlers had no other vehicles—was built across the river in Northbury in 1747–48, the town voting twenty-two pounds in money, old tender, to be paid when the bridge should be completed. The last-mentioned petition was granted by the General Assembly at the October session, 1738. The following is the act of the Assembly:

"Upon the memorial of John Sutlif and others living in north or northeastern part of Waterbury, showing that they live at a great distance from the publick worship in said town and their difficulty in attending thereon by reason thereof, and praying for liberty to hire the gospel preached among them for the space of two years, to be computed from February next, with exemption from paying ministerial charges to said town for such time only as they are able to hire the gospel preached among them, Resolved, By this Assembly that the memorialists shall thereby have granted unto them the liberty of hiring the gospel preached among them for the space of two years, to commence and be computed from February next, with exemption from paying ministerial charges to said town for such time only as they hire the gospel preached among them.

"GEORGE WYLLYS, Secretary.

"October session, 1738."

This act, it will be noticed, designates the memorialists as "living in the north or northeastern part" of the town. Hitherto it has been north or northwestern, indicating the movement of the settlement to the east side of the river.

At this session of the General Assembly, October, 1738, the society of Westbury, now Watertown, was constituted. Already in 1686, at the May session of the General Court, Waterbury had been invested with town privileges and given its present name by the following act:

"This court grants that Mattuck shall be and belong to the county of Hartford, and the name of the plantation shall for the future be Waterbury." May 13, 1686.

Encouraged by their past successes, and influenced doubtless by the example of Westbury Society, the northern people the next year (1739) again move on the General Assembly; this time to be constituted an independent ecclesiastical society, with the rights and privileges of the same. At the October session of that year they send to the General Assembly, by John Sutliff and Moses Blakeslee, agents, a memorial representing that the people are "Desirous of being made a society, with the privileges of a society, that they may settle a gospel minister among them and have God's Word preached and ordinances administered; and having prayed said old society in said Waterbury to give them certain bounds, and obtained a vote that the said old society will not oppose them, etc., as by the vote may appear. Sept. 18, 1739.

"Whereupon the memorialists humbly pray that the honorable Assembly would appoint a committee and send them to view their circumstances, and state the line between said old society and said inhabitants and make return," etc.

Appended to the memorial are the following names: John Sutliff, William Reddington, Moses Blakeslee, Amos Mathews, John Bronson, Noah Dangborn, John Warner, Matthew Reddington, Daniel Potter, Barnabas Ford, Samuel Curtis, Jos. Clark, Jr., Joseph Clark, Jacob Blakeslee, Henry Cook, Daniel Curtis, Obadiah Warner, Thomas Blakeslee, Zachariah Sanford, Gideon Allen, Caleb Humaston, Samuel Frost, John Garnsey, John How, John Sutliff, Jr., Jeremiah Peck.

The town, evidently tired of resisting those so determined to be an independent community, makes no opposition to the application, and it is granted. A committee of the General Assembly, consisting of Capt. Thomas Miles, Mr. Stephen Hotchkiss, and Capt. Jonathan Thompson, all of Wallingford, was appointed "To come and view their Circs. and state a line between Said inhabitants and the first Society in said Waterbury; to hear fully all parties concerned on the premises, as well the first Society in said Waterbury as the said inhabitants living in the northerly parts of said town, and report to this assembly."

This committee came and heard the parties, and decided on the bounds, and on their report to the General Assembly the following act of incorporation was passed:

"Whereas upon the memorial of the Northern inhabitants of the town of Waterbury, in New Haven County, representing to this Assembly their great distance from the publick worship in said Waterbury, and praying to become a distinct parish, and for a committee to fix and ascertain their parochial bounds, the Assembly did appoint Messrs. Thomas Miles, Stephen Hotchkiss, and Joseph Thompson to be a committee to view the circumstances of said memorialists, to ascertain their parochial bounds, and to make their report in the premises to this Assembly; and whereas the said committee hath now reported to this Assembly that they, having viewed and duly inquired into the circumstances of the said inhabitants, do find them able and sufficient to bear parish charges and become a distinct parish, or Society, within the following limits (Viz.): Beginning at the North West corner of the First Society in said Waterbury and the North Easterly corner of Westbury Society at two White Oak trees known by the name of Two Brothers, then running South Easterly by the West Branch until it comes into the river; then by the river until it comes where Spruce Brook emptyeth itself into the river a little below Upson's Island. Then from the mouth of said brook a straight line to the falls of Hancock's Brook, and from thence a straight line to the South side of Mr. Noyes' farm, lying partly on a hill by the name of Grassy Hill; and from thence a due East line to Farmington line; then North by said Farmington line to Harwinton bounds; then by Harwinton bounds and Litchfield bounds to the bounds first mentioned; bounding, South on said Waterbury First Society; East on Farmington bounds; North, part on Harwinton and part on Litchfield bounds; and west on said Westbury Society; as by their report on file dated October 25th, 1739."

"Resolved by this Assembly that the said memorialists within the limits above specified and described be and become a separate and distinct Society, or Parish, and that they shall have and be invested with all the powers and privileges wherewith other parishes within this colony are endowed, and shall be known and called by the Parish of Northbury.

"Oct. session, 1739.

"GEO. WYLLYS, Sec."

And so, after four applications to the town, and five to the General Assembly, the new community at last gained its end, and Northbury went on the roll of the ecclesiastical societies of Connecticut.

The society was thus authorized, but it did not yet exist. The inhabitants themselves alone could give it existence. The General Assembly had built the ship, but left it on the stocks. Those who were to sail in it alone could launch it. This they proceeded to do. In accordance with the law for parish action, three of the inhabitants—viz., John Sutliff, Ebenezer Richason, and Barnabas Ford—made application to Thomas Clark, one of the justices of Waterbury, who issued his warning to those living within the specified bounds, in the following form:

"Whereas the law provides that when parishes or any three of the inhabitants of the society applying to any assistant or justice of the peace, shall by a warrant by him issued out warn all the inhabitants within the bounds of the society, &c.

"These are therefore in his majesty's name to warn each and every person within the bounds of Waterbury, known as Northbury, the third society in said Waterbury to attend a society meeting, and have them elect and choose a moderator and society clerk and other necessary business as they shall have need of, to appear upon the 20th of this instant November, at eight of the clock in the morning, at the house they meet in. Dated in said Waterbury, this 10th day of November, Anno Domini 1739.

"Signed, per THOS. CLARK,

"BARNABAS FORD,
"Inhabitants of said society."

In response to this warning, the inhabitants met on the day designated, and organized the society by the choice of John Sutliff, Moderator; Barnabas Ford, Clerk; and Moses Blakeslee, John Sutliff, and Ebenezer Richason, Society Committee. The place where they met, designated in the warning as "the house they meet in," was a building which several of the inhabitants had built the year before by subscription for common public uses, and which they jointly owned as "proprietors." It stood on a knoll, since leveled, about in the centre of the park in Thomaston. The land on which it stood was given by Rev. Mr. Southmayd, and deeded to John Sutliff, Ebenezer Richason, John How, Thomas Blakeslee, Barnabas Ford, and the rest of the inhabitants living within two miles and a half of Barnabas Ford's new dwelling-house. It is described in the deed as "One acre near said Ford's dwelling-house in Waterbury, on which inhabitants have already set up a house under the denomination of a said house for the said inhabitants to meet in to carry on the public worship of God on the Sabbath." The building was a very plain one, and was known in later years as the "church house." The widow of Rev. Luther Hart remembers attending meeting in it in her girlhood, and that her brother, on coming home, told one of the family that "he had been to meeting and it was in a barn."

The original record of the first meeting of the society is in existence, with the other early records of the society. It is in the handwriting of Barnabas Ford.

The society thus organized, the next thing was to choose a minister. This it did not take long to do. At the meeting at which the society was organized, after appointing officers and providing for "y^e^ cost of y^e^ commeete." "Att y^e^ same meeting," the record continues, "we maid choise of Mr. Saml. todd to be our minister." The choice was by a "major," not a "universal" vote. The call of the society does not seem to have been conveyed immediately to Mr. Todd, as in March following, at a meeting of the society, Moses Blakeslee, Jeremiah Peck, and Daniel Curtis were appointed a committe "carry y^e^ societies call to Mr. Samuel Todd, in order to reseve his answer." On this call, Mr. Todd returned the following answer:

"NORTHBURY, March y^e^ 3, 1739–40.

"MR. JEREMIAH PECK, MOSES BLASLEE, DANIEL CURTISS, Comita, having reseeved your call & proposals in behalf of ye sosiate to settle with you in ye work of ye ministry, & having waid & considered them, I declare myself willing upon them to settle with them in y^e^ work of y^e^ ministry, provided they proseed to a regular ordination upon or before ye eight day of May next, & pray God you may be a blessing to me and I to you.

"SAML TODD."

The spelling of this record is probably to be credited to the recording clerk rather than to the minister. The society, which had adjourned till afternoon to receive Mr. Todd's answer, meeting again at half-past one, voted: "To prosed in y^e^ ordination of Mr. Samuel Todd upon y^e^ 7th day of May next, ensuing y^e^ date hereof," and Mr. Jeremiah Peck, Daniel Curtis, John Warner, Moses Blakeslee, and Thomas Blakeslee were chosen a committee "to prosecute y^e^ design, in order to an ordination." Accordingly, on the 7th of May, Mr. Todd was ordained first minister of the northerly society, as by the following record entered in the records of the New Haven East Association:

"At a Council of Elders & Messengers regularly convened at Northbury, the third society of Waterbury, May 7, 1740, for the ordination of Mr. Samuel Todd to the work of the Gospel Ministry there.

"Elders present,

"The Rev^d^ Mess. Samuel Whittlesey, Wallingford.
"The Rev^d^ Mess. Samuel Hall, Cheshire.
"The Rev^d^ Mess. Isaac Stiles, North Haven.
"The Rev^d^ Mess. Mark Leavenworth, Waterbury.

"Messengers from the churches:

"Mr. Jacob Johnson, Wallingford.
"Mr. John Gailord, Cheshire.
"Deacon Todd, North Haven.
"Timothy Hopkins, Esq., Waterbury.
"Deacon John Warner, Westbury.

"At which council Mr. Whittlesey was chosen moderator, Mr. Leavenworth scribe. Then Mr. Todd was examined and approved. Then voted that Mr. Hall should preach; Mr. Whittlesey introduce the affair by taking a vote of the church, etc., and also should make the prayer before the charge and give the charge; that Mr. Stiles should make the prayer after the charge, and Mr. Leavenworth give the right hand of fellowship. According to which, Mr. Todd was ordained with imposition of the hands of the Presbytery.

CHAPTER XLIX.

PLYMOUTH (Continued).

Congregational Church, Plymouth—Congregational Church, Terryville —St. Peter's Church, Plymouth.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, PLYMOUTH.

THIS church was founded May 17, 1740. Mr. Todd, its first pastor, was born in North Haven, March 6, 1716–17, the seventh child and fifth son of Samuel and Mary (Tole) Todd, and grandson of Christopher and Grace Todd, early immigrants to the New Haven colony. The early records of the North Haven Church are imperfect, but Mr. Todd doubtless united with it during the pastorate of Rev. Isaac Stiles, father of President Stiles, of Yale. His family were of a religious character, as is proved by preserved relations or memorials of its members, in the days when each church member wrote out his or her confession of faith; that of his sister Susannah, afterwards wife of Caleb Humaston, recounts the wickedness of her rebellion against God, and how, when awakened to a sense of her sin, the counsels of Rev. Mr. Stiles and the death of an aunt were blessed to her conversion.

Mr. Todd graduated at Yale, under President Williams, in 1734, at the age of seventeen, six of the fourteen in his class becoming ministers. A lately discovered document shows that he received and rejected a call to another church before he was ordained at Northbury, May 7, 1740. Eight months before he had married Mercy, daughter of Peter Evans, of Northfield, near New Haven, and he brought her on a pillion behind him, or on another horse, into this wilderness, where there was a small, feeble, scattered, but devoted flock, situated somewhat similar to the first Pilgrims at Plymouth, Mass. There were only bridle-paths through the woods then, and the streams had to be forded, the first cart bridge across the Naugatuck, at Thomaston, not being built till after 1747. The forests were hardly broken by the scattered clearings, and the impending war with Spain and France might bring down the Indians at any moment on the frontier settlements. Within the memory of most of the settlers they had so descended thirty years before and killed a man named Hall on Mount Toby, John Scott and his two boys being captured on Hancox meadow about that time and carried to Canada; Mrs. Scott's own mother, sister, and brother's family had been previously slain in the Deerfield massacre in 1704. Even so late as 1722 one Harris had been shot and scalped by Indians while working in a field at Litchfield, and in 1730 five houses in that new settlement were surrounded with palisades, while soldiers guarded the people at their work and Sabbath worship.

Mr. Todd's promised home was not begun on his arrival, and he set up his house on Town Hill, where the cellar hole is now seen in the lot near Elam Fenn's, and where three old apple-trees are pointed out as of an orchard set out by him; this was near his good deacon's, Moses Blakeslee, who had lately arrived from New Haven with his fourteen children. A spring flows near the old cellar hole, where tradition says Mr. Todd's first child, little Alathea, was drowned; Mr. Hillard has found the tombstone of her sister Lucy, who died June 9, 1752, and an unmarked grave near it is doubtless the little Alathea's, said to be the first person buried there. After two or three years' delay, the society built Mr. Todd a house in Thomaston, which stood at the top of the hill where Mrs. Williams built later, on the old road running north, which turned off from the river road at Mr. Grilley's corner. One living remembers the house, afterwards called the old maid's house, as three maiden sisters lived there. It is not known how long he lived there, but he moved on the hill when the church was there and the people lived here; he had moved before 1746–47, for Barnabas Ford's will, dated Jan. 27, 1746, disposes of twenty-three acres on Bear Hill which he had of Mr. Todd, and in the deed of this green, Dec. 3, 1747, it was described as butting east on Mr. Todd's land. His house here was in the garden this side of Riley Ives' house, and is remembered by the old people as the Evans House, where Eli Terry, the father of clock-making, began housekeeping with one chair apiece for himself and wife, and one cup and saucer. Mr. Todd's second child was Mary, who married Obed Foot, of this parish, and, on his death, Rev. Jonathan Leavitt, of Heath, Mass. Mr. Todd had eleven children, there being two Alatheas and two Lucys.

The great revival under President Edwards roused the New England churches from the cold formalism that grew out of the union of Church and State and other causes, and Mr. Todd went to study it at Stockbridge, probably by the advice of Joseph Bellamy, settled two years before at Bethlehem, a great friend of Edwards, and then in the midst of a religious revival, in which every man, woman, and child in the parish was under more or less religious concern. When Mr. Todd returned, established prayer-meetings, and labored with souls, many of his congregation rebelled against him, and abandoned his preaching. There was also temporal trouble. Two years before the society was organized a building had been built for public purposes, by subscription, west of the river, and owned by subscribers, in which the society was allowed to meet for public worship. That was never the society's meeting-house, for they never owned it; it was built and owned by proprietors, and occupied by the society for a time by their consent. The society's movement to build a meeting-house was not caused by their being voted out of this building; the society, instead, being voted out of it because it had resolved to build a meeting-house.

The society had been organized Nov. 20, 1739, and a minister installed May 7, 1740; not satisfied with the west-side house, the society voted, Oct. 6, 1740, to get the Legislature to set a stake for a meeting-house, as it had none of its own. This was not because, as Bronson says, the churchmen had obtained a majority of the votes and took exclusive possession of the house of worship. A protest of the proprietors of that building to the Legislature has been found in Mr. Satterlee's possession, in which they say that their obligations to Mr. Todd are as much as they can meet; therefore they ask that the meeting-house be not built at present, but that their house be established as the place for public worship, which is sufficient for the present wants of the society, and is freely offered for its use. The protest is dated Oct. 8, 1740, two days after the vote of the society to build, and is signed by William Ludington, Jonathan Cook, John Sutliff, Sr. and Jr., Barnabas Ford, John How, Isaac Castle, Thomas and Jacob Blasle, Ebenezer Richason, Samuel Jacobs, Caleb Humaston, Phineas Royce, Daniel Curtiss, Gideon Allen, Jeremiah Peck, Sr. and Jr., Ebenezer Elwell, and Samuel Frost. The protest was never sent to the Legislature, but the next May, John Sutliff, Barnabas Ford, and John How, on authority of the proprietors, sent one, saying that they were behind with Mr. Todd's settlement and salary, and praying that further charges respecting a meeting-house be prevented at present. It is evident that the occupation of the west-side house was merely temporary and provisional, the society chancing to be organized there, as there was no other public building in the parish limits; it was not regarded as the meeting-house, nor did they intend to remain in it permanently. It was not the society of Wooster Swamp, but of Northbury, which mainly lay east of the river, where it proceeded to build as soon as it was in fair working order.

The west-side settlers naturally objected to the building, because they saw it would be done east of the river, and they tried to persuade the society to remain in their school-house. But when they saw that the society was determined to build and on the east side, a majority (not of the society, for that would have controlled it and defeated the project of building on the east side) of the proprietors of the west-side house (eleven of the nineteen) voted the society out of doors till it should have completed its own house; then this majority of the proprietors, knowing that the Legislature would not organize an opposition Congregational Church west of the river, formed an Episcopal society. The minority of the proprietors of the west building, though opposed to building a meeting-house east of the river, yet remained loyal to the society, and were its pillars,—Jeremiah Peck, first deacon, John Sutliff, Sr. and Jr. (the junior being sixth deacon), Caleb Humaston, and Phineas Royce. The society had its first home on the hill, and here it has always been, nor would an Episcopal society have been formed in Thomaston then if the church had been built there. The conflict was primarily of locality and only secondarily of ecclesiastical order.

The secession weakened the society, leaving half the number to do double the work,—to build Mr. Todd's house and a meeting-house; there were only a handful of members left, and they were poor, just building their own houses and clearing their farms. But they did not break down under the heavy burden, and established the society on firm foundations. But Mr. Todd's house was built slowly, and his first year he gave in twenty pounds of his salary towards it; but it was finished by December, 1742, for then the society, turned out of the school-house in the hollow, voted to meet there part of the year, he having, meanwhile, been living on Town Hill. The disruption of the society hindered it in building a meeting-house, and put a temporary end to society meetings and to its organization. But in May, 1741, in response to the appeal of John Bronson, Moses and Thomas Blakeslee, the Legislature directed Benjamin Hall and Capt. John Riggs, of Derby, to go to Northbury, warn a society meeting, and see that it chose proper officers. They were also to direct them where and how long to meet for Sabbath worship, and to see where and when it was best to build a meeting-house. At the meeting they warned for June 10, 1741, Joseph Clark was chosen clerk, Daniel Curtiss collector of the minister's rate, and Deacon Moses Blakeslee, Lieut. John Bronson, and Sergt. John Warner prudential committee to fix a place to build a meeting-house, and, meanwhile, they were directed to meet in the west school-house ten months, and in Joseph Clark's house in January and February, when it was difficult for those this side to cross the river.

The society applied to the Legislature for a committee, as directed, and, notwithstanding the protest of those on the west side, Capts. John Rogers and John Fowler were sent to select the meeting-house site at the society's expense, and set a stake twenty rods west of One Pine Swamp, and thirty rods south of the road running east from the river. The society voted to build there Dec. 3, 1744, having before this been turned out of the west side school-house, and meeting on the Sabbath in the houses of Joseph Clark, Sr. and Jr., and at Mr. Todd's seven months, including winter, on the east side, and five months on the west. Jan. 9, 1745, it was voted to ask the Legislature for a tax on the land to help build a meeting-house, and at a meeting held the next 24th of September, it was asked to confirm the middle stake, which the court's committee had set as its site; it was then requested that the land tax be not imposed on members of the Church of England, Barnabas Ford, Thomas and David Blakeslee having protested against the taxation of their land. John Warner, the society's agent in this matter, represents in his memorial that about one-third of the society have become Episcopalians, and at his request the middle stake was made the site for the church.

The next December Deacon Moses Blakeslee was appointed to fix the site of the troublesome building; at this time they met this side of the river the whole year, at Caleb Weed's in March and April, and at Joseph Clark's the rest of the time, the latter being voted twelve shillings in winter, and ten shillings in warmer weather. The church was not begun in October, 1746, for then it was voted to get and draw timbers for it. December of that year it was voted to meet each side of the river half the time, in the houses of Phineas Royce and Caleb Weed. Sept. 22, 1747, it was voted to allow the people to build Sabbath-day houses on the green, outside a line drawn by the society's committee; it was also voted to cut and clear the brush from the green. This green was given the society for a place of parade, a burying-ground, and a place to build the church on by the town of Waterbury, which bought eight rods south of the meeting-house stake, eighteen rods north, and sixteen rods west of it, of John Brinsmade, of Milford; he presented an acre besides, and others gave four-tenths of an acre, making four acres in all, which was deeded to the society, through Caleb Humaston, Dec. 3, 1747, and was described as butting west on Brinsmade's land, north on Humaston's, east on Mr. Todd's, and south on the highway, showing that the road ran there where it does now. In 1825 arbitrators decided that the green belonged to the society, and the town's only right, acquired by usage, was to bury in the burying-ground. The green was then an alder swamp, and when the second church was built, it was still so wet that some wanted the church at the head of the street, that proud Madam Ballany and Mrs. Wright might occasionally wet their feet going to meeting, as more common people had had to do.

The Northbury society grew through much tribulation. First it petitioned the town four times,—in October, 1734, September 29, and October 26, 1736, and April 18, 1737, and the Legislature five times,—in May and October, 1737, May and October, 1738, and October, 1739. Then it was seven years after the society was organized before it began to build, and twenty-two years after that before its meeting-house was done. It was dignified Dec. 7, 1753, at which time David Potter gave the society a funeral cloth, which was kept at Mr. Todd's. In December, 1761, it was voted to floor the gallery, and the next December to glaze the house, liberty being then given to dig a well on the southwest corner of the green. In December, 1763, a committee was chosen to carry on work on the meeting-house, and to set a "horse house" partly on the green and partly on the highway. The final vote to complete the meeting-house was on Dec. 5, 1768, in the third year of Mr. Storrs' ministry. Mr. Todd never preached in it as finished, and all through his ministry the burden of it was on him and his people. This was a struggle on which the destiny of the society turned, and it made effort and sacrifice till the work was done. Mr. Todd's ministry was full of perplexity and trial, a divided people, an overwhelmed society, disturbance in church and State, a depreciated currency, and an increasing family. First, he could not get into his house, nor then into his meeting-house; the people were too poor to pay his salary, which was often changed, and thrice he changed his home. He bore it nobly and unselfishly, surrendering twenty pounds of his salary the first year, and in 1745 he offered to give up all rates and contracts and live on what might be voluntarily contributed.

Finally, Feb. 12, 1756, he addresses the people, referring to the difficulties between them, which he traces to the trouble of his support, to meet which he offers to live on what the deacons may gather from a public contribution taken once in two months at the close of evening service on the Lord's day, besides a grant of the ministry money to him if they please. The society accepted the offer, and they struggled on a few years longer. But the case was hopeless, and, on application, a committee of the Association of New Haven County,—Daniel Humphrey, John Trumbull, of Westbury, Benj. Woodbridge, of Woodbridge, and Mark Leavenworth, of Waterbury, lamented the difficulties and alienations between them and their pastor, which there was no hope of accommodating, and which they left with the judge of all the earth for decision. They recommended that a council be called to settle the matter or dismiss the pastor, and the latter was done in August, 1764. Mr. Todd was the apostle of Plymouth, and did pioneer work and established the society by wisdom, patience, endurance, humility, and self-sacrifice. He lived in advance of his time, believing in revivals, the voluntary support of the gospel, and the free fellowship of the churches, and much of the free, advanced character of the later town is due to the influence of his ministry. He was expelled from the New Haven Association for assisting at the ordination of Rev. Jonathan Lee, of Salisbury, in 1744, on the principles of the Cambridge platform, but his people did not reject him on that account. Like Moses he led his people to the border of the land of promise, but did not enter in himself, Mr. Storrs coming to find the people united and the church built. His last communication to the society was Dec. 24, 1764, where he acknowledged that his salary was settled to his full satisfaction. Like other pastors then, he kept the records of his own ministry and doubtless carried them away with him, so that but little is known of the details of his labors.

Research has brought to light in B. B. Satterlee's possession the original constitution of the church in Mr. Todd's handwriting, the four following rules for church discipline, creeds, and articles of faith being then unknown:

"That in order to a person's admission into the church, there shall be a major vote of the church then present.

"That a complaint against an offender shall not be esteemed valid before the person offended hath attended the gospel rule.

"That a minister shall not be obliged to prosecute an offender, before the person offended brings in the complaint in writing and signed by his own hand, with substantial evidence.

"That a Christian who prosecutes his brother in the civil law for an injury done him, before he hath attended the gospel rule with him, shall be esteemed an offender and shall be dealt with as such an one."

After a pastorate of twelve years in Adams, Mass., and serving as chaplain in the Revolution, Mr. Todd died in Oxford, N. H., June 10, 1789, aged seventy years.

Rev. Andrew Storrs was ordained and installed Nov. 27, 1765, and died while in office, March 2, 1785, after a pastorate of nearly twenty years. He was born in Mansfield, in this State, Dec. 20, 1735, to Samuel and Mary (Warner) Storrs, and was great-grandson of the Storrs who came from Nottinghamshire to Barnstable, Mass., in 1683. The family was strongly imbued with Puritan principles, and his parents were eminently godly persons. Rev. Dr. Richard Storrs, of Brooklyn, and Judge Storrs, of the State Supreme Court, are of the same stock. After a little more than a year of preparatory study, doubtless under Dr. Richard Salter, second pastor at Mansfield (who fitted young men for college, and at one time took twenty barrels of cider to pay for tuition), Andrew entered Yale, Oct. 24, 1757, and graduated with the class of 1760, so that he must have entered in advance or gained a class in the course; but little more was then required to graduate than is necessary now to enter college. From a diary of his found this spring in Milton, it transpires that he had poor health, which interrupted his studies and made him pay repeated visits to Oblong, west of Sharon, in New York, and his trips there made him acquainted with this region, and he probably passed through Northbury. The year after his graduation Mr. Storrs united with the Mansfield Church, and was licensed to preach by Windham Association, May 18, 1762. A year after he married the widow of Rev. Freegrace Leavitt, of Somers, who married Dr. Bellamy, of Bethlehem, after his death.

Mr. Storrs' diary shows that he preached here first May 26, 1765. In July of that year he made a trip to Eastern Massachusetts, and received the degree of A.M. at Harvard, a proof of his superior scholarship. During the summer of 1765, Mr. Storrs continued preaching here, and on the first Monday in July the society decided unanimously that they wished him to preach for them. The first Monday in August they voted to give him a call to preach the gospel among them as a probationer, in order for settlement in the work of the ministry. On the 30th of September the society gave Mr. Storrs a call to settle, which he accepted. He brought Mrs. Storrs here on the 20th of November, and the next day was observed as one of public fasting preparatory to the ordination, which took place on the 27th; Rev. Messrs. Leavenworth, of Waterbury, Bartholomew, first pastor at Harwinton, Newell, of Goshen, Champion, of Litchfield, and Pitkin, of Farmington, were present. In personal appearance Mr. Storrs was large, of commanding presence and grave and dignified demeanor; though never in robust health, he had a look of strength, and made a fine appearance in his new leathern breeches, with buckles at the knees and on his shoes. His voice was full and powerful, and one remembers that his grandmother told him he could be heard in the Sabbath-day houses. A fine marksman, he could bring down a squirrel from the top of the tallest tree, and his gun and elaborately marked powder-horn are still in the possession of the Stoughtons. He was of a calm and even temperament, and moved serenely through the Revolution, which his ministry covered. He built the house where Mr. Kelsy has lately lived, on land bought of Caleb Humaston, putting it up in 1766. He set out the buttonballs and elms now standing there.

The only entry on the society records indicative of the Revolutionary struggle was a vote, Dec. 7, 1778, in consideration of provision running to an extravagant price, to furnish Mr. Storrs certain articles at specified prices. In 1774, when Congress resolved on non-intercourse with Great Britain, Phineas Royce was moderator of a special town-meeting in Waterbury, a mark of his prominence. At that meeting Nathaniel Barnes, Dr. Roger Conant, and Jesse Curtis, of Northbury, were on the committee to see that no tea, molasses, sugar, coffee, spices, etc., were brought into town and sold. At another meeting held January 12th, Stephen Seymour, Randal Evans, and David Smith, of Northbury, were on a committee to receive donations contributed for the relief of the poor in Boston, whose port was then closed by the British fleet. Northbury sent Deacon Camp, father of Deacon Camp, lately of Plainville, through the wilderness of Maine with Arnold, to besiege Quebec in the winter of 1775. Daniel Rowe, grandfather of A. Markham on his mother's side, was at the battle of Saratoga, and was the first to reach Arnold after he was wounded. David Smith, who lived where the Quiet House now is, attained the rank of major, and when the several Waterbury companies were formed into a regiment in 1778, Jesse Curtiss, of Northbury, was major. In the successful campaign in the French war, too, when Ticonderoga and Crown Point were taken, Waterbury furnished a company, in which John Sutliff was lieutenant; in that war Daniel Potter was ensign, and Asher Blakeslee, Enos Ford, and others were engaged.

But this parish was a stronghold of Toryism in the Revolution, a majority of the leading men west of the river holding fast to their British allegiance. Bitter enmities were engendered and violent acts committed, but we are to judge leniently; the Tories were connected by ties of religious association and support with the mother-country, and their pastors, sincere men, taught them that the colonial cause was treason against government and God. While all the action against Tories was not justifiable, it was not to be wondered at as human nature is constituted. A Tory was hung up till almost dead on the green, and a hook was shown in an old tavern, which stood where Andrew Buel lives, where others were so hung. Devil's Lane was near that tavern, and County Sheriff Lord, of Litchfield, afterwards made arrests there, so that they said "the Lord came down from Litchfield and took the devil out of Plymouth," though he soon returned. One man from this parish was arrested for high treason, and executed at Hartford, March 19, 1777, though he was honest in his convictions and offered to voluntarily confine himself to his farm. This is the only one learned to have been executed in the colony, and the death penalty against treason was afterwards repealed. When this man was arrested, his father offered to furnish hemp for a halter to hang him with. This was about the middle of Mr. Storrs' ministry.

March 2, 1785, Mr. Storrs died (and now lies in this yard), two years after peace had been declared with Great Britain. Five years before, in 1780, Westbury and Northbury had been incorporated as a new town, named Watertown, and transferred to Litchfield County. These parishes were then the richest part of Waterbury, the grand lists of the several societies standing in 1749, Waterbury first, £12,181; Westbury, £13,427; Northbury, £10,070. One of the richest men in this society in the early times was Jeremiah Peck, first deacon, whose property inventoried at £3702 when he died in 1752. Earlier than that Barnabas Ford, the great land-holder, was one of the wealthy men. He owned all Thomaston when it was Fordton, his rule seeming to have been to buy all land joining his; he bought all Mr. Todd's land in the hollow before 1746, as appears by his will.

The only church record of the first five years of Mr. Storrs' ministry are three votes,—admitting members of the Church of England, in good standing, to occasional communion, forbidding the pastor to receive complaints against members, unless presented in writing and signed by two witnesses, and appointing Sergt. Jesse Curtis to tune the psalm. The church had seventy-seven members when Mr. Storrs began his ministry, and one hundred and seventy-eight united with it while he was pastor. When Mr. Hart had been here twenty years, he said of him that the aged people remembered him with affectionate reverence as a wise man and faithful pastor. Mr. Hart himself had formed a high opinion of his understanding and heart, and said that he was distinguished by good sense, wisdom, and prudence. Rev. Mr. Champion, of Litchfield, preached his funeral discourse, and said of him that, having lived greatly beloved, he died equally lamented, and quitted this benighted world to the inexpressible sorrow of his disconsolate surviving partner, and to the universal grief of his church and congregation. He says that he was endowed with a good natural genius, improved by a liberal education, and refined by divine grace. Descended from a reputable family, his personal appearance was august and venerable; his eye betokened sensibility, uncommon composure, and mildness of temper. Blessed with a commanding voice, his delivery was graceful, solemn, and affecting. Sound judgment, singular prudence, great stability, and Christian candor entered deep into his character.

Besides his pastoral labors, Mr. Storrs fitted many students for college, and instructed young men for the ministry, after the custom of the times. Mr. Storrs had no children, and Oliver Stoughton, a nephew of his wife, lived with him, doing chores and going to school. He came into possession of the place on Mr. Storrs' death, lived in it during Mr. Waterman's ministry, and sold it to Mr. Hart on his marriage, moving himself to Town Hill; his son, Andrew Stoughton, thirteenth deacon of this church, was father of the late and present deacon of that name.

Some time before Mr. Storrs died he was taken with a pain in his left side, which extended down to the foot, as well as to the shoulder and neck and across the body, contracting the whole left side, so that his body bent to the left. He was also troubled with a cough and fever, and could get no relief from physicians. The course of his disease was so serious that he desired to have a post-mortem examination of his body, which was had. The left lung was found contracted to the size of a goose-egg, full of knotty hard parts, lying in the upper part of the breast, to which it was fast at the back. The left side of the breast below it was filled with five pints of watery matter. The ribs on that side were very brittle and the flesh hard, and full of horny kernels from the size of a pea to that of a nutmeg, not connected with one another or with the bones of the body. One bone of the size of a chestnut was found in the cavity of the breast, and the bowels adhered fast to the left side, but no corrupted matter was found, nor were any of the other organs of the body apparently affected.

Simon Waterman, the third pastor here, was born in Norwich, Jan. 17, 1737, to a family that originally came from Norwich, in England. He was brought up in Bozrah, where he doubtless joined the church, though there are no church records of that time. He graduated at Yale in the class of 1759, the year before Mr. Storrs, whose friend he was in college, and who probably mentioned him to his people as his successor before he died. The first church in Wallingford called Mr. Dana, of Harvard, without applying to the Association for advice or to the Consociation for ordination. A minority applied to the New Haven Association, which had excommunicated Rev. Messrs. Todd, Leavenworth, of Waterbury, and Humphreys, of Derby, and which now excommunicated the Wallingford Church, recognizing the minority as the church, which called Mr. Waterman as its first and only pastor. Being unable longer to support him, he was dismissed May 3, 1787, by his church, which threw up its organization and returned to its old fellowship, a result which Dr. Bacon regards as to his credit, as some men would have exasperated the quarrel and made it incurable. While at Wallingford, in 1774, Mr. Waterman was the first missionary sent out by the Congregational Association to the back settlements in Vermont and Northern New York, largely settled from this State. This was the first missionary movement in the colony, and Mr. Waterman was one of the first three home missionaries. During his pastorate here, in 1797, he went on a similar mission, and made a third trip to Central New York; thus this church had an early part in the work of home missions.

Mr. Waterman was settled here Aug. 29, 1787, the year the adoption of the federal constitution opened a new era of consolidated national life. He brought Eunice, his wife, to whom her father, Benjamin Hall, a magistrate, had married him July 26, 1764, and six children, two having died in Wallingford: Eunice, who married Dr. Wells, of Berlin, was nineteen; Amanda, who married Aaron, son of Gen. David Smith, fourteen; Philomela, who married Maj. Wright's nephew Benjamin, and went to Rome, N. Y., then an Indian wilderness, eleven; Mary, who married Gen. David Smith's nephew Walter, eight; Simon, six; and Joshua, three. It was a pretty family, welcome in a parish where the minister's family had been childless twenty years. Mr. Waterman lived in the Warner house on South Street, next to Mrs. Smith's, and set out the great elms now towering before it. His home life was pleasant, with happy gatherings of young folks, with courting in the parlor as the years went on. Not one of that family is now alive. Mr. Waterman stood well with the ministers in the State; he was considered an able support of orthodoxy, and the Litchfield County Association regarded it a favor to receive him as a member. He preached the funeral sermon of Rev. John Trumbull, of Watertown, and at Dr. Bellamy's funeral was assigned the distinction of walking with his widow. He was dismissed in 1809, and resided here till his death in 1813, three years after Mr. Hart came here.

Mr. Hart says that Mr. Waterman came here to do good, and the first Sunday after his installation, the state of piety being low, the covenant and confession of faith being read, he prevailed on the members to stand before the congregation and testify their assent to it. Mr. Hart says, also, he was a man of active habits, a good preacher, and truly devoted to the spiritual interests of his people, being ready, even at his advanced age, to discharge parochial duty in fair weather and foul, by night and day. One powerful revival occurred during Mr. Waterman's ministry, and one or two seasons of less interest. He received two hundred and twenty members, one hundred and seventy-one by profession. Of medium height, he was thin, very straight, of active motions, nervous temperament, and an excellent horseman; graceful in bearing, elegant and courtly in manner, a master of ceremony, he was one of the most stylish of the pastors of this church. He used to walk up the broad aisle bowing and smiling on either side, the people rising and bowing to him as he passed. Reaching the pulpit, he first turned and bowed to the bass on his right, who filled the front gallery seat on the south side, and rose to bow in return. This parade was repeated with the treble in front, and with the counter and tenor on the left. The dignity and courtesy of this old-time style told with benefit on character and life. This was carried to excess by the president of Yale, small in stature but great in dignity, who, in passing into the chapel between two files of seniors, ranged outside the door according to custom, slipped and fell flat on his back in the mud. The students were overcome with laughter. Rising and casting a withering glance upon them, the prex burst out, "Young gentlemen, do you not know how awful a thing it is to laugh in the presence of God, and much more in my presence?"

Traditions of Mr. Waterman's masterly horsemanship are numerous, and he made a very fine appearance on horseback. He rode a sorrel mare, and went "like a streak," erect as a ramrod, wearing his three-cornered hat, and with his pipe in his mouth. He was a true and high type of the old colonial minister and gentleman. His lot was cast here in the stormy political times of Jefferson and Adams, when the feeling between Federalists and Republicans divided members of the same church. Mr. Waterman, in common with the clergy and most educated men in New England, feared that the triumph of the infidel Jefferson would prove the downfall of religion, and his strong expression exasperated the Jeffersonists in his congregation and caused trouble. One of them gave him ten dollars to allow him to publish one of his political sermons, thinking its strong tone would react on him; but the publisher would not take it, saying that it was so strong it could not be answered, and would hurt Jefferson. Some seceded from the congregation on account of this political preaching, which was then usual. An election sermon was preached at the time of the State elections, sometimes when town-meetings were held, and always on public fasts, when the clergy were allowed and expected to discuss public questions. When the news of the election of Adams as President and Jefferson as Vice-President reached Litchfield in 1796, Rev. Mr. Champion, an intense Federalist, in his Sunday morning prayer implored the blessing of the Holy Spirit on the President, and a double portion on the Vice-President, "for thou knowest, O Lord, that he needs it."

The second meeting-house was built during Mr. Waterman's ministry, and was a source of trouble. The vote for a survey to find the middle of the town was passed March 3, 1783, during the last of Mr. Storrs' ministry, and it was found to be on Town Hill, where the stake for the meeting-house was stuck in front of Nathan Beach's house. Mr. Storrs' sickness and death interfered with building then, but when Mr. Waterman was settled the enterprise was renewed, though there was trouble about the site at first. Jan. 11, 1790, it was finally voted to build the meeting-house on a rock a little southeast from the house where Samuel Lewis then lived, at the head of the road leading from the old meeting-house eastward. The 23d of the next December it was voted to build a steeple, and the 22d of October, 1792, it was voted to dispose of the old house; on the 2d of the following December liberty was granted to erect horse-sheds. Dec. 7, 1806, a committee was appointed to confer with Mr. Waterman regarding his uneasiness, with satisfactory results, for no further trouble was had until March 16, 1807, when another committee saw him in reference to a communication of his to the society. Sept. 25, 1809, it was finally voted to dismiss Mr. Waterman, and he was dismissed by a Council on the 14th of November, he to retain the whole salary for that year, and the society to pay him seven hundred and fifty dollars in three annual installments.

Mr. Waterman died after a short illness, while on a visit to a bachelor son in New York, who had left home at the age of fifteen to serve a mercantile apprenticeship with Messrs. Cutler & Smith, in Watertown, and later in life did business in New Orleans and New York. Mr. Waterman's remains were brought to Plymouth, where his wife had died on the 10th of the previous March; a son, Simon, having also died in Berlin on the 7th of the previous September.

The present pastor is Rev. E. B. Hillard.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, TERRYVILLE.

This church was organized Jan. 2, 1838, with the following members, who had previously been connected with the church at Plymouth: Philo Lewis, Warren Goodwin, Mrs. Elvira Goodwin, John C. Lewis, Mrs. Ann P. H. Lewis, Anna D. McKee, Ezekiel Montague, Mrs. Janett Montague, William E. McKee, Mrs. Adaline A. McKee, Milo Blakesley, Mrs. Dorcas Blakesley, Daniel Beach, Mrs. Sally Beach, Thaddeus Beach, Frederick H. Kellogg, Elam Fenn, Mrs. Lydia Fenn, Sherman Guernsey, John A. Warner, Mrs. Semantha Warner, Silas B. Terry, Mrs. Maria W. Terry, Andrew Fenn, Mrs. Rhoda Fenn, James Hunter, Hannah Goodwin, Robert Johnson, Mrs. Wealthy Johnson, Linus Blakesley, Abram S. Hemingway, Mrs. Ora Kimberly, Mrs. Polly Hemingway, Nathaniel Humiston, Phineas Hitchcock, Mrs. Patty Hitchcock, David Atkins, Mrs. Mary Fenn, Mrs. Keturah Fenn, Hannah Cook, Eli Terry, Jr., Mrs. Samantha Terry, Julius P. Bonney, Gaius F. Warner, Mrs. Harriet Warner, Eli Curtiss, Mrs. Emeline Perkins, Mrs. Hephzibah Cook.

Mr. Charles H. Porter, then a junior in Yale College, spent the month of January in the place, and by the blessing of God upon his labors Christians were greatly revived, and many persons were hopefully converted. Two young ministers—viz., C. S. Sherman and David Dobie—followed up the labors of Mr. Porter, and in the six months between the organization of the church and the settlement of the first pastor thirty-nine persons were added to the membership by profession of faith in Christ.

Aug. 8, 1838, was a great day with this people. In the forenoon the completed house of worship was dedicated, and in the afternoon three young men were ordained to the gospel ministry, one of whom, Nathaniel Richardson, was installed (first) pastor of this church. The preacher upon this occasion was Rev. Dr. Noah Porter, of Farmington. The ministry of Mr. Richardson extended to July 2, 1840.

Rev. Merrill Richardson was the second pastor. He came to this field with the experience of a year's preparatory labor in Salisbury, Vt. He was installed Oct. 27, 1841, and was dismissed July 1, 1846. He was installed pastor of this church a second time, May 16, 1849, and was dismissed Jan. 18, 1858. His entire term of service was thirteen and a half years,—a period nearly three times as long as that of any other pastor of this church. He died Dec. 12, 1876, being at that time pastor of the First Congregational Church of Milford, Mass., and, in accordance with his own desire, his body was brought here for burial.

During the time between the periods of Mr. Richardson's labors, Rev. Judson A. Root was nominally pastor. He was settled Oct. 7, 1846, and dismissed May 16, 1849; but ill health had incapacitated him for the performance of the duties of his office after April 30, 1847, at which time he resigned the pastoral charge. He continued to decline until his death. During a portion of the time in which Mr. Root was pastor, Rev. Samuel J. Andrews was employed as a supply. He acted in that capacity about six months.

After the last dismissal of Mr. Richardson, Edward A. Walker, a student from Yale Theological Seminary, supplied the pulpit. In connection with his labors an extensive revival began, which continued under the efforts of his successor. There had been an increase of solemnity in the parish before the departure of Mr. Richardson, who was confident the church was on the eve of a revival. Mr. Walker was instrumental in the great enlargement of the Sabbath-school, and in the resuscitation of the female prayer-meeting.

John Monteith, Jr., was ordained pastor Oct. 27, 1858. His ministry is a memorable era in the history of the church; a great accession of converts was received,—sixty-four in 1858, seven in 1859, four in 1860.

Following upon Mr. Monteith, who was dismissed July 31, 1860, the dismissal to take effect the first Sabbath in September, came another minister directly from a theological seminary, A. Hastings Ross, who supplied the pulpit for six months.

His successor was Rev. Edwin R. Dimock, whose labors covered a period of eighteen months.

After Mr. Dimock, Rev. H. H. McFarland supplied for six months, and was succeeded by Rev. Franklin A. Spencer, who was installed pastor June 24, 1863, and was dismissed May 1, 1865. A revival attended his labors, and upwards of thirty were added to the church by profession of faith.

Rev. E. M. Wright began labor as acting pastor, March 11, 1866, and resigned April 17, 1870, broken down in health and spirit by the sudden death of his wife.

Henry B. Mead was ordained June 7, 1871, and dismissed May 12, 1874. During his ministry there was an accession of thirty-three by profession of faith.

Rev. Leverett S. Griggs began labor as acting pastor Oct. 25, 1874, and is the present incumbent.

In addition to the foregoing, Rev. A. C. Baldwin has preached to this people many months in the aggregate.

Of the seventeen ministers named, six have already cease to live and labor among men, viz.: Messrs. Porter, Merrill, Richardson, Root, Walker, Dimock, and Wright.

The following figures exhibit in part the growth of the church. Starting with a membership of forty-five in 1838, it had an enrollment Dec. 31, 1850, of one hundred and twenty-eight; Jan. 1, 1858, one hundred and forty-nine; Dec. 31, 1860, two hundred and nineteen; Dec. 31, 1865, two hundred and thirty-one; Feb. 1, 1879, two hundred and seventy-seven.

During the forty-one years of its existence it has had the privilege of furnishing four candidates for the gospel ministry, viz.: Edwin Johnson, lately pastor of the Second Congregational Church of Bridgeport; Linus Blakesley, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Topeka, Kan.; Horace R. Williams, pastor of the Congregational Church of Almont, Mich.; and Mosely H. Williams, engaged in the work of the American Sunday-School Union, Philadelphia.

The Sabbath-school preceded the organization of the church, being first held in the old red schoolhouse in 1834. There were four classes, taught by Milo Blakesley, Philo Lewis, Miss Rhoda Swift (now Mrs. James Hunter), and Mrs. Sherman Guernsey. The session was at nine o'clock in the morning, giving an opportunity to attend the morning service at Plymouth.

After this Bible classes were held at private houses until the new church edifice was occupied.

From that time until 1857 the school was organized every year in the spring, and closed in the fall.

There were no records kept during those years, but it is remembered that Deacon Milo Blakesley was first elected superintendent, followed by Warren Goodwin, Phinehas Hitchcock, James Edmunds, with Miss Hannah Goodwin as assistant, Deacon S. B. Terry, with Miss Eliza Bunnell (Mrs. Carpenter) as assistant, Warren Goodwin, N. C. Boardman, Gaius A. Norton, and perhaps others, each serving one or more years. In May, 1857, R. D. H. Allen was elected, and it was decided in the fall to continue the school through the winter. The school had numbered about forty in 1845, and forty-five in 1849, as we learn from private memoranda. During the revival of 1858, and under the ministry of Rev. E. A. Walker, the school received a new impulse, calling into its membership nearly the entire congregation. The school was reorganized, R. D. H. Allen was again elected superintendent, B. S. Beach chorister, which position he has since filled with little or no intermission, and A. H. Beach was elected secretary, acting also as assistant superintendent, to which position he was elected in 1859. Mr. Allen continued to hold the office of superintendent until February, 1865, with the following assistants: O. D. Hunter, appointed Oct. 26, 1860; W. H. Scott, Feb. 1, 1863; and A. H. Beach, Feb. 8, 1864. During all these years Mr. Allen had charge of a class of young men, and at his request A. H. Beach acted (perhaps with the exception of one year) as an extra assistant by relieving him of many of the details of the superintendent's office. During one year, also, Miss Margaret McClintock assisted, having the arrangement and oversight of the younger classes. Feb. 10, 1865, James C. Mix was chosen superintendent, and M. D. Holcomb assistant. Both having removed from the place, J. P. Crawford was elected superintendent, Oct. 29, 1865, and selected W. H. Scott for assistant, who has served in that capacity ever since.

Mr. Crawford was succeeded in 1866 by James Hunter for five successive years, and he by N. T. Baldwin for two years. F. W. Mix, appointed in 1873, has held the office until the present time. Since 1858 the numbers on the roll have varied from two hundred and forty to three hundred and fifty, and the average attendance from one hundred and thirteen to two hundred and twenty-eight. Of the entire number (three hundred and ninety-two) received into the church by profession since its organization, two hundred and forty-three were from the Sabbath-school. The school has succeeded remarkably in retaining the interest of our people of every age and position. It has received the earnest, active co-operation of our most prominent business men. It has done much to mould and guide the religious thought of our community, and has turned the minds of many to Christ and His salvation.

The house of worship was erected with funds secured by a subscription bearing date Sept. 13, 1837, which amounted to $3558. A small additional sum was raised subsequently to complete the building. The chairman of the building committee was Wyllys Atwater, and the builder was Riley Scott, who is still a member of this church.

The parsonage was donated to the ecclesiastical society, Aug. 26, 1841, by Eli Terry, Sr.

In 1853, in the period of the ministry of Rev. Merrill Richardson, an enlargement of the capacity of the house of worship became necessary, and the galleries were introduced, for which the sum of four hundred and sixty-seven dollars was provided by subscription.

In 1878 the building was raised up and thoroughly renovated, and the lecture-room and ladies' parlor constructed underneath. The total outlay was something more than eight thousand dollars, including the cost of the organ, which was contributed by the Sabbath-school. The chairman of the building committee was O. D. Hunter. Services of rededication were held Nov. 6, 1878.

The deacons of the church have been as follows: Milo Blakesley, Eli Curtis, Silas B. Perry, Gaius A. Norton, R. D. H. Allen, and Ira H. Stoughton.

The present officers of the church are as follows: Pastor, Leverett S. Griggs; Deacons, R. D. H. Allen, Ira H. Stoughton; Standing Committee, pastor, deacons, clerk, Sunday-school superintendent, N. Taylor Baldwin, James Hunter, George H. Plumb; Sabbath-school Superintendent, F. W. Mix; Assistant Superintendent, Walter H. Scott; Treasurer, Deacon Ira H. Stoughton; Clerk, W. T. Goodwin.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH.

This church was organized in 1740, in Plymouth Hollow, now Thomaston, where the first church edifice was erected. The rectors previous to the war of the Revolution were Theophilus Morris, James Lyon, Richard Mansfield, James Scoville, and James Nichols. The society was reorganized after the Revolution with the following members: Solomon Collins, Abner Blakeslee, Titus Barnes, Asher Blakeslee, Eli Blakeslee, Hosea Blim, Moses Blakeslee, Samuel Blakeslee, Philo Bradlee, Amos Bronson, Ebenezer Bradley, Noah Blakeslee, Jude Blakeslee, Ebenezer Bradley, Jr., John Brown, Thos. Blakeslee, Joab Camp, Abishai Castle, Zadok Curtis, Amasa Castle, Ezra Dodge, Samuel Fenn, Ebenezer Ford, Jesse Fenn, Lemuel Funcher, Cephas Ford, Barnabas Ford, Isaac Fenn, Enos Ford, Daniel Ford, Amos Ford, Cornelius Graves, Benj. Graves, Simeon Graves, Zacheus Howe, Eliphalet Hartshorn, Eliphalet Hartshorn, Jr., Jesse Humaston, David Luddington, Zebulon Mosher, Chancey Moss, Jacob Potter, Samuel Peck, Jr., Samuel Potter, Gideon Seymour, David Shelton, Ezekiel Sanford, Jr., Abel Sutliff, Jr., Samuel Scoville, Jr., Jesse Turner, Wm. Tuttle, Thos. Williams, Eli Welton, Thos. Way, Ogrius Warner, Thos. Williams, Jr., Samuel Way.

After its reorganization, the church to 1792 was supplied by Ashbel Baldwin, Philo Shelton, Pillotow Branson, and Chauncey Prindle.

The present church edifice was erected in 1796, and consecrated Nov. 2, 1797. The rectors from that time have been Nathan B. Burgess, Roger Searle, Rodney Rossiter. After Mr. Rossiter the following officiated about six months each: Robert W. Harris, Joseph T. Clark, Gurdon S. Coit, Norman Pinney, and Allen C. Morgan.

In 1831, Rev. Dr. Burhans became pastor. His successors have been as follows: 1837, Rev. Mr. Waters (supply), Rev. William Watson; 1851, Rev. Mr. Denison; 1854, Rev. A. B. Goodrich; 1856, Rev. S. H. Miller; 1859, Rev. Dr. Berry; 1862, Rev. Mr. Lumsden; 1864, Rev. B. Eastwood; 1869, Rev. Porter Thomas; 1873, Rev. L. M. Dorman; 1874, Rev. S. B. Duffield; 1877, Rev. Mr. Bates; 1879, Rev. J. D. Gilliland.

There is also an Episcopal Church,—St. Matthew's,—located in the northeast part of the town, but has no settled rector.

PLYMOUTH (Continued).

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.—CIVIL HISTORY.

THE MANUFACTURING INTERESTS OF TERRYVILLE.*

A SMALL stream rising in the northwestern part of Terryville still bears the old Indian name, "Pequabuck." This receives before it leaves the village the Poland River and a small tributary coming from the "Old Marsh," so called. Under this name the Pequabuck unites with the Farmington River at Farmington, and thence flows into the Connecticut at Windsor. These three streams have been utilized since the first settlement of the country for sawing lumber, grinding grain, and various other local purposes.

In or about the year 1824, Eli Terry (2d) removed from the western part of Plymouth (Thomaston), and built a shop on the Pequabuck, for the manufacture of clocks, where the shop formerly owned and occupied by the Lewis Lock Company now stands, which shop was burned in 1851, and replaced by the present one. He was the eldest of four sons of Eli Terry, who came from Windsor, Conn., in 1793, and established the clock business in Plymouth Hollow, then Northbury, now Thomaston. His father had been thoroughly educated by the best English clock-makers of the country, and in his experience of more than thirty years had not only placed the business on a solid foundation, but made it for himself a financial success. He trained his three eldest sons to the same trade, and furnished them capital to commence, each for himself, in different parts of the town. Eli Terry (2d) was at this time about twenty-five years of age, and evidently possessed the elements of character which command success: he was energetic, ambitious, industrious, and economical.

As this was then only a farming community, he was under the necessity of providing houses for himself and his employees. He took great interest in the society he gathered around him, and was a man of large influence for good. The methods of business were very different from those of the present. It will be remembered that there were then no railroads to the market, and goods were carted to the nearest water-conveyances, and thence shipped to the cities, or they were distributed by peddlers to all parts of the country. Money was scarce, and a cash trade was the exception. Many clocks were exchanged for goods of every kind,—everything that was needed in such a community,—hence the necessity that the manufacturers keep a store for the distribution of these goods. Sometimes, if shrewd, he thus made two profits, but perhaps quite as often the skillful manufacturer failed to be qualified for a merchant, and made a loss instead of a profit. The peddlers sold at high prices to parties who would buy and give their notes in payment, and these notes often proved worthless. The system of barter, too, extended to the pay of the workmen. Very little cash did they get, but orders on the store instead, and at the settlement at the end of the year for which each one was hired, he received a note for the balance due. These were the serious drawbacks to business of every kind at that time.

On the other hand, there were some favorable circumstances for Mr. Terry. The demand for clocks was large, only limited by the limited means of the people who wanted them. They were almost an article of necessity, but the extreme high price at which they had necessarily been held in the market forbade their use to those whose means were moderate; but by the introduction of machinery in place of hand-labor, and especially by the invention of the shelf-clock, which had been introduced by the elder Terry in 1814, they were placed within the means of a large class of people of more moderate incomes. Moreover, by this same reduction in cost the manufacturer was placed beyond the reach of foreign competition, while, protected by letters patent, it was too early to be affected by the home competition.

During the later years of his life Mr. Terry suffered much from the disease which terminated by his death in 1841, at the age of forty-two. In his business life of seventeen years he had accumulated what was then accounted a handsome property, which was distributed to his wife and six children. The clock business was then sold to Hiram Welton & Co., who continued it to 1845, when, upon the failure of the company, caused in part by the failure of a party whom they had underwritten, the business was closed out.

Silas Burnham Terry, a younger brother of Eli Terry (2d), in 1821 erected a shop for the manufacture of clocks at the confluence of the Pequabuck and Poland Rivers. He was less a managing man than his brother, but a man of unusual and varied intelligence, a superior mechanic, ingenious, and surpassed by no one in his knowledge of the mechanism of a clock. His brother Henry says of him, in an obituary notice published by the Waterbury American of May 30, 1876,—

"After prosecuting the business many years, and making, for the most part, costly clocks, struggling through the financial troubles of 1837 and 1839, when most men not firmly established in business and capital were broken down, he too became a sufferer, yet struggled on until he found no way of emancipation from the burden of debt fastened upon him but to relinquish a business not only not remunerative, but to him disastrous. He had, however, during these years of business adversity introduced new machinery, from which others derived more benefit than himself, and had introduced newly-arranged clocks, which have since proved the best in the market. The clock known as the Seth Thomas Regulator, Nos. 1 and 2, is one. It is a perfect time-keeper, and is as reliable, even for astronomical purposes, as the more showy clocks costing ten times as much. The same clock is also made at Winsted, and by the Waterbury Clock Company. He had also made a new gravity escapement regulator, of which we propose to speak farther on."

Farther on, after speaking of the three-legged gravity escapement invented by E. B. Dennison, LL.D., and described in a treatise written by him, he claims that, though different in several respects, the one invented by his brother antedates the former, and says,—

"This regulator, when put in its present locality, was kept running four years steadily, during which time its rate of running was very perfect, requiring the use of observatory instruments to ascertain the variation at the end of four years. The perfecting of this gravity escapement we therefore claim as an American invention. It has been running five years longer than the Westminster clock described in the treatise referred to, and may be seen at the late residence of the deceased in this city."

About 1852 he invented the "torsion balance clock," so called. It was designed for a cheap clock. The movement was carried by a spring, as in other marine clocks, but the balance was a flattened wire stretched from top to bottom of the clock, to which was attached a horizontal rod or wire with a small ball at each end, which by their vibrations served to regulate the motion of the clock, and took the place of the hair-spring. A joint-stock company was formed for the manufacture of this clock, and a new factory was built a short distance below the depot, utilizing the dam built by Eli Terry, Sr., in the later years of his life, after he had retired from business. The directors of this company were James Terry, William E. McKee, Theodore Terry, and S. B. Terry. The former was president and financial manager, and the latter superintendent. The clock did not prove a success, owing to the extreme delicacy of the balance, which rendered it difficult to regulate. As a consequence the company relinquished the business. Mr. Terry, however, always insisted that the difficulties were not insuperable, and in the later years of his life, when doing business for himself, contemplated taking it up again and perfecting it. Many will remember the clock, and the beauty and delicacy of its movement. Mr. Terry was afterwards in the employ of William L. Gilbert, at Winsted, and of the Waterbury Clock Company, and then, with his sons, organized the Terry Clock Company, in which he was engaged till near the time of his death, in May, 1876.

Origin and History of the Eagle Lock Company.—In 1832, Stephen C. Bucknell, a locksmith, came from England and settled in Watertown. He was taken under the patronage of a man of small capital, and commenced the manufacture of cabinet locks. He proposed to copy the finer qualities of English locks, and to prepare, as soon as possible, a stock of one hundred different varieties for the American market. As he followed the English methods of hand-labor, his progress was very slow, and his patron found that his funds were likely to prove insufficient. He therefore sold out to Lewis, McKee & Co., of Terryville, a company formed for that purpose, and consisting of John E. Lewis, William E. McKee, and Eli Terry (2d), then engaged in the clock business. They removed the concern to Terryville, into a building standing where the principal works of the Eagle Lock Company now stand. This building was burned in the summer of 1859, and replaced by a larger and more commodious one. The progress of this company was very slow, as the business was first to be learned and the facilities were few. The only man who had had any experience was the Englishman referred to, and he knew nothing of the wants of the trade or of the use of machinery. Machinery adapted to clock-making had been invented and used, but this was, very little of it, adapted to the making of locks. The equipment of any manufactory of that day was very crude as compared with the present, and the income of this company for many years did not seem to warrant any outlay not absolutely necessary. They had no engine-lathe for many years, and no planer for nearly thirty years. Their dies were forged by hand, and faced by hand-files. Hand-presses were used for cutting out the parts of locks, and the power-press, invented and first applied here, was not introduced till a much later period. Lock-plates were imported with selvages already bent, as they could be bought at cheaper rates than the raw material.

But the difficulties of manufacturing were by no means the most serious. When they attempted to sell their locks they encountered obstacles still more formidable. Trade of almost every kind was in the hands of importers, and they were, or thought they were, interested to discourage American manufactures, hence they rudely repulsed the agent or officers of the company who wished to show up their locks. As a consequence they found themselves stocked with goods upon which they could not realize, and could only work them off slowly through commission houses. In 1841, Mr. Terry, the president of the company, died, and the concern was sold to Lewis & Gaylord (John C. Lewis and Sereno Gaylord) for six cents on the dollar of the capital stock. They profited by the experience of their succession, adding new and improved machinery, introducing styles of goods better suited to the trade, and gradually overcoming their prejudice. In 1849, on the death of Mr. Lewis, the Lewis Lock Company was formed, a joint-stock company, whose stock was taken by the surviving partner, the heirs of Mr. Lewis, and a few others.

In the mean time, Bucknell, McKee & Co. had started the first manufactory of trunk-locks in this country. They availed themselves of the experience gained in making cabinet-locks, but failed to make the business pay. About 1840 they sold out to Warren Goodwin, who removed to Wolcottville, was burnt out, and returned to Terryville. Meanwhile, Williams, McKee & Co. had commenced the business anew at Terryville, where they continued till 1846, when they were bought out by James Terry—who had just closed out an unsuccessful venture in the manufacture of silk—and William E. McKee, under the name of James Terry & Co. They added to the business the manufacture of carpet-bag frames, which they conducted, principally at Newark, N. J., with no small degree of success. They also made a small assortment of cheap cabinet-locks.

In 1854 the two companies were consolidated under the name of Eagle Lock Company, retaining the former managers and most of the workmen. James Terry was made president and financial agent, Sereno Gaylord superintendent of the shop formerly owned by the Lewis Lock Company, E. L. Gaylord superintendent of the other factory, Joseph H. Adams secretary, and R. D. H. Allen treasurer. The Newark branch was sold to Cornelius Walsh. The capital stock of the consolidated company was eighty-five thousand dollars, distributed almost entirely among the stockholders of the two former companies. This stock was increased from its surplus at six successive times, to accomplish some desirable new arrangement, and now stands at three hundred and seventy thousand dollars. Three times have colonies gone out from the original hive, but they have all returned, and are now under one management.

The original directors were James Terry, William E. McKee, Sereno and Ansel Gaylord, Joseph H. Adams, E. L. Gaylord, and R. D. H. Allen. The financial managers have been successively James Terry, Joseph H. Adams, Nathan G. Miller, R. D. H. Allen, N. G. Miller, and M. C. Ogden. Of the original board of directors four have died, viz.: James Terry, William E. McKee, Ansel Gaylord, and Joseph H. Adams; two have removed and ceased to be stockholders, viz.: Sereno and Edward L. Gaylord; and the remaining two are still on the board, which is reinforced by M. C. Ogden, D. C. Wilcox, N. T. Baldwin, and F. W. Mix.

The careful management of its first president, James Terry, fully established its financial footing, which it has always maintained undoubted. It is now fully equipped with the best general and special machinery, and manned by the finest workmen in their line of work. The variety of goods made is increasing every year, and embraces everything desirable in cabinet- and trunk-locks, from the very simplest and cheapest to the most elaborate and stylish.

The Malleable-Iron Works.—About 1847, Andrew Terry, the second son of Eli Terry (2d), built the foundry a little above the depot for the manufacture of malleable-iron castings. The business was then comparatively new in this country, there being but few establishments of the kind. He had been a merchant for a few years, and labored under the disadvantage of not being bred to the business of his choice, and having almost no experience in any kind of mechanical employment. He was therefore largely dependent on his employees, who thought their interest lay in secreting from him the little knowledge they possessed. The processes peculiar to this class of castings were kept a profound secret by all engaged in the business, and covered by a variety of intricate manipulations wearing the veil of mystery, but for the most part of no importance whatever; hence he was obliged to keep his eyes open, and learn to distinguish the true from the false, and to learn by experiments expensive, unsatisfactory, and often disastrous. Though confessedly naturally averse to any long-continued application to any one line of business, he had the determination to win, the pride to dread the disgrace of failure, and the grit necessary to succeed. He labored indefatigably in every department, wormed out the secrets of the business, established a reputation, secured customers, and put the business into working order. In 1860 he associated with himself O. D. Hunter, who had learned the business in his employ, and R. D. H. Allen, who had been in the office of the Eagle Lock Company, and formed a joint-stock company, having a capital of sixteen thousand dollars, under the name of Andrew Terry & Co.

In 1861 he enlisted in the army, leaving the financial management to Allen, and the superintendency of the work to O. D. Hunter, and after his return had little to do with the executive management of the concern. In 1871, Mr. Terry sold out his interest to his former partners and went to Kansas. They admitted N. Taylor Baldwin and I. W. Clark, who (the latter) had been trained to the business in their employ. In 1875, R. D. H. Allen returned to the lock business, and N. T. Baldwin succeeded to the financial management, which position he still retains.

The success of the company—for it has been reasonably successful—has been largely due to the fact that it has been for the most part under the immediate supervision of its stockholders, who have carefully watched every department, and kept it entirely under their control. It enjoys a good reputation, and has a fair share of custom.

In 1877, Mr. Terry died, at the age of fifty-three years, in Bristol, where he had established the gray-iron business soon after his return from Kansas.

About the year 1862, Eli Terry (3d), youngest son of Eli Terry (2d), manufactured clock-springs for a few years in the shop built by S. B. Terry, and, though the business paid reasonably well, sold out to Seth Thomas Clock Company, who removed it to Thomaston.

Soon after this the Inventors' Manufacturing Company, managed by A. C. Felton, of Boston, with S. W. Valentine resident agent, bought the factory above mentioned and manufactured shears, but, owing to some financial irregularities on the part of the principal manager, it failed, and was wound up. Since then the property has been owned by Wm. Wood, and used for the manufacture of shears, and it is now partly occupied by Ryals Brothers for that purpose.

About 1865 the Eagle Bit and Buckle Company was formed, and occupied the shop built for the clock business, below the depot, for the manufacture of harness trimmings. They bought and removed here a Newark concern then in that business; but the time was unfavorable, as after the close of the war the United States government threw upon the market an immense amount of harness material at ruinous prices, thus greatly demoralizing the business. The company, therefore, went out of the business.

The above is a concise history of the principal successful and unsuccessful attempts at business in the village of Terryville, which, we trust, will not be without interest to the public, giving a lesson of caution or cheer, as may be needed, to those who shall come after us.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JAMES TERRY.

James Terry, son of Eli Terry (2d), and grandson of Eli Terry, was born July 5, 1823, in Plymouth Hollow (now Thomaston), Conn., where his father and grandfather then resided. His grandfather came from Windsor, Conn., in his early manhood, and established the manufacture of clocks, by which he acquired a large property and laid the foundation for an extensive business in that place, as well as elsewhere. He was the inventor and patentee of the mantel clock, as distinguished from the tall corner clock of our forefathers. He had very little capital, and his first thousand dollars, which he soon made from the improvement, was a perfect surprise to him. He said he didn't know "what to do with it." He soon learned its use, however. He was a man of intelligence, having a vigorous mind, public-spirited, and much interested in the welfare of the community in which he lived. He removed to Terryville late in life, 1838; subscribed liberally for the building of the church in Terryville, and added to his subscription, "If my health will permit, a clock for the steeple." This he was able to complete and present to the society, as well as a large and commodious parsonage which he built for it.

He was twice married. By his first marriage he had four sons and three daughters. Three of the sons were settled and engaged in the clock business in Plymouth, two—Eli and Silas B.—in the village of Terryville. The fourth is a patent broker in New Haven, making a specialty of patents for chemical inventions. His first wife dying in 1839, he married the second time, and had two children,—Stephen, who is a lawyer in Hartford, and Edwin, who died at the age of thirteen years in Terryville. Eli Terry died in 1852, at the age of eighty years.

His son, Eli Terry (2d), was born in Plymouth, and removed to Terryville not long after the birth of his son James, and commenced the manufacture of clocks, which he continued with success till his death. He was the founder of the village of Terryville, and built many of its houses in its early days, and it was named for him. He was an active member of the church on Plymouth Hill till 1838, when the church was organized in Terryville. In this he was very much interested, and for its welfare had great anxiety. He assisted in building the church by liberal contributions, and was very liberal in its support. He was a thorough business man, and left a handsome property to his children. He died in 1841, at the age of forty-two years. He married Samantha McKee, a native of Bristol, Conn., and left a family of six children,—three sons and three daughters,—of whom the oldest was James, the subject of this sketch.

James received his education at the common schools of the town, supplemented by two or three years at the select school of Mr. Simon Hart, of Farmington, Conn., for whom he always entertained the highest regard. He made diligent use of his opportunities. He was never a lover of the sports and games of boyhood, and seldom engaged in them. It would probably have been better for him if he had. He applied all the energies of his active mind to the acquisition of knowledge in the direction of his business or his tastes. His general information was good, and increased both by his reading and his intercourse with men of education and culture. He had a remarkable faculty of eliciting from others what information they could give him on any question of interest, often taking, with much apparent zeal and sincerity, what he knew to be the wrong side of an argument for the sake of informing himself more fully on the subject-matter of his thoughts. Though somewhat brusque in manner, and decided and outspoken in his opinions, he seldom failed in gaining the respect and esteem of those with whom he came in contact, which was sure to increase with increasing acquaintance. His reading, aside from the papers of the day, was mostly confined to scientific works in the line of the absorbing subject of his thoughts. His method of investigation was exhaustive. He confined himself to a certain line of investigation till he had exhausted his sources of information, which were somewhat limited by the deficiencies of his early education. His researches were not confined to his business. He was fond of music, though not himself a musician in any department. In pursuance of this taste, he read up on the subject of pipe-organs, which were his favorite instruments, and about the beginning of the war of the Rebellion he ordered a large and expensive one made for him by a competent maker, and he had so informed himself that he could give clear specifications of what he wanted, and had it made by contract; at the same time he had an addition made to his house for it,—a room sufficiently high to take in the sixteen-feet pipes. To this he added a water-motor, carried by water from the service-pipes of his house.

In this connection, as incidentally illustrating another characteristic of his nature, when he found that the contractor for his organ, who was a poor man, had taken the contract at a ruinous rate,—a fact which he ascertained only by diligent inquiry,—he, to the unspeakable relief of the poor man, assured him that he should be fully remunerated for all his time and expense, which proved to be nearly a thousand dollars more than the price contracted.

Mr. Terry was trained to habits of business in his early life, to which he was naturally by no means disinclined. His father's health was such during his later years that he needed his assistance, and he was left, before the age of eighteen years, to settle his father's estate, with the aid of his uncle, William E. McKee. He had learned the art of land surveying in his school-days, which was valuable to him in laying out and selling the lands which his father had left.

He was much interested, too, in steam-engines, particularly in their application to travel on our common roads, and he built a working model of one that would walk on four legs like a horse. He also built a stationary engine of some ten horse-power, which was used for some years to carry on the works of the lock-factory of S. Terry & Co. His father, in his later years, had turned his attention to the raising of silk-worms, and had in mind to commence the manufacture of silk. James, in pursuance of this plan, put up a factory, and made a commencement of the business, which, not proving remunerative, he soon abandoned.

In 1846 he formed a copartnership with his uncle, William E. McKee, under the name of James Terry & Co., for the manufacture of locks. They purchased the trunk-lock business of Williams, McKee & Co., of Terryville, and added to it, little by little, the manufacture of cabinet-locks, in competition with Lewis & Gaylord, who had succeeded to that business on the death of Eli Terry (2d). They also made carpet-bag locks and frames, the former at Terryville, and the latter, after a short time, at Newark, N. J. This latter business proved quite profitable, and put the concern on a good financial footing.

In 1854 the competing concerns united their interests under the name of the Eagle Lock Company, a joint-stock company with a capital of eighty-five thousand dollars, of which James Terry was made president and financial manager. The capital was afterwards increased to one hundred thousand dollars, where it remained till after his death. Suffice it to say that its success in the years that have followed is largely due to the wise and prudential management of Mr. Terry in its beginning.

The prominent characteristics of Mr. Terry as a business man were strict honesty, method, caution almost extreme, and untiring diligence, united with that indefinable but very important qualification which we call tact.

His sterling honesty and justice showed itself in his dealings with his employees. They knew he could be depended upon to fulfill all his agreements, and to give them what he thought was a fair remuneration for their labor. He was a man, to use a homely but expressive phrase, that "you could tie to." He despised trickery and underhanded dealing, and took no advantage of these arts. He was, nevertheless, shrewd in the sense of foreseeing and keenly discerning the results of his doings, and not allowing himself to be overreached in any business transaction. He pursued a uniform method in his daily duties, and nothing was left at loose ends or neglected because he had overlooked it. His supervision extended to every detail of the business, and nothing escaped his eye.

In his caution he attempted nothing that he could not reasonably anticipate the means of carrying out. In those early days business was done largely on credit, very few concerns having the capital to invest in uncertain speculations, or even to follow their legitimate business to its best results. Unlike many, he preferred to defer even desirable improvements till they could be undertaken with reasonable safety.

The years 1857 and 1858 were very trying ones, as the panic following the failure of the Ohio Life and Trust Company found most houses deeply involved and the wheels of business completely blocked. This naturally gave Mr. Terry no little anxiety, but he had the confidence of the community and of the banks, and weathered the panic with very little loss to the company. The men were allowed to continue their work on short time, trusting to the future for their pay, and they were not disappointed, and the company was able in a few months to sell advantageously the goods that would not have been made except for the benefit of the laboring men.

Mr. Terry was a very diligent man, putting in an appearance at the office at the stroke of the bell, and continuing at his work, with the exception of short intervals for his meals, into the evening, when he looked over the night mails and read his daily paper. Undoubtedly this unceasing application to business shortened his life, as he took no time for recreation, and the constant strain broke down his system before he knew it, and led to the terrible disease which ended his days.

In politics Mr. Terry was a Republican, and represented his town in the State Legislature. He was twice married, first to Elizabeth Hollister, of Glastonbury, by whom he had four children,—Jane, Mary, E. Clinton, and one who died in infancy,—all of whom were born in Terryville. Mrs. Terry died in 1852, and he married for his second wife Valeria, daughter of William Treat, Oct. 20, 1853. By this union three children were born,—Lerria F., who died at the age of eleven years; Nellie, who resides with her mother in Terryville; and an infant.

Mrs. Valeria Terry was born in Euclid, Ohio. Her father was a native of Glastonbury, Conn., and went to Ohio when a young man, where he was engaged as a farmer, and more especially as a ship-builder. He died at his residence at Topeka, Kan., at the age of seventy-seven years.

Mr. Terry was a member of the Congregational Church in Terryville. He was very liberal to the church, and charitable to the poor. He was considered one of the best business men in his town, and his judgment was always sought on matters of public interest. He died April 19, 1871, of paralysis, from which he had long been suffering.

ANDREW TERRY.

Andrew Terry was born in Terryville, Conn., Dec. 29, 1824, at the old homestead, still standing, on the south side of the road, west of the upper lock-shop. He was the second son of Eli Terry, Jr., and Samantha McKee. At the famous boys' school kept by Deacon Hart, in Farmington, Conn., he pursued classical studies almost to the point required for entering college. Soon after his father's death, and before becoming of age, he went to Washington, Pa., and became clerk in a store. In that place he made the acquaintance of Susan Orr, whom he married Oct. 16, 1844, and who is still living. They had two children, —Gertrude, who died April 10, 1856, and Margaret, who married C. S. Treadway, cashier of the Bristol National Bank, and died Sept. 17, 1880.

Returning to Terryville immediately after his marriage, he established himself as a country merchant in "the store," which all Terryville boys remember, and remained there for two years.

Nov. 24, 1847, the first ground was broken for a foundry for the manufacture of malleable iron. The business was then new to this part of the country, and the difficulties to be surmounted were very great. By his energy and courage the obstacles arising from limited capital and inexperience were overcome, and the business was established on a paying basis. He continued the same under his own name until Feb. 2, 1860, when a joint-stock corporation was formed, to which his name was given, and of which he continued as president and principal owner until April 26, 1871, when he disposed of his entire interest therein. The business is still carried on under the old name of A. Terry & Co.

In 1868, Mr. Terry removed to Waterbury, still continuing to give his attention to the Terryville business. In the summer of 1871 he took up his residence in Lawrence, Kan., where he engaged in private banking and real estate operations. Removing to Bristol, Conn., in July, 1875, in connection with G. J. Bently, the enterprise known as the Bristol Foundry Company was organized in the summer of 1876, and Mr. Terry was actively engaged in it until his last sickness.

As a citizen he realized his responsibilities, and tried to discharge them faithfully. Upon all questions of public policy he held decided opinions, and did not hesitate to express them. Office he never cared for. When the civil war broke out he gave his time, money, heart, and body to the support of the government. He enlisted as a private in Company I, First Regiment Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and went out as orderly sergeant. A severe illness rendered him unfit for duty, and he received his discharge, for disability, Sept. 23, 1861. On the 5th of October he was commissioned as major of the Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and was soon promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy. He took part in Gen. Burnside's expedition to North Carolina, and participated in the capture of Roanoke Island, and in the battle of Newbern. His commission was resigned March 28, 1862. In the list of those uniting with the Congregational Church in Terryville in 1842 occurs the name of Andrew Terry; he was then eighteen years of age. In 1868 he removed his connection to the Second Congregational Church in Waterbury. On his removal to Kansas, he took a letter of recommendation to the Plymouth Congregational Church in Lawrence. A marked era in his religious life began with the death of his little daughter Gertrude. The revival of 1857–58, which brought "all Terryville" into the church, found a most helpful laborer in him. He was not only active in the prayer-meeting, but held personal conversation with individuals, the result of which will only be known in eternity. He taught a class of boys in the Sunday-school, and had the pleasure of seeing nearly every one brought to Christ. At Allentown a mission Sunday-school was sustained for a considerable time under his superintendency, with very encouraging results. Theological questions then had for him a fascinating interest; late into the night he would talk with ministers and others interested in such thinking. His library was well selected and well read. Many ministers shared the hospitality of his home, and were assisted by him in substantial ways. Among the number were the Rev. M. H. Williams, of Philadelphia, and the Rev. J. C. McClintock, of Burlington, Iowa.

AUGUSTUS C. SHELTON.

Augustus Canby Shelton, the founder and senior member of the firm of Shelton & Tuttle, carriage manufacturers in the town of Plymouth, Conn., was born in Plymouth, Feb. 7, 1816, and died in that town, Aug. 27, 1880, at the age of sixty-four years.

He was of the fifth generation in descent from Daniel Shelton, the founder of the New England branch of the family, who came to this country from England about 1687, and settled in Stratford, now Huntington, in this State. The original home of the Shelton family was Norfolk, England. In 1504, Sir John Shelton, Knight of the Bath, was high sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk. His son John served in the same office, which was also held in 1570 by Sir Ralph Shelton. At an earlier date the family was distinguished, Sir Ralph de Shelton having been knighted at the battle of Cressy in 1346, and Nicholas De Shelton being one of the barons who rebelled against King John and wrested from him "Magna Charta."

In the village of Shelton, Norfolk Co., England, there is an old church with the remains of stained glass windows, on which were blazoned the heraldic tokens signifying that one of the race had been a pilgrim to the Holy Land. One of the family accompanied the Prince of Orange in his invasion, being a captain in the army which he led against James II., and was at the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690.

Daniel, the original ancestor of the New England families bearing the Shelton name, came from the town of Rippon, Derbyshire Co., England, from which town the parish of Rippon took its name. He is described in the Stratford records as "merchant." His tombstone bears the inscription, "Saint Daniel Shelton." He was an extensive land proprietor, owning large tracts of land in Stratford, Stamford, Farmington, Oxford, Woodbury, Darien, Rippon, and Derby.

He was one of the non-resident proprietors of Waterbury, as appears by the grant of Governor Saltonstall, bearing date of Oct. 28, 1720. He had nine children, seven sons and two daughters. His fourth son, Samuel, was born in 1704. He had fourteen children, eight sons and six daughters. His third son, Daniel, was born June 16, 1741. He had nine children, five sons and four daughters. His fourth son, Joseph, was born Oct. 20, 1783. He had eleven children, five sons and six daughters. Of these sons Augustus Canby was the second, being the fourth child. His middle name he took from his mother, whose maiden name was Martha Canby.

The original proprietor of the Shelton estate in what is now the town of Plymouth was David Shelton, the grandson of the original Daniel, and the grandfather of Augustus C. His estate lay in what is now called Todd Hollow, and was an extensive one, comprising some three thousand acres. He also owned land in Stamford and Kent.

Joseph Shelton, the father of Augustus, was a merchant and farmer. Augustus' early years were passed on his father's farm, where he acquired those habits of industry which characterized him through life. At the usual age he went to Harwinton to learn the trade of wheelwright, serving his time there with Lewis Smith. From there he went to New Haven, where he worked three years in the carriage establishment of George Hoadley. He then returned to Plymouth, and in 1837 entered upon the business of carriage-making on his own account. For the first three years he worked in a small building now occupied as a dwelling-house. He then erected the first building of the present establishment, which is now the engine-room. In 1843 the building in which the office is was built.

At that time the trade was mainly Southern. In 1855, Mr. Shelton took in as partner Mr. Byron Tuttle. For several years the business was prosperous. For six years all the carriages made by the firm went West. The Southern business was broken up by the war, while the Western trade was improved. This continued till 1868, when the business began to wane, and in 1870 the company sold out the Chicago establishment, and the partnership, so far as the business of manufacturing was concerned, was dissolved, the partners still holding the property together. From that time till his death Mr. Shelton carried on the business in a limited way.

Mr. Shelton was married, Nov. 19, 1858, to Ellen A. Crook. His children are John Canby, born May 14, 1860, died Sept. 13, 1860; Mary Jane, born Sept. 29, 1862; Frances Pauline, born June 9, 1865; Ellen Augusta, born May 20, 1870; Milla Canby, born Aug. 6, 1876.

The immediate occasion of Mr. Shelton's death was a slight wound in the finger, the inflammation of which proved fatal. His death was unexpected, and gave a great shock to the community, where he had been regarded as yet in the fullness of health and strength. In character Mr. Shelton was a man whom all who knew him admired and loved. He was upright in business, honorable in spirit, of great industry and perseverance, never surrendering a purpose once formed, but by persistent endeavor carrying it into execution. Positive yet candid, not to be coerced by argument, but yielding finally to the force of just considerations, not as quick in making up his mind as some, but coming to right conclusions with time for reflection, industrious and successful, he was a man of an eminently generous spirit, living not to himself but to aid others, responding cheerfully to all worthy appeals; a friend of the poor, and thoroughly enjoying doing good, he was a man who thanked you for bringing to him a subscription-paper for a worthy object, as though you had done him a favor.

He was interested in the public welfare, though he declined public office. All the interests of the villages where he lived found in him a friend, and in the parish with which he was connected he was the main stay. He had a tender heart towards children, and not long before his death gave the schools in the village, at his own expense, a common ride. In his home he was most loving and kind, both as a husband and a father, and his death leaves there a group of deeply mourning hearts. The life of such a man is not only an honor to himself, it elevates and ennobles the idea of life in those who witness it, and the memory of it relieves the gloom of death.

Such a life does not end in death; in its influence it lives on after death, inspiring those who survive it to strive to imitate it.

BYRON TUTTLE.

The Tuttle family came from Devonshire, England, and were probably of Welsh descent. In 1528, and again in 1548, William Totyl was recorder of the ancient city of Exeter, the capital of Devonshire, and then the second city in England, being next to London in population and importance. William Totyl was high sheriff of Devonshire in 1549, and lord mayor of Exeter in 1552. William Totyl had a son Jeffrey, who was recorder in 1563. Jeffrey Totyl bought a fine estate, called "Pearmore," in the neighborhood of Exeter. This estate had belonged to Gray, Duke of Sussex, who was executed for treason, and his estate confiscated by the crown, of whom Jeffrey bought it. Jeffrey had a son, Henry Tottle, who was high sheriff in 1624, and from him William Tuttle and three brothers descended. William Tuttle and his three brothers came to America in the ship "Planter," and landed in Boston in 1635. The brothers were Richard, who settled in Boston; John, in Dover, N. H.; Simon, in Ipswich, Mass.; and William, removed to New Haven in 1639, and was a man of wealth and consequence, and much employed in public affairs. William Tuttle married Elizabeth ———, in England, and had twelve children, eight sons and four daughters. Elizabeth Tuttle, daughter of William, married Richard Edwards, and had five daughters and one son, Rev. Timothy Edwards, D.D., minister at Windsor, Conn., sixty-four years. Rev. Timothy Edwards had ten daughters and one son, viz., the famous Jonathan Edwards, president of Princeton College. He had eight daughters and three sons,—Pierpont, Hon. Timothy, and Rev. Jonathan, president of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. The eldest of Rev. Jonathan Edwards' eight daughters was Esther, who married Rev. Aaron Burr, president of Princeton College, and was the mother of Aaron Burr, Vice-President of the United States, and the mother of Sarah Burr, who married Tapping Reeves, afterwards judge of the Supreme Court of Connecticut. A daughter of Tapping Reeves married Timothy Dwight, and is the mother of Timothy Dwight, President of Yale College. The descendants of William Tuttle are numerous and distinguished, most of the clergymen in the United States of the name being descendants of William Tuttle, of New Haven, among which are Joseph F. Tuttle, president of Wabash College; Daniel S. Tuttle, Bishop of Montana; Isaac H. Tuttle, D.D., New York City; Rev. J. M. Tuttle, Rahway, N. J. John Tuttle, the eldest son of William Tuttle, was born in England, being three and a half years old when he landed in Boston with his father; married Catharine Lane, Nov. 8, 1653; had a son Samuel, who married Sarah Newman in 1684; had a son Daniel, born Aug. 23, 1702, who married Mary Mansfield, April 26, 1726; had a son Samuel, born Feb. 12, 1727, who married Chloe Todd; had a son Lemuel, born in 1760, who married Lydia Bassett, of North Haven, Conn., June 12, 1788, and moved to Plymouth. He had three daughters and one son,—Philenda, Lua, Lydia, and Nelson. Philenda married Seth Thomas, died May 12, 1810. Nelson Tuttle, born Nov. 21, 1798, married Hila Norton, of Wolcott, Oct. 22, 1820; had five children,—Jane H. (deceased), Byron, Mary A., Martha A., and Birney L.

Byron Tuttle, the second child and eldest son of Nelson and Hila Tuttle, was born in Plymouth, Conn., Aug. 23, 1825. His early years were spent at home in that best of training, the life of a New England farmer's son. The winter before he came of age he taught school in the Buck's Hill District, in the town of Waterbury.

On the 26th of August, 1847, he entered the carriage establishment of Augustus C. Shelton, the senior member of the firm of Shelton & Tuttle, whose partner Mr. Tuttle afterwards became. Commencing work for thirteen dollars per month and his board, at the end of three months he made a new engagement with Mr. Shelton for three years at a dollar a day and his board. At the expiration of this time he went out to Milwaukee, Wis., to superintend the sales of the establishment at that place, thus laying the foundation of the Western business of the firm. Returning, he resumed work in the shop till, on the 1st day of January, 1855, he became Mr. Shelton's partner in the business. In 1854 he went out to Chicago and established a carriage repository in that city, leaving Harlow B. Hill in charge of the sales. Mr. Tuttle returned to direct the preparation and shipment of the goods, frequently visiting Chicago in person to look after the business. The venture proved very successful, and the firm made money rapidly. In 1864 they built a repository on Madison Street, which they occupied until April 1, 1870, when, the business declining, it was disposed of, and Mr. Tuttle began to withdraw his interest from the business of manufacturing, the partners still holding the shops together. In 1872, Mr. Tuttle disposed of his interest in the shops to his partner and retired from the business, though still retaining the care of Mr. Shelton's financial affairs, and holding his power of attorney till his partner's death, Aug. 27, 1880.

Mr. Tuttle was married, April 10, 1853, to Candace D., daughter of Oliver Smith, Esq., of Plymouth. They have two children,—Harriet A. and William B.

Aside from his private business, Mr. Tuttle has occupied a prominent place in the affairs of the town, having been elected a justice of the peace in 1864 and selectman in 1878, which office he has since held. He has also for a number of years been the agent of the town, having filled this position with ability and efficiency before the Legislature and in the courts in cases where the interests of the town were involved. Mr. Tuttle's characteristics as a business man are energy, promptness, thoroughness, and integrity,—this is the secret of his success in life. In whatever he engages he does his part, and that in the style in which his business affairs are conducted. Nothing in his charge is left to suffer through inattention or neglect. He is judge of probate in the district where he resides, and in every respect is a prominent member of the community, and among the leading men of the town.

In politics Mr. Tuttle is a Republican, and is one of the active men in his party. He is a member of the Congregational society, the office of whose committee he has filled with advantage to the society and credit to himself. As the surviving member of the former firm of Shelton & Tuttle, he is engaged in settling the affairs of his late partner and life-long friend, thus concluding the history of one of the most well-known and successful business establishments in Plymouth.

GEORGE PIERPONT.

George Pierpont is of English descent, from James Pierpont, who settled in Massachusetts at a very early day, and died at Ipswich, Mass. One of his children was named John, who was born in London in 1619, admitted a freeman in Massachusetts in 1652, representative to the colonial Legislature in 1672. He married Thankful Starr, and had five sons, viz.: Benjamin, Joseph, Ebenezer, James, and John. Mr. Pierpont died Dec. 7, 1682.

James Pierpont, son of John Pierpont, was born at Roxbury, Mass., in 1659, graduated at Harvard in 1681, and was ordained at New Haven in 1686. Descended from an illustrious family, and gifted to a high degree with intellectual endowments, eloquent of speech, a graceful person, handsome features, and manners the most courtly and winning, he appears to have been from early youth too intently occupied with the mission of saving the souls of his fellow-men ever to think of himself. I suppose, of all the clergymen whose names belong to the early history of New England, Pierpont was the most lofty and pure in his aspirations, and of the most spiritual temper, with none of the sternness of Davenport, without the despondency of Wareham, and free from the impetuous moods that proved such thorns in the pillow of Hooker. His words, like the live coals from the altar in the hand of the angel, "touched and purified the lips" of those who listened to his teachings. His moral nature was so softly diffused over his church and people that they appeared to lose themselves in the absorbing element, as dark forms seem sometimes in pleasant summer days to dissolve in an atmosphere of liquid light. This James Pierpont was one of the founders of Yale College, and died in 1714. His daughter Sarah was the wife of the noted divine, Jonathan Edwards.*

One of the children of Rev. James Pierpont, D.D., was named James, who was a minister also. He was a native of Connecticut, married, and had several children, one of whom was James Pierpont, who was born in New Haven, Conn., and early in life settled in Litchfield (now Morris), Conn. He was engaged for a number of years in the manufacture of woolen goods, but later in life was farmer. He was twice married, first to Elizabeth Collins, granddaughter of Rev. Timothy Collins, of Litchfield, Conn., by whom he had the following children, viz.: Sherman, John, Elizabeth, Sarah, Abby, and James M., all of whom were born in Morris, Conn. His second wife was the widow of Rev. Mr. Crossman, of Salisbury, Conn., by whom he had one son, Leonard.

Mr. Pierpont was a member of the Congregational Church of Morris (known then as South Farms). He died in 1840, aged seventy-nine years.

Sherman Pierpont, eldest son of James Pierpont, was born in Litchfield (now Morris), June 27, 1783, married Sidney Humiston, daughter of Jesse Humiston, of Plymouth, Conn., Dec. 1, 1807. They had two children, viz., Minerva (who married Sherman P. Woodward, a farmer; she died in 1837, leaving two daughters) and George, born May 21, 1819.

Mr. Pierpont was a farmer during the earlier part of his life, but later he was engaged in the manufacture of screws at Unionville, in Hartford Co., Conn. He was an enterprising business man, of cheerful disposition, and a man universally respected. In politics he was a Whig. He was lost on Lake Erie, May 7, 1836, while on a voyage from Put-in-Bay to Sandusky City, Ohio. His wife died May 18, 1841. George Pierpont was reared on the farm till he was fourteen years of age. He received a common-school and academic education at Farmington, Conn. At eighteen years of age he commenced to work for Dan Catlin, of Litchfield, as a clerk in a dry-goods store, where he remained two years, when he came to Plymouth, Conn., and entered the store as clerk of Stephen Mitchel, and remained one year. On the 20th of April, 1840, he married Caroline E. Beach, daughter of Isaac C. Beach, of Plymouth, and began farming in Plymouth (now Thomaston), and continued two years, when he removed to South Farms (now Morris), and was engaged in the mercantile business in company with William L. Smedley, under the firm-name of Smedley & Pierpont. After one year he went to Northfield, and engaged in the same business with Samuel A. Merwin, where he remained two years, when he settled at Plainville, Hartford Co., Conn., and was a book-keeper in the employ of H. M. Welch & Co., merchants and lumber-dealers, where he remained two years. Thence he went to Forestville, Conn., where he continued to reside, and was then engaged as a merchant till 1861, when he removed to Watertown, Conn., and was engaged as a farmer. In 1865 he settled in Plymouth, Conn., where he has continued to reside.

In politics he is a staunch Republican, and as such has held various offices of trust and honor. In 1861 he was appointed United States assistant assessor, and continued to hold that position for eleven years, or until the office was abolished. In 1857 he was a member of the State Legislature from Bristol, Conn. Since his settlement in Plymouth he has been selectman, magistrate a number of years, judge of probate several years, town clerk several years. He was elected by the Legislature county commissioner in 1877, and re-elected in 1880. His wife died Jan. 18, 1874, and he married for his second wife Nellie T. Hazen, widow of Howard N. Hazen, and daughter of J. Sherman Titus, of Washington, Conn., Jan. 19, 1875. By this union two children were born, George Sherman and Flora (deceased).

Mrs. Pierpont is a member of the Congregational Church, of which Mr. Pierpont is an attendant.

LYMAN D. BALDWIN.

Lyman D. Baldwin is of English origin. His ancestors settled in New England at a very early day, and farming was their chief occupation for many generations.

The great-grandfather of Lyman D. Baldwin was named Ebenezer Baldwin, who came from old Milford and settled in the town of Plymouth, Conn. He was a farmer by occupation. He had a family of children, of whom Thaddeus Baldwin was one, who was born in Plymouth and married Thankful Alcock, and had the following children, viz.: Polly, Thankful, Hannah, Thaddeus, Lydia, Lyman, David, and Nicy, who died at twenty-one, and all the remainder of this large family lived to be old people. Thaddeus Baldwin, Sr., was a farmer. He died far advanced in life, and his wife lived to be ninety years of age. Lyman Baldwin was born near where his son, Lyman D., now resides. He married Polly Alling, of Terryville, Conn., and had four children, viz.: Hiram, Mary P., Lyman

D., and Hannah, all of whom were born on the old homestead, now in the possession of Lyman D. Mr. Baldwin was a farmer by occupation, and a dealer in lumber, which he manufactured. In politics he was a Whig, and held some minor town offices. He was a captain of State militia, and was known as Capt. Baldwin. He received a severe injury, which, after lingering seven months, caused his death, March 6, 1859. His wife died Aug. 29, 1860.

Lyman D. Baldwin, second son of Lyman and Polly Baldwin, was born on the old Baldwin homestead, on the 19th of January, 1825. He was reared on the farm, receiving such advantages for an education as the district schools of his day afforded. At nineteen he commenced teaching school winters, which he followed for seventeen years, in which he was very successful. He is a farmer by occupation, and in connection he owns and runs a grist- and saw-mill. He has been "acting school-visitor" of Plymouth for eleven years, and a member of the school board for twenty years. In politics he is a staunch Republican. He has been assessor five years, and member of the State Legislature during the years 1871–77 and 1879, serving on the committees of constitutional amendments, temperance, and education. Mr. and Mrs. Lyman D. Baldwin are worthy members of the Congregational Church at Plymouth, of which he is at the present time a deacon. He is liberal towards the church, and charitable to the poor.

On the 14th of May, 1854, he married Emily, daughter of Erastus Fenn, of Plymouth. She was born April 14, 1825, in Plymouth. Their children were as follows, viz.: an infant son; Edward F., born Dec. 16, 1859, died May 20, 1864; Minnie E., born Dec. 24, 1864, and died Dec. 6, 1875.

WILLIAM B. FENN.

William B. Fenn, third son of Aaron and Sabra Fenn, was born where he now resides, one and a quarter miles north of Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Conn., July 11, 1813. His grandfather, Aaron Fenn, Sr., settled near by the same place, and had a large family of children, viz.: Aaron, Lyman, Erastus, David, Jeremiah, Sarah, and Polly, all of whom were born here; all married and had children except Polly. Aaron Fenn, Sr., was a successful farmer for those days. He died at an advanced age; his wife survived him many years.

Aaron, Jr., eldest son of Aaron, Sr., was born in 1774, and died in the fall of 1818. He married Sabra Fenn, and had six children, viz.: Isaac, Burr, Rosetta (Mrs. Joseph S. Peck, of Burlington), Nancy R. (Mrs. William L. Gaylord), William Bennet, and Abijah, all of whom were born in the house where William B. now resides. Of this large family all grew to maturity, married, and all except Burr have children.

Aaron Fenn, Jr., was a farmer by occupation. He was a Federalist, and held some minor town offices. He taught school many years, and was successful. Mr. and Mrs. Fenn were members of the Congregational Church at Plymouth. Mrs. Fenn died July, 1867, aged eighty-eight years.

William Bennet Fenn remained at home on the farm till he was sixteen years of age, attending the district school. At sixteen years of age he commenced working for Seth Thomas, Sr., in the ornamental department of the Seth Thomas Clock Company, which he continued to follow, in connection with farming, until 1863, since which time he has confined his time to agriculture. He owns a fine farm of one hundred and fifty acres, which is in a good state of cultivation. He has been quite largely engaged in dealing in fat cattle for home market. In politics he is a Democrat, though formerly he was a Republican. He has held several town offices to the general satisfaction of his constituents. He was married to Mary, daughter of A. Y. Culver, of Burlington, Conn., June 8, 1864. She was born Nov. 28, 1839, in Burlington, Conn. They have two daughters, viz.: Rosa Bella and Mary Eloise.

AARON PECK FENN.

Aaron Peck Fenn, eldest son of Jeremiah Fenn and Polly, only daughter of Hezekiah Peck, of Woodbridge, Conn., was born in the town of Plymouth, Conn., Jan. 29, 1822. His paternal ancestor was Benjamin Fenn, an Englishman, who came to America and settled, with the New Haven Company, in New Haven in 1637. His maternal ancestor was Henry Peck, who settled at New Haven with Governor Eaton and his company in 1637. The grandfather of Aaron P. Fenn was Aaron Fenn, who was born in Milford, Conn., Dec. 1, 1746, and settled in Plymouth (then called Northbury) in 1767, about one and a quarter miles north of Plymouth Hill. The country was then an unbroken wilderness,—not a sign of any improvement near his log cabin. The wife of Aaron Fenn was Mary Bradley, of Woodbridge. Their children were as follows: Lyman, Sally, Aaron, Erastus, Polly, David, and Jeremiah, all of whom were farmers, every one of the sons receiving a farm from his father. Jeremiah Fenn married Polly Peck, and reared three sons, who grew to manhood, viz.: Aaron P., Stephen, and Horace.

Stephen was born Oct. 6, 1824, graduated at Yale College in 1849, studied theology at New Haven and Andover. He was pastor of a Congregational Church at Torringford three years, of the Congregational Church at Cornwall nine years, and of the Congregational Church in Watertown four years. He died in South Windham, Conn., in 1875.

Horace was born on the old homestead in Plymouth, Aug. 3, 1833. He has been town treasurer of Plymouth for the last twenty consecutive years, and postmaster for nineteen years. In politics a Republican.

Aaron P. Fenn was born and has always lived within a few feet of the place where his honored grandfather settled in 1767. He was educated in the public schools, and taught school several years. He has been a member of the board of education for the last twenty-five years, and for ten years acting school-visitor. He has been the leader of the choir of the Congregational Church of Plymouth for the last thirty years, and has taught singing-school in most of the adjoining towns. In politics a Republican, he has been first selectman of Plymouth for eight years, and assessor eleven years. In 1868 he was elected by the Republicans to the State Legislature. In 1880 he was appointed census enumerator. On the 5th of October, 1864, he married Florence, youngest daughter of Alva Wooding, of Bristol, Conn. Their children are Clara, Kate, Aaron W., and Florence J.

OLIVER SMITH.

Oliver Smith, son of Theophilus M. and Salome Smith, was born in Milford, Conn., Sept. 15, 1800, and settled in Plymouth with his parents in the spring of 1808. His father was a native of Milford, Conn., and was a shoemaker and farmer by occupation. He was twice married. By his first marriage he had two children,—Nathaniel and Abigail,—and by his second marriage seven children,—Miles, Theophilus, Oliver, Samuel B., Edwin, Thaddeus, and Salome, who married Chauncey Jerome, a celebrated clock-maker of Plymouth. Mr. Smith settled in Plymouth in 1808, where he continued to reside till his death, Sept. 10, 1849. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and a captain of State militia for many years. His wife died Dec. 3, 1849. Oliver Smith was reared on the farm, which honorable business has been his chief occupation. He has been engaged somewhat as a tanner, and worked for a while at joinering. He has been successful at whatever he has undertaken, and is esteemed by his neighbors as an upright, honorable man. He married Harriet, eldest daughter of Allen Bunnel, of Plymouth, Oct. 16, 1822. She was born Jan. 31, 1801. Her father was a son of Titus Bunnel, who settled in Plymouth, Conn., in an early day, and was a farmer. Allen Bunnel married Clarissa Alvord, and had five children, of whom Mrs. Smith is the eldest.

Mr. Smith had the following children, viz.: Lyman, born Feb. 5, 1824, and died in California Aug. 10, 1862; Edwin, who died young; Candace, born June 14, 1830 (married Bryon Tuttle, an enterprising business man of Plymouth, Conn., and has two children, viz.: Hattie A. and William B.); James E., born March 11, 1833 (married Angeline Wadsworth, of Hartford, Conn., and had three children, viz.: Fannie W., Edward L., and James E.). James E., Sr., died Sept. 24, 1872.

Mr. Smith is a staunch Republican in politics. He has held various town offices, such as selectman twelve years and magistrate several years, to the general satisfaction of his constituents. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have been members of the Congregational Church for more than sixty years. They have been married more than fifty-eight years, yet they are hale and hearty, and do their own work. As a citizen, husband, and father, Mr. Smith is one of the best in old Plymouth, Conn.

THIS town lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Washington, on the east by Woodbury, on the south by New Haven County, and on the west by the towns of Bridgewater and New Milford. Its surface is hilly, and the soil is fertile. It is watered by the Shepaug River, which flows southerly through the western part.

A little more than two centuries ago its territory had been unexplored by white men. Along these hills and through these valleys roamed, in all their native freedom, the red men of the forest, possessors of the soil by rights primordial. The unbroken forest had not as yet resounded with the strokes of the woodman's axe, nor the reverberating echo responded to a lisp of the white man's dialect. Nature, rude and uncultivated, supplied the daily wants of her savage children, and the necessity for physical exertion in order to obtain the necessaries of life was with them almost totally unknown. Of this wild race, which has now passed away, we know but little. They have left us no sculptured monuments inscribed with their deeds of valor, no written records which will enable us to remove the veil which conceals the past. Tradition informs us that from the top of Pulpit Rock, on the east side of the river, and a little northerly from the railroad station in this place, prominent chiefs were wont to harangue their dusky followers with rude eloquence, and stimulate them to deeds of bravery. The name of the beautiful river Shepaug, and the occasional finding of a stone axe or arrow-head, are all that now remain to remind the dwellers of to-day of the existence of a race rude and barbarous, yet possessing many ennobling traits of character.

THE FIRST EXPLORATION.

The first exploration of this region of which we have any account was early in the spring of 1673, when a party of fifteen persons, under the guidance of Capt. John Minor (a surveyor and interpreter of the Indian language), started from Stratford on a tour of exploration. They proceeded up the Pootatuck or Housatonic River as far as the mouth of the Shepaug, thence up the Shepaug to a point near Mine Hill, and proceeding eastwardly across the country, they encamped for the first night upon Good Hill. Capt. John Minor, the leader of the expedition, was a man every way calculated to take charge of that little band of pioneers who were seeking for homes in the then wild region of Northwestern Connecticut. Educated as a missionary to the Indians, he was thoroughly versed in the dialects of the different clans inhabiting these valleys, and his services to the early settlers were invaluable. From the top of Good Hill he offered up that memorable prayer that his posterity through all coming time might be a God-fearing and God-serving people, and invoked the blessing of heaven on all their undertakings. Capt. Minor and his party afterwards settled at Pomperaug, now Woodbury.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement in this section was made about the year 1713, by a man by the name of Hurlbut. He located on the spot a few rods north of the residence of the late Treat Davidson, and a little southeasterly from the house once occupied by Peace Minor, where they built a small fort for security against the Indians. This section was called "the Upper Farms." At about the same time a family of Hurds erected a house or fort on Good Hill, eastwardly from the present residence of Mr. John Minor. These forts were probably nothing more than log houses, surrounded by palisades, or logs set thickly in a vertical position, and, being thus protected from Indian invasion, they afforded security at night. About the year 1715, Lieut. Henry Castle settled a little southerly from where the school-house in the Warner's Mills District is now situated. This location was called "the Lower Farms." Each of these settlements provided itself with a cemetery, which accounts for the location of so many places of burial within the town limits. Dr. Ebenezer Warner, the progenitor of five generations of physicians, and the grandfather of Col. Seth Warner, removed here from the Pomeraug settlement, and commenced the practice of medicine. Soon after a number of Castle families settled upon what was called "the lower road."

THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

The American Revolution may justly be considered as one of the most thrilling and interesting of any of the events in our history. On the 3d of September, 1774, the people of this vicinity were alarmed by the report that British ships-of-war were cannonading Boston. The people flew to arms, and many joined in the march towards the supposed scene of conflict. Counter intelligence was received on the way, and the troops returned peaceably to their homes. The honor of the first conquest made by the united colonies during the war of the Revolution belongs chiefly to Roxbury. This was the capture of Ticonderoga, May 10, 1775, one of the most brilliant exploits of the war. Sixteen men were collected in Connecticut, who were joined by forty or fifty volunteers from Massachusetts. At Bennington, Vt., this force was augmented by nearly one hundred volunteers. Col. Ethan Allen, a native of Roxbury, was appointed commander of the expedition. Col. Seth Warner and Capt. Remember Baker, both natives of Roxbury, were appointed officers in the expedition. A part of this small force having been sent in another direction, Allen, with only eighty-three men, assaulted the fort, and captured the garrison without the loss of a man. Subsequently, Col. Seth Warner captured Crown Point, and in both these forts were found cannon and military stores, which were greatly wanted. One thousand men were afterwards sent from Connecticut to garrison these forts. The remark has often been made by aged men residing in this vicinity that, "three men, born in Roxbury, and within a stone's throw of the Shepaug River, contributed more than any others towards the achievement of our national independence, because they struck at a time when 'hearts were faint,' and when their achievements tended to give the people courage to hope for the ultimate success of the colonial arms." These three men were the heroes of Ticonderoga. Roxbury was also represented at Bunker Hill. In that memorable engagement, on the morning of June 17, 1775, was Philo Hodge, another citizen of Roxbury. He assisted in making up the scanty ammunition possessed by the Americans into the form of cartridges, and in the final charge of the British forces stood firm as a rock, clubbing them with his musket until Gen. Warren gave the signal for retreat.

Gen. Ethan Allen was born in Roxbury, Conn., Jan. 10, 1737–38. He married Mary Brownson, of Roxbury, June 23, 1762. He emigrated with the first settlers to Vermont, and was a prominent member of the social and political compacts into which the inhabitants formed themselves. The territory comprising the present State of Vermont was comprised within the New Hampshire grants; it was also granted to the Duke of York. A controversy arose relative to the title which culminated in a valorous defense on the part of the early settlers, nearly all of whom favored the New Hampshire grants. Vermont is indebted to Roxbury for the spirited defense. Ethan Allen, Seth Warner, and Remember Baker were all prominent in resisting the encroachments of New York, the Governor of which first offered twenty pounds, and afterwards fifty pounds each, for the arrest of these persons. Allen and the others offered a reward for the arrest of the officers of New York. He was bold and courageous, and even went so far as to go to Albany and take a bowl of punch in presence of his enemies on a bet. He drank the punch, and, giving a "Huzza for the Green Mountains!" departed unharmed. He was in many of the engagements of the Revolution, and at one time a prisoner. He died at Burlington, Vt., Feb. 12, 1789. His epitaph is as follows:

"The corporeal part of Gen. ETHAN ALLEN rests beneath this stone. He died the 12th day of February, 1789, aged 50 years. His spirit tried the mercies of his God, in whom he believed and strongly trusted."

Col. Seth Warner was the son of Dr. Benjamin Warner, and grandson of Dr. Ebenezer Warner, one of the first settlers of Roxbury. He was over six feet in height, and was courageous and commanding. Engaged in the controversy with New York, he was fully prepared to engage in our Revolutionary struggle. He was personally present in many of the engagements in the Northern colonies, and it has been reported that Gen. Washington relied especially upon Allen and Warner, considering them as among the most active, daring, and trustworthy of his officers. Col. Warner died in Roxbury, Dec. 26, 1784. His place of residence at that time was in a small house situated on the west corner of the highway leading northerly, near the present dwelling of Hon. H. B. Eastman. From this humble cottage his remains were carried by hand (as hearses were then unknown) to the place of burial. His funeral was attended on the 29th of December, when Rev. Mr. Canfield preached a sermon from 2 Samuel, i. 27: "How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished!" A detachment of military, consisting of thirty men, guarded his body after his decease until his burial. By a law of the colony at that time, the body of an individual could be attached after his decease and sold to satisfy his creditors. Col. Warner had expended all his estate in the war, and his family were destitute, hence the necessity of a guard to protect his body after his decease is apparent. The military fired a volley over his grave and retired. Some years since a statement appeared in the papers to the effect that Gen. Washington visited Col. Warner's widow, and relieved her from pecuniary embarrassment. This has been doubted by some, but when we take into consideration the facts that Washington visited Woodbury more than once, that Col. Warner was his especial favorite, and that he left his family in straitened circumstances, have we not reason for believing that the "Father of his Country" actually visited and relieved the family? The following inscription was on the old tablet placed over the grave of Col. Warner:

"In memory of Col. Seth Warner, Esq., who departed this life December 26th, A.D. 1784, in the forty-second year of his age.

"Triumphant leader at our armies' head,
Whose martial glory struck a panic dread,
Thy warlike deeds, engraven on this stone,
Tell future ages what a hero's done.
Full sixteen battles he did fight
For to procure his country's right.
Oh! this brave hero, he did fall
By death, who ever conquers all.
When this you see, remember me."

On the 20th of October, 1858, the remains of Col. Warner were removed from the "old burial-ground on the hill" to the Centre of Roxbury, and on the 30th of April, 1859, a monument was erected over his remains by the State of Connecticut and the citizens of Roxbury.

Capt. Remember Baker was born in Roxbury in June, 1737. He removed to Bennington, Vt., in 1764, and was engaged, with Allen and Warner, in the controversy with New York. He fell at the opening of the Revolution, near St. John's, Canada, by the hands of hostile Indians, being shot through the head. Although we can never point to fields of carnage or to victories won within our town limits, yet there are in the eastern part of Roxbury, about half a mile eastwardly from the residence of Mr. Henry H. Fenn, the remains of an old encampment, where a detachment of the army of the Revolution, the brigade of Gen. Nixon, passed the winter. It extended nearly a quarter of a mile, and a few years since mounds of earth and stone, and rude wells for obtaining water, marked the locality. But the plow, that great leveling instrument of civilization, has obliterated many traces of its existence, and only a few of the mounds, and but one of the wells, now remain. A complete list of the soldiers from this place can never be obtained. In 1776 all the able-bodied men in Western Connecticut between the ages of sixteen and sixty years, were by order of Gen. Washington marched to New York. This wholesale conscription divested the parish of Roxbury of the best portion of its male population. Just eight years after the battle of Lexington, Great Britain proposed peace and hostilities terminated.

WAR OF 1812.

In the war of 1812 many citizens of Roxbury were marched to New London for the defense of that place, which was menaced by the British. It is said that fifteen men were drafted from the infantry company here, and that a number of others volunteered. The company raised in this vicinity was marched through Roxbury on a Sunday, with drums beating and colors flying, and was quartered for the night in the Congregational church in Woodbury. Dr. Curtis Hurd, of Roxbury, went as surgeon, and was stationed for some time at New London. A complete list of the men cannot be obtained. In the war with Mexico, Roxbury, true to her former patriotism, furnished three soldiers,—Col. Justin Hodge, Hiram Curtis, and John J. Squier. In the last, the great Rebellion, the number of soldiers from this place was sixty-three. Capt. Cyrus E. Prindle and Capt. Lewis Judd each raised a company of volunteers and went to the scene of conflict. The total amount paid by the town for the last war was $16,057.25; by private individuals, about $4000.

SCHOOLS.

At an early period schools were established here. Among the teachers of those times the names of Thomas Canfield and Timothy Talman may be mentioned. Mr. Canfield was the son of the Rev. Thomas

RESIDENCE OF CHARLES R. HURD, ROXBURY CONN.

Canfield. It is said that he was very eccentric, and that he always made it a rule to punish corporeally his whole school on every Saturday afternoon, in order that those who had offended during the week might receive merited punishment. About 1834 or 1835, Mr. A. B. Campbell established a private school in this place, and later still another was established and continued for several years by the Rev. George L. Foote. The reputation of these schools was extensive, and pupils from other places were frequently found here. Many now living can attest to the thorough training received in these institutions, and the remark was frequently made by persons from abroad "that our young people, collectively, were better educated than those of other localities." Roxbury has within its limits seven public schools. Roxbury continued to be a parish, attached to the town of Woodbury, until October, 1796, when, after a long and arduous struggle, it was incorporated as a separate town. The ancient name of Roxbury was Shepaug, a Mohegan word signifying the Rocky River. On the west of the Shepaug River is Mine Hill, celebrated for its large deposits of spathic iron, for its chalybeate springs, and for its stone quarries, which furnish a large quantity of excellent stone for various purposes. A railroad was constructed through the Shepaug valley in 1870 and 1871. A telegraph was soon after constructed contiguous to the railroad. In the easterly part of Roxbury is Jack's Brook, so named from a native African who committed suicide upon its banks. He pined for his native land, and was thoughtlessly told by others that when he died he would return to his beloved Guinea. He was buried by the highway, southwesterly from Pulford's Swamp. Several years since an ancient relic, representing a human figure, of sculptured stone, was found in the northeastern part of Roxbury. With a superstitious fear that it might be worshiped, it was placed low down in the wall of a well, where it now remains.

PROMINENT CITIZENS, PHYSICIANS, Etc.

Gen. Ephraim Hinman, a native of Southbury, removed to Roxbury in 1784. He erected the large house now occupied by the Rev. Mr. Jones and Mr. Gillett. He was a man of great eccentricity of character, and many of his original expressions are still quoted by the people of Roxbury. Hon. Royal R. Hinman, for many years Secretary of the State of Connecticut, was his son. He was an attorney, and practiced his profession here for nearly twenty years.

Hon. Nathan Smith was born in Roxbury in 1770. As an attorney he became eminent in his profession, holding many important places of trust. In May, 1832, he was elected a senator in the Congress of the United States, and died some three years, while holding the position.

Hon. Truman Smith was a native of Roxbury. Prominent among the leading men of that day, he was for several terms elected a member of Congress. In 1849 he was elected a senator of the United States for the term of six years.

Hon. John Sanford was a native of Roxbury. He removed to Amsterdam, N. Y.; he was elected a member of Congress from the State of New York. Mr. Sanford died some years since.

Hon. Henry Booth was the son of Ely Booth, of Roxbury. He graduated at Yale College, and maintained for some time a law-school in Pennsylvania. He removed to Chicago, and was elected a judge of the Superior Court of Illinois, which office he now holds.

Lieut. Thomas Weller was a recruiting officer in the war of 1812. He was killed in an altercation with Archibald W. Knapp, May 16, 1814.

Charles K. Hodge was the son of Chauncey Hodge, of Roxbury. He was a young man of great promise, and was appointed a cadet at the United States Military Academy at West Point. He died suddenly, while on a visit to his parents, at Roxbury, on the 31st of August, 1839, aged nineteen years, nine months, and four days. His classmates erected a monument to his memory in the cemetery here, on one panel of which is this inscription:

"Called from us in the buoyancy of youth and the brightness of hope, earth's cares had not chilled, nor life's vicissitudes changed, the warm current of his feelings."

The following clergymen were natives of Roxbury: Revs. Charles Thomas, Burtis Judd, David Davidson, Charles Norton, Charles Bradley.

The graduates from Roxbury were Hon. Truman Smith, Hon. Nathan Smith, Phineas Smith, Henry Booth, Charles S. Minor, Rev. David B. Davidson, Hervey M. Booth, George W. Warner, Rev. Charles F. Bradley, Naaman Shepard.

State Senators: Hon. Nehemiah C. Sanford, Hon. Frederick W. Lathrop, Hon. Herman B. Eastman, Hon. Frederick Hurlbut.

The following physicians were residents of Roxbury: Drs. Ebenezer Warner, Azariah Eastman, Silas Castle, Josiah R. Eastman, Azariah Shipman, William Blakeman, Curtiss Hurd, Henry Whittlesey, —— Reed, Theodore Hurd, William Williams, Amos Williams, Philander Stewart, Myron Downs, Aaron W. Fenn.

William Hull, professor of elocution in Pennsylvania, also was a resident of Roxbury.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This church was organized on the 22d of August, 1744, when the first minister, the Rev. Thomas Canfield, was installed. At that time twenty-seven persons subscribed to the covenant. In 1732 or 1733 the first Congregational church was erected, near the old graveyard, on the hill a little southwesterly from the present residence of Mr. R. B. Patterson. This building being small, in 1746 another was erected on the same location. The year 1795 dates the removal from the hill, and the erection of another church in the present Centre of Roxbury. Many now living can remember its lofty spire, and the two huge stone horse-blocks near by for the accommodation of the worshipers, many of whom came to church on horseback. The present church edifice was erected in 1838. On a weather-beaten stone standing near the centre of the old burial-ground is this inscription:

"Here lies the relics of the Rev. Tho. Canfield, who died Jan. 16, A.D. 1795, in the 75th year of his age, and in the 51st of his ministry.

"O, what is man, poor feeble man,
Whose life is but a narrow span.

"Here lies, intombed in earth and dust,
The Reverend, meek, the mild and just."

The following clergymen succeeded Mr. Canfield in the ministry, with the date of ordination and dismission of each:

Rev. Zephaniah Swift, ordained July 5, 1795; dismissed April 1, 1812.

Rev. Fosdic Harrison, ordained June 2, 1813; dismissed June 30, 1835.

Rev. Austin Isham, ordained June 5, 1839; dismissed June 1, 1863.

Rev. Oliver S. Dean, ordained July 6, 1864; dismissed Dec. 17, 1867.

The Rev. David E. Jones, the present pastor, was ordained and installed, June 21, 1871.

The present deacons are Dr. A. W. Fenn and Sheldon Camp. Dr. Fenn is also superintendent of the Sunday-school, and has been since 1860.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Episcopal Church in Roxbury is probably the oldest in the county of Litchfield, dating its organization as far back as the year 1740, a period earlier than that of any other parish of which we have the written records. It was organized by the Rev. Mr. Beach, of Newtown, and was for a considerable time the only parish in the town of Woodbury, of which, at that time, Roxbury formed a part. The first church edifice was erected on the hill, contiguous to the old cemetery, in 1763. At the time the Rev. Thomas Davies, a missionary for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts, preached in Litchfield County. He occupied this pulpit one-fifth of the time. At that time there were twenty-eight communicants. A new church edifice was subsequently erected in the present Centre of Roxbury, which was rebuilt in 1861. The present rector is Rev. William C. Cooley.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH.

A Baptist Church, of which certain citizens of Roxbury composed a part, was constituted at South Britain, Jan. 21, 1790. That part of the church composed of people from other places soon withdrew, leaving the people of Roxbury in an organization by themselves. On the 30th of December, 1800, the society voted to build a meeting-house twenty-five feet by thirty, with ten-feet posts. This church stood a little northwesterly from the dwelling-house of Mr. George W. Smith, and was used until 1825, when it was turned into a school-house, reserving the right to hold meetings in it. Rev. Mr. Fuller was ordained May 18, 1803, at the meeting-house in Roxbury. Seventy members were admitted to the church previous to Mr. Fuller's ordination, and forty-one since.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

There have been a few Methodists in Roxbury for the last forty-five years, with at different periods occasional meetings, but it is believed that no church was organized until about the year 1847, when, under the ministry of the Rev. George B. Way, a small society was formed, which continued in existence for a few years, enjoying meanwhile the ministry of Rev. Messrs. Wells, Redford, Curr, and others. Efforts were made at this time to build a church edifice, but for some reason were unsuccessful, and the society became practically extinct. In the spring of 1862 the Rev. Spencer H. Bray commenced preaching once in four weeks, in the house now occupied by Rev. Mr. Jones. In the following autumn Mr. Sheldon Leavenworth purchased the building now occupied by Mr. H. W. Trowbridge as a wagon-shop, and the upper room was fitted up for meetings, which were held regularly in this place until the present church edifice was erected in 1867. The society at its organization consisted of fifty-five members. The present pastor is Rev. Sylvester Smith.

For the accommodation of the Roman Catholics residing here, mass is celebrated once in four weeks by Father Gleason, of New Milford.

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

The first vote of the society in relation to its organization as a town was taken Oct. 2, 1786, but it was not until 1796 that its incorporation was effected. The struggle was long and severe, as Woodbury was vigorous in its opposition.

LIST OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following is a list of representatives from 1797 to 1881:

Phineas Smith, 1797; Abraham Bronson, 1798–99, 1805; Ephraim Hinman, 1798, 1800–9; John Trowbridge, 1800–2, 1811, 1843; Elihu Canfield, 1799, 1802, 1804, 1806, 1808–10, 1812–13; Abner Wakelee, 1803; David Hammond, 1803; Wells Judson, 1804; Adna Mallory, 1805; Gideon Leavenworth, 1806; Amos Squires, 1807; Samuel Weller, 1807; D. L. Painter, 1808; E. Burritt, 1811; Asahel Bacon, 1812, 1816; Miles Bishop, 1813; Royal R. Hinman, 1814, 1825, 1831; Silas Minor, 1815–17, 1821; Josiah R. Eastman, 1818, 1823, 1833; Eli M. Smith, 1819, 1827; Samuel Patterson, 1820; Stephen Sanford, 1822, 1835; Isaac B. Hawley, 1824; Elisha Patterson, 1817–18, 1826; Eli M. Smith, 1827; Z. W. Weller, 1828; David Brothwell, 1829–30, 1836; Wm. Pierce, 1832; David Weller, 1834; Went Leavenworth, 1837; H. L. Randall, 1838, 1866; Charles Beardsley, 1839; Daniel Botsford, 1840; A. Ward, 1841; Chauncey Hodge, 1842; I. G. Botsford, 1844; George Hurlbut, 1845; E. A. Weller, 1846; Charles Thomas, 1847; E. Beardsley, 1848; B. S. Preston, 1849; Stephen Sanford, 1850; Myron Downs, 1851; Lacey Higgin, 1852; A. S. Hodge, 1853; Harvey Thomas, 1854; J. T. Davidson, 1855; Charles Burrows, 1856, 1867; H. B. Eastman, 1857; Eli Sperry, 1858; David Pierce, 1859; Chas. Beardsley, 1860; George W. Morris, 1861; Elliot Beardsley, 1862, 1869; E. E. Prindle, 1863; Albert L. Hodge, 1864–65; George

A. Northrup, 1868; C. A. Beers, 1870; C. E. Trowbridge, 1871; C. E. Prindle, 1872; George W. Hurlbut, 1873; Henry S. Hurlbut, 1874; Albert L. Hodge, 1875; Orlando Lewis, 1876; Merritt P. Beers, 1877; George Thomas, 1878; John S. Smith, 1879; Samuel Thomas, 1880; John H. Leavenworth, 1881.

JUDGES OF PROBATE.

The Roxbury Probate District was set off from the Woodbury District in 1842. The following is a list of its judges:

Harmon B. Eastman, 1842–45; Aaron W. Fenn, 1845–46; Henry L. Randall, 1846–47; Aaron W. Fenn, 1847–49; H. B. Eastman, 1849–51; Myron Downs, 1851, 1857; Charles Beardsley, 1857–60; H. B. Eastman, 1860–78; Lyman P. Eastman, 1878, present incumbent.

MILITARY RECORD.

The following is a list of those who enlisted from this town during the late Rebellion:

William Allen, Seth H. Addis, Edson Bradley, Ira S. Bradley, F. W. Beach, Harmon Beers, Jeremiah P. Bronson, Charles F. Booth, Henry A. Booth, Oliver Camp, Daniel Carrans, Jeremiah Donovan, David Dickson, Henry Deacons, R. L. Fenn, James Glenn, R. L. Hurlbut, Charles H. Hurlbut, James B. Holland, R. E. Hubbard, John D. Hull, Capt. Lewis Judd, Charles Jackson, George Lake, David Lewis, Israel Lucas, David, Frank, and Peter Miller, Lieut. Wm. E. Morriss, Michael Madigan, Fred May, John McKenney, Henry Meirs, C. F. Nicholson, John Neeson, John M. Oviatt, James O'Neil, Capt. C. E. Prindle, Lewis Roche, John Rueck, Henry Smidt, John J. Squire, Jeremiah Sullivan, Henry Smith, Wm. H. Smith, Fred Thompson, James Percy, James Tracey, C. F. Terrell, Albert Vanderbeck, Peter Wessels, John Williams, John Wright, Charles Wright, John and Henry Wells, William and George R. Walker, George W. and Seth Warner, Botsford Whitehead, and John Woodruff.

The total amount paid by the town for the war was $16,057.25; by individuals, $4000.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

CHARLES BEARDSLEY.

Charles Beardsley, the subject of this sketch, was born in Roxbury, Conn., Aug. 24, 1807. He was the eldest son of Hunting Beardsley, of Roxbury, who married Clarinda Hurd, daughter of Curtiss Hurd, Esq., of Roxbury. He received a good common-school education, and for two seasons attended a private school taught by the Rev. Fosdic Harrison, of Roxbury. At the age of eighteen he was apprenticed to his uncle, Heman Beardsley, of Roxbury, to learn the trade of a carpenter and joiner. After he became twenty-one he continued with his uncle for a time, and then commenced business for himself, continuing in the same to the present time. He married Jerusha Ann, daughter of Capt. Ely Booth, of Roxbury, Jan. 26, 1831. She died April 14, 1862, leaving no children. Married, second, Eliza, widow of the late Samuel Smith, Esq., of South Britain, Conn., Sept. 24, 1863.

Soon after attaining his majority he became a member of the Congregational society of Roxbury, and has ever been active in its support, and zealous for its prosperity. In 1837, the old meeting-house becoming dilapidated, the society decided to build anew. Mr. Beardsley, being a builder, was called upon to take an active part in the building, was appointed one of the building committee, and employed to go forward and build the house, commencing in the autumn of 1837, and in 1838 he completed it to the satisfaction of all interested. In 1874, thirty-six years from its completion, it became necessary to make some general repairs and remodel the interior. Mr. Beardsley gave liberally for the object, was again appointed building committee, and employed to assist in the work. He has always been liberal in his charities, as well as prudent and economical in his business. Mr. Beardsley united with the Congregational Church in Roxbury, in the month of May, 1843, and has continued an active member up to the present time, a period of thirty-seven years. He says his religious life is far from being perfect, but the writer would say that, from his own observation, and from public sentiment, we are convinced that there are many—yea, very many—whose religious attainments are decidedly of a lower order, and whose lives as Christians do not as nearly reach the standard of perfection as Mr. Beardsley's.

He early manifested an active interest in public affairs, and before he was thirty years of age was elected one of the selectmen, his colleague being James Trowbridge, Esq. As an evidence of the confidence reposed in him by the people of Roxbury, the records show that he has been elected, and has served, as selectman for the period of thirty-two years.

He has also held the office of justice of the peace more than a quarter of a century, and was holding said office on his seventieth birthday, when the constitution of the State debarred his further action. He was appointed judge of probate three years in succession, but, feeling unqualified to judiciously perform the duties of the office, he requested that some other person be appointed to fill his place, and H. B. Eastman, Esq., was appointed. He was elected town treasurer of Roxbury in October, 1865, and has held the office to the present time, A.D. 1881, a period of sixteen years.

In 1839 he was elected to represent the town in the General Assembly of the State, and was appointed one of the committee on contested electors. In 1860 he was again elected, and for a second time represented the town in the General Assembly. During the war of the Rebellion he was holding the office of selectman, a position of much responsibility, on account of the excitement, turmoil, and many new enactments at special sessions of the Legislature, rendering it necessary that all papers relating to town-meetings should be legally drawn, in order to avoid litigation. Any one examining the records of the town will be satisfied that the drawing up of warnings, votes, and resolutions during that period will compare favorably, for legal ability and talent, with those of any other town in the State; and no man in the town had more responsibility resting upon him during the war, and no one did more to secure the greatest good of the whole community, than Mr. Beardsley. He also took an active part in the building of the Shepaug Railroad, subscribing liberally for its stock, according to his means, and in order that it might be successful, used his influence, as far as proper, to induce others to favor the project, conscientiously believing that, although pecuniarily it might prove a failure, yet it certainly would be a great convenience to the people of Roxbury, and time has fully demonstrated that the views which he entertained were correct.

GENEALOGY OF THE BEARDSLEY FAMILY.*

William Beardsley, aged thirty years (by trade a mason), with his wife Mary, aged twenty-six, and daughter Mary, aged four years, and sons John, two years, and Joseph, six months, embarked from London for Massachusetts in the ship "Planter," in April, 1635. At the settlement of Stratford, Conn., in 1639, he was among the first settlers, and one of the original proprietors. He was a deputy of the General Court of Connecticut in 1645, and for seven annual sessions from 1649. He is mentioned in a committee of that body as "Goodman Beardsley," a title at that time frequently applied to persons of solid worth and respectability. In his "Early Puritan Settlers of Connecticut," Hon. R. R. Hinman says, "This has been a respectable family from the first settlement at Stratford."

* By Rev. E. E. Beardsley, D D.

Children of William: Mary, born in England in 1631; John, born in England in 1633; Joseph, born in England in 1634; Samuel, born in Massachusetts in 1638; Sarah, born in Stratford in 1641; Hannah, born in Stratford; Daniel, born in Stratford in 1644.

Joseph, second son of William, had Joseph, Jr., born June 10, 1666; John, born Nov. 1, 1668; Hannah, born April 13, 1671; Elizabeth, Thomas, Ephraim, Jonathan, Josiah.

Josiah married Mary Whittemore, Dec. 24, 1712. Children: Katharine, born 1713; Hannah, born February, 1715; Josiah, born December, 1716; Samuel, born June, 1719; Israel, born March, 1721; Benjamin, born July, 1723, died 1726; Isaac Judson, born October, 1725; Benjamin, born February, 1727 or 1728.

Benjamin, son of Josiah, had Whittemore, Thomas, born Nov. 28, 1764; Dunning, Benjamin, Mary, Nancy, Ephraim.

Thomas, son of Benjamin, married Mabel, daughter of Nathan Thompson, of Stratford. He was a private of cavalry during the war of the Revolution. In 1776 was stationed in New York City; was in the battle on Long Island, Aug. 27, 1776, and in the engagement at Danbury, Conn., April, 1777; was honorably discharged, and received a pension for life of fifty-four dollars and sixteen cents annually. In 1800 he purchased the old homestead, on the west side of Good Hill, in Roxbury, now occupied by his grandson, Minott L. Beardsley, and removed with his family from Stratford. He was appointed selectman, and held other positions of trust and responsibility, and died March 28, 1842, aged eighty-seven years.

Children of Thomas Beardsley: Hannah, born 1777; Abby, born 1778; Aner, born 1780; Hunting, born 1783; Ezekiel, born 1785; Heman, born 1788; Nathan, born 1790.

Hunting married Clarinda, daughter of Curtiss Hurd, Esq., of Roxbury. Children: Charles, Julia Antoinette, Minerva, Grandison.

THE town of Salisbury is located in the northwest corner of the county and State, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Berkshire Co., Mass., on the east by Canaan and North Canaan, on the south by Sharon, and on the west by the counties of Columbia and Dutchess, in the State of New York. The surface of the town is broken, consisting of elevated hills and deep valleys. The valleys are generally limestone, while on the hills granite predominates.

COL. GEORGE HURLBUT.

The subject of this sketch was born at Roxbury, Litchfield Co., on the 14th of October, 1809. His family was one of the earliest colonial stocks that came to Connecticut. Early in life he learned the hatter's trade of Col. William Odell, of Washington.

On the 7th of January, 1833, he married Miss Thalia A. Merwin, of Brookfield. Their children were Caroline S., born Oct. 22, 1833; Thalia M., born Feb. 9, 1836; Emily E., born May 7, 1839; George W., born March 10, 1841; Samuel W., born Dec. 29, 1843; William H., born March 11, 1846; Charles W., born June 8, 1849; Adelaide A., born June 12, 1851; and Frank W., born Sept. 20, 1853.

Col. Hurlbut was engaged in the manufacture of hats in his native town from 1840 to 1860, and during that time acquired a handsome property, which, by good management, has grown into a fine estate.

In 1845 he was elected a member of the Legislature of Connecticut. He was appointed postmaster at Roxbury on the election of President Lincoln, and has held that office until the present time.

Col. Hurlbut has lived a very quiet life, and has kept himself within the sphere which he originally marked out,—to live on terms of charity with all men, to help the needy, and, so far as lay in his power, to do no wrong, nor suffer any to be done. It is believed that few men in Litchfield County will leave behind them a more unsullied record for honesty and purity of character. Certainly no one ever exhibited a more steadfast fidelity to his friends.

THE INDIANS.

Upon the advent of the white settlers many of the aborigines still remained, clustered in the valleys along the streams and lakes, but the fearless independence and noble bearing of the Indian character were gone. They had been too long within the reach of the enervating influence of the whites, and were peaceable, harmless, and servile.

"There seems to be much plausibility," says the late Judge Church, "in the conjecture that the race of Indians found here by our fathers was not the original tenantry of this region, but had come in as wandering tribes or bands from other forests, driven, perhaps, by wars to take the place of an earlier and more noble people. The tradition is, with much probability, authenticated that King Philip, the last of New England's proud sachems, and the relentless foe of the Puritans, extended his ravages on this side of Connecticut River, and that he burned, or otherwise broke up, some settlements of English and friendly Indians in the present town of Simsbury, and particularly an Indian village there called Weatogue, the name of which still remains; and these Indians, flying from Philip, settled down upon the banks of the Housatonic, within the present limits of Salisbury and Canaan, giving the name of their former home to their new residence."

Hubbard, in his "History of Indian Wars," affirms it that the Indians as far west as Hudson's or Dutch River were concerned in Philip's wars, and Bancroft, speaking of the Indians of New England, says, "The clans that disappeared from the ancient hunting-grounds did not always become extinct: they often migrated to the North and West. The country between the banks of the Connecticut and the Hudson was possessed by independent villages of the Mohegans, kindred with the Manhattans, whose few smokes once rose amidst the forests of York Island." The Indians of these villages spoke the same language, the Mohegan or Pequod dialect, and which was, with perhaps some variation, the language common to the Indians of New England. The Indians here were probably connected in some relation with the Stockbridge or Moheaconnuc tribe, and perhaps made part of the tribes or clans lower down the river, at Kent and New Milford, and connected in amicable relations with the Indians who acknowledged the sachem Wyantenock as their common protector. This chief resided near the Great Falls, in New Milford. I have myself, when a child, conversed with old men who could recollect the remnant of tribes considerably populous in Weatogue, near the former residence of the White family, and on the northern margin of Wonunscopomuc Lake (now called Furnace Pond), and also on the eastern shore of Indian Pond, in Sharon.

There was, upon the first arrival of the Dutch settlers here, a well-defined Indian trail or path leading from the Stockbridge tribe, along the valley of the Housatonic, through Weatogue, to the Scaticoke settlement of Indians in Kent. Apple-trees had sprung up, and were growing along that path through its whole extent at unequal distances, accurately enough marking its course. Many of these were standing when I was a youth, and some, I believe, remain to this day. Tradition has pointed out the spot, on the easterly side of Wonunscopomuc Lake, upon which the Indians held their councils and pow-wows. It is in the grove, a little west of the road leading from Furnace Village to Town Hill, and near a tall pine-tree, now standing, overlooking the lake. Frequently, when I have stood upon that interesting spot, I have attempted to call up before me the groups of savage men who congregated on that ground. I have, in fancy, there looked upon the grave, stern face of the counselor, the fierce visage of the impatient warrior in his listening attitude, and the encircling group of women and children around. It was, and still is, a plat of romantic beauty, well fitted to call forth the innate religious feeling of those men of nature. This spot was frequently visited by wandering Indians in after-days, and the stately pine which then marked the place was long known to the white inhabitants as the Indian tree.

Although the Indians of this neighborhood were friendly, yet such was the well-known treachery of the Indian character, and so frequent were the causes of disturbance among the Northern and Western tribes, and so dreadful were the tales of savage cruelty, that the early white settlers were cautious in their intercourse with them, and were constantly on their guard against surprise and attack. A supply of ammunition was always on hand, furnished at the expense of the town, forts or block-houses were erected for defense and refuge, and the house first erected for the minister, and which was improved as the house of religious worship, was constructed with a view to defense, and with port-holes, through which a fire of musketry could be kept up against assailing Indians. Our fathers assembled to worship God with arms in their hands; unlike us, their children, who have none to molest or make us afraid.

"One of these block-houses was erected at the junction of the roads opposite the late dwelling-house of Nathaniel Church, at Weatogue, and its stone foundations have been visible in my day. Another, a little southerly from the present dwelling-house of William P. Russell, Esq., the first location of the Dutcher family, nearly then inclosed by deep coves and dense thickets; and still another, on the northerly side of Wonunscopomuc Lake, not far from the present residence of Newman Holley, Esq." (1841.)

There is a tradition that a large body of Indians were defeated in the northerly portion of the town before the settlement by the whites. In the year 1676, and just before the death of the proud chief King Philip, Maj. Talcott, of the Connecticut forces, pursued, from Westfield towards Albany, a flying body of Indians, who, after their defeat in King Philip's war, were flying for safety among the warlike and powerful Mohawks. These fugitives, under the command of sachem of Winnimissett, or Brookfield, were surprised on the Housatonic River, at the fording-place, a short distance south of the State line, and about fifty of their number, including their sachem, were either killed or taken prisoners.

There were several Indian burying-grounds in this town.

"One," says Judge Church, in his address, in 1841, "was on the eastern side of the north pond, another on the east side of the road leading through Weatogue, and a little southerly from the old burying-yard on my late father's farm, and still another on the bank of the Housatonic, on the old White farm. This probably belonged to an earlier race than the Indians found here by our fathers. The annual encroachment of the river by the spring freshets upon the banks frequently exposed the bones of the buried Indians, which upon exposure became dust."

THE FIRST PURCHASE OF LANDS.

The first purchase of the Indians of lands lying within the present bounds of this town was made by William White and Abraham Vandusen, Dutch emigrants from the province of New York, supposing this section to lie within the boundaries of that province. This tract was located about two miles south of the falls.

The second purchase was made in January, 1720, by John Dikeman and Lawrence Knickerbocker, of Livingston's Manor, New York, of a tract lying on the west side of the Housatonic River, "beginning at the Upper Falls, south of Wootauk (meaning Weatogue); thence, running along the side of a hill called Wootowanche, now called Sugar Hill, two miles to the land purchased of the Indians by White and Vandusen; thence, with a straight line, to a mile above the falls of a brook called Wachocastinork (probably the falls at Lime Rock); thence south three miles, thence east to the forks, etc."

Before the charter of the town was granted, Thomas Lamb, in behalf of the Governor and Company of the Connecticut colony, purchased certain Indian rights of land in the present town of Sharon, and in Weatogue, "for the consideration of eighty pounds and divers victuals and clothes." This deed was signed by the marks of many Indians, who described themselves as of the Indian nation belonging to Muttapacuck. The name of one of the signers of this deed was Tocconuc. Soon afterwards the Indians complained to the General Court that they had been defrauded by Lamb in this purchase, and a committee was appointed to investigate the alleged causes of complaint. Lamb afterwards received a grant of land from the colony for his services and expenses in the negotiation.

Thomas Knowles and Andrew Hinman, of Woodbury, about the same time, made a very extensive Indian purchase, including, as they probably supposed, nearly all the feasible land of the town, described in their deed as lying on the river, six miles in length north and south, and four miles wide east and west. These grants, however, were afterwards all relinquished to the colony, the Indian's right being considered then, as now, only as a right of occupancy, not of sale, the right of pre-emption being solely in the colony. All these grantees, however, as a compensation for their expenses, received grants of land from the colony. After the charter of the town was granted, and as late as 1742, the Indians made claim to lands here; and in October of that year Daniel Edwards, of New Haven, was appointed to purchase of the Indians two miles square, at the northeast corner of the town, and to deliver to one Toccunus two blankets to resign his claim.

THE FIRST GRANT.

The territory now including the towns of Salisbury, Sharon, Canaan, and Norfolk, before the survey of these towns was made, was known as the "Western Lands." The first grant made of lands in this town by the General Court was made to William Gaylord, of New Milford. This grant embraced nearly the whole of the Weatogue intervals. Many other grants were subsequently made before the sale of the town to proprietors ———; among these were Woodbridge's, Lamb's, Fitch's, Knickerbacor's, Bissell's, Dutcher's, Wadsworth's, Whiting's, Hinman's, Stiles', Lewis', Newtons', Knowles', and perhaps some others.

The General Court made no grants of land here to Yale College, although in all the other towns embraced within the "Northwestern Lands" a grant of three hundred acres in each was made to that institution; but as early as 1730 the trustees of the college received a deed of six hundred and twenty-eight acres of land from Rev. John Fisk and James Leavens, of Killingly, in exchange for land of equal value in that town. This land was located southeasterly of the centre of the town.

Fisk and Leavins had received from the colony a grant of this land in October, 1729.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

Settlements of white people commenced within the present limits of this town several years before the public sale of the lands. Three Dutch families from Livingston's Manor, in the province of New York, commenced the settlement in Weatogue. Their lands were purchased of William Gaylord and Stephen Noble, of New Milford, by deeds dated Aug. 29, 1720. These were the families of William White, Abraham Vandusen, and Ruluff Dutcher. They probably took possession of their lands the same season. White was by birth an Englishman, but had long before been connected with the Dutch inhabitants of the New York province. He married a Dutch wife, and had reared a family. He located himself upon a farm subsequently owned by Nathaniel Church, and a few rods north of the small stream which flows eastwardly across the highway to the cove below. White had several sons, who settled around him,—George, on the west side of the road, opposite his father's house; Benjamin, a little south of the brook; Joshua, still farther south, and near the river; and Isaac, who resided with his father. Benjamin was a man of considerable repute. He afterwards returned to the province of New York, where he died. The other sons of William White lived and died here.

The Knickerbacor family came into the town soon after White and others. John Knickerbacor occupied the Knickerbacor grant at the mouth of Salmon Kill River. Cornelius Knickerbacor, a brother of John, settled at Lakeville about the same time that John came here. Cornelius Knickerbacor's was for some time the only white family in that section of the town. He afterwards removed to Sharon.

Thomas Lamb was the first New England man who settled in this town. He emigrated from Springfield, but the precise time of his settlement here cannot be ascertained. He received several grants of land before the sale of the town. He located a tract of fifty acres at Lime Rock, upon a grant made to a Sergt. Tibbals for services in the Pequod war. He received another grant of one hundred acres on the northeast side of the Furnace pond, and after the sale of the town he became the owner of four and one-half rights. He secured the water-privileges at Lime Rock, at the outlet of the Furnace pond, at the falls west of the Centre, as well as the outlet of the pond on the mountain. He was the distinguished speculator of his day. His place of residence was probably first at Lime Rock, but he afterwards resided on the hill southeasterly of Lakeville. He left the town about the year 1746, and became a mariner, and resided successively in New Jersey, Maryland, and North Carolina.

Mr. Caleb Woodworth was the first white man who settled with a family in the neighborhood of the Ore Hill. He came into the town as early as 1738. Thomas Baylis settled at the Centre as early as 1740. John Weldon came into the town in 1740, and Isaac Vosburgh in 1742. Both located themselves in the north part of the town, near where the late Col. Elijah Stanton lived and died. Samuel Beebe settled near the Upper or Little Falls of the Housatonic about the year 1740. Within one year after the incorporation of the town there were forty-five tax-paying inhabitants here. The ore-bed, the iron-works of Thomas Lamb, at Lime Rock, and the various water-privileges discovered here, probably invited emigrants, though the appearance of the land was at first uninviting: the hills appeared barren, and with little wood to cover them,—the frequent Indian fires had nearly destroyed the timber,—and the valleys were covered with a tall and useless grass called bent-grass.

EARLY HIGHWAYS.

"Previous to the act of incorporation," says Judge Church, "there were no public roads here, yet there were some well-defined paths. The most prominent among these was the one leading from Dutcher's, in Weatogue, and following, as I suppose, the general direction of the present highway, to Furnace Village, and thence along nearly to the Ore Hill, and down through Sharon valley to Sackett's farm, in Dover, nearly west of the southwest corner of the town of Sharon. Another path led from the Ore Hill, and in the vicinity of what we call the Under Mountain road, to the iron-works at Ousatonic, now called Great Barrington. This was called the Ore path, and iron ore, in leathern bags, was transported on horses over this road from the Ore Hill to the forge. Another path connected the Ore Hill with Lamb's iron-works, at Lime Rock, and another extended from Lamb's works to the fording-place, about one-half mile below the present Falls bridge."

In the division of the town by the proprietors an allowance for roads was made over nearly all the lots, but none were actually located by them, unless it was the six-rod highway over the first division lots, across Town Hill. The first recorded survey of a highway was made Nov. 6, 1744, from Gabriel Dutcher's, in the northeast section of the town, to Benjamin White's; another, the same year, from Cornelius Knickerbacor's, at the Furnace, to Samuel Bellow's, at the eastern foot of Smith's Hill; another, in 1746, from White's, in Weatogue, westerly to the foot of the hill, called by us Frink's Hill. This road has been discontinued. Another, the same year, from Furnace Village to the colony line; and another, the same year, from the centre easterly to the foot of the mountain near Chauncey Reed's, the late, and thence southerly to Lamb's iron-works. These were among the first legally established highways.

"The first bridge erected across the Housatonic River was the Falls bridge, for many years known as Burrall's bridge. This bridge was built about the year 1744. Dutcher's bridge was erected in 1760. A bridge at the south part of the town, about one-half mile below the present bridge, was erected about the year 1790. It was built by funds raised by a lottery granted by the General Assembly, and was long known as the Lottery bridge. It was discontinued upon the opening of the present road, called the Johnston road, leading from the late Nathaniel Green's to South Canaan, in the year 1808. Before the erection of these bridges, access to this town was difficult from the east. There were but few fording-places upon the river, and these could only be improved when the river was very low, in the summer or fall. Indeed, I believe no more than one fording-place was improved, which was about one-half mile below the Falls bridge. The river could be forded with some difficulty near William Sardam's. Canoes were used for the transportation of persons, and I have not been able to learn whether any ferries were at any time established; I believe there were none. Horses and cattle could cross the river only by swimming.

"In investigating some titles, some years ago, of lands in Weatogue, I found the prominent description of one corner of a tract to be 'Christopher's canoe-place.' I infer, therefore, that this was a well-known crossing, and near to the present residence of Ruloff Dutcher, in Canaan, whose ancestor was Christopher Dutcher.

"Perhaps there is not an ancient highway in the town which can now be accurately defined. We can depend only upon the practical location, or the dedication of the highways by usage, as the legal evidence of their existence and extent.

"Rev. Mr. Crossman, in his sermon, says that the charter of this town was granted in 1745, and signed by Governor Law. This is an error. Mr. Crossman has confounded the charter of the town with the deed of confirmation, which deed was executed in May, 1745, and signed by Governor Law.

"This town was originally attached to the county of New Haven, and remained a part of that county until the county of Litchfield was constituted in 1751."

THE PIONEERS.

Thomas Newcomb resided here before the sale of the town, and was a large land-holder, and a prominent inhabitant. He presided at the first town-meeting, and was the first selectman chosen in the town. His place of residence was on the road leading from Lime Rock to Town Hill.

Cyrenus Newcomb, the first town clerk, was the son of Thomas Newcomb.

The Chipman family was numerous and highly respectable. Thomas Chipman, the ancestor, and who was the first officiating justice of the peace in the town, emigrated from Barnstable, Mass., to Groton, in this State, and from Groton he came here in 1741. He settled near Lamb's iron-works, and was a proprietor in the saw-mill and grist-mill there. He was a member of the first church organized here. He was appointed an associate judge of this county, but died in the summer of 1752, at the age of sixty-five, before he entered upon the duties of the office. His sons were Thomas, John, Samuel, Amos, and Jonathan. Thomas, the eldest son, was one of the first elected members of Assembly. He died a bachelor here at an advanced age. John also died in this town. The other sons removed to Vermont before the Revolution.

Capt. Samuel Beebe was the first treasurer of the town. He emigrated from Litchfield; was a large land-holder in the eastern part of the town.

Benajah Williams was a selectman in 1743; he removed from Goshen here in 1742, and settled near the Furnace pond, and was one of the first eleven members of the church.

John Smith was one of the first elected selectmen, and a gentleman of considerable estate and respectability. He removed from the town, and settled at Beekman's patent, in the province of New York, about the year 1746.

Thomas Austin, the first constable of the town, was a bloomer at Lamb's iron-works, and resided in that neighborhood, and was an ancestor of the late Hon. Aaron Austin, of New Hartford.

Nathaniel Skinner was a selectman in 1743, and one of the first members of the church. He was the son of Nathaniel Skinner, Esq., of Sharon.

Deacon John Hutchinson came here from Lebanon in 1743. He was for several years one of the justices of the peace in the town. He was the third town clerk, and was elected in 1747, and held the office thirty-one years, and was succeeded in the office by his son, Asa Hutchinson, who held the same office thirty-eight years. Deacon Hutchinson was one of the first deacons of the church here.

Josiah Stoddard emigrated from Litchfield in 1743. He was the second town clerk, and for several years a member of the General Assembly. He was the father of Major Luther Stoddard, of the Revolutionary army, and ancestor of Hon. Josiah J. Johnston, senator of the United States from Louisiana.

Samuel Moore came originally from Southold, on Long Island, to Litchfield, and from thence to this town in 1743. He settled at the foot of Barack-Matiff, near Deacon Hutchinson. He was for many years treasurer of the town.

The Landon family in England was located in Nottinghamshire, on the Welsh border. That branch of it which settled here came from Southold, on Long Island, to Litchfield, and settled about one-half mile north of the village. James and John Landon, brothers, came to this town in 1749. James settled in the south part of the town, near the small pond called by the Indians Non-Cook. He was one of the first magistrates in the town, and for many years a member of the General Assembly. His descendants were numerous. John Landon settled on Sugar Hill, in the east part of the town. He married a granddaughter of William White, the first settler.

The family of Camps was an early and respectable one. Deacon Hezekiah Camp, the ancestor, came from New Haven, now East Haven, in 1746. The sons of Deacon Camp were Hezekiah, Abial, Luke, John, and Samuel.

The Chapin family for many years was numerous in this town and highly respectable. The brothers Charles and Reuben Chapin emigrated from Enfield in 1746.

Of the Binghams it was once said that they and their kindred constituted half of the population in the northern section of the town. Jabez, Silas, and Daniel Bingham came from Windham in 1750. They were the sons of Jabez Bingham, formerly of Lebanon.

John, Nathaniel, and Sylvanus Everts, from Guilford, settled in the vicinity of the Furnace pond in 1749. John was the first representative in the General Assembly.

Thomas Chittenden, the first Governor of Vermont, and Capt. Timothy Chittenden, sons of Ebenezer Chittenden, of Guilford, settled here in 1750.

Noah Strong was the ancestor of the Strong family, once numerous here, but now nearly gone. He removed from Coventry in 1747, and settled on Town Hill.

Joseph Bird removed from Litchfield in 1748.

Lot Norton (1st) was a native of Farmington, the son of Thomas Norton, one of the original proprietors of the town. This gentleman was long a respectable magistrate, and one of the most prominent of the early inhabitants.

EARLY SCHOOLS.

In New England the church and the school were equal objects of care, and, although our Salisbury ancestors professed as their first object a desire to be gathered into church estate, yet this estate was understood by them to include the school as a consequence.

In 1743, and before the settlement of a minister, the town voted to procure a schoolmaster for one year, and directed a school to be kept, under the superintendence of a committee, three months at Weatogue, four months near Cornelius Knickerbacor's, at Lakeville, and three months in the Hollow or Lime Rock. Robert Waln was probably the first schoolmaster in the town, but his services were confined to the Dutch population at Weatogue. In December, 1743, the town ordered the building of two log school-houses, one at Weatogue, and one at Lime Rock. Dr. Wilson, or Williams, was the first schoolmaster employed under the authority of the town.

In January, 1745, five school squadrons, as they were then called, were established, and the public-school money was distributed to them, in proportion to the number of scholars in each. At that time money for the support of the schools was raised by a general tax upon the inhabitants of the town, and also from the rents of the school lands.

In 1743, Thomas Newcomb, Benajah Williams, Thomas Lamb, Benjamin White, and Samuel Bellows were appointed a committee to lease the lands on the school right for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, taking security for the avails.

In 1766 the number of scholars receiving instruction in the common schools was four hundred and eighty. Reading, writing, arithmetic, and the Assembly's catechism constituted the full course of school instruction for many years.

In the winter of 1804 the town was highly excited by a collision between the school-visitors and the instructors, occasioned, as the instructors claimed, by an unwarrantable interference with the religious opinions of some of them. Many of the schoolmasters were dismissed from their schools, and their school-houses closed a while. But harmony was restored again, and no evil abiding consequences resulted.*

LIBRARY.

Before the Revolutionary war successful measures were adopted to establish a public library in the town. Mr. Richard Smith, an English gentleman of respectability, was a proprietor of the Furnace, and felt a deep interest in the welfare of the town. Through his agency, and from funds raised by several public-spirited individuals a library, consisting of about two hundred volumes, was procured from London, and received the name of "Smith Library."

In January, 1803, Mr. Caleb Bingham, of Boston, a native of this town, influenced by a generous regard for the youth here, presented a small library of one hundred and fifty volumes to the town, for the use of the young, and appointed a board of trustees for its management, consisting of Rev. Joseph W. Crossman, Samuel Lee, Luther Holley, Asa Hutchinson, Peter Farnam, Phineas Chapin, Timothy Chittenden, Elisha Sterling, Lot Norton, Jr., and Benajah Bingham. These trustees had power to fill vacancies in their own board. At that time, when books especially useful to youth were comparatively scarce, this donation was of peculiar value and gratefully received by the town. The library received the name of the "Bingham Library for Youth." It was a small beginning, but it infused into the youthful population a new impulse, and a taste for reading, before unknown, was soon discoverable among the young. The books were sought for and read with avidity. The town from time to time, by grants from its treasury, has contributed to its enlargement, and generous individuals too have made to it valuable additions. Among the benefactors of this cherished institution have been the late Professor Averill, of Union College, and the late Dr. Caleb Ticknor, of New York, a nephew of its founder, and both natives of this town, and who, in common with many others, have acknowledged their obligations to this library for much of their success and distinction in after-life. The generous and unwearied efforts of our respected friend, Mr. John Whittlesey, in aid of the "Bingham Library for Youth" will be long remembered. The present number of well-selected volumes is about five hundred.

In 1810 there were received by subscribers through the post-office in this town only eighteen newspapers weekly.

The following persons have received academical literary degrees from American colleges while inhabitants of this town, viz., Hon. Nathaniel Chipman, James Hutchinson, Samuel Camp, Jonathan Lee (2d), Elisha Lee, Chauncey Lee, Gen. Peter B. Porter,

* For present condition of schools, see General History.

Caleb Bingham, Thomas Fitch, William L. Strong, Myron Holley, Horace Holley, Samuel Church, Thomas G. Waterman, Jonathan Lee (3d), Orville L. Holley, Isaac Bird, Lot Norton, Jr., John M. Sterling, John M. Holley, Jr., Eli Reed, Graham H. Chapin, George A. Calhoun, Chester Averill, Albert E. Church, Caleb Ticknor, Roger Averill, George B. Dutcher, Edward Hollister, Gurdon Spencer, Charles A. Lee, Edmund Reed, Churchill Coffing, Joseph Pettee, Amos B. Beach, Josiah Turner, William G. The State of Vermont owes something to the men of Salisbury for its present position among the States of this Union. As early as 1761, John Everts, the same gentleman who was our first representative to the General Court of this colony, procured from Governor Wentworth, of New Hampshire, the charters or grants of the towns of Middlebury, New Haven, and Salisbury, in the former State. The first proprietors of Middlebury were almost all of them inhabitants of this town; and these proprietors held their first meeting at the house of Landlord Everts, in Salisbury, and elected Matthias Kelsey, Ebenezer Hanchett, and James Nichols to be the first selectmen of Middlebury.

Some of the most energetic and resolute of the Green Mountain Boys emigrated from this town; and among these boys were Thomas Chittenden, Ethan Allen, Ira Allen, and Jonas Galusha. Thomas Chittenden was Governor of Vermont, with the exception of one year, from 1778 to 1797. In the early disputes between the Province or State of New York and the settlers of the New Hampshire grants, no man was more active than Ethan Allen. He defied the admonitions and the threats of the Governor of New York, contained in a proclamation addressed to the settlers, and says, in a manifesto signed by himself and others, on the 5th day of April, 1774, "We flatter ourselves we can muster as good a regiment of marksmen and scalpers as America can afford, and we give the gentlemen (of New York) an invitation to come and view the dexterity of our regiment," etc. Ira Allen was for many years the treasurer, and Jonas Galusha the Governor, of Vermont.

The history of the Western Reserve, in Ohio, is familiar with us. That tract of country was surveyed into townships by Augustus Porter, son of our distinguished townsman, Col. Joshua Porter, assisted by other gentlemen, among whom was our late excellent and much-lamented friend, John M. Holley, Esq. Among the original purchasers and proprietors of the towns of Canfield and Johnston, in Trumbull Co., Ohio, and some other towns in that reserve, were James Johnston, Daniel Johnston, Nathaniel Church, David Waterman, and Timothy Chittenden, of this town. Many of the earliest settlers of the town of Canfield were our inhabitants, viz., Champion Minard, James Doud, Aaron Collar, William Chapman, Ziba Loveland, Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, Ensign Church, and some others.

There has been a manufacturing interest in Salisbury from the beginning, and yet we have been, preeminently, an agricultural people. There have been but few places in which the agricultural facilities have been more diversified than this, although the committee which first explored our territory had some doubts whether it could sustain a sufficient population to support a minister.

Formerly there were not more than three well-established mercantile concerns in the town,—Holley's, at the Furnace; Moore's, at the Centre; and Chapin's, at Camp's Forge.

IRON INTERESTS.

The iron ore, the forests, and the frequent water-power found here at a very early period introduced the manufacture of iron, and we have had but few other manufactories. The first forge was erected by Thomas Lamb, in the Hollow, as it was formerly called, now called Lime Rock, before the charter of the town, and before its sale at Hartford, in 1738. Lamb's iron-works are referred to as existing in the earliest conveyances. They were probably erected as early as 1734. Soon afterwards a grist-mill and saw-mill were built just below, upon the same fall of water, by Lamb and others. The Lime Rock forge and furnace of Messrs. Canfield & Robbins now occupy the sites of these ancient works. Iron ore was first taken from the Hendricks ore bed, now called the Davis ore bed, to supply Lamb's iron-works. Lamb was a proprietor of that ore bed. These works have subsequently been occupied by Thomas Starr, Martin Hoffman, Joel Harvey, Thomas Chipman, Jr., Ebenezer Hanchett, Thomas Austin, and James Johnston, and for many years were known only as Johnston's forge.

FIRST BLAST-FURNACE.

Thomas Lamb, who owned the outlet of the Furnace Pond, conveyed it in 1748 to Benajah Williams, Josiah Stoddard, and William Spencer. These persons soon after built a forge, near where the remains of the old furnace now are. Afterwards, ——— Moorhouse, Caleb Smith, John Dean, John Pell, Gideon Skinner, Joseph Jones, Eliphalet Owen, John Cobb, and Leonard Owen were at different periods its proprietors. It was called Owen's iron works. In 1762, Leonard Owen conveyed this property to John Haseltine, Samuel Forbes, and Ethan Allen. These gentlemen erected the first blast-furnace ever built in this State, as I suppose. Charles and George Caldwell, of Hartford, purchased this property in 1763, and they conveyed it to Richard Smith, of Boston, in 1768.

Thomas Lamb was proprietor of the water privilege on the mountain, since called Riga, and had control of the stream flowing therefrom. Very early he erected a saw-mill and grist-mill on that stream, about one-half mile northwest of the Centre village, at or near the falls upon which Clark's mills now stand,—as early as 1744. This property was soon afterwards owned by Joel Harvey and Joseph Parke, and from them has been transmitted through various proprietors to the present owners.

Nathaniel Jewell, in 1753, built a grist-mill on the northern line of the town, near Sage's present works.

No business was done at the great falls of the Housatonic before the erection of the paper-mill, in 1783. That manufactory was established by the late Samuel Forbes, Esq., and Nathaniel Church, and for several years was an active and prosperous concern. Paper was then made exclusively of linen rags, and by the slow process of the hand mould. A saw-mill and fulling-mill were erected there about the same time. An extensive lumber business was prosecuted. Pine timber, in large quantities and of excellent quality, was by the spring freshets annually drifted down the river from the towns above.

About the year 1797, Charles Loveland erected an extensive manufactory of gun-barrels there. The entire works, except the saw-mill, were destroyed by fire in February, 1800, and never rebuilt. For several years thereafter no active business was done in that neighborhood.

Abner or Peter Woodin erected a forge at Mount Riga about the year 1781. Daniel Ball succeeded, and the forge was for many years known as Ball's forge. Seth King and John Kelsey commenced building a furnace there about 1806, but were not able to complete it. The entire property in the forge and furnace came into the hands of Coffing, Holly & Pettee in the year 1810, who the same year finished the furnace, and for many years prosecuted a very extensive and profitable business. Pig iron, anchors, screws, and various kinds of manufactured iron were made there. This establishment, including the works at Lime Rock, was incorporated in 1828, by the name of the Salisbury Iron Company.

The furnace near the Falls bridge was built by Leman Bradley in 1812. It was burnt in 1814, and immediately rebuilt. The refining forge there was built by Canfield, Sterling & Co., in ———, and the neighborhood, about that time, received the name of Falls Village. The iron-works there and at Lime Rock are now the property of Messrs. Canfield & Robbins.

The iron-works at the upper or little falls of the Housatonic were built in 1833, by Eddy Ames & Kinsley, but have since that time been much extended.

The ore-bed in the west part of the town, called by way of distinction the Old Ore Hill, is a tract of one hundred acres, originally granted by the General Court in October, 1731, to be laid out by Daniel Bissell, of Windsor. It was soon after surveyed and located by Ezekiel Ashley and John Pell. The descendants of Ashley are at this day proprietors of the ore-bed. From this mine the most abundant supplies of ore have been furnished. For many years the mineral was easily obtained and with little excavation.

The Chatfield ore-bed, so called from its original proprietor, Philip Chatfield, lies in the vicinity of the old ore-bed.

Hendrick's ore-bed, now called the Davis Hill, was at a very early period owned by Thomas Lamb, the Salisbury speculator, and ore was taken from it to supply his forge at Lime Rock. This ore-bed is situated about a mile southwest of the Centre village. The Bingham ore-bed, since called the Scoville ore-bed, lies about three miles northwest of the Centre village. Still farther north is Camp's or Chapin's ore-bed. In the extreme southwest corner of the town is the Bradley ore-bed. On the Sharon side of the town line ore in considerable quantities is taken from this mine. The ore from our mines yields from forty to forty-five per cent. of iron. The ore is of the brown hematite variety.

Copperas, or sulphate of iron, has been found on Barackmatiff Hill, and at a place called Samuel Moore's mine, on Sugar Hill.

ATTORNEYS.

For many years Salisbury had the reputation of affording a successful field for gentlemen of the legal profession. This was not the result of a litigious spirit in the people, nor of any unusual propensity of the lawyers, but rather of the active and business-like enterprise of the population. The first lawyer who settled here was Jabez Swift, Esq., a native of Kent. Upon the breaking out of the war of the Revolution he joined the army in Boston, and there died. The late Adonijah Strong, Esq., was a pupil of Mr. Swift, and succeeded him in practice. Col. Strong was a man of vigorous mind; had a large practice, but possessed none of the graces of eloquence. For many years he was an efficient magistrate, and a member of the General Assembly. He died in February, 1813.

Joseph Canfield, Esq., commenced his professional studies with Col. Strong, and finished them at the Litchfield law-school. He commenced his practice at Furnace Village, about the year 1789. Mr. Canfield was a gentleman of graceful manners and good talents; he died in September, 1803, having been several times a member of the Assembly.

Gen. Elisha Sterling was a graduate of Yale College, and a member of the law-school at Litchfield. He commenced his professional life in this town in 1791, and he prosecuted his profession with great industry and success until the year 1830, when he retired to his farm at Furnace Village, where he died, Dec. 3, 1836. Gen. Sterling was a well-read lawyer, and possessed a discriminating mind. Twice he represented the Seventeenth Senatorial District in the senate of this State, and for several years represented this town in the General Assembly. He was many years a magistrate, nine years a judge of probate for the district of Sharon, and for a considerable period State's attorney for this county. The name of no other citizen appears more frequently upon our town and society records than his.

Hon. Martin Strong was the eldest son of Col. Adonijah Strong. He commenced the practice of law here in 1801. Several years before his death he exchanged the legal profession for agricultural pursuits. Judge Strong was for many years one of our most active magistrates, and an associate judge of the County Court. He had been a member of both branches of our Legislature. The following also commenced business in this town, and subsequently removed to other places: Chauncey Lee, Myron Holley, Hon. Ansel Sterling, Ezra Jewell, John M. Sterling, Edward Rockwell, Churchill Coffing, and Norton J. Buell.

PHYSICIANS.

The first physician was Dr. Solomon Williams, who emigrated from Lebanon. He died in the year 1757, and in the same year was succeeded by Dr. Joshua Porter, from the same place. Dr. Porter graduated at Yale College in 1754. His place of residence was at Furnace Village, on the farm originally occupied by Cornelius Knickerbacor. For half a century his professional practice was very extensive, and he was esteemed as one of the most skillful physicians of his day. But his profession did not engross his whole attention. He was much in public life, both civil and military. For twenty years he was a selectman, a justice of the peace thirty-five years, and associate judge of the County Court thirteen years, chief justice of the same court sixteen years, judge of probate for the district of Sharon thirty-seven years. In the year 1764 he was first elected a member of the Assembly, and was a member of that body fifty-one stated sessions.

Col. Porter was not attached to the Continental army in the Revolutionary war, but was an efficient militia officer. As a colonel of mititia, he was in service with his regiment at Peekskill, and again at Saratoga, at the capture of Burgoyne. This venerable and much-esteemed gentlman died on the 2d day of April, 1825, aged ninety-five years.

Dr. Lemuel Wheeler commenced practice here about the year 1765. He too was a public man, and several times a member of the General Assembly.

Dr. Samuel Cowdray settled near Chapinville; subsequently he was attached to the navy of the United States. He was a surgeon on board of the unfortunate frigate "Philadelphia," when that vessel was captured by the Barbary pirates, and he was a long time detained as a slave in Tripoli, and until reclaimed by his government.

Other physicians have been Drs. Jonathan Fitch, Darius Stoddard, John Johnston, William Wheeler, Samuel Lee, William Walton, the elder, William Walton (2d), John P. Walton, Samuel Rockwell, Joshua Porter, Jr., James R. Dodge, Abiram Peet, Benajah Ticknor, now of the United States navy, Perry Pratt, John J. Catlin, Caleb Tickor, and Moses A. Lee.

EPIDEMIC.

The geographical features of the town truly indicate a healthful climate. For the last twenty years the annual average number of deaths has been from thirty to thirty-five, or about one and a half per cent. of our population. Yet, in common with most other healthful localities, we have been occasionally visited with fatal pestilence. About the year 1784 a fever of uncommon mortality raged in the north part of the town, and in the vicinity of the ponds, called then the pond fever, and supposed to have been produced by the unusual accumulation of water in the ponds. Many names, before frequent and prominent upon our civil and ecclesiastical records, ceased thereafter to be any more seen. Again, in the years 1812 and 1813, a fever, called, from its general prevalence, The Epidemic, swept over this and some neighboring towns with fearful mortality, uncontrolled by medical skill. During the first of these years there were about eighty deaths, and in the latter nearly seventy, and chiefly from that disease. Indeed, all other maladies seem to have fled before it, and to have given place, that it might rage and conquer alone. It was the pneumonia typhoides of the books, or a typhoid pleurisy.

Samuel Moore was the first land-surveyor in the town, and was the eldest son of the first emigrant here of that name,—Sergt. Samuel Moore. He was a distinguished mathematician of his time, and was the author of a valuable and extensively-circulated treatise upon surveying, which I believe was the first American work on that branch of mathematical science. He died in the year 1810, aged seventy-three years.

PROMINENT CITIZENS.*

"It is a just occasion of pride in any community that it has sent forth from its numbers to other regions men of eminence and usefulness; and perhaps this town has furnished other sections of our confederacy its full proportion of distinguished men. Hon. Thomas Chittenden, though a native of Guilford, was for many years a resident here, and represented this town many times in the General Assembly. He emigrated to Vermont before the war of the Revolution, and was Governor of that State for many years. His son, Hon. Martin Chittenden, also Governor of Vermont, and a member of Congress from that State, was born here.

"Col. Ethan Allen, the hero of Ticonderoga, resided in this town some years before his emigration to Vermont, and was one of the original proprietors of the old furnace.

* This list is taken from Judge Church's address. For additional names see Governor A. H. Holley's address elsewhere in this work.

"Hon. Jonas Galusha was one of our citizens. He was the son of Jacob Galusha, who removed from Norwich to this town in 1771, and settled on the north side of the north pond. Jonas Galusha, for several years, was a very popular Governor of Vermont.

"Hon. Nathaniel Chipman, late chief justice of the State of Vermont, and a distinguished member of the senate of the United States, was born and educated here. He was the son of Samuel Chipman.

"Hon. Daniel Chipman, youngest brother of Judge Chipman, for many years one of the most prominent members of the Vermont bar, was also a native of this town.

"Hon. Ambrose Spencer, late chief justice of the State of New York, was born here on the 13th of December, 1765. He was the son of Philip Spencer, Esq., whose place of residence was near the western extremity of the town. The character of Judge Spencer is extensively known as one of the most accomplished members of the judiciary department of the State of New York.

"Gen. Peter B. Porter was the youngest son of Col. Joshua Porter. Soon after he completed his collegiate and professional studies, he, together with his elder brother, Hon. Augustus Porter, emigrated to the county of Ontario, in the State of New York. Gen. Porter was a member of Congress, and very early laid before that body the great national importance of the Erie Canal. In the late war, 1812, with England, he took a conspicuous part, as commander of the New York volunteers, upon the northern frontier. He was actively engaged against the enemy at the celebrated sortie from Fort Erie and other important occasions. During a part of the administration of John Q. Adams as President of the United States, Gen. Porter was Secretary of War.

"Hon. Augustus Porter, second son of Col. Porter, was equally useful and respected in civil life.

"Hon. Josiah S. Johnston, late of Louisiana, and a much valued member of the senate of the United States, was the son of Dr. John Johnston, of this town. He removed, when a child, with his father to Kentucky. He fell a victim to a fatal explosion of a steamboat on the Mississippi River.

"Among the members of Congress from other States who were born or reared in this town appear the names of Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, of Ohio, and Hon. Graham H. Chapin, Charles Johnston, and Theron R. Strong, of New York.

"Rev. Horace Holley, D.D., a distinguished scholar and eloquent divine, president of the Transylvania University, was the son of the late Luther Holley.

"Rev. Isaac Bird, a devoted missionary in Asia, a descendant of Joseph Bird, Esq., one of the earliest settlers and first magistrates, was born and educated here.

"Myron Holley and Orville L. Holley, Esqs., sons of the late Luther Holley, distinguished as scholars and gentlemen, and by various responsible employments in public life, were nurtured and educated, if not born, here.

"Chester Averill, late Professor of Chemistry in Union College, who died in 1836, just as he began to give certain promise of extensive usefulness and high literary distinction. He was the son of Mr. Nathaniel P. Averill, of this town.

"As no colony tax was assessed and collected of the people of this town before the year 1756, so we were not, until that time, entitled to a representation in the Colony Legislature. Previously, however, the town, on special occasions, appointed and paid special agents to the General Court.

"In 1743, Samuel Bellows was appointed an agent to attend the Assembly at its October session for that year to get a land tax for the town.

"In the following October, Benajah Williams and Thomas Newcomb were appointed agents to get an explanation of the tax of the previous year.

"In January, 1745, Samuel Bellows was appointed an agent to procure a patent, or deed of confirmation, of the lands in the town.

"In February, 1747, Thomas Chipman, Esq., was appointed an agent to procure a location of a site for the meeting-house."

MARKET-PLACE.

In laying out the first division lots a green and market-place was reserved in Town Hill, but was never appropriated to that use. In 1785, however, the General Assembly established a public market upon the meeting-house green, which had been originally designed for a parade, and the selectmen were empowered to make by-laws and regulations for the market, and to design its limits. Twice in each year it was made lawful for all merchants, handicraftsmen, dealers, and voters to resort to the market with their vendible commodities. Such fairs were then common.

THE FIRST POST-OFFICE.

Although this town had for many years previously been a centre of importance, it was not until 1792 that the first post-office was established. This was at Lakeville, then called Furnace Village, and Peter Farnum was the postmaster. There are now five offices, as follows: Salisbury, Donald P. Warner, P. M.; Lakeville, Thos. L. Norton, P. M.; Ore Hill, Homer A. Gibbs, P. M.; Chapinville, John G. Landon, P. M.; and Lime Rock, James H. Barnum, P. M.

PIONEER MILLS.

The first privilege for a saw-mill was reserved on the Great Falls of the Fellkill, and also "at Succonup's brook, near the place where the same runs out of the southermost of two large ponds, lying almost close together." The first of these locations was near the Lime Rock furnace, and the latter a short distance below Chapinville. Thomas Lamb, however, soon after procured a privilege of erecting a saw-mill at Lime Rock.

A grist-mill was built at the Upper or Little Falls of the Housatonic as early as 1742 by Capt. Samuel Beebe, and in 1746, John Corbit erected a grist-mill in the southwestern part of the town. In 1748, Jacob Bacon and Daniel Park built a grist-mill and forge on Succunop's brook, in Chapinville.

The first bridge erected across the Housatonic River was the Falls bridge, for many years known as Burrall's bridge, in 1744. Dutcher's bridge was erected in 1760, and one in the southern part of the town in 1790. The latter was built by funds raised by a lottery, and was long known as the Lottery bridge. It was discontinued in 1808. Previous to the erection of these bridges access to the town from the east was very difficult, as there were but few fording-places upon the river, and these could only be improved when the river was very low, in the summer or fall.

"An incident worthy of relation occurred at the Great Falls of the Housatonic in the spring freshet of 1837. Two of the men employed by Mr. Ames at his iron-works attempted to cross the river in a boat; such was the force of the current that they were precipitated over the cataract. One of them, David O'Neal, an Irish laborer, was killed; the other, Walter Holley, almost miraculously escaped with little injury.

"The late Dr. Dwight, in one of his volumes, speaks of the moving rocks in the North or Washington pond, in this town. There are several rocks, and one of considerable size, near the southern margin of that pond, which appear to have been propelled by some powerful force towards the shore, leaving deep trenches or gutters behind, and accumulating mud and gravel before them. Such appearances alone would not persuade me, uncorroborated by the credible testimony of observers, that these rocks had changed position. But I am compelled to yield my assent upon evidence of the actual observation of men of respectability, whose means of knowledge have been accurate. I am not sure that these are unusual phenomena; and perhaps they are the result of the immense pressure of the ice upon the rocks, connected with what may be the peculiar state of the earth or bottom upon which they rest."

INDIAN NAMES.

Housatonic signifies "Over the Mountain," or "the River of the Hill." The Furnace pond was called Wonumscopomuc. The two lakes in the northeastern part of the town (Twin Lakes) were called Washniee and Washining. The long pond in the southeast part of the town was called Wononpakook. The stream flowing through the Centre village was called Wachocastinook. The stream flowing through the pond at Chapinville was called Succunop's. The eastern range of hills, parallel with the Housatonic, were called Wotowanchu.

THE REVOLUTION.

"In the war of the Revolution this town was not inactive. Few towns in the State of only equal population contributed more efficient means in the prosecution of that eventful struggle. An embarrassment severely felt at the commencement of the war was the want of a cavalry force. Sheldon's regiment was the first body of cavalry of considerable efficiency which joined the army. That regiment was raised in this town and this vicinity. Col. Elisha Sheldon, Lieut.-Col. Samuel Blagden, and Maj. Luther Stoddard were attached to it.

"The services of Sheldon's regiment are frequently alluded to by writers of American history. In 1780 malicious charges were preferred against Col. Sheldon; he was tried by a court-martial, of which Col. Hazen was president, at Fishkill, on the 25th day of October of that year. He was acquitted ' with honor and full approbation,' and his accuser, Dr. Darius Stoddard, of this town, severely censured.

"The enthusiasm and excitement occasioned by the aggressive acts of the British Parliament can hardly be appreciated by us of this generation. There was an electric spark communicated to the extremes of the colonies, producing a simultaneous action everywhere. In this town a meeting was called on the 22d day of August, 1774, to deliberate upon the threatened state of the colonies. Spirited resolutions were adopted, accompanied by a preamble of the following tenor:

"After reading and deliberating upon the several acts and laws, denouncing dangerous exertions of Parliamentary power, as well as a partial, absurd, and self-confuted spirit of punitive malevolence, particularly leveled against the Province of the Massachusetts Bay; and being deeply impressed with the visible declension of the virtue and rectitude of British administration, which threaten insupportable convulsions to the whole empire; and willing, as far as in us lies, to ward off the impending ruin, and revive the expiring liberties of the country; We resolve," &c.

The resolutions which followed denounced the acts of Parliament, especially the Boston Port Bill; approved the proposed call of a General Congress, and pledged the contributions of the inhabitants for the relief of their suffering brethren of Boston "from their plentiful harvest;" and concluded by appointing a committee to take up subscriptions, consisting of Hezekiah Fitch, Esq., Capt. Elisha Sheldon, Luke Camp, Lot Norton, and Samuel Lane; and also constituting Col. Joshua Porter, Hezekiah Fitch, Abial Camp, Dr. Lemuel Wheeler, and Josiah Stoddard a committee of correspondence.

On the 5th day of the succeeding December the town expressed its acquiescence in the then recent resolutions of the Congress, and appointed Col. Joshua Porter, Luke Camp, Lieut. Nathaniel Buell, Lot Norton, Dr. Samuel Lee, Capt. James Bird, John Camp, Samuel Lane, William Beebe, Hezekiah Fitch, and Capt. Elisha Sheldon a committee to carry them into effect. At the next meeting of the town, a committee of inspection was appointed, and a committee of the same character was constituted annually during the war. The duties of this committee were various, such as to look well to disaffected persons, to approve of substitutes for drafted men, to inspect all provisions intended for the army, etc.

The spirit of the people did not waste itself in resolutions and the appointment of patriotic committees. What was expressed was intended, and was carried out in calmer moments by continual and efficient action. Every requisition of the General Assembly was complied with,—men were raised, supplies were furnished on all occasions when the emergency of the war demanded them, and to an extent much beyond the requisitions of the General Assembly.

On the 7th day of April, 1777, Col. Nathaniel Buell, Lot Norton, Abial Camp, Daniel Bingham, and George Marsh were appointed a committee to encourage enlistments into the Continental army, and to furnish the families of such as should enlist with necessaries during their absence. A similar committee was annually appointed while the war continued.

On the 6th day of January, 1778, the town, by resolution, approved the Articles of Confederation of the Thirteen United States, and instructed their representatives in the General Assembly to confer upon the delegates from this State, in Congress, sufficient authority to ratify them.

In the spring of 1780 the General Assembly ordered the raising of five regiments for the Continental service, and in June of the same year the town levied a tax of threepence on the pound, to be paid to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers who should enlist into the regiments. In January following the town voted to hire six men to serve for one year, and appointed Luke Camp, Joshua Stanton, Timothy Chittenden, Nathaniel Buell, Lot Norton, and Capt. James Watrous a committee for that purpose.

In June, 1781, Governor Trumbull issued his proclamation, offering a bounty to encourage enlistments. This town forthwith authorized a grant of three pounds to every non-commissioned officer and private who should enlist here for every three months' service, in addition to the offer made by the Governor; and previously, in February, 1781, Col. Nathaniel Buell and the late Samuel Lee, Esq., had been constituted a committee to hire the enlistment of four men for the defense of the Western frontiers. And again, in February, 1782, six men, in addition, were raised, with an extra pay of twenty shillings each per month, and a pair of shoes for each man, upon his marching to join the army. And on many subsequent occasions necessary supplies for destitute soldiers serving in the Continental army were raised here and forwarded to the suffering troops.

Yes, men, as well as money and supplies, were found here, ready to serve the country and the cause, both in the army and at home. Many of the most prominent, wealthy, and influential citizens joined the troops, either in the militia or Continental service; and young men, sons of our best inhabitants, sought no exemption, but left cheerfully the endearments of home in exchange for the privations of the camp and the dangers of the battle-field.

Among the officers were Cols. Elisha Sheldon, Samuel Blagden, Joshua Porter, and Nathaniel Buell, Majs. Luther Stoddard and John Chipman, Capts. Roger Moore, James Claghorne, James Holmes, Joshua Stanton, Nathaniel Everts, Timothy Chittenden, James Watrous, Jesse Sawyer, Samuel Lane, and Ebenezer Fletcher, and Lieuts. Nathaniel Chipman, Richard Bignall, Adonijah Strong, Daniel Brinsmaid, and James Skinner.

Messrs. John Russell, Joseph Hollister, and Archibald Campbell enlisted and served before they became residents of this town. Mr. Russell was a sergeant of artillery in the New York Line of the army, and was for some time attached to the military family of the commander-in-chief. Mr. Hollister was a sergeant from Glastonbury, and commanded a guard upon the Hudson River, attached to Gen. Putnam's command, which captured a British agent, supposed to be a messenger with dispatches from Gen. Burgoyne to Gen. Clinton.*

It is not to be denied that among the inhabitants were some who doubted the propriety of opposition to the demands of the mother-country, and who believed themselves restrained by their oaths of allegiance from taking part in the contest, or who considered armed opposition as premature and hopeless. But none here gave aid to the enemy, nor did any oppose the efforts of the Whigs.

At length, in 1783, the battle ceased, the victory was achieved, and the war-worn soldier returned to his home. The gratitude of the people was expressed in rejoicings and thanksgivings. On the 6th of May, 1783, this town appropriated thirty pounds of powder "to congratulate the Continental soldiers belonging to this town upon their return and discharge." A day of rejoicing was set apart, and Col. Nathaniel Buell was appointed "to address the returned Continentals, and present them with the thanks of the town for their generous and spirited exertions in the cause of their country."

In May, 1783, the people, in town-meeting, gave what they called instructions to their representatives in the General Assembly. They declared it "to be their indispensable duty to use their influence, and make the most reasonable efforts, for the security both of their interests and rights, and early to have a stop put to injustice and oppression." They say, moreover, that "we are sensible, when you come to act in your public characters, you will be under the obligation and solemnity of an oath, and we mean not to desire or request anything that shall infringe on your conscience or judgment." The true relation between the representative and the constituent is here expressed.

The town proceeded to recommend the following particulars:

1. That our public accounts may be settled, so that a reasonable account may be rendered of the expenditure of such vast sums of money as have been granted and collected in this State since the commencement of the late war.

2. That effectual care be taken to prevent such persons as have been known to be inimical to these States from being admitted to be free citizens of this State.

3. That the recommendation of Congress respecting pay to the officers of the army for a number of years after the war be wholly rejected as unjust and oppressive upon the people.

4. That a suitable address be made to Congress to suppress, prevent, and remove such placemen as hold trifling offices with large and unreasonable salaries, which must ultimately be drawn from the people.

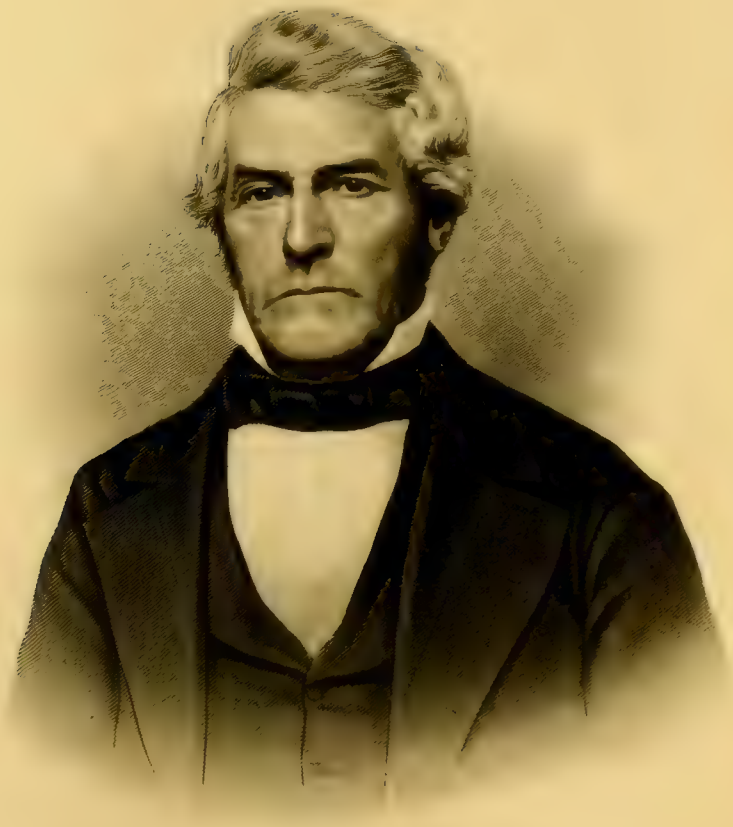
These instructions were addressed to Hezekiah Fitch and Elisha Fitch, Esqs., who were at that time our representatives in the General Assembly. They breathe the true spirit. They recognize no submission to cliques or caucuses,—the tyrants of the present day; and they dare to rebuke even the Congress itself.

Elisha Fitch, Esq., for many years had been a distinguished and popular man, and frequently represented the town in the General Assembly. In the spring session of 1787 he made a very active opposition to the proposed call of a convention to revise the Articles of Confederation. This opposition destroyed his popularity, and extinguished him as a public man. The Articles of Confederation were revised, and the present Constitution of the United States was recommended to the people of the respective States for adoption. The convention of this State assembled to deliberate upon the Constitution at Hartford in January, 1788. The delegates who represented this town in that convention were Hezekiah Fitch and Joshua Porter, Esqs., both of whom voted for the adoption of the Constitution.

The Revolutionary struggle had imposed impoverishing burdens upon the country. The times in prospect were gloomy, and the hearts of many were desponding. An immense debt had been contracted, commerce annihilated, the currency depreciated, the public faith distrusted. In this state of affairs a town-meeting was called on the 11th day of March, 1785, by which it was

"Resolved, That we will continue to maintain harmony, good order, and unanimity among ourselves, as well as the good and wholesome laws of society."

WAR OF 1812.



In the war of 1812 several non-commissioned officers and privates enlisted from this town, although it is not known that more than one of them was slain in battle. John O'Kain was killed in the battle of Bridgewater. It is said of him that while lying upon the ground, after receiving his mortal wound, he twice discharged his musket at the enemy.

THE IRON INTEREST.

The three principal mines from which the celebrated Salisbury iron ores are obtained are called respectively the "Old Hill," "Davis," and "Chatfield" ore-beds, and are situated on the eastern slope of the Taconic range of hills.

The Old Hill ore-bed is a tract of land of one hundred acres, originally granted by the General Court in October, 1731, to be laid out by Daniel Bissell, of Windsor. It was soon after surveyed and located by Ezekiel Ashley and John Pell. The descendants of Ashley are still proprietors in the mine. The supply of ore from this mine has been very abundant, and for many years was easily obtained, but latterly the cost of mining has been greatly increased. Up to about 1840 the average yield was estimated to be about four thousand five hundred tons per annum. The production has gradually increased until the average yield at present is estimated at fifteen thousand tons annually. The largest production in any one year was about twenty thousand tons. The proprietors of the mine were incorporated many years ago under the style of "The Salisbury Ore-Bed Proprietors."

The Davis ore-bed is so called from a gentleman of that name who at one time owned it. It was originally called Hendricks ore-bed, and was owned before the organization of the town of Salisbury, by Thomas Lamb, one of the first settlers in the town. The ore was mined in this bed as early as 1730 or 1731, and was taken by Lamb to supply his forge at Lime Rock. It was in early days transported in leathern bags on horses. This mine has been worked almost constantly since first opened, showing an increased production. The average yearly yield at present is estimated to be about fifteen thousand tons. The property has passed through several different ownerships, and the proprietors are now incorporated under the name of "Forbes Ore-Bed Company."

The Chatfield ore-bed was originally owned by Philip Chatfield, from whom it takes its name, and was opened about the same time with the other beds or soon after. It has been steadily worked since first opened, showing, as do the others, an increased production. Its annual yield at present is estimated to be twelve thousand tons. Notwithstanding the fact that these mines have been so long and so constantly worked, the supply of ore is still abundant, and is apparently inexhaustible.

There has been no special effort made to increase the production, as these ores are not in the market, and it is only desired to raise a sufficient supply for the furnaces in the immediate vicinity of the mines. The ores are all of the brown hematite variety, and of the same general character, yielding about forty-five per cent. of iron. The process of raising the ore and making it ready for the furnace has been much improved within the past twenty years, and the ore now goes into the furnace as free as possible from refuse matter of all kinds. It is now crushed and washed by machinery before leaving the mines. The ore is raised entirely by open mining, and the beds are now being worked at a depth of from seventy-five to one hundred feet.

In addition to the mines mentioned above, this company is working mines at Amenia and Riga, both on the New York and Harlem Railroad, just over the New York State line, and on the western slope of the Taconic Hills, referred to. These mines produce ores very similar in character and value to the ores first described.

The first forge in this vicinity was erected on Lime Rock by Thomas Lamb as early as 1734. He took his ore from the Hendricks (now Davis) ore-bed, which he then owned in part. Several different parties succeeded to the ownership of this property, and among those who occupied it longest and operated it most successfully were James Johnston and Messrs. Canfield & Robbins, who succeeded him. The last-named parties owned and operated a forge and blast-furnace on this site for many years, and also had a forge and blast-furnace, which was built by Leman Bradley in 1812, on the Housatonic River, just below the Canaan Falls, using at both places the Salisbury ores. The Lime Rock property came into the possession of its present owners in 1863, and in 1864 a new blast-furnace was erected, which has been in operation up to the present time. About the year 1748 a forge was erected in the present village of Lakeville (then called Furnace Village), and in 1762, John Haseltine, Samuel Forbes, and Ethan Allen purchased the property and built a blast-furnace.

This is supposed to be the first blast-furnace built in the State. This property, in 1768, came into the possession of Richard Smith, of Boston, who, being a loyalist, returned to England upon the breaking out of the war. The State took possession of the works, and appointed Col. Joshua Porter their agent in its management, and upon orders of the Governor and Council large quantities of cannon, shot, and shell were made during the Revolutionary war for the general government. John Jay and Gouverneur Morris were often there, superintending the casting and proving of the guns, and it was there that the superior quality and strength of this iron was proven. The cannon were intended chiefly for the navy, and after the war the navy, to a considerable extent, was supplied with guns made from this iron. The ship of Commodore Truxtun, the "Constellation," and the popular ship "Constitution,"—"Old Ironsides,"—were supplied with Salisbury cannon.

This furnace was afterwards owned and operated for many years by Messrs. Holly & Coffing, who also operated a forge and furnace at Mount Riga. The forge on Mount Riga was built about the year 1781, by Abner or Peter Woodin. Daniel Ball succeeded, and the works were for many years known as Ball's Forge. Seth King and John Kelsey commenced building a furnace there about 1806, but were not able to complete it, and in 1810 it came into possession of Messrs. Holly & Coffing, who the same year finished the furnace, and for many years carried on an extensive and profitable business. Pig iron, anchors, screws, and various kinds of manufactured iron were made there.

These works and the ones at Lakeville were abandoned many years ago, and the property at Mount Riga, including the water-privilege, which is very valuable, and are the finest in the State, is now owned by Barnum, Richardson & Co., and used by them to supply water-power in part to the furnace and foundries at Lime Rock.

There were also built at East Canaan two blast-furnaces for the manufacture of pig iron from Salisbury ore,—one about 1840, by Samuel Forbes, and one about 1847, by John A. Beckley.

The first foundry for the remelting of pig iron was built in Lime Rock about the year 1830, and soon after came under control of Milo Barnum, who was the founder of the present company.

Milo Barnum was born in Dover, Dutchess Co., N. Y., July 16, 1790; married at twenty-three years of age, and in the spring of 1820 settled in Lime Rock, and engaged in business as a merchant. Soon after getting possession of the foundry he associated with him his son-in-law, Leonard Richardson, and within a few years his son, William H. Barnum, was taken into the partnership. The foundry business was carried on in a small way, in connection with the store (the firm-name at this time being Barnum, Richardson & Co.), their production consisting chiefly of clock- and sash-weights, plow castings, and other small work. The business gradually increased until about 1840, when they began the manufacture of railroad work. The first railroad work made was chains, frogs, head-blocks, etc., for the Boston and Albany Railroad, then being built from Springfield to Albany, and the castings were transported by teams to Springfield and Chatham, a distance of about fifty miles. The great tensile strength and natural chilling qualities of the Salisbury iron proved it of great value in the manufacture of cast chilled car-wheels, which naturally followed in a few years the making of smaller railroad castings. The iron early obtained, and has still held, the reputation of being the best known for this purpose.

In about 1852, Milo Barnum retired from active participation in the business, and the firm-name was at that time changed to Richardson, Barnum & Co., and the business rapidly increased. In 1858 they obtained possession of the Beckley furnace, at East Canaan, and in 1862 purchased the Forbes furnace, at the same place. They also, about this time, purchased the foundry at 64 South Jefferson Street, Chicago, and organized a joint-stock company, under the name of the Barnum & Richardson Manufacturing Company, for the continuance of the foundry business at that place. Leonard Richardson died in January, 1864, and in the May following the Barnum-Richardson Company, a joint-stock company, was organized, with William H. Barnum as president and general manager, the heirs of Leonard Richardson retaining their interest in the business. The new company succeeded to all the iron interest of Richardson, Barnum & Co., and since that time have largely increased their works by building, and have from time to time, as occasion afforded, acquired further interest in mining companies and in furnace companies already established. They built a third furnace at East Canaan in 1872, with many improvements upon the old method of construction, and in 1870 built a second foundry at Lime Rock. A new wheel-foundry was built in Chicago in 1873 by the company there. The foundries at Chicago use the Salisbury iron, and have a capacity in the two shops of three hundred wheels per day. The company use at their Lime Rock works Salisbury iron also, and have a capacity of two hundred wheels per day.

In 1840 there were in this vicinity four blast-furnaces in operation, using an average of six hundred bushels of charcoal and producing three tons of pig iron per day to each furnace. There are now eight blast-furnaces, of which Wm. H. Barnum is president and general manager, using an average of twelve hundred bushels of charcoal and producing eleven tons of iron to each furnace per day. The new furnace at East Canaan at its last blast ran one hundred and four consecutive weeks, making an average of eighty tons of iron per week, this being the most advantageous blast known to have been made in a charcoal furnace.

The eight furnaces are located within a radius of eight miles from Lime Rock, and are situated as follows: three at East Canaan, one at Lime Rock, one at Millerton, one at Sharon Valley, one at Cornwall Bridge, and one at Huntsville, in connection with which latter furnace is a car-wheel foundry at Jersey City, having a capacity of one hundred and fifty wheels per day, and using the iron exclusively from this furnace. The Salisbury iron shows a tensile strength of about thirty thousand pounds to the square inch, and besides being valuable for ordnance and railroad purposes is extensively supplied for malleable and machinery uses. The wheels made from these works have been largely used in the United States, Canada, and foreign countries, particularly in South America, and have the hearty indorsement of competent engineers and practical railroad men as to their superior quality. They are not affected by extremes of heat or cold, as is instanced by their large use in South America and Canada, while the chilling of the tread gives a wearing surface about as durable as steel. A test was made of the strength of the wheels before a number of prominent English engineers and railway officials in August, 1875, at the machine-works of Mr. Horn, Millbank Row, Westminster. The wheel was struck with two sledges, weighing twenty-eight pounds and thirty-one pounds respectively, and it was not until the three hundred and sixty-seventh blow that the iron partially gave way. The opening of the Connecticut Western Railroad has brought these mines and furnaces within easier access of each other, and has also enabled the furnace companies to procure a portion of their supply of charcoal from a distance, most of it being brought from Vermont, and the companies own the ore- and coal-cars used for this business.

In the various departments of this business, from the mining of the ore and so on, including the labor of colliers, teamsters, furnace-men, foundry-men, and common laborers, the companies, of course, furnish work for a great number of men and horses.

The different companies are as follows:

Barnum-Richardson Company, owners of three furnaces at East Canaan and foundry at Lime Rock. President, Hon. William H. Barnum; Treasurer, Hon. William H. Barnum; Assistant Treasurer, Milo B. Richardson; Secretary, Charles W. Barnum; Agent at East Canaan furnaces, Nathaniel C. Ward.

Lime Rock Iron Company, owners of furnace at Lime Rock. President, Samuel S. Robbins; Treasurer, Wm. H. Barnum; Secretary, Milo B. Richardson.

Hunts-Lyman Iron Company, owners of furnace at Huntsville. President, George Church; Treasurer, Wm. H. Barnum; Secretary, Samuel W. Bradley.

Sharon Valley Iron Company, owners of furnace at Sharon Valley. President, Wm. H. Barnum, Treasurer, Charles W. Barnum; Secretary, Milo B. Richardson.

Cornwall Bridge Iron Company, owners of furnace at Cornwall Bridge. President, Wm. H. Barnum; Secretary and Treasurer, James A. Bierer.

Millerton Iron Company, owners of furnace at Millerton, N. Y. President, Wm. H. Barnum; Secretary and Treasurer, George S. Frink.

Old Hill Ore-Bed.—Owners, proprietors of the ore-bed in Salisbury; Miners, Brook Pit Mining Company.

Davis Ore-Bed.—Owners, Forbes Ore-Bed Company; Miners, Davis Digging Company.

Star Pit.—Owners, heirs of John M. Holley and John C. Coffing; Miners, Davis Digging Company.

Chatfield Ore-Bed.—Owners, Barnum-Richardson Company, Cornwall Bridge Iron Company, Adams-Chatfield Company, heirs of John M. Holley and John C. Coffing, heirs of Hon. John H. Hubbard, heirs of Josiah M. and Chauncey Reed; Miners, Chatfield Mining Company.

CHAPTER LIII.

HISTORICAL ADDRESS OF EX-GOV. A. H. HOLLEY.*

"MR. MODERATOR AND FELLOW-CITIZENS,—We have gathered here to-day with patriotic hearts, I doubt not, warmed with a deepening devotion to the interest and honor of our beloved country. We meet under the influence of the better impulses of our natures, with broader charities towards each other, and towards our fellow-men everywhere, and with a full purpose to fraternize cordially in celebrating another anniversary of the nation's birth.

"With deep thankfulness for the innumerable blessings which have been so abundantly bestowed upon us as a people, we would acknowledge with unfeigned gratitude our obligations to the Giver of all good.

"We have met on similar occasions in years past to celebrate the day which gave us liberty as well as birth and national life. We met then, as we meet now, to revive our recollections of the noble men and the glorious deeds through which our independence was achieved,—to reinvigorate our own hearts with a truer appreciation of the perils which were encountered and overcome to accomplish our emancipation from one of the mightiest nations of the earth. A just appreciation of these events should now lead us to a firmer purpose of maintaining in its integrity this glorious inheritance bequeathed to us by an honored ancestry.

"Fellow-citizens, it is good for us to be here. It is wise for communities, as well as nations, to commemorate peculiar events in their history by some appropriate demonstration that shall fix in the minds of men the eras which mark their progress through the centuries, and which shall serve as landmarks from which to date subsequent history. Such events are the birthdays of nations, the founding of states, the incorporation of towns, the organization of churches and schools, the establishment of hospitals and kindred institutions. A due consideration of such acts will enable us to determine whether we are discharging our whole duty to those who are to come after us.

"It is eminently appropriate, therefore, that we should, on this more than ordinarily interesting occasion, renew and perpetuate the history of our own town; revive our recollections of those heretofore among us, native-born or long resident, who have occupied prominent positions in our own or other communities; to refer briefly to the progress of our fellow-citizens in the arts and improvements of civilized life; to recur to some of the reasons which have given us an honorable position among surrounding communities, and to leave such data as will enable the future historian to make up the record of the century through which we are passing, and at the close of which so few of us will be able to present personal reminiscences.

"More than a third of a century and an entire generation of our race have passed from the earth since those of us who are still living, together with multitudes of others who have gone down to honored graves, assembled under the ancient roof of yonder Congregational church to celebrate the first centennial anniversary of our existence as an incorporated community. Your venerated predecessor, Mr. Moderator,—the two honorable gentlemen who addressed us on that occasion,—the reverend father and his younger legal friend, who together composed the hymns that were sung on that day, and four of the committee who made the arrangements for the celebration, all now sleep in the dust.

* By general request, the publishers reproduce the following address, which was delivered July 4, 1876. It is an invaluable addition to the historic literature of this section. The closing remarks, which are not strictly historical, are omitted.

"To those of us who remember the high social enjoyments of our own citizens, and the kindly meetings and greetings of friends and kindred whom we welcomed from far-off homes to their native town on that hallowed day, pleasant memories come to warm our hearts anew; yet they are shadowed by the consciousness that most of those friends have passed from our midst, and from all the cares and enjoyments of earth to the purer enjoyments, as we hope, of a higher life. We may turn, however, from thoughts saddened by their departure to brighter scenes and incidents, that should cheer and encourage us as we move along in our progress through our second century.

"The historical sermon which was delivered by the Rev. Joseph W. Crossman on the fiftieth, and the one subsequently delivered by Judge Church on the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of the town, leave but a comparatively brief history to be added since 1841.

"Referring first, then, to individuals, as indicated above, I may, I think, appropriately speak more at length of those to whom allusion has already been made, as our record commences with that notable day.

"The venerable and much-respected chairman of that meeting, Lot Norton, Esq., was a native-born citizen, who, after a useful and honorable life, in which he served the town in various public capacities, as its records will show, died in 1847, on the estate long occupied by his ancestor. The historian of the day, Hon. Samuel Church, also native born, continued to reside among us a loved and honored citizen until, in the course of the practice of his profession, he was elected a judge of the Supreme Court, when his duties called him to the county-seat in 1847, where he made his residence for the remainder of his life. Judge Church was for eleven years judge of probate for this district,—from 1821 to 1832,—and State's attorney for Litchfield County from 1823 to 1832. In 1847 he was elected chief justice of the State, which office he filled acceptably until his decease in 1854. Judge Church also delivered a county centennial address in 1851. Having recently looked over both of these addresses, I commend them most earnestly to the men now conducting our public affairs, not only on account of their historical reminiscences, but for the suggestions they contain of the best methods of perpetuating an honorable history, and also of maintaining our good name and standing in the State. The gentleman who supplemented with a short address that of Judge Church, in relation to his native town, and on behalf of the emigrant friends who were then our guests, Hon. John M. Holley, died in Florida in 1848, while a member of Congress from a western district in New York. He had also represented the district of his residence in the State Legislature. The Rev. Jonathan Lee (already referred to) composed two of the hymns that were sung on that anniniversary, as did Churchill Coffing, Esq., two others, which were also sung on the same occasion. Mr. Lee died in Salisbury in September, 1866, and Mr. Coffing in Chicago in 1873. Both of these gentlemen were writers of considerable ability, and both were native-born, educated, and cultivated gentlemen.

"Of the committee of arrangements for that day, six in number, Eliphalet Whittlesey, Esq., died in 1859, John C. Coffing in 1847, Jared S. Harrison in 1864, and Samuel C. Scoville in 1865. These four gentlemen all died in their respective homes, Mr. Whittlesey and Mr. Coffing in this village, Mr. Scoville on his farm in the northeast part of the town, and Col. Harrison at his pleasant home in Lakeville, on the old home of the Chittendens. All of them had served the town acceptably in various public capacities, having honorable records, as will subsequently appear; their descendants still dwell among us. Of the two living members, it does not become me to speak, only to state the historical fact that both of them became Lieutenant-Governors of the State, and one of them Governor also. Mr. Coffing bequeathed to the town by his will a fund designed to promote the comfort and the welfare of all such as may become inmates of the town asylum, as well as in aid of our religious societies, and some minor objects. It may be proper to mention in this connection that Messrs. Moore and Timothy Chittenden each left funds in aid of the Congregational society worshiping in this village. It gives me pleasure, also, to state that our esteemed young friend, Henry Clark, who died in 1872, left funds in aid of the Episcopal society worshiping here. Mr. Clark's bequest to that society, making such a provision for the support of religion while engaged in the active duties of middle life, does honor both to his judgment and his memory.

"Of the gentlemen of the legal profession who have deceased since 1841, or who have gone out from among us into other communities, I may mention the Hon. Thomas G. Waterman, son of David Waterman, who lived in town, and was once associated with Ethan Allen in the ownership of the furnace at Lakeville, many years ago. Thomas G. taught school in Lakeville, studied law with the late Gen. Elisha Sterling, and left town more than half a century since. He delivered, it is said, the first Fourth of July oration ever delivered in this town. He became a prominent member of the bar in Binghamton, N. Y., and was twice elected to the senate of that State. He died in Binghamton in 1861.

"Hon. Peter B. Porter, alluded to in Judge Church's address, was born in Lakeville, and died at his home at Niagara Falls in 1844. He was in Congress in 1810, and also Secretary of War under President J. Q. Adams.

"Campbell Bushnell studied law in Hudson, N. Y., practiced there several years, and then removed to New York City, where he continued to practice until his death, which occurred in 1839.

"Orsamus Bushnell practiced in New York City during the whole of his professional life, and died there in 1868. Both of these gentlemen were born in town, near the New York State line, and were prominent lawyers.

"I cannot refrain from giving an extract from a letter recently received from Pope Bushnell, Esq., the oldest of the many brothers of this Bushnell family, in which he says, 'I am now in my eighty-eighth year, and think I am devoutly grateful for a comfortable measure of health. Bruised and battered in a conflict of more than four and a quarter score of years, I am in almost childlike feebleness, leaning on my staff, patiently waiting for those better days to come.'

Hon. Theron R. Strong, son of Hon. Martin Strong, was born in town, 1802, practiced law in Palmyra and Rochester, N. Y., was elected to Congress for one session in 1839, and also to the Supreme Court of that State for seven years from January 1, 1851, and was one year in the Court of Appeals. He died in New York City in 1873, leaving an honorable record.

"Hon. Graham H. Chapin was born in Chapinville in 1800, studied law in Canandaigua with John C. Spencer, removed to and practiced law in Lyons, Wayne Co., N. Y., was elected to Congress from that district in 1836, and served one term, and died at Mount Morris in 1843. Mr. Chapin was for some years surrogate of Wayne County. He, with other respected members of that family, were born on the estate now owned by Horace Landon, Esq.

"Orville L. Holley, Esq., lawyer, editor, and author, was born in Lakeville in 1791, and died in Albany in 1861. He was for several years surveyor-general of the State of New York.

"Hon. Norton J. Buel and his brother, Theodore, were both born in the Harrison District, both practiced law in Waterbury, and both died there, the former in March, 1864, and the latter in 1872. Norton J.'s professional career was one of considerable eminence. His practice was chiefly in New Haven County. He represented Waterbury, the place of his residence, in the General Assembly in 1856, and was, during one session, a member of the State senate; also a judge of probate for five years.

Hon. John M. Holley was born in Lakeville in 1802. He died in Florida while a member of Congress from the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of New York. He has already been alluded to.

"Hon. George Bartlett, son of the late Loring Bartlett, was born near the Twin Lakes, practiced law in Binghamton, N. Y., and died there. Mr. Bartlett represented his district in the New York Legislature.

"Hon. John H. Hubbard was born on Town Hill, practiced law in Lakeville for several years, was a member of the State senate from this Seventeenth District in 1847 and 1850, removed to Litchfield in 1855, where he died in July, 1872. Mr. Hubbard was elected to Congress in 1863 and 1865. He was also States' attorney from 1849 to 1854. His record testifies to his ability and standing among his fellowmen.

"Churchill Coffing, Esq., son of the late John C. Coffing, was born in the Centre District, practiced law in Peru, Ill., and died in Chicago in 1873.

"Luther T. Ball, son of the late Robert Ball, was born in the Chapinville District, studied law with D. J. Warner, Esq., and subsequently at Ballston, N. Y., and was admitted to the bar in this State in 1854. Mr. Ball removed quite early from town, and finally located in Keithsburg, Ill., where he took a high stand, both as a lawyer and a citizen. At the commencement of hostilities on the part of the South, Mr. Ball and his partner raised a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen first lieutenant. This company was attached to the Eighty-fourth Illinois Regiment. He fell in the defense of his country at the battle of Murfreesboro', in December, 1862, and, in obedience to a previous arrangement, was buried on the field hallowed by his blood.

"John H. Russell, Esq., was born in Canaan, practiced law in this town, and died on his farm in Lakeville in 1871. Mr. Russell represented the town in the Legislature, as will appear from the record, in 1853 and 1854.

"Charles Whittlesey, Esq., was born in the Whittlesey District, graduated at Williams College in 1840, practiced law in Middletown and Hartford, and from the latter city went into the war in 1862 as captain of Co. I, Twenty-second Regiment of Infantry, and was honorably discharged in 1863. He died in Alexandria, Va., in 1874, while in the practice of his profession there.

"John G. Mitchell and Philander Wheeler, Esqs., both practiced law in Lakeville, but neither of them were born in town. The former died in Chicago in 1863, and the latter in town in 1852.

"All the above professional gentlemen to whom I have alluded are in their graves.

"John M. Sterling was born at Lakeville in 1800, graduated at Yale College in 1821, practiced law in Lakeville several years, and then removed to Cleveland, Ohio. I believe Mr. Sterling gave less attention to the law than to land speculations in Ohio, where he acquired a considerable fortune, and is still living.

"The attorneys at present practicing in town are Donald J. Warner, Esq., and his son Donald T., both located at the Centre, and Hubert Williams, at Lakeville. Donald J. represented this town in the Legisture in 1848 and 1866.

"William G. Sterling, son of W. C. Sterling, Esq., was born in Lakeville, commenced the practice of his profession in New York City in 1841, is still in practice there, and is, or has been, a judge of one of the city courts.

"Among the living lawyers who had their birth or education in town, and who are now practicing elsewhere, I recall readily the names of Hon. Roger Averill, who was born in the Wetaug District, practiced law in this town some twelve years, during which period he held several important positions, and in 1843 represented the town in the Legislature. Mr. Averill removed to Danbury about 1850, held the office of probate judge for that district three years, was elected Lieutenant-Governor four consecutive years, from 1862 to 1866, and represented that town in the General Assembly in 1868.

"Lyman D. Brewster is a graduate of Yale College, is now practicing law in Danbury, has held the office of judge of probate there several years, was judge of the Court of Common Pleas for that county four years, in 1870 was representative in the General Assembly, and is now a member of the State Senate.

"Charles B. Dutcher, born in Wetaug District, practiced law in Spencertown, N. Y., from whence he removed to New York City, and is now a resident of White Plains, N. Y.

"Jared F. Harrison, Esq., son of the late Jared S. Harrison, of Lakeville, was born in the Harrison District, studied law with Hon. J. H. Hubbard, at Lakeville, and subsequently with Hon. T. R. Strong, in Palmyra, where he commenced practice, but is now a practitioner in New York City.

"Charles C. Barton, Esq., son of Hon. Pliny L. Barton, was born in Salisbury, graduated at Trinity College, and is now practicing in Boston, Mass.

"George W. Peet, Esq., born in the house now occupied by Hon. P. L. Barton, in 1825, commenced practice with the Hon. William M. Burrall, of Canaan, and represented that town in the Legislature four sessions, was elected president of the Iron Bank in 1864, and now resides in North Canaan.

"Judson S. Landon was born in the Lime Rock District in 1832, received his education chiefly in the State of New York, was employed as a teacher of mathematics and natural sciences at Princetown, N. Y., for two years; subsequently attended the law-school at Yale College, was admitted to the bar, and commenced practice at Schenectady in 1856. The same year he was elected district attorney of that county, which office he held six years; he also held the office of county judge for that county two terms. In 1874 he was elected justice of the Supreme Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of New York, which office he now holds.

"Charles B. Landon, brother of Judson S., was also educated in the State of New York, commenced the study of law with D. J. Warner, Esq., of this town, in 1859, was admitted to the bar in 1862; the same year entered the army as a chaplain in the Twenty-eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers; returning from the army late in 1863, he commenced the practice of law in Columbia County, N. Y. In 1867 he entered the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is still a member of the New York Conference.

"It will appear from our history thus far that the legal profession has been numerously, and often with eminent ability, represented both at home and abroad, and chiefly by native-born citizens.

"Of clergymen,* whose history is more or less connected with our own, but who now sleep in their graves, having died since 1841, I may repeat the name of Jonathan Lee, who has already been alluded to.

"Rev. Leonard E. Lathrop, who preached thirteen years in the Congregational church in this village, removed to, and preached in Auburn, N. Y., several years, returned in July, 1854, to Connecticut, was settled in Sharon, and died there in 1857. Dr. Lathrop was an able and eloquent divine.

"Revs. W. L. and Henry P. Strong, brothers, were born on Town Hill, and went abroad in early life to preach as Congregational clergymen. William L. died in 1859, and Henry P. in 1875.

"Rev. Edward Hollister and Rev. Edwin Holmes were sons of our soil, but I have been unable to trace their history.

"Rev. Edwin Janes, born in Sheffield, Mass., was educated among us, became a valuable member and preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and died in ———.

"Of the living clergymen, born or educated here, I recall the names of the venerable and Rev. Isaac Bird, born in the west part of the town in 1794, who was for some fourteen years a missionary, residing at different periods in Palestine, at Beirut, and Mount Lebanon, and subsequently became the principal of a flourishing school in Hartford. Mr. Bird is now a resident of Great Barrington, Mass., at the advanced age of eighty-three years.

"Rev. Edmund Janes, a prominent and much valued preacher in the Methodist denomination, was born in Sheffield, but came early to Salisbury, and secured his education while a resident here. He was elected bishop. The duties of his office required or induced him to travel extensively, both in this country and in Europe. His varied and extensive acquirements have rendered him an honored and much loved member of the clerical profession, irrespective of denominational distinctions.

"Revs. Eliphalet and Elisha Whittlesey, sons of the late Eliphalet Whittlesey, Esq., were both born in the Whittlesey District. The former was a missionary for some ten years at the Sandwich Islands, from about 1844 to 1854. The latter is now a resident of North Canaan, and the rector of the Episcopal Church in that place.

"Rev. Joseph Pettee graduated at Yale College in 1833, studied with Dr. Lathrop, preached for a short time as a Congregational clergyman, and subsequently became a Swedenborgian minister. Mr. Pettee is highly esteemed among his brethren, and is an excellent man.

"Revs. Peter M. and Alexander Bartlett, both born in the Whittlesey District, and both at present residents of Tennessee. The former is president, and the latter professor, in Marysville College in that State.

"Rev. Albert Bushnel, son of the late Albert Bushnel, was born in the Ore Hill District, and is now, I believe, preaching in a Congregational Church in Sterling, Ill.

"Of the living clergymen who have been rectors of the Episcopal Church at the Centre I am enabled to give the following names: Rev. Charles Devins was rector in 1841; William Warland's rectorship commenced in 1842; George H. Nichols' in 1846; Ruel H. Tuttle's in 1855; Samuel Jarvis' in 1860; J. A. Wainwright's in 1865; William A. Johnson's in 1871.

"Mr. Johnson is much esteemed not only for his earnestness in preaching, but for his faithfulness in the discharge of his pastoral duties.

"The Episcopalians in town have recently acquired a new and beautiful church edifice at Lime Rock, of which Rev. Millidge Walker is rector.

"The requirements of itineracy in the Methodist Episcopal denomination have rendered it difficult for me to ascertain who, among those that have been stationed in town, are now among the living. The more recent incumbents have been Oscar Haviland, Q. J. Collins, Nathan Hubbell, Clark Wright, William S. Bowton, William Stevens. The latter was transferred in April last, and John G. Oakley is his successor.

"The Congregational society worshiping in this village has been subjected to no change in its pulpit incumbent since 1841. Its present (1876) able and beloved pastor, Dr. Adam Reid,* is now in the fortieth year of his pastorate, and is probably the oldest clergyman having but a single settlement in the State. In 1836 he was engaged to preach for a single year, at the close of which he was settled as permanent pastor. Frequent efforts have been made to obtain his services in other localities, notably at Boston, Hartford, and Brooklyn. Dr. Reid delivered the centennial address of his church in 1844.

"Prominent among our medical practitioners who have deceased since 1841 was Luther Ticknor, who had an extensive practice in this town and vicinity. He was at one time president of the State Medical Society, before which he delivered the annual address in ——. He also represented the town in the General Assembly, as its record shows.

"Henry Fish, born in New York City, married in Salisbury, came here to practice about 1820, remained about twenty-five years, removed to Lee, Mass., about 1845, and died there in 1850, aged sixty-two years. He was a graduate of Yale College, and was a surgeon in the war of 1812.

"Asahel Humphrey came into town from Norfolk, was both physician and druggist, and died here in April, 1852.

"Ovid Plumb, born in Canaan, came into this town in 1830 from Dutchess Co., N. Y., practiced extensively in the vicinity until 1856, when he died at his home near the Twin Lakes.

"Chauncey Reed was born in Salisbury, practiced in Sharon, was a much respected citizen there, as well as an intelligent physician. He died in Sharon in 1856.

"Professor Charles A. Lee was born in the Ticknor District, practiced some years in the city and vicinity of New York, but was more extensively known as a medical lecturer, having for several years lectured in five different States.

"Ferdinand F. Fish, son of the late Henry Fish, was born in New York City, but came to Salisbury when quite young, studied medicine, but did not practice. He spent some years in New York and became quite an eminent chemist. He removed to Waterbury, in this State, was twice elected mayor of that city, and died in Lee, Mass., in 1868.

"Benajah and Caleb Ticknor, brothers of Dr. Luther, were both eminent practitioners, the former as surgeon in the United States navy, and the latter as a homœopathist in New York. Caleb wrote several medical works. He died in New York in 1840.

"William J. Barry came into town from Hartford, located in Lakeville in 1835, practiced there eleven years quite successfully, and then returned to Hartford, where he died in 1847, much lamented.

"William Worden came from Richmond, Mass., located at the Centre village, practiced here about seven years, and died in 1853. Dr. Worden had secured a strong hold upon the people here, and was in full practice up to the time of his death.

"Benjamin Welch, a native of Norfolk, Conn., commenced practice in Lakeville in 1845, and remained here until his decease in 1874. He, too, was highly esteemed in his profession, and was much beloved, especially by the poor, whom he cheerfully attended.

"The preceding physicians are all dead.

"Adonijah Strong, son of the late Hon. Martin Strong, born in Salisbury, studied with the late Dr. Luther Ticknor, and is now in practice at Honesdale, Pa.

"J. O. Niles practiced in Salisbury about eight years, went into the army (for a few years) about 1861, returned to Salisbury, from whence he went to Schenectady, N. Y., and from thence to Chatham, N. Y.

"Samuel P. Church, son of Judge Samuel Church, was born in Salisbury, commenced practice in Derby in 1847, removed to Newburgh, N. Y., in 1857, where he is still actively engaged in his profession.

"Elisha W. Cleveland went from Lakeville to New York City in 1826, practiced there thirty years, and returned to Lakeville in 1856, and still resides among us, at the age of seventy-eight.

"George Sterling, son of George W. Sterling, of Sharon, practiced in town a year or two about 1864.

"Dr. J. H. Blodgett practiced in town from 1866 to 1873.

"The venerable moderator, William H. Walton, first chosen to preside over this meeting, was once, I believe, a medical student.

"The medical gentlemen now in town are William Bissell and John L. Orton, located in Lakeville, and Bradford J. Thompson, at Salisbury Centre.

"Henry M. Knight* came into town from Stafford Springs, and commenced practice in 1851 with Dr. Benjamin Welch.

[The only physician in town not named in Governor Holley's address is Robert Phelps Knight, M.D., son and successor to the late lamented Henry M. Knight, M.D., the organizer and efficient head of the "Connecticut School for Imbeciles," at Lakeville.]

"The political interests of the town have been represented in the State senate at five different sessions since 1841, viz.: by Hon. John H. Hubbard, in 1847 and 1851; by Charles E. Botsford, in 1857; by George Coffing, in 1861; and by Pliny L. Barton, in 1873.

"Among gentlemen who have held honorable positions in our own and other communities who have not already been alluded to in one or the other of the professions, and who had their birth in Salisbury, I may mention Prof. Albert E. Church, son of the late Hon. Samuel Church, who was educated at the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he was graduated in 1828. In 1838 he was appointed professor of mathematics, which position he still holds after nearly forty years of service,—proof beyond question of the value of his services. Prof. Church has published four mathematical works. He still claims to be a citizen of Salisbury,—having from his majority been in the service of the government, he has gained no residence elsewhere.

"George W. Holley, educated in part at West Point, but unable to continue his duties there on account of his deafness, has been a member of the New York Legislature, is the author of a work on Niagara, and has written extensively for the public press. He is a resident of Niagara Falls, where he has resided for many years.

"Hon. W. H. Barnum, though not a professional gentleman, has not only represented the town in the General Assembly, but has also been a member of the House of Representatives in Congress for some nine years, and was a member of the United States Senate one term.

"The following gentlemen, natives of this town, have represented other towns in this State in the General Assembly since 1841:

1850–58–62.—George W. Peet, for Canaan.
1852.—Chauncey Reed, for Sharon.
1857 and 1864.—Fitch Landon, for Sharon.
1865.—F. N. Holley, for Wolcottville.
1865.—N. E. Wood, for North Canaan.
1866.—N. M. Brown, for North Canaan.
1869.—E. J. Reed, for Sharon.
1869.—J. S. Wheeler, for Colebrook.
1866 and 1868.—Egbert Bartlett, for Derby.
1870.—Lyman Brewster, for Danbury, present senator.

"The list of town officers for a generation past is, of course, too numerous to record here. The magistrates who have been most frequently called upon as trying justices, so called, have been Robert N. Fuller and John H. Russell, both deceased, and Lorenzo Tupper, James Ensign, and Andrew J. Spurr.

"James Ensign has been county surveyor for some years past, and is still in office. Since 1841, John G. Mitchell, Robert N. Fuller, Albert Moore, and Silas Moore have each held the office of judge of probate in the order named; the latter still holds the office. Daniel Pratt has held the office of town clerk since 1863, and still acts in that capacity. His predecessors since 1841 have been Roger Averill, for five years; Robert N. Fuller, for one year; D. J. Warner, for eight years; Newton L. Dexter, for four years; Henry J. Reed, who died soon after his appointment, and D. J. Warner was appointed to fill his place. Henry Hubbard filled the office four years.

"The manufacture of iron in various forms has been one of the leading industries of the town from its earliest settlement, and without going back to the period of our Revolution, when cannon were cast here for the service of both the army and navy of the United States, and without referring again to iron-masters, who have been particularly alluded to in our Centennial history, I may and do refer with pride and pleasure to some of those who have given an impetus to our prosperity as a town in this department of industry since that period. Of those who have passed from among us within the last generation I recall the names of John C. Coffing, Milo Barnum, Lee Canfield, Leonard Richardson, Nathaniel Church, Newman Holley, Samuel C. Scoville, Robert Bostwick, George Coffing, Horatio Ames.

"Among those who are still living, but who have retired from this branch of business, the names of A. and S. Moore, William C. Sterling, and John H. Coffing occur to me. Mr. Albert Moore and Mr. Sterling have passed respectively the ages of seventy-eight and eighty-two, while our respected townsman, Horace Landon, Esq., remains in active business at the ripe age of nearly eighty years.

"Others of our townsmen actively engaged in this industry in town and elsewhere are Hon. William H. Barnum, Samuel S. Robbins, George Landon, George Church, J. and C. Scoville, and Frederick Miles. Among their products are car-wheels. These, of a superior quality, are extensively manufactured by the Barnum Richardson Company, at Lime Rock. They are so extensively used in the country that there are but few of us who travel that do not find ourselves borne along over almost any part of our railway system on Salisbury car-wheels.

* See biography.

"Our iron-masters of the present day, however, are chiefly makers of pig iron.

"The manufacture of wrought iron in its various branches, once so important a business in town, has become, I believe, entirely extinct, or nearly so, within a comparatively few years. Anchors, chain-cables, and musket-iron, car and locomotive axles, heavy screws for cotton and other presses, and a great variety of merchant and machinery iron were manufactured at Mount Riga, at the Centre, Lime Rock, and Falls Village. Very large and superior wrought-iron cannon were made at Ames' works at Falls Village during the late war, and were sold to the War Department. The great anchors that were furnished for the two war frigates built in New York for the Greeks, in their struggle for independence in their war of 1821, were made at Mount Riga. The musket-iron and railroad axles of various kinds, so extensively manufactured a few years since, have been nearly superseded by the use of Bessemer steel. The manufacture of this steel has been largely introduced into this country by a Salisbury engineer, who learned the process in England, and who has built some of the most extensive steel-works in this country.* He is now president of the American Association of Mining Engineers, and is still actively engaged in his profession.

"The principal improvements that have been made in our manufactures within the period since 1841 have been the extension of the car-wheel business and the works of the Barnard Hardware Company, both located at Lime Rock, the erection of cutlery-works by A. H. Holley in Lakeville in 1844, and now carried on by the Holley Manufacturing Company, and the manufacture of woolen and other fabrics by the Washinee Company, at the Centre. These establishments have all accomplished their purpose in producing excellent work, but they have not all been equally successful in a pecuniary point of view.

"Our agriculturists have not fallen behind the surrounding communities in their various occupations, and have contributed their efforts towards maintaining the reputation of the town as one of the best farming towns in the county, if not in the State.

"The committee appointed by the General Assembly in 1732 to examine 'the colony lands west of the Ousatonic River,' and lay out a township in the northern section thereof, reported six lakes estimated to contain two thousand acres, and a rough waste mountain in the northeast corner of said township estimated to contain four thousand acres, the remainder they thought would accommodate a sufficient number of inhabitants for a town.

"Our mining interests were greatly extended during the war of the Rebellion, and were sources of wealth. But for the past few years they have experienced the depressing influences of previous excessive production, although they are still wrought to a very considerable extent.

"The Salisbury Savings Society, located at Lakeville, is another of our institutions brought into existence since our centennial history was written, and has proved to be as beneficial as it is popular. It was organized in 1848, and Walter R. Whittlesey was elected its first treasurer. He was succeeded in 1865 by Thomas L. Norton, who still holds the office.

"A banking firm has also been established at Lakeville, under the name of Robbins, Burrall & Co., which has proved to be a source of great convenience to our business community.

"The Iron Bank,† which was chartered in May, 1847, is virtually a Salisbury institution, although it is located on the Canaan side of the Housatonic River.

"The first newspaper established in town, and which is still successfully conducted, was started by J. L. Pease, who came into town from Lee, Mass. The first number of the paper, the Connecticut Western News, was issued July 14, 1871.‡

"The construction of the Connecticut Western Railroad, one of the most important contributions to the business interests, as well as to the facilities for communication ever established in this vicinity, not only for Salisbury but for all Northwestern Connecticut, is more indebted for its organization to Salisbury than to any other town on its line. We concede to other towns active and efficient aid in the procurement of its charter and in liberal subscriptions to its stock, but the efficient work of its organization began here. The contract for its construction was made in 1869, and the first train over the road (except construction trains) was an excursion to Poughkeepsie from Hartford, in December, 1871.

"Our educational interests have kept pace with those of surrounding communities, and are decidedly in advance of what they were five-and-thirty years ago; more pains have been taken to secure educated and efficient teachers; greater facilities have been furnished for the acquirement of an education, and our public schools are not only free but attendance is compulsory. We have no institutions for education higher than the common school, except two or three select schools, of which favorable reports are given. Our school-houses are a great improvement upon those of even a quarter of a century since, and are generally a credit to the town. On the whole, Mr. Moderator, I think that our children are better taught in the district schools than those adults are whom we endeavor annually to instruct in reading in our town-room.

"The Roman Catholics in this vicinity have erected a beautiful and convenient church edifice at Lakeville within the past eighteen months, which does credit to their taste, and which we hope and trust will have a healthful influence upon all who worship there. The temperance reform which they have instituted has already been productive of good.

"The order of 'Good Templars,' established at Lakeville, numbers about one hundred members, and is in a flourishing condition; T. L. Norton, Esq., is the presiding officer. The object is the promotion of temperance.*

"The war of the Rebellion was not an institution of Salisbury origin. As it occurred, however, within the lifetime of the present generation, and as it was one of the most gigantic and causeless of modern times, and having been suppressed also by as brave and patriotic a people as ever drew the sword in defense of liberty and law, of home and country, it is proper that it should be referred to even here in our limited community. It demands a record indeed if for no other reason than to testify to posterity the efforts and sacrifices which were made on our part to transmit to them an unimpaired Union. Salisbury did its full share in the accomplishment of this work, having sent to the army three hundred and fifty-three men, of whom fifty-three laid down their lives either on the battle-fields of Olustee, Petersburg, or Drury's Bluff, Port Hudson, Murfreesboro', Deep Bottom, and Cold Harbor, or died of wounds or disease contracted in the service. As far as this feeble effort of mine will avail, the names of these patriotic men shall be preserved in the archives of the town, and transmitted to coming generations, who will follow our example, and forever hold in grateful remembrance their deeds and their memories. Their names alone, however, do not constitute the entire roll of honor for our town, but they are the only persons whom we know that sacrificed their lives in the service; other noble men, equally patriotic and devoted, who escaped with their lives, merit and will receive equal honor with those who fell on the battle-fields. Their names already form a part of our recorded history.

"The following is a list of the dead referred to above:

Orin H. Knight, Charles Caul, P. Ostrander, James Ostrander, Adam Ostrander, Monroe Whiteman, Amos Woodin, Robert W. Bragg, Edmond Hickey, Ezra B. Morris, Walter C. Sparks, Reuben R. Speed, Henry Volker, Jacob F. Rapp, Chester A. Johnson, John Lapham, G. W. Mansfield, Guerdon Davidson, Daniel Glaren, John W. Surner, Henry S. Wheeler, Joseph Hooper, Barnard Woodhead, Aaron E. Babcock, S. W. Wolcott, H. Pitt Bostworth, A. E. Barnes, Peter Finkle, Orville D. Owen, Elisha Cleveland, Owen McNeil, Alfred De Bois, Joseph B. Bond, Egbert F. Nott, Ovid P. Shaw, Orville O. Blake, Andrew Bull, Andrew W. Durrall, Renslaer McArthur, Egbert Rowe, J. W. Speed, D. Owen, Eben P. Wolcott, Henry S. Wright, J. Melton Bishop, J. Harper Smith, Cornelius Turner, John Brant, Peter Burns, John Donohue, Jourdan Brazee, Henry Surriner, John S. Addison, Charles Brown.

"The following persons were elected or promoted to the offices named:

Rev. Samuel S. Jarvis, chaplain, First Regiment Heavy Artillery.
James Hubbard, brigadier-general by brevet, Second Heavy Artillery.
Orin H. Knight, captain, Second Heavy Artillery.
William A. Bailey, chaplain, Twenty-eighth Regiment.
Milton Bradley and Wilfred Matison, quartermasters; Charles B. Landon, captain; Joseph Bostwick, first lieutenant; Warren C. Daily, second lieutenant.
E. Lewis Moore, adjutant, Seventh Regiment.
Edward S. Hubbard, second lieutenant, Nineteenth Regiment.
Joseph Slater, second lieutenant, Eleventh Regiment.
Admatha Bates, second lieutenant Co. L, Second Heavy Artillery.

"This reference to our late war reminds me of some facts regarding the French war of 1756–57, that were not referred to particularly by Judge Church in his address. As Salisbury has the credit of furnishing its full share of aid in all the wars that have occurred in our country since its settlement, the fact should be stated that at the early period of 1756, one hundred and twenty years ago, we had in this town two well-organized military companies, from which 'enlistments and impressments' were made from time to time, and requisitions were also made upon captains to hold their men in readiness to go into service at a moment's notice, who were called 'Minute-Men.' I have in my possession orders issued chiefly by Col. Marsh, of Litchfield, to Capts. Moore and Landon, ordering them from time to time to send men to the northern frontier. They did so not unfrequently, but I do not know in what numbers. The Capt. Moore referred to was grandfather of Messrs. Albert and Silas Moore, and Capt. Landon was the ancestor of Messrs. Horace and James Landon.

"There is abundant evidence, I believe, to establish the fact that several of the regiments surrendered by Gen. Burgoyne at Saratoga, in our war of the Revolution, were quartered for several days in this town, a part of them at Lakeville, and a part of them on the farm of the Messrs. Moore. One of those soldiers (John Lotz) deserted from one of those regiments, and was for many years an inhabitant of Salisbury, and served as a miller for my grandfather and my father.

"Rev. Edmund S. Janes and his brother came from Sheffield with their parents in 1812. They attended the district schools of this town for a few years, and subsequently advanced their education, each of them, by teaching some six years. Edmund S. entered the Christian ministry in 1830. In 1840 he was elected financial secretary of the American Bible Society, and in 1844 was elected bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the course of his ministry he received the respective degrees of Doctor of Medicine, Law, and Divinity.

"David Lyman was born near the Centre, was admitted to the bar of this county in 1841, practiced law some five years, and then entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he still remains.

"Jonathan T. Norton, son of Henry S. Norton, studied law with D. J. Warner, Esq., was admitted to the bar in this county, practiced a short time in Cornwall, and then removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., where he now resides.

"William Norton, brother of the above, is now practicing law with Judge Treat, of Bridgeport.

"J. Newton Dexter read law in Salisbury with D. J. Warner, Esq., entered the army during the late Rebellion, subsequently resumed the study of the law, was admitted to the bar in this county, and is now practicing in Waverly, N. Y.

"Milton J. Warner, son of Noadiah Warner, graduated at Williams College, read law with D. J. Warner, and now practices in Waverly, N. Y.

"James L. Orr was born in Hudson, N. Y., came into town quite young, and was educated by the late Albert Bushnell. He read law with the late Hon. John H. Hubbard, was admitted to the bar in this county, and practiced a few years in Sharon, from whence he removed to Michigan City. After a few years' practice there, returned to, and died in, Salisbury.

"John G. Reid, son of Rev. Adam Reid, read law with D. J. Warner, admitted to the bar in this county, practiced a short time in Kent, in this county. He entered the army during the Rebellion, where he distinguished himself as a brave soldier. He is now in practice in Chicago.

"George L. Hubbell read law with D. J. Warner, Esq., practiced in New Haven, removed to Davenport, Iowa, where he is now in practice.

"Henry and Daniel Smith, sons of Samuel Smith, were both born in Salisbury. Both were able preachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Henry, the elder, still lives in Canaan, Columbia Co., N. Y. Daniel filled several important stations in some of our principal cities, and was quite an author. He died some years since.

"Alanson Reed, son of the late Merwin Reed, was also a preacher of considerable ability in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"Dr. Gordon C. Spencer, born in town in 1789, practiced in Jefferson Co., N. Y., and died in Watertown, in that county, in 1859.

"Natives of our own soil, or gentlemen trained among us from early life, have occupied many prominent positions in our own and other States, who have done honor to themselves and to their country. Among the positions thus occupied I recall those of one secretary of war, three United States senators and seven representatives in Congress, three eminent chief justices of three different States, four Governors of States at home and abroad, two Lieutenant-Governors, many senators in our own General Assembly, two presidents and several professors in colleges, one bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, military and naval officers, and several lawyers and clergymen of high repute.*

"In contemplating this array of worthy names, a pertinent inquiry suggests itself to my mind in this connection. Shall we continue to send forth men from our town who will dignify the positions they may occupy, and do equal honor to the town with those who have preceded them? Shall we prove to the world that in education and refinement, in social culture, political integrity and sagacity, far-reaching and wise plans for the future of our country, we may be able to controvert the oft-repeated assertion that we are degenerating; that our ancestors were wiser and better than the later generations of men? Have we no reason to apprehend that the corruption and extravagance of the age, the bitterness of party spirit, the want of charity towards each other, the malignity with which candidates for and incumbents of exalted political and social positions are pursued and traduced, will compel the future historian to verify and emphasize the charge of degeneracy?

"In connection with this subject, I cannot refrain from giving a short extract from Judge Church's 'Centennial Address.' He says,—

"'This is not the time nor the proper occasion to indulge in political reflections, but I cannot discharge a duty which I owe to the young men of my native place—the persons with whom, in part, the destinies of the country are soon to be intrusted—without entreating them to divest themselves of party and political prejudices. What is prejudice but an opinion formed without impartial examination? This is a crime, and inexcusable in this age and country. My young friends, never be afraid of bringing preconceived opinions to the test of a patient and disinterested inquiry.'

"'He being dead, yet speaketh,' and speaketh wisely."

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

"As one of the most prominent purposes to be accomplished by corporate privileges was the support of the gospel ministry here, so the earliest efforts of the town were directed to that object. As early as January, 1742, a committee was appointed 'to seek out for a minister to preach to us three months.' As yet there was no established place of public worship in the town, and no building which could accommodate even the then few inhabitants, and therefore the town designated places of worship in its different sections, that all might be alternately accommodated. The house of Henry Van Dusen, at Weatogue, of Cornelius Knickerbacor, at Lakeville, and of Nathaniel Buell, at Lime Rock, were established as places of meeting; and this system was pursued until after the call of Mr. Lee.

"In June, 1742, a gentleman whose name was Hesterbrook was employed to preach three months. In April, 1743, an unsuccessful attempt was made to call a minister. In the succeeding month the effort was renewed, and Mr. Thomas Lewis was invited to preach on probation. He preached seventeen Sabbaths, but not proving acceptable to the people, no call for settlement was given. On the 3d day of January, 1744, Mr. Jonathan Lee, of Lebanon, received a call for settlement, which was accepted. The letter of acceptance was as follows:

"'SALISBURY, Aug. 19, 1744.

"'To the inhabitants of the town aforesaid:

"'GENTLEMEN AND BRETHREN,—I have again carefully considered your call to me to labor with you in the sacred work of the gospel ministry. I have endeavored to hear and discern the call of God, which is my only rule to act by. I have considered your proposals for my maintenance and support, among which, as I understand them, are as follows: You have voted annually to give me £40, lawful money, which, in Old Tenor money, amounts to £160; and for the fourth year of my ministry you have voted to add 50s., lawfully money; and for the fifth year, you have voted to add 50s. more of the same tenor, and so to continue, which amounts to £180 of Old Tenor bills, being £45 of lawful money. And having received encouragements of other needed assistances and helps, and, as far as I can discover, I being called not only of you, but of God, I therefore do hereby testify mine acceptance of the call and your proposals, and hereby profess my willingness to labor for your good in the work of the gospel ministry, according as I may be assisted by the grace of Almighty God; and hoping and trusting in his goodness, and depending upon a continual remembrance in the fervent prayers of the faithful, I give and devote myself to Christ, and my services to you for his sake, who am your friend and servant.

"'JONATHAN LEE.'

"He had preached on probation for a short time before. Previous to Mr. Lee's call the town had voted to erect for the minister a log house thirty feet long and twenty-four feet wide. This house, too, was intended, and used temporarily, as the meeting-house. The terms of Mr. Lee's settlement, aside from the right of land appropriated to the first minister, were forty pounds, lawful money, with an annual increase until it should amount to forty-five pounds, or one hundred and eighty pounds in old tenor bills, as appears by his letter of acceptance.

"The log house erected for the minister was not finished when Mr. Lee came here with his family, and his first dwelling-place was an apartment temporarily fitted up in the end of a blacksmith's shop, with stools for chairs and slabs for tables; and the poor minister was often compelled to carry his bushel of wheat upon his back to Lamb's mill for grinding.

"Mr. Lee, having accepted the call to settle here, he and Thomas Chipman, Esq., were requested by the town to fix upon the time of ordination, and 'agree upon the men to do the work.' On the 23d day of November, 1744, Mr. Lee was ordained by a select ordaining council,—the men agreed upon to do the work at the log house which had been erected for his use. Why a select council was called to perform this service, instead of the Consociation to which the town belonged, we are not informed. The proceeding was afterwards condemned as irregular, and as a departure from the Saybrook canons; and several of the council were censured for participating in the ordination without the advice of the Association. No evil, however, resulted to the town from this procedure, nor was Mr. Lee at all implicated in its irregularity. The connection of Mr. Lee with this people was long and successful, and attended, perhaps, with as much harmony as was usual in those days of acquiescence in ecclesiastical measures.

"Mr. Lee continued to be the sole settled minister here forty-four years. He died Oct. 8, 1788, and was interred in the old Centre burying-yard. He was a graduate of Yale College, of the class of 1742. The family of Mr. Lee was numerous, and some members of it in after-life distinguished.

"It was not until the 23d day of April, 1746," says Judge Church, "that the town voted to build a meeting-house, and the place first designated for this purpose was the elevated ground north of John C. Coffing's dwelling-house. This location was opposed by the people at the north part of the town, and in May, 1747, a committee, consisting of Ebenezer Marsh, Joseph Bird, and Joseph Sanford, was appointed by the General Court to designate the place for the meeting-house. The committee designated two places: one where the town had by its vote fixed it, and another a little north of Joseph Lee's dwelling-house. Joseph Lee dwelt where William Bushnell now (1841) lives, nearly opposite this house. The General Court directed the house to be built near Mr. Lee's, and that the sills of it should inclose the stake placed by the committee exactly in the centre. Measures were immediately taken to build the house; the time of the raising was fixed, and the town voted that Ensign Samuel Bellows should procure sixteen gallons of rum, and Sergt. Samuel Moore eight bushels of wheat, to be made into cake, for the raising. The meeting-house was raised on the 24th and 25th days of March, 1749, on the spot where the hotel now stands, opposite this house. The town had no title to the land on which they erected their meeting-house; but Mr. Robert Walker, of Stratford, one of the original proprietors of the town, by deed dated 29th May, 1750, gave to the town a small triangular piece of land, on the west side of the highway, including the meeting-house, for a burying-yard. This piece of land extended from the south line of the old burying-yard northerly along the highway, forming an acute angle on the highway, nearly opposite the present school-house.

"At the same time Mr. Walker conveyed to the town, for a parade, a piece of land on the east side of the highway, on which the Congregational meeting-house now stands. It was bounded south by the highway, then open and running easterly, through Stiles and College grants, to Lamb's iron-works; it was six rods in width, and extended north from the aforesaid road twenty rods. The old meeting-house continued to be used as such fifty years only, and until the present Congregational meeting-house was finished, in the year 1800. It was used for town and society meetings until the year 1813, when, by lease dated the 19th day of January, 1813, the town conveyed it to the late Simeon Granger, on condition that he and his assigns should at all times furnish the town with a convenient room for town and society purposes, public libraries, etc. The lease included, also, the vacant lands derived from Mr. Walker, on the west side of the highway, which had not been before disposed of nor included within the burying-yard. A considerable portion of this was then used as a public highway, extending westerly up the hill, and has never been discontinued as such, but still remains open and used as the only practicable way to the burying-yard.

"In 1789 the parsonage committee was directed to apply to Mr. Chauncey Lee, son of the deceased minister, to preach here on probation.

"In November, 1790, a call was given to Rev. William F. Miller, and in 1791 a call was given to Rev. John Elliott to settle here in the ministry; but both invitations were declined. On the 2d of October, 1792, a call was unanimously given to Rev. James Glassbrook to become the minister of this people, under restrictions and conditions such as I suppose the ecclesiastical authorities could not have approved. The call was accepted. It was a mere hiring for an unlimited time, with liberty to either town or minister to dissolve the connection upon a previous six months' notice. The assent of the Association was neither asked nor given. Mr. Glassbrook was a Scotch gentleman of popular talents, but for some cause, not now very well defined, his popularity waned fast, and before the expiration of his first year's service the town gave him notice to quit. Mr. Glassbrook did not long survive this event, but died at his residence, where Mr. Revilo Fuller now lives, on the 8th day of October, 1793.

"The Rev. Timothy Cooley was invited to settle here on the 30th day October, 1795, but refused. On the 27th day of March, 1797, Rev. Joseph Warren Crossman, of Taunton, Mass., accepted a call here, and was soon after ordained, and continued a successful ministry until his death, on the 13th day of December, 1812. Mr. Crossman was a graduate of Brown University, Rhode Island. Of this good man we have not yet ceased to speak. He was a man of great excellence of character. As a preacher, many excelled him; as a pastor, he exhibited a model worthy of all imitation. Prudence was prominently displayed in all his intercourse with this people. The religion he preached was exemplified in himself. He loved his fellow-men, not because they bore the same sectarian name with himself, but because they were his fellow-men. He was the minister of a denomination, but he was the friend of all. His piety was not spoiled by prejudice, and he could joyfully recognize a disciple of his Master, as well among the ministers as the people of other denominations.

"The ecclesiastical concerns of the Congregational parish, in conformity with the general usage of this colony and State, had been managed by the town previous to the year 1804, in which year a Congregational society, distinct from the town, was organized, and succeeded in all the property and interests which the town had managed in its ecclesiastical capacity.

"After the death of Mr. Crossman no minister was settled here until the year 1818.

"On the 5th day of April, 1813, the society, by a divided vote, called Mr. John B. Whittlesey to become its minister. This was an occasion of much subsequent excitement. The friends of Mr. Whittlesey were numerous and respectable, and his opponents influential and determined. For a time the permanent union of the society seemed to be in danger. Mr. Whittlesey at first accepted the call; the opposition to him continued and increased; he doubted, then declined. His friends persisted, and again he accepted the call, but finally declined altogether. During this strife much exasperated feeling was manifested. But new candidates begat new preferences, so that harmony was again restored, and the society, by a united vote, on the 26th day of July, 1815, invited the settlement of Mr. Chauncey A. Goodrich, later professor in Yale College, but without success. Again another unsuccessful call was given, and on the 29th day of November, 1816, Mr. Federal Burt, of Southampton, Mass., was solicited to become the minister.

"But in November, 1817, a call was given, under some opposition, to Mr. Lavius Hyde, of Franklin, which was accepted, and Mr. Hyde was ordained on the 18th day of March, 1818. Soon, however, increased opposition appeared, and the harmony of the society was once more broken up. Councils were called for consultation and advice, and at length, after a faithful but unhappy service of about four years, Mr. Hyde was dismissed from his charge.

"The society remained destitute of a settled ministry until Rev. Leonard E. Lathrop was installed on the 2d day of February, 1825. Mr. Lathrop was a distinguished graduate of Middlebury College, Vermont, and had been ordained as a Presbyterian minister, and had been settled as the pastor of a Presbyterian parish in Wilmington, N. C. Few clergymen possess to such an extent the confidence of the entire community, as did Mr. Lathrop the respect of all classes and denominations in the town. The regret at parting was deep and mutual. Mr. Lathrop, at his own solicitation, was dismissed from his society here on the 25th of October, 1836, and was soon after settled in Auburn, N. Y."

He was succeeded by Rev. Dr. Adam Reid, who died Nov. 2, 1878. He was one of the most eloquent and effective clergymen that ever preached in Litchfield County, if not in the State. He came from Scotland, his native country, in 1835; preached one year in Amenia, Dutchess Co., N. Y.; was then invited to supply the pulpit of the Congregational Church in Salisbury for one year, which invitation he accepted. At the close of that year, in 1836, he was settled as pastor. His pastorate continued for forty years, when, on the 23d of September, 1877, his resignation was reluctantly accepted by a saddened congregation. Strenuous efforts were made during the first twenty years of his settlement to induce him to accept calls from churches at Boston, Hartford, and Brooklyn, N. Y. But he had become attached to the people of his charge, and he chose to spend his life in Salisbury. Members of his society furnished him with the means of visiting his native country on three different occasions. The society also continued his salary and supplied his pulpit in his absence. His successor, Rev. Cornelius Ladd Kitchel, was installed on the 20th of December, 1877, and is the present incumbent, April, 1881. The church edifice was erected in the year 1800, and in its exterior presents the same general appearance that it did when first completed. Several interior alterations have been made.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.*

Of the early introduction of the Church of England into Salisbury we have but traditional information. Settled principally from the neighboring province of New York by persons of Dutch descent, there is reason to infer that, in common with many of their co-religionists in other localities, the deprivation of the services of the National Church of Holland led them to look kindly upon those of the Established Church of England. At least traces of this leaning towards Episcopacy are found at an early period; and, doubtless, but for the loss of records and documents, the introduction of the Church of England in this town might be antedated by a number of years. Of this we are certain, that in 1764 the number of church families in Salisbury was sufficient to attract the notice and enlist the pastoral care of the Rev. Thomas Davies, A.M., the faithful and successful missionary of the venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts in Litchfield County. In a letter addressed by this excellent missionary to the secretary of the society under date of this year, after mentioning "Litchfield, Cornwall, and Sharon" as the places "where a missionary will officiate on Sundays," Mr. Davies proceeds,—

"There are a number of towns more in this county which will naturally be included in that part of the mission, viz., Goshen, Torrington, Harwinton, New Hartford, Norfolk, Salisbury, and Canaan, in which places are a few church people who desire to come under the society's protection."

Nor was Mr. Davies content with merely representing this desire on the part of the "few church people" in Salisbury. His "Notitia Parochiales," a fragment of which has been preserved, has the following entries, noting the dates of his visitations of the town, the names of those he baptized, and even the texts of the sermons he preached to the little gatherings of Episcopalians who assembled at his coming:

"1764, July 15, Salisbury, 2 Tim., ii. 19; 2 Peter, i. 10. August 19th, Salisbury, Ezek., xviii. 31; Phil., iv. 13. September 23d, Salisbury, Titus, ii. 11, 12; Hebrews, xi. 6. Baptized Sarah Jeffreys, daughter of Ebenezer Jeffreys. October 23d, Salisbury, Hebrews, xi. 6, 7. Baptized Sarah Charity and Hyman, children of Hyman Bozrough; Samuel and Elizabeth, of Lawrence, and Molley and Jane, of Abraham Knickerbocker; Elisha, Josiah, and Bartholomew, of Elisha Hurlbut; Solomon, of William Whitney; Hannah and Charity, of Ruluff Dutcher."†

No further entries or sermons or baptisms at Salisbury are found in these interesting memoranda, and their sudden cessation would appear to strengthen the statement of Judge Church in his "Centennial Address" that

"Before the war of the Revolution there were so many families belonging to the Church of England in this town that some efforts were made at organization, but nothing effective."

At the same time the fact that Mr. Davies made four visits, and baptized fourteen individuals within a space of three months, and the allusion to this portion of his mission in his correspondence with this venerable society, together with Chief Justice Church's later statement in his Litchfield centennial address, that a congregation "worshiping with the Liturgy of the English Church" was "soon found" in Salisbury "in common with other towns where organized parishes are known to have existed from time to time," lead us to infer that the Salisbury congregation, if not a parish organization, was undoubtedly of older origin than even Mr. Davies' earliest visit, and that it either grew out of the love of the original settlers for the church, or sprang from the same causes that induced the change of ecclesiastical relation by the Rev. Solomon Palmer, of Cornwall, from the "Standing Order" to Episcopacy, full ten years prior to the date of these "Notitia." Besides, the application of the churchmen in Salisbury to the venerable society through Mr. Davis, already referred to, was of itself a sufficient "organization." By this act the Episcopalians in Salisbury became legal parishioners of the Church of England in Litchfield County, and would be recognized as such by him. This application and recognition freed them from the taxes laid by town-vote for the support of the Congregationalist establishment, and turned their assessments into another channel. The examination of the town-records of Salisbury would doubtless afford evidence of the number and wealth of the Episcopal community at this time, and might, if done, add much to our knowledge of the strength of Episcopacy in the town. In any event this little band of churchmen did not die out. Though there are no records extant of any ministrations in Salisbury by the Rev. Mr. Palmer, who was again appointed to the Litchfield mission after the death of Mr. Davies, tradition recalls the occasional services of the Rev. James Nichols, both before and subsequent to the war of the Revolution, and the following extract from the register of the Rev. Gideon Bostwick, of Great Barrington, Mass., communicated to the writer by the Rev. A. H. Bailey, D.D., of Sheldon, Vt., are evidences of the life of this little band of churchmen, and gave good promise of a better day to come:

"1780, Salisbury, July 9th.—Baptized Harriet, daughter of Josiah Hawley and Hannah, his wife; Mary, daughter of Timothy Chitenden and Rebecca, his wife; Giles Bird, son of Giles Hall and Electa, his wife.

"1783, June 22.—Baptized Ursula, daughter of Jacob Bogardus and Patience, his wife."

This register, showing official acts performed in Litchfield, Canaan, Salisbury, Norfolk, and Cornwall, from 1773 to 1785, is a noble attestation of the missionary spirit of this excellent clergyman, while these laborious services seem in one sense a graceful recognition of the establishment of the Great Barrington parish by the Rev. Mr. Davies years before. And this kind oversight on the part of the few clergymen in this section of the State was shown by occasional ministrations rendered by the Rev. Ashbel Baldwin, of Litchfield, the Rev. Daniel Burhans, of Newtown, and the Rev. Truman Marsh, of Litchfield. A service held in this town by the Rev. Mr. Baldwin is thus noticed in the Litchfield Monitor, Vol. IV., No. 191:

"Salisbury, Sept. 6, 1788.—Died in this town, on the 2d inst., Mr. George Marsh, in the sixty-third year of his age. On the 4th his funeral rites were performed, and a sermon adapted to the occasion was preached by the Rev. Ashbel Baldwin, of Litchfield."

Other notices of these visits from the neighboring clergy might, doubtless, be found on a further examination of the files of this venerable repository of town and county items.

Land was purchased for parish use in 1792, and from this time for a number of years, lay reading was regularly kept up by Capt. Timothy Chittenden. At the convention of the diocese in 1801, Capt. Chittenden was in attendence as a delegate, and at the clerical convocation held at the same place and time the Rev. Caleb Child, of Massachusetts, who appears to have been for a time in charge of this parish, though only in deacon's orders, was tried, on a deposition of Mr. Beriah Chittenden, of Salisbury, for doctrinal defection and error in life, and was deposed from the ministry.

At the convention in 1808 the committee "appointed to ascertain the bounds of the several cures in the diocese" report "Salisbury and Canaan" as vacant, thus recognizing the continued existence of the parish, which had doubtless suffered bitterly in consequence of ministerial unfaithfulness, succeeded by utter want of pastoral care. The following year Rev. Sturges Gilbert, who had himself but lately been admitted to the diaconate, was assigned to the care of the "churches in Kent, Sharon, and Salisbury," and reported from his associated parishes to the convention of 1809 forty baptisms and three funerals. In later reports the name of Salisbury is dropped, and nothing more appears of this "little flock" till the mention of their visitation by the Rev. Aaron Humphreys, missionary of the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, appended to the convention journal of 1820. Mr. Humphrey, after stating that he had "visited in his missionary capacity Canaan and Salisbury," proceeds as follows:

"At Salisbury there are also a few Episcopalians, destitute of the means of procuring the services of a clergyman and deprived of the regular administration of the ordinances of the gospel. The aid of the society extended to these congregations might be productive of great usefulness."

A brighter day had dawned for the church in this town. The appointment of the Rev. George B. Andrews to the care of the "church of Sharon, Kent, and New Preston" brought into the vicinity of this struggling parish an earnest-minded and devoted missionary; and in 1823 the convention journals, long silent as to this portion of the diocese, have reference to the erection of "a new brick church," and report fifty-five families as comprised in the parish. The bishop, in announcing this and other proofs of fruitful labors, adds,—

"These exertions, so honorable to the church and so animating to the cause of piety, have been stimulated in no small degree by the zealous labors of the Rev. Mr. Andrews."

At the next convention, that of 1824, held in Litchfield, the name of Daniel Landon appears as representing the parish in Salisbury. In 1824, Samuel Church, afterwards chief justice of the State, and long a prominent member of St. Michael's Church, Litchfield, was associated with Mr. Daniel Landon as deputies to the convention; the Rev. Stephen Beach is reported as "missionary at Salisbury and parts adjacent," and sixteen is given as the number confirmed at the first Episcopal visitation since the days of Bishop Seabury. In his annual address the bishop thus notices the completion of the church:

"During my visit to the parish of Salisbury, on the 15th of September last, I consecrated the new church in that place by the name of St. John's Church. This edifice is constructed of brick, in the Gothic style of architecture. It is neatly furnished, and its accommodations are judiciously arranged. The expense of its erection, though pressing heavily on individuals, has been borne with cheerfulness, and it is trusted that no one feels impoverished by his exertions. The zeal and liberality which this parish has evinced afford an encouraging promise of its future prosperity."

The Rev. Mr. Beach reports to this convention 55 families, 18 communicants, 4 marriages, 35 Sunday-school scholars, 7 infant and 6 adult baptisms, and 7 funerals, as the summary of the year's work.

Rev. Stephen Beach resigned the rectorship in the year 1833. Rev. Lucius M. Purdy was called to succeed him, and continued in his office until May, 1837. From 1837 to 1846 there were four brief pastorates, of the Rev. C. W. Bradley, Rev. S. T. Carpenter, Rev.

David L. Dains, and Rev. William Warland. Rev. George H. Nichols became the rector in April, 1846, and remained until Easter, 1854. Rev. Revel H. Tuttle succeeded him the same year, and remained five years. He was followed by Rev. Samuel F. Jarvis, who was rector for three years and a half. During his ministry the parish church was altered and much improved. Rev. Jonathan A. Wainwright, M.D., became rector on March 29, 1863, resigning in the fall of 1871, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rev. William Aller Johnson.

From the accession of Rev. Mr. Beach, in 1824, to the beginning of the rectorship of Rev. J. A. Wainwright, in 1863, 247 persons were baptized and 156 were confirmed, the average number of communicants reported being 50. During Mr. Wainwright's rectorship 96 persons were baptized and 58 confirmed, the communicants numbering over 70.

In October, 1874, Trinity church, Lime Rock, a costly and beautiful edifice, was opened within the old limits of the parish, and now organized as a separate parish, St. John's losing by this friendly division a large number of the families who had hitherto worshiped in Salisbury.

Since the close of Mr. Wainwright's rectorship there have been 141 baptisms and 51 confirmations, the communicants last reported being 68.

TRINITY CHURCH, LIME ROCK.*

The parish of Trinity Church, Lime Rock, was the natural outgrowth of the Episcopal Church in the old parish of St. John's, Salisbury. The distance from the old church in Salisbury was long felt to be a great burden by those people of Lime Rock who, week after week, toiled through mud and snow to attend the worship of the house of God. Occasional services held in the village fostered a desire long entertained of having a church of their own close at hand. This desire took definite shape in the spring of 1873, when means were procured, chiefly through the liberality of the Hon. William H. Barnum, to justify the undertaking. Accordingly, on the 10th of July the corner-stone of the present handsome edifice was laid by the Right Rev. John Williams, D.D., Bishop of Connecticut, assisted by a number of clergymen, including the rector of the parish (the Rev. William A. Johnson).

The building, which was constructed of a light brown stone from plans by an architect from New York, was completed during the fall of the following year, and was consecrated, by the name of Trinity Church, to the worship of Almighty God, according to the rites of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, on the 5th of November, 1874, by the same bishop who laid the corner-stone.

In order that a rector might be called to the charge of the new church, it was necessary to have a parish organization separate from the parish of St. John's, Salisbury. This was effected on May 3, 1875, the original incorporators being as follows: William H. Barnum, W. A. Crowell, J. H. Hurlbut, C. H. Rowley, J. H. Barnum, G. Wiesing, G. S. Burrall, J. L. Richardson, J. T. Levi, M. B. Richardson, W. A. Dean, L. Astrum, F. Hanger, H. Arnold, R. Winterbottom, G. Thorpe, S. P. Ensign, L. A. Bulman. In the meanwhile regular services were maintained by the Rev. A. S. Clarke and other clergymen until the beginning of 1876, when a call to the rectorship was extended to the Rev. Millidge Walker, and was accepted by him, the charge being assumed on the 27th of February. Since that time no changes have been made, the work of the church has prospered in the community, and now, after a lapse of five years from the time when the present rector took charge, the list of communicants has been doubled.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, LAKEVILLE.†

The first Methodist preacher who visited the town of Salisbury was Samuel Q. Talbot, who held meetings here in the fall of 1788. The following year, in the month of June, the first class was formed at Ore Hill. In the same year a society was organized by John Bloodgood, and connected with Columbia Circuit, on which John Bloodgood and Samuel Wigton were the traveling preachers.

The circuit preachers visited the place and gave week evening lectures, generally in private houses, once in four weeks. The number of original members and their names are now unknown. The society seems to have been attached to Columbia or Dutchess Circuit until the Rhinebeck Circuit was formed in 1816, when it was connected with that. In the latter year (1816) the church at Lakeville was built, and dedicated to the worship of Almighty God by Nathan Bangs, D.D., then presiding elder of the Rhinebeck District. The church edifice was erected principally through the efforts of John Brimsmode, Eliakim Smith, Abiathar Wolcott, Josiah Woodworth, and Nathaniel Everts. The house of the latter had long been the preaching place of the society. In 1838 the church was repaired, modernized, and pewed, and from that time the society raised money to meet its current expenses by the annual renting of the pews. In 1869 the church was thoroughly renovated and enlarged by the addition of a vestibule at a total cost of five thousand two hundred dollars. The parsonage was built in 1832.

This society has raised up several ministers of the gospel; among them, E. S. Janes, D.D., elected a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844; Edwin Janes, a twin-brother of the former; Ezekiel Canfield, of the New York Conference; Daniel Smith, of the New York Conference; and Henry Smith, his brother, now of the Troy Conference.

† Contributed by Rev. S. F. White.

The society is at present (1880) in a flourishing condition. It numbers one hundred and eighty full members, and eighteen probationers.

There is a Methodist Church in Lime Rock, but we have been unable to secure its history. It is supplied by the resident pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Falls Village. There is also a flourishing Roman Catholic Church located at Lakeville.

CHAPTER LV.

SALISBURY (Continued).

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

First Proprietors' Meeting—Incorporation of the Town—The First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary—Origin of the Name of Town—Representatives from 1757 to 1881—Military History.

In May, 1733, Nathaniel Stanley, Esq., and Capt. John Marsh were appointed by the General Court to take in subscriptions for the lands in township M, and the avails of the sales were to be appropriated for the support of schools in such towns as had before been settled. Probably nothing was ever done under this appointment. But at the October session of the Assembly (then called the General Court), in the year 1737, the lands in this town were ordered to be sold at Hartford on the third Wednesday of May, 1738, with a reservation of former grants. For this purpose the lands were divided into twenty-five rights. One of these rights was appropriated to the first settled minister; one for the use of the ministry forever, settled according to the constitution and order of the churches established by law in this colony; and one for the support of schools. Here is the origin of the ministerial and school funds of the town. The remaining rights were purchased by individual proprietors. The original proprietors were Thomas Lamb, Thomas Fitch (afterwards Governor of the colony), Christopher Dutcher, Elias Reed, John Beebe, James Beebe, Daniel Edwards, Joseph Tuttle, David Allen, George White, Joshua White, Titus Brown, Edward Phelps, Thomas Pierce, Thomas Newcomb, Benjamin White, Eleazar Whittlesey, Richard Seymour, Robert Walker, and Thomas Norton.

FIRST MEETING OF PROPRIETORS.

The following is a record of the first meeting of the proprietors of the town of Salisbury:

"At a Meeting of y^e^ Proprietors of the Township of Salisbury, in y^e^ County of New Haven and Colony of Connecticut, in New England, lawfully Convened, and at sd Salisbury holden on Thursday, y^e^ 12th Day of April, Anno Domini 1739. Annogs Regni Regin Georgii Secund, Decimo Secondo.

"Personally present, Thos. Walker, Thos. Lamb, Thos. Newcomb, Bidman Seymour, Joseph Tuttle, Jr., Christopher Dutcher, Benjamin White, James Beebe, Daniel Edwards, Titus Brown, Elias Reed, John Bebee. Also were present Mr. Elleazer Whittlesey by his attorney, the said Mr. Daniel Edwards, and Mr. Thomas Norton by his attorney, y^e^ sd Mr. Lamb, who were both likewise proprietors.

"Thos. Fitch was chosen chairman of the first meeting, and Daniel Edwards clerk."

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN.

The following is a literal copy of the act incorporating the town of Salisbury:

"Att a General Assembly, holden at Newhaven on the 2d Thirsday of october, Anno Domi: 1741.

"Upon the Memorial of the Inhabitants of the Township of Salisbury, praying for Town Priviledges, and Liberty to Imbody in Church Estate.

"Resolved and Enacted by this Assembly, that the Inhabitants of the said Township of Salisbury be and they are hereby Erected, Constituted, made, and Imbodyed into a Town by the name of the Town of Salisbury, and that they and Such others as Shall become Inhabitants thereof, and their Successors, shall have, Exercise, and Enjoy the authoritys, Powers, and Privledge, and be Under the Regulations that the Other Towns in this Colony by the Laws of this Government have, Exercise, Enjoy, and are Under, and that the Brand for Said Town be the same as is provided For Weatang, viz., this figure, †; and Liberty is hereby granted To the Inhabitants of said Town to Imbody into Church Estate, According to the Laws of this Government, and Liberty is also hereby granted to the Inhabitants of said Town to meet and Assemble in The Month of November next for the Electing proper Town officers for Said Town, which being Done the Said officers Shall Be Esteamed as Lawfully Elected, and Shall continue the year next Ensuing as the Elected in the Month of December next: and this Assembly authorizes and appoint Mr. Benjamin White, of Said Town, to Warn the Said Inhabitants to meet and Assemble att Some place by him to be appointed in Said Town Some time In November or December next, for the purposes aforesaid.

"A True Copy.

"George Wylly, Secretary."

THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

The first town-meeting was held Nov. 9, 1741, when the following officers were chosen: Selectmen, Benjamin White, Thos. Newcomb, and John Smith; Town Clerk, Cyrenus Newcomb; Treasurer, Samuel Beebe; Constable, Thomas Austin. Thomas Newcomb was chosen moderator of the meeting.

EXTRACTS FROM EARLY RECORDS.

At a town-meeting held Jan. 9, 1742, it was "Voted, That Thomas Newcomb Shall be Moderator of Said Meeting.

"Voted, That their Shall be a Sign post Erected Within fourty Rods of the house of M^r^ Thomas Baliss.

"Voted, That there Shall be a pound Erected and built Within fourty Rods of the house of Mr. Thomas Bayles."

On the 16th of the following February it was "Voted, That We Call a Minister To preach to Us three Months."

The following votes were also taken at this meeting:

"Voted, That We Shall have a Committee To Seek out for a Minister to preach to Us.

"Voted, That Mess^r^ John Smith, Samuel Beebe, And Thomas Newcomb be a Committee to Look Out And to agree with a Minister to preach to Us for the Term of three Months."

April 20, 1742, it was

"Voted, That We Send a petition to ye General Assembly, With the Rest of the New Townships, that their be a County Set off In the Northey Part of the government, and that Litchfield be the County Town."

Among the early records of births are the following:

"Areonchee Vandusen, daughter of Hendrick Vandusen and Nelche his wife, was born April 3, 1740.

"Yockamenche Vandusen, daughter of the same parents, was born March 26, 1736.

"Jacimitia, daughter of Henry Dutcher and Eleanor his wife, born Sept. 15, 1736.

"Jamaca, daughter of the same parents, born Aug. 3, 1741."

This town was originally known by the Indian names of Weatog and Ousatonic, and subsequently, after it was located, and before the charter was given, as town M. It is said to have taken its name from an early settler named Salisbury. Rev. J. W. Crossman, in a discourse delivered in 1803, says, "It is currently reported, and by good authority, that this Mr. Salisbury, after moving from here, had an unruly servant girl who had run away from him; that he went after her, bound her with a rope, and tied her to his horse; then rode so as to pull her down, and drawed her in such a cruel manner that she died in consequence of the abuse. The matter was taken up in the State of New York, and he, then in old age, was sentenced by the court to be hung when he should be a hundred years old. About four years ago he arrived to this age. A reprieve was granted him for a certain time, and if he has not died lately he is living to this day." Hon. Samuel Church, in an address delivered Oct. 20, 1844, in referring to this, says, "There is much reason to doubt the authenticity of this tradition; some parts of it are incredible, and I am disposed to reject it altogether."

This town was originally attached to the county of New Haven, and remained a part of that county until the county of Litchfield was constituted in 1751.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN MILTON HOLLEY.

John Milton Holley, son of Luther Holley, was the oldest son of a brotherhood of six remarkable men; remarkable for the manly beauty and perfection of their physical organization, for marked mental vigor and vivacity, combined with most genial and attractive social qualities, and unusual conversational gifts, which were aided by an extraordinary compass, harmony, and flexibility of voice. Each of them was more than six feet in height and finely proportioned. All of them received the rudiments of their education at the then good common schools of their native town, in which their honored father had been in early life a successful and popular teacher.

John M. finished his studies at Boston and Williamstown, Myron and Horace at Yale College, Orville at Cambridge, and Newman at a popular academy nearer home. John M. was born at Salisbury, Conn., on the 7th of September, 1777, and died there Nov. 14, 1836. In 1798 he took charge of one of the corps of surveyors that ran out the "Connecticut Fire Lands," as they were then called, now called the "Western Reserve," in Ohio, and before leaving the State he laid out the city of Cleveland. Soon after his return to Salisbury he embarked in the forwarding business at Poughkeepsie, with Livingstone & Bogardus, of New York. A few years later, his father having purchased the old furnace property at Salisbury, where so many of the cannon and shot were made that were used in the war of the Revolution, he returned to Salisbury and joined his father in the manufacture of pig iron.

In 1814, Luther Holley having purchased the beautiful farm on the shore of the Lake Wononscopomue, in Salisbury, on which he afterwards lived and died, was succeeded in the iron business by John C. Coffing, thus forming the long and well-known firm of Holley & Coffing,—a firm which, for extended business enterprise, active public spirit, and high integrity of character, ranked among the foremost of the time. Their manufacturing operations in cast and wrought iron for government and private armories, and for general uses, were extended into Massachusetts and New York, and were uniformly and largely successful for that early period.

In January, 1800, J. M. Holley married Sally Porter, the youngest daughter of Col. Joshua Porter, of Salisbury (whose life has been more particularly alluded to in a sketch of his grandson, Alexander H. Holley). She became the mother of John M. Holley, Jr., who was a graduate of Yale in 1822, where he acquitted himself with honor, and subsequently married a daughter of Gen. Joseph Kirkland, of Utica, N. Y.; practiced law in Western New York, represented his district twice in the General Assembly of the State, and died in Florida while a member of Congress. She was also the mother of Alexander H., a sketch of whose life appears in another part of this work, and of George W. Holley, of Niagara Falls, all of whom were born in Salisbury. George W. was educated chiefly at Capt. Patridge's military school in Vermont, and at West Point. He also represented his district in the General Assembly of the State, and is the author of works on the geology of the country about Niagara. He was for several years the agent of Gen. Peter B. Porter, his uncle, and after the general's death was guardian of his children.

Luther Holley's grandfather was the first of the family to settle in Litchfield County, he having removed from Stamford, Conn., to Sharon, where Luther was born July 12, 1751. The following extracts from a letter of his to his son Horace will give some account of his earlier life: "After I had advanced towards manhood, say at the age of sixteen or seventeen, my father was ill for several years. My two older brothers were of age and had gone from home. It fell to my lot, therefore, to carry on the farm. I worked hard during the day, and at night had to go after doctors and medicine, sometimes riding eight or nine miles, and often becoming so weary that I have fallen asleep on my horse. My father continued ill for years after I was of age; but, by my own exertions and the persevering industry of my mother and sisters, we lived in good style for that day, and punctually paid every demand." A practice for which he was quite remarkable through his whole life. "When at work on a plow one day I cut my knee, and lay for ten or twelve weeks under the care of doctors, expecting to have my leg cut off. Meantime I studied hard to qualify myself to teach school, and succeeded so well that I obtained a small school the next winter, and gave so much satisfaction that I was engaged for the next year. I agreed for six months for seven dollars and fifty cents per month, which was then a great price. I continued to keep school for three years, the salary being raised from time to time until it reached five pounds." Wearying of teaching, he embarked in trade. "I then formed a partnership with William Davis, of Sharon. We made a large purchase of goods of Richard Smith, of New London, who, being in Holland, had assisted our government in its struggle for independence to procure a quantity of gunpowder. For this service the Legislature of Connecticut granted him the privilege of bringing into the country thirty thousand dollars' worth of goods. This purchase of Richard Smith was made just before the news of peace reached the country; the price of goods fell; Mr. Davis became discouraged, sold out, and quit business; I carried it through, paid Smith, and made some money." Subsequently he engaged in business in Redhook, on the Hudson, and in Dover, Dutchess Co. He represented one of the districts in the latter county in the General Assembly of the State. Soon after he removed to Salisbury, where he engaged in business as above stated. He also represented the town of Salisbury during three sessions of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut.

Myron Holley, the second son of Luther, engaged in business in Western New York in early life, represented the district of his residence during several sessions of the Legislature, and with voice and pen was very efficient in advancing the Erie Canal project. When its construction was decided upon he was made one of the commissioners to carry forward the work, and devoted his best energies to it until it was made available for use.

Horace Holley became a popular preacher in Boston, where he remained about eight years, and from whence he removed to Lexington, Ky., to accept the presidency of Transylvania University.

At his decease, in 1827, Professor Caldwell, of Lexington, pronounced a funeral oration, from which the following extract is taken. Referring to his decease, he says,—

"It announces to you that Holley, who lately presided in this institution with unrivaled lustre, to whose peerless eloquence this temple has so often resounded, whose judgment and taste were standards by which to decide on excellency both in literature and arts, whose soul, as if obedient to an impulse of prophecy, often sprang forward into future times, and bodied forth the thick coming glories of his country, with a potency of reason, a richness of color, that gave to them the charm of existing realities; whose hospitality knew no limit but that of his means and opportunities to extend it; who was a finished model of elegance in manners and refinement of breeding, and whose manly beauty and graceful deportment were as attractive to the eye as the mellifluent tones of his voice in conversation were delightful to the ear."

Orville L. Holley spent most of his life in the cities of New York and Albany, practiced law in both, became editor and author for many years, and for several years was surveyor-general of the State. He died in Albany, in March, 1861.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON HOLLEY.

Alexander Hamilton Holley was born in Salisbury, Litchfield Co., Conn., on the 12th of August, 1804. His father, John Milton Holley, was also born in Salisbury, 7th of September, 1777. His father, Luther Holley, was born in Sharon, Conn., July 12, 1751. Luther's grandfather was the head of the family in this county, having moved into Sharon from Stamford, Conn., and was one of its earliest settlers. A more detailed sketch of Luther's life may be found in connection with that of his oldest son, John Milton. The grandfather of Alexander on his mother's side was Col. Joshua Porter, who was the first of his family in this county. He was born in Lebanon, Conn., in 1730, was a graduate of Yale College, removed to Salisbury in 1754 or 1755, and made the town his place of residence for the remainder of his life, which was terminated in April, 1825, at the age of ninety-five years. He was a marked man, and spent many years of his long life in the public service. He was elected to the General Assembly of the State fifty-five times, was a judge of the County Court twenty-eight years, judge of probate over thirty years, and held minor offices in town from ten to forty years. He was also colonel in the army, and was with his regiment at the surrender of Gen. Burgoyne at Saratoga. He was for six years agent of the State, superintending the making of cannon in the Salisbury furnace during the Revolutionary war. His sons, Augustus and Peter B., became very distinguished men. They were both born in Salisbury, and soon after the graduation of Peter B. at Yale College the brothers both removed into Western New York as pioneers, and became extensive land-holders. Both represented their respective districts in the General Assembly of the State, and Peter B. was twice elected to Congress, in 1809 and 1812. He was also Secretary of War during a portion of John Q. Adams' administration. Augustus was agent for the Holland Land Company for several years, and was also a judge of Common Pleas. Sally Porter was the youngest daughter in this family, and was married to John M. Holley in January, 1800, at Salisbury. She became the mother not only of the subject of this sketch, but also of John M. Holley, who graduated at Yale College in 1822, practiced law in Western New York, represented his district during two terms of the General Assembly, was elected to Congress in 1847, and died in Florida in 1848, and of George W. Holley, now a resident of Niagara Falls, who married a daughter of the late chief justice of our State, Samuel Church. Mr. George Holley has also represented his district in the General Assembly, and is the author of works on the geology of the country in the vicinity of the Falls.

It was the design of the father of these gentlemen that the subject of this sketch should also receive a classical education at Yale, but the plea of ill health, interposed by himself and his mother, and the desire of the former to enter upon an active business life, finally induced the father to excuse him from the further pursuit of academical studies at the age of sixteen; not, however, without the prediction that the rejection of the proffered education would be deeply regretted in future life,—a prediction that has since been fully verified. The educational advantages enjoyed previous to that date were under the tuition of Rev. Orville Demy, of Sheffield, Mass., and of Rev. Daniel Parker, of Ellsworth, in Sharon, whose son, Hon. A. J. Parker, was then a school-fellow. In 1820, Mr. Holley entered as clerk in the business of his father and his partners, who were then among the most extensive iron-masters in the State. They were makers of pig iron in Lakeville, at Mount Riga, Lime Rock, and Falls Village, all in Salisbury, and at Vandeusenville and Richmond, in Massachusetts. They were also extensive manufacturers of wrought iron for the government armories at Springfield and Harper's Ferry, as well as for private armories, and also of cotton-screws, anchors, steamboat machinery, etc. In the business connected with these establishments, as clerk, agent, and partner, together with the establishment of cutlery-works at Lakeville on his own account, he was actively engaged for more than forty years. The only relaxation of any consequence indulged in in early manhood, except six months spent in Western New York for the benefit of impaired health, was in occasional military service. Before the militia system of Connecticut became demoralized, when the regiments numbered from seven hundred to a thousand men at annual muster, he filled the respective offices of adjutant, brigade inspector, and division inspector, and found an annual tour of a week with pleasant companions a more agreeable relaxation from business cares than many subsequent visits to sea-shore or watering-places.

In October, 1831, Mr. Holley married Jane M. Lyman, daughter of Hon. Erastus Lyman, of Goshen, Conn. She became the mother of Alexander Lyman Holley, who was born in Salisbury, July 20, 1832, graduated at Brown University, R. I., in 1854, subsequently became a civil engineer, and was also honored with the title of LL.D., conferred by his Alma Mater. He introduced into this country the process of manufacturing Bessemer steel, and has also published a number of scientific works. His mother died in his infancy. In September, 1835, he married Marcia Coffing, daughter of his father's partner, John C. Coffing, Esq. With her he lived nearly twenty years. She became the mother of John Coffing Holley, who graduated at Yale College in 1859 with an honorable record. He was a genial gentleman and cultivated scholar. He died in San Francisco in 1865. Mrs. Marcia Holley was also the mother of Mrs. William B. Rudd, now residing with her husband at Lakeville. In November, 1856, he married Sarah Coit Day, daughter of Thomas Day, of Hartford, who was for twenty-five years Secretary of State, by annual election.

In 1854, Mr. Holley was nominated and elected Lieutenant-Governor on the ticket with Hon. Henry Dutton, of New Haven, as Governor. In 1857 he was elected Governor, Hon. A. A. Burnham, of Windham County, being elected Lieutenant-Governor on the same ticket. During his term of office, Mr. Holley made several official visits into other States, in which he formed many pleasant associations, which have continued as among the most agreeable of his life. Notable among the visits were one to Bunker Hill, to participate in the ceremony of unveiling the statue of Gen. Warren, of Revolutionary memory. Among the visitors from the Southern States at that time was James M. Mason, of Virginia, who admonished the assembled multitudes from the North of their duty to adhere to the union of the States, a union which, in less than three years thereafter, he attempted, with his associates, to overthrow, and who, with his associate Slidell, were subsequently captured on board of a British vessel on their way to Europe in behalf of the cause of the Confederacy.

Another was to Richmond, Va., to witness the same ceremony of unveiling Crawford's statue of Washington. Other chief magistrates were present on the occasion, and all were cordially received and hospitably entertained; nevertheless there were then slight breathings of discontent, which finally culminated in the great Rebellion.

Mr. Holley was not an exclusive devotee to his own private business, but was an earnest promoter of public improvements, taking a lively interest in the construction of the Housatonic, Harlem, Dutchess and Columbia, and Rhinebeck and Connecticut Railroads, notably in the Harlem and the Connecticut Western. He spent many months in 1851–52 and 1853 in aiding and urging forward the extension of the Harlem road, and was efficient in aiding to organize the Connecticut Western, of which he has been a director from the commencement. He was also one of the originators of the Iron Bank at Falls Village, Conn.; was for twelve years a director, and for two years president of the same. He was also warmly engaged, with officers of other New England banks, in the establishment of the Bank of Mutual Redemption, in the city of Boston, and was for several years one of a committee to make semi-annual examinations of its condition. Having withdrawn somewhat from the active business of life, Mr. Holley indulged himself in visiting various parts of his own country, and made three voyages to Europe, the first in 1862, with his son, the engineer, who has recently crossed the ocean for the twenty-sixth time, the second with his family, for a year, and the third, with his valued and esteemed friend, H. M. Knight, M.D., who was the founder of the "Connecticut School for Imbeciles." His impaired health rendered a voyage necessary, and on Mr. Holley's part it was undertaken for the doctor's sole benefit. All of them were enjoyed, and were no doubt promotive of his own health, as he is now living, at the age of seventy-seven years, in vigorous health, at his pleasant home at Lakeville, on the banks of one of the most beautiful lakes in the State, evidently enjoying the respect of his fellow-citizens, having made his native village his home for his entire life.

MOORE FAMILY OF SALISBURY.

Thomas Moore during the sixteenth century came from Wales to Southold, Suffolk Co., Long Island, then the province of New York, and settled there. Two or three generations of Moores have existed there, dispersed, and died; as many as four Thomas Moores have lived there.

The records of Southold as early as 1698 show that the families of Moores were numerous.

Samuel Moore, son of Thomas, was born at Southold in 1715. Leaving there in early life, as tradition says, for a locality where firewood could more easily be obtained, he located in Litchfield, Conn., where he purchased land, as appears by deeds, in 1735, 1736, and 1737, and was married Oct. 9, 1735, at Litchfield, to Rachel Landon, by Rev. Nathaniel Marther; commenced housekeeping there, and continued in the capacity of a farmer from 1735 to 1743. Two of their sons, Samuel (2d) and John, were born here. During the year 1743 Samuel Moore disposed of his real estate at Litchfield and removed to Salisbury, where he purchased the property of Aaron Austin, where Silas B. Moore resides.

Samuel Moore was made a resident and an inhabitant of Salisbury, by taking the oath of allegiance, Dec. 24, 1744, in the eighteenth year of the reign of our sovereign lord, George the Second, of Great Britain, and was appointed one of the town officers that year.

Was appointed town treasurer in 1748, and held the office consecutively until 1776; represented the town in the General Court in both sessions of 1759 and 1765. When Samuel Moore first settled here there were but nine English families in this section of the town. Dutch families from the province of New York had settled in Weatogue and along the Housatonic River; the population being sparse, the Indians at times became warlike and troublesome. Block-houses were built about the town for protection of the families; one of these block-houses was built southeast of the centre of the town, on Stiles' grant, so called. Samuel Moore's wife and children were occasionally taken there nights for protection.

Samuel Moore in early life was made a sergeant, and finally captain, of a military company. Military supplies were kept at his house during the French war of 1756–57. The war then existing was a war between England and France in relation to the Canadas.

Capt. Moore was ordered from time to time to impress men for soldiers into His Majesty's army, of which the following is one of said orders:

"Salisbury, Aug. 8, A.D. 1757. To Elijah Russell, Greeting: You are hereby Commanded in his Majestie's name To impress Luman Surdam and Ruluff Dutcher, Son of John Dutcher and Cornelius Dutcher, and Ruluff Dutcher, 2d, forthwith to procede for the relief of Fort William Henry, &c., with arms and ammunition complete, and provision for the march, to be under the command of Capt. John Marsh, of Litchfield, who will join them on the road or at Fort Edwards.

"By order of SAMUEL MOORE, Captain.

The children of Samuel Moore and Rachel Landon, his wife, were born and died as follows:

Samuel Moore (2d) was born in Litchfield, Oct. 27, 1736; was an eminent mathematician of his day. Judge Church, in his centennial address, in 1841, speaks of him as follows:

"In connection with the professional gentlemen who have been our inhabitants I ought not to omit the name of the late Samuel Moore (2d). He was the first of our inhabitants who practiced the science of land surveying, and was the oldest son of the first emigrant here of that name. He was a distinguished mathematician of his time, and was the author of a valuable and extensively circulated treatise upon surveying, which, I believe, was the first American work on that branch of mathematical science. He died in the year 1810, aged seventy-five years."

John Moore was born in Litchfield in 1739, and died at Salisbury, May 6, 1802, aged sixty-three years, married Mary Bingham, of Salisbury, March, 1762.

Mary, daughter of Samuel and Rachel, born Jan. 28, 1748, and married Capt. Nathaniel Evarts, Dec. 12, 1770; died March 9, 1841, aged ninety-two years.

Hannah, daughter of Samuel and Rachel, born Nov. 15, 1751, and married Samuel Lee, Esq., Oct. 12, 1779.

Phebe, daughter of Samuel and Rachel, born Jan.

17, 1756, and married Hon. Joseph Ketcham, attorney-at-law, Plattsburgh, N. Y.

David, son of Samuel and Rachel, born Sept. 2, 1758; died at Salisbury, aged twenty-four years. Single.

Silas Moore, son of Samuel and Rachel, was born Sept. 9, 1762, and married to Marville Brewster, June 24, 1798, in the brick house built by Governor Chittenden, on the Brewster farm, so called now, owned by Alexander Surdam; was a farmer by occupation the principal part of his life, represented the town in various capacities, was a member of the General Assembly for both sessions of 1810, lived and died in the same house in which he was born, Jan. 21, 1830, aged sixty-seven years. Marville Brewster, his wife, was born at Preston, New London Co., Conn., Jan. 31, 1771. The late Joseph Brewster, of New Haven, says that she was of the fifth generation in a direct ancestorial line of Elder Brewster, of the Pilgrims, and died at Salisbury, Aug. 23, 1855, aged eighty-four years.

Albert Moore, son of Silas and Marville, was born at Salisbury, May 12, 1799; followed agricultural pursuits principally, was treasurer of the town from 1833 to 1847, represented the town in the General Assembly at its session, May, 1846, and succeeded the late Hon. Robert N. Fuller, in 1861, as probate judge for the district of Salisbury, which office he occupied until relieved by the limitation of statute, having arrived to the age of seventy years, and died at his residence after a short illness, Feb. 3, 1877, aged seventy-eight years.

Albert Moore married for his first wife Jane W., daughter of the late Dr. Bradford Hubbard, of New Haven, June, 1833, and died at Salisbury, March 26, 1866, aged fifty-seven years. No heirs exist from this marriage.

Albert Moore married for his second wife Mrs. Cordelia P. Hulbert, of Great Barrington, Mass., June 4, 1868, who survives her husband.

Silas Brewster Moore, son of Silas and Marville, was born at Salisbury, Oct. 21, 1808; commenced the business of merchandising at Falls Village, May, 1832, with Asa S. Brewster, the surviving partner of the firm of J. & A. S. Brewster, and continued in that occupation until 1835, returning to Salisbury that year in connection with his brother and others engaged in the manufacturing of wrought iron of fine quality, which was then extensively used by the national armories for arms and other uses, also in the manufacturing of pig metal with others at Chapinville; was made town treasurer from 1849 to 1855, and town treasurer again in 1863, which office he continues to hold to the present time (1881); represented the town in the Legislature of 1861, the year of the Rebellion, witnessed the first soldiers passing through Connecticut on their way to the seat of war in the Southern Confederacy, and was returned the next year to the General Assembly of 1862. Succeeded his brother in the office of probate judge from 1869 to 1876, and arriving near the age of seventy, law required him to retire, and Hon. Lorenzo Tupper succeeded him in said office, which he continues to hold.

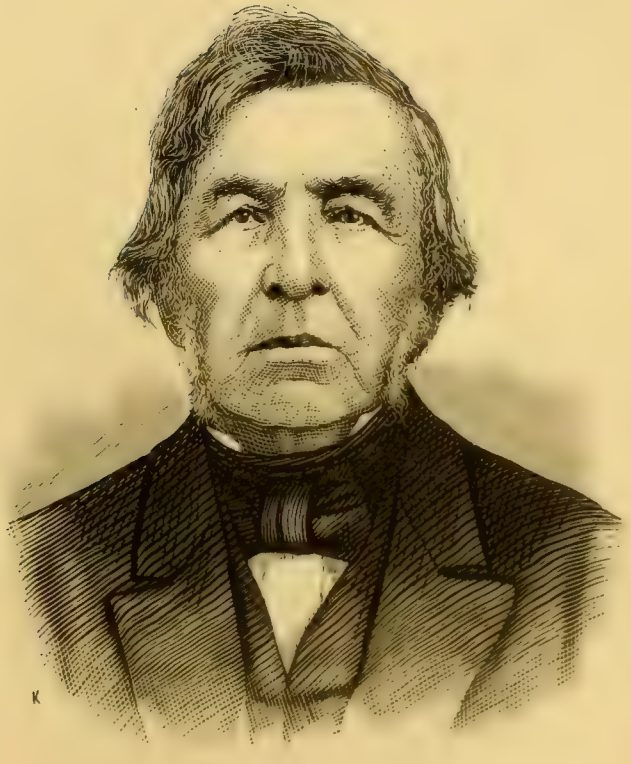
Silas B. Moore was married to Cornelia, daughter of Horace Landon, Esq., and Cornelia, his wife, June 15, 1864, at Chapinville.

Samuel Landon Moore, son of Silas B. and Cornelia, his wife, was born Sept. 20, 1865, and died Dec. 1, 1865, aged two months and eleven days.

Hattie Landon Moore, daughter of Silas B. and Cornelia, his wife, was born June 11, 1869.

In the early part of this century the family name was quite numerous, Samuel Moore (1st), having a number of grandchildren living in Salisbury and married,—John, Luther, Calvin, and William, each of them respectively having families of eight and ten children. The name has become nearly extinct,—cannot recall but one male member bearing the name in town, and his sands are fast running out, and the glass is nearly empty.

FREDERICK MILES.



The ancestry of the Miles family is traced in this country to one Richard Miles, who emigrated from England, landing at Boston in 1635, subsequently settling in New Haven.

Hon. Frederick Miles was born in Goshen, Conn, in 1815. He received a common-school and academic education, and in 1832 entered a dry-goods store in New Haven as clerk at thirty dollars per year and board. In the fall of 1833 he returned to Goshen, and entered his father's store as clerk, in which capacity he remained until 1838, when he became a partner in the establishment. He continued in this business until 1857, when he removed to Twin Lakes, Salisbury, and engaged in the iron business, which he has continued with success to the present time.

Mr. Miles is an enterprising and popular citizen. In November, 1877, he was elected to the State senate from the Seventeenth Senatorial District, and in November, 1878, was elected member of Congress, and in November, 1880, was re-elected, representing the Fourth Congressional District, composed of Litchfield and Fairfield Counties.

HENRY M. KNIGHT, M.D.

Henry Martyn, fifth child of Joseph and Reuba Knight, was born Aug. 11, 1827, at Stafford, Conn., where his father was then settled as pastor of a Congregational Church. Mr. Knight was a divine of the old school, sound in Calvinistic theology, revered in later years by younger men in the ministry, who affectionately termed him "Father Knight." During his long ministry he suffered from the effects of a fever sore, which, however, did not prevent his faithful discharge of all pastoral duties, though rendering him almost a cripple. It is said that this faithful man of God, when absolutely unable to walk, preached frequently from a seat in his own house, packed with his congregation, while his wife in her lap held the aching limb. This quality of steadfast discharge of duty at no matter what cost of physical suffering was fully transmitted to his son. Henry's boyhood was passed in the pure and healthful atmosphere, moral and physical, which surrounded the home of the good old minister at Stafford and at Granby, and Peru, Mass., later on.

As the boy grew up he was subjected to that best of all disciplines, the practice of a rigid economy. A country minister with a family of eight children on a salary of five hundred dollars per annum could barely afford even the necessaries of life, and luxuries were unknown at the parsonage, the father's mantle doubtless descending in a literal way in divers forms upon Henry and the other boys, and spending money being unheard of in the youngsters' pockets. So, when the grand idea of obtaining an education began to develop itself in the boy's capacious brain, he knew well that his own energy, his own denials, his own frugality must win for him the coveted prize. At the age of sixteen then we find him a student in Easthampton, at the already celebrated Williston Seminary, building upon the good foundation laid at the common schools of Stafford and Granby. His vacations were occupied in teaching, and this led him one season to Norfolk, where he became acquainted with his future wife, Miss Mary Fitch Phelps. His want of time and means did not permit him to graduate at Williston, and, having decided upon the study of medicine, he entered the office of Dr. Smith, at Monson, Mass., in 1847, at which place, and also at the office of Dr. Minor, in South Braintree, afterwards, he obtained sufficient medical knowledge to qualify him for a course at the Berkshire Medical College, from whence he graduated in 1849. He was married in October, 1850, and began to practice medicine at Stafford Springs, Conn., having charge also of the post-office and a drug-store. In November, 1850, he removed to Lakeville, entering into partnership with Dr. Benjamin Welch, then a noted surgeon and general practitioner.

In 1855, while a member of the State Legislature, he was appointed by that body one of a committee to ascertain how many imbecile children there were in this State. His previous reading and observation, and the knowledge acquired while serving on this commission, inspired him with the idea of founding that school which is his best monument and memorial. In 1856 he presented his plans to the Legislature and asked that Connecticut should establish a school for imbeciles similar to those already conducted by Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and other States. The measure, after passing the House, was defeated in the Senate by one vote. Defeated but not discouraged, the doctor in 1858 retired from general practice and opened his own house for the reception of feeble-minded patients.

In due time, with meagre aid from the State, and more from his friends, he was enabled in 1863 to erect a more suitable building, which has since been enlarged, and at the time of his death, 1880, about eighty of this unfortunate class of all ages were gathered into an orderly, comfortable, and happy community. The school from 1861, when Dr. Knight was appointed superintendent of the "Connecticut School for Imbeciles," has been nominally a State institution. The State has never been very liberal in its support, although from time to time aid has been given towards construction of buildings and for indigent pupils. Legislative committees have annually visited the school from that time, and have uniformly recommended its support by the State. Dr. Knight published annual reports of the condition of the inmates and the results of education among them, and lavished upon his school a tenderness and force of character which, evinced in other directions, would have assured him of a prominent place in political or professional life. Cunningly, tenderly, in the care of his pupils, the doctor would feel about all the dull gateways of their minds, until at last, in every case, some way of approach, however slight, could be found, and then, with intelligent individuality, he would enlarge and develop it. This was his life-work, and he brought into its service all the strength, firmness, decision, benevolence, charity, and hope of a nature possessed of these qualities in a much more than ordinary degree.

Dr. Knight was a member of the "Connecticut Medical Society," "American Medical Association," and honorary member of the "New England Psychological Society," "New York State Medical Society," and "California State Medical Society." Endowed by nature with a splendid physique, which is in itself the promise of great length of days, he also possessed that nervous, ardent, impetuous temperament which lavishes itself on the moment, and consumes itself before its time. In 1874 he was deeply interested in temperance, and delivered in many places a lecture, illustrated with colored plates, showing the effect of alcohol on the human stomach. Greatly exhausted, and suffering from violent pains in the head, he still insisted on keeping an engagement at New Britain, though unable, while he spoke, to see his audience, so severe was his agony. There followed this an attack of cerebro-spinal meningitis, from which he never fully recovered. Near the 1st of January, 1880, he found that, while at home, he could not resist the demands made upon him, not only by his institution, but by a multitude of causes in which he was deeply interested, and, also, that his strength seemed steadily ebbing away, and left home to spend a few months at Onovo, on the upper St. John's, in Florida. Seized by a chill between Savannah and Fernandina, his disease became so aggravated that after four days' illness he died at Fernandina, Jan. 22, 1880. He left two children, Robert P. and George H.

In his chosen field Dr. Knight had a national reputation, and his help was sought by other States in forming similar schools to his. In England he was known even better than in America. His loss is felt in many places. In the church, where he gave the service of an earnest Christian, in the community, among the whole extent of a large circle of tenderly attached friends, in every enterprise of benevolence, reform, or spiritual endeavor, there is no one to lift his mantle or occupy his place. As deacon of the Congregational Church for a long time, as superintendent of the Sabbath-school for many years, as citizen, physician, and friend, he won the ever-widening love of all who knew him, and had an influence beyond the expression of words. We cannot better close this sketch than by publishing the following from the proceedings of the General Assembly of Connecticut.

Mr. Colyer, of Darien, introduced the following resolutions:

"That in the death of Dr. H. M. Knight, late superintendent of the Connecticut School for Imbeciles, the State has sustained a great loss, humanity is deprived of one of its noblest benefactors, and science will miss an earnest disciple.

"That as a mark of respect to his memory a committee, consisting of one senator and two representatives, be appointed to attend his funeral, and that these resolutions be placed upon the journals, and an engrossed copy, signed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, be forwarded to the family as an assurance of the deep sympathy of the State Legislature."

Mr. Colyer, of Darien, said,—

"These resolutions give but a faint expression to the profound sorrow felt by many hearts within these halls to-day. This State, as well as humanity at large, has sustained a great loss in the death of Dr. Knight, of Lakeville. For over twenty years, in his quiet retreat among the hills at Lakeville, he has labored with a self-denying devotion to which no words of mine can do justice.

"Selecting as the objects for his benevolence the poorest, most despised, and forsaken of his heavenly Father's children, the wretched imbeciles, he lifted them out of their degraded helplessness and made them, in a large degree, self-sustaining and objects of respect.

"Peace, Mr. Speaker, peace has its triumphs as well as war, and there are other fields of human activity worthy of honor besides the field of battle. To labor unseen by the admiring eye of man, and unceasingly to ameliorate the condition of the neglected and the outcast of the earth, is an occupation only undertaken by the noblest natures and the most unselfish among men. We justly honor the soldier who lays down his life on the battle-field for his country; to-day let us honor the hero who, in the quiet, retired halls of the asylum, sacrifices his life for the elevation of humanity. Thus died Dr. Knight, following the sublime example of his Master, the Saviour of mankind. There are many in this hall who knew him and loved him. The duties of his office called him annually to the capital, and always on the one errand,—the care of the poor people whose care he had undertaken; but in these halls, Mr. Speaker, we shall see his manly face, note his eager, intelligent look, or hear his pathetic appeals no more. He always got what he asked for, because he always asked for that which was reasonable. We know all about his pleasant, unpretentious home, a plain, neat wooden building, so charmingly located by the side of the beautiful Twin Lakes in Northwestern Connecticut. We knew of his economy, and, better, we knew of his splendid success; upwards of thirty-five per cent. of his pupils were changed from being a burden to their friends to a blessing to those around them.

"Mr. Knight was born in Stratford, the son of a Congregational clergyman, and studied for the medical profession. It is over twenty years ago since he began this benevolent work on which rests a fame which has reached the farther side of the civilized world. In England, a land famous for its organized benevolence, he was even better known than in this country. Minnesota had just invited him to help her organize an institution similar to the one at Lakeville, and other fields were opening to him, when he was suddenly called home. All honor to his memory, for in honoring him Connecticut but honors herself."

Mr. Hollister, of Litchfield, said in substance,—

"Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to second the passage of the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Darien. I do it, sir, because I have known Dr. Knight long as a citizen, a friend, and a scholar. He was a man who devoted his life to the care of those who could not take care of themselves. In the adoption of these resolutions the Assembly will give a fitting recognition to the honorable services of one of its best citizens."

The resolutions then passed unanimously, and were immediately transmitted to the senate.

PETER POWERS EVERTS.

Peter Powers Everts was born in Salisbury, Conn., July 17, 1811, and has always resided in said town. He is descended in the seventh generation from John Everts, the emigrant, who was one of the early settlers of Massachusetts Bay colony. In 1638 we find him at Concord, Mass.; about 1649 he moved from thence to Guilford, Conn. July 29, 1651, he purchased the home-lot on State Street now owned by John Benton. He is the ancestor of ex-Secretary of State Wm. M. Evarts, and all bearing that name who have come to our knowledge. One hundred years after his settlement in Guilford (1749), four of his great-grandchildren, brothers andchildren of Nathaniel Everts (1st), came to Salisbury. John settled on the place now the residence of Samuel S. Robbins. He kept a public-house, was one of the king's magistrates, and the first representative from this town in the General Assembly, which honor he received in eleven sessions of that body. He procured from Gov. Wentworth, of New Hampshire, the charters for the towns of Middlebury, New Haven, and Salisbury, in Vermont. The proprietors of Middlebury, mostly of this town, held their first meeting at his hotel, and elected their first selectmen. He died in 1786, and he and his wife are buried south of the highway, near their former residence. Silvanus settled near the southwest corner of the town. He married the sister of Thomas Chittenden, the Governor of Vermont from 1778 to 1797, and removed to Vermont before the Revolution.

Nathaniel (2d) settled on the place now the estate of Esther Everts Bradly, his granddaughter, who died Jan. 8, 1879. He was a large, powerful man, weighing more than three hundred pounds. He was an officer in the French and Indian war, and was under fire at Lewisburg, Cape Breton, where they say the bullets flew as thick as hailstones. He traded swords with an English officer, getting two shirt-cloths in the bargain. The sword is shown by his great-grandson, Peter P. Everts. On his return he had sent for his son Nathaniel, then about eight years old, to meet him on horseback, which he did at Spencertown, N. Y., after resisting several efforts of returning soldiers to get the horse away from him.

Peter P. Everts

Capt. Nathaniel Everts (3d) was brought from Guilford, Conn., on horseback, in his mother's arms. Mrs. Lemon Bradley, his granddaughter, has a rose-bush that was brought from Guilford at the same time, now one hundred and thirty-two years old. He possessed the homestead and the large landed estate of his father, nearly all of which is still in the family. He possessed great physical strength and dexterity. He was a proprietor in the Old Hill ore-bed and the forge at Mount Riga from 1783 to 1816. He was captain of militia, and served with Gen. Putnam at Horseneck. He and his widow were Revolutionary pensioners. He and his father were active supporters of the Congregational Church. But when the Methodists came around, his daughter Hannah, his wife, and soon himself became zealous Methodists, and his house ever after was the preaching-place and home of the Methodist itinerant. His name is on the bell of the Methodist Episcopal church at Lakeville as one of the building committee in 1816. His daughter Hannah was a member of the first class organized in town. His wife, Molly, as she was called, was the daughter of Capt. Samuel and Rachel Moore, of this town. She was noted for her gift and power in prayer. In her family devotions she always prayed for her children and her children's children down to the latest generation. Nine of her ten children became heads of families, and her descendants are numerous and highly respectable. Bishop C. D. Foss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, married her granddaughter. She died in 1841, aged ninety-five.

Silas Everts, oldest son of Capt. Nathaniel Everts (3d), inherited the sterling character of his fathers. He was a zealous Methodist, active in social meetings, and very seldom absent from the regular services of the sanctuary. He was a staunch Democrat. He was a frugal farmer and husbanded well his inheritance. He was a man whose advice was sought, and was universally esteemed, and strictly temperate in his habits. His first wife was the mother of his children. His homestead was at the Corner, just west of his father's. His youngest son, the subject of this sketch, received a common-school education. When a young man he was noted for his agility. While yet a boy he drove ox-team, drawing ore from the Old Hill. When of age he commenced life for himself as an ore-digger, which business he has followed in some capacity ever since. For several years life was a struggle almost unaided, but he was successful. He has owned and worked various mining claims in the Old Hill bed, and has been longer than any other person connected with the working of this mine. In 1848 he bought one-sixteenth of the proprietors' right of Thomas Chittenden, which he still retains. In 1849 he was appointed agent for the proprietors, to look after their interests at the mine. This position he retained until 1871, when he was succeeded by his son Charles. He was active in forming the Brook Pit Mining Company, and was appointed its first superintendent, also secretary and treasurer. He owns about one-seventh of the stock, and has been a director and officer of the company since its incorporation in 1864. He married Tryphene Barnett, daughter of John and Amelia Knapp Barnett. His mother-in-law celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday a few days since. A few months after his marriage he bought (1835) the homestead where he resides, near the east boundary of the ore grant. He has added to his estate till he now owns his father's and much of his grandfather's landed estate. He is surrounded by his children and their children with one exception. His youngest son, William P. Everts, is in the office of the Michigamme (iron) Mining Company, Marquette Co., Mich. He represented his town in the Legislature in 1856, and has been a Republican since the organization of the party.

He has held various town offices, and has often been intrusted with public business, and is known as a reliable business man. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church at Lakeville, of which he has been an official member some thirty years. He always contributes liberally to the church, and has an open hand to encourage every public enterprise in his native town. His son, Col. Charles Everts, who has to a certain extent superseded him in the mining business, was in 1879 appointed aide on Governor Andrews' staff.

Silas, his son, born Oct. 1, 1773, married Betsy Warner Underwood; also Betsy Lee, second wife; died March 10, 1859. Had three children,—Milan, Electa, and Peter P.

Peter P. Everts, born July 17, 1811, married Tryphene Barnett, Dec. 28, 1834. They had seven children, viz.: George, born March 22, 1836, died April 2, 1851; Jeannette, born May 10, 1838, married Elias F. Sanford, July 3, 1867 (one child, Mary Dalzell, born May 6, 1871); Charles (colonel), born Dec. 20, 1840, married Mary C. Gibbs, Jan. 22, 1873 (has two children,—Peter P., (2d), born in 1874; Arthur M., born July 29, 1877); Frederick B., born Feb. 28, 1844, married M. Emma Dauchy, April 6, 1869 (one child, William F., born Dec. 17, 1875); William P., born Jan. 4, 1849, married S. Jennie Knox, Oct. 23, 1879 (one child, George B., born Nov. 5, 1880); Emma Julia, born March 27, 1857.

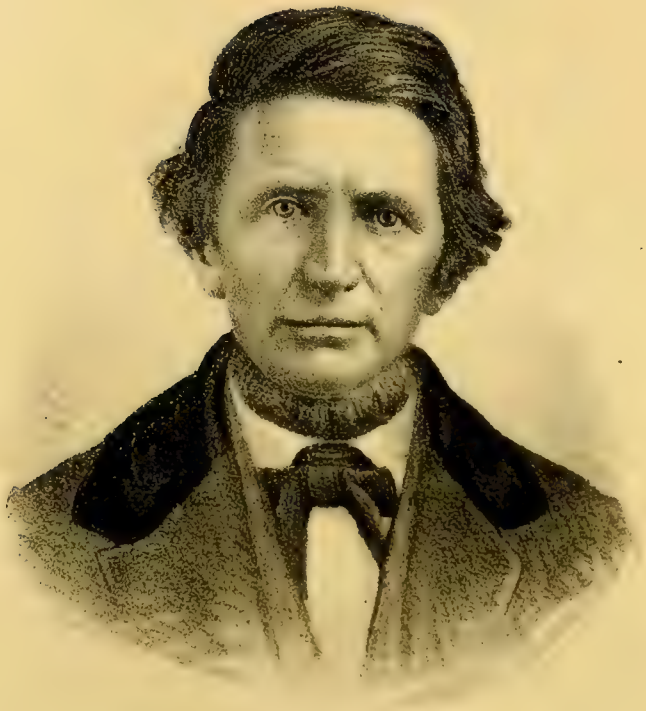
NEWTON J. REED.

Newton J. Reed, son of Josiah M. Reed, was born in Salisbury, Litchfield Co., Conn., April 13, 1817. The Reed family is scattered through various parts of the adjoining towns, and, in fact, throughout the entire West. We have no date at hand telling us when or where the first of the name settled in Litchfield County. Joshua M. Reed, a worthy man of Salisbury, had a large family of children, all of whom were among the most highly respected citizens that ever lived in the county.

Newton J. Reed was a farmer by occupation. He had also an interest in the "ore-bed" at Ore Hill, where he always resided. He married Mary, daughter of Charles McArthur, a son of a Scotchman, Dec. 29, 1838. She was born Oct. 24, 1817, in Hillsdale, N. Y. Of their three children, one only, Sarah A., is living. In politics he was a Republican, in religion a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died Feb. 3, 1860. Mr. Reed had gathered around him all the conveniences of life, and was just prepared to live and enjoy life, when, lo! "He was not, for God had taken him." The estimate placed upon him by the community in which he lived was indicated by one of the largest funerals witnessed in the place for many years. His loss will be long and severely felt, as well by the church and community as by the family he left.

COL. HARLO P. HARRIS.



Col. Harlo P. Harris is a lineal descendant from John Harris, who emigrated from Wales, and settled in Columbia Co., N. Y., at an early day. He was a farmer, and had a son John, born there, who became a farmer also, and was in comfortable circumstances. This John had six children,—John, David, Daniel, Milo, Luther, and Olive, all born in Alford, Berkshire Co., Mass.,—and died at a good old age. Milo, born in 1797, married Abigail Sugdan, whose ancestors came from Holland, and was father of eleven children,—Eleanor, Orra, Miles, Martin, Abigail, Milo, Susan, Calista, Llewellyn, Harlo P., and Hannah D. They were all born in Salisbury, Conn., but Milo and Susan, whose birthplace was Canaan. Mr. Harris was a farmer and charcoal-burner. He held several town offices, and died in 1875.

Harlo P. had very limited advantages for education, never attending school in the summer-time after he was eight years, and never but one term at an academy. He began at the early age of eight years to work in the "coal bush," and continued burning charcoal (in various States) until he was thirty-three years old. At that time he bought his father's farm of one hundred and sixty acres, in Salisbury, east of the Twin Lakes, and owned it until 1867.

In 1865, Mr. Harris became superintendent of the "Richmond Iron-Works." Holding that position two years, in 1867 he became book-keeper for the "Davis Digging Company," and remained there one year. With other parties, he formed a land company in the spring of 1868, and purchased twelve thousand acres of land in Iowa. He passed the winter of 1868–69 in Vermont, and in September, 1869, again returned thither, in the interests of the "Millerton Iron Company," and Barnum, Richardson & Co., and superintending the opening of coal-kilns until April, 1871, when he returned to Salisbury. He was connected with the construction of the Connecticut Western Railroad as foreman, remaining in this position till January, 1872, and during the same time built seventeen miles of fence under contract. From 1872 until the present (April, 1881), Col. Harris has been superintendent of the "Chatfield Mining Company," at Ore Hill. Col. Harris has always been active in everything in which he became interested. Business, politics, local improvements, all were "pushed" by the main strength of an active and vigorous nature. He was a Democrat in politics until 1855, when he joined the American or "Know-Nothing" party. In 1856 he became identified with the Republican organization, just formed, and voted for the Fremont electors. He continued to act with that party until 1872, when he supported Horace Greeley for President, and has since been a Democrat. He was a candidate for member of Legislature in 1860 and 1865, and again in 1872, when he was elected. In 1868 he was commissioned by President Johnson assistant assessor of the Thirty-second District of the State of New York, and performed the duties of that office for a short time. Jan. 27, 1877, he, Guernsey S. Parsons, of Waterbury, and Charles M. Joslyn, of Hartford, were appointed by Governor Richard D. Hubbard "aides-de-camp," with rank of colonel. He is assistant quartermaster on the staff of Maj.-Gen. F. M. Brown, of the "Putnam Phalanx," receiving that appointment in 1878. Col. Harris has never been a candidate for local office, with the single exception of member of school board, which position he has held since 1879.

Col. Harris married, April 2, 1854, Margaretta A., daughter of L. B. Sweet, of Copake, N. Y. They have had two children,—Maggie (born in 1863, and died in 1865) and Harlo, Jr., born Aug. 12, 1866.

Mrs. Harris is a member of the Congregational Church, and Col. Harris is a supporter of the same.

DANIEL B. COOK.

Daniel B. Cook, second son of Henry and Hannah (Bowen) Cook, was born in Harwinton, Conn., March 26, 1808. His father was son of Jonathan Cook, of Harwinton, where Henry also was born, and where he (Henry) married Hannah, daughter of Bazeliel Bowen, and where his six children were born. He moved to Salisbury about 1819, brought all of his children with him, and settled permanently at Ore Hill. He was actively engaged as a farmer all his life, and died at the age of fifty-seven years. His wife survived him several years, and was at her death seventy-six years old.

Daniel B. Cook commenced life poor, but by his industry, economy, and careful management he has made money. He was brought up a farmer, and a farmer he has continued to be through life, although he has dealt more or less in real estate, and been concerned in several mining companies at Ore Hill. In politics Mr. Cook has, from the organization of the Republican party, been a supporter of it. He has been called to the office of selectman by his fellow-townsmen, and discharged the duties faithfully and well.

Mr. Cook married Harriet, daughter of Alexander McAllister, of Northeast, N. Y., on April 11, 1839. Her grandfather, Archibald McAllister, was an emigrant from County Antrim, Ireland, and settled in Northeast before the American Revolution, and became a farmer. He had several children, one of whom was the father of Mrs. Cook. He was a farmer and miller, and was a well-to-do person, and had the characteristics of the Gaelic nature,—intelligence, industry, frugality, and honesty,—and the impress of that nature is stamped on all its descendants.

Mr. and Mrs. Cook are both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and both have been liberal in its support, as well as all good works. Their children are Edward D., George, Cassius, and Henry A., all married, and settled near their parents.

ROBERT LITTLE.

Robert Little, son of Ralph Little and Maria Fox, his wife, was born in Sheffield, Mass., Oct. 5, 1822. His father was a good business man, and combined the avocations of merchant and farmer. Robert was early inducted into the practical details of farming, and his advantages for education were only those derived from attendance at the district schools of Sheffield, until he was fifteen years of age, when he became a clerk in the store of his brother, Lucius Little, where he remained until he was of age.

In the spring of 1844 he married Cornelia M., daughter of Erastus Eldred and Maria (Ball), his wife. Mrs. Eldred being a widow, Mr. and Mrs. Little commenced their married life on Mr. Eldred's former place, in Salisbury, where they have since resided. Mr. Little's farm consists of about four hundred acres of land, beautifully situated in the pleasant valley of the Housatonic, and the buildings on the farm are the best to be seen in Salisbury. In politics Mr. Little is a staunch Republican, and earnest in his support of the principles of that party. He is a director of the "National Iron Bank" of Falls Village. Both Mr. and Mrs. Little are attendants at, and liberal supporters of, the Congregational Church. Mr. Little is one who stands high in the estimation of all, and one who is in full accord with all things tending to improve, advance, or elevate humanity, or develop the resources of his town.

Erastus Eldred, father of Mrs. Little, was born in Warren, Conn., and settled in Salisbury when a young man, became a farmer and merchant, and died Nov. 13, 1830, at the early age of thirty-nine years, leaving two children,—Elizabeth (deceased) and Cornelia M., now Mrs. Little. Mrs. Eldred survived him nearly fifty years, dying Jan. 25, 1880.

Minnie, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Little, was born Feb. 7, 1857. She married, Oct. 23, 1879, Mr. E. J. Hornbeck, and after only seven short months of married life died, May 30, 1880. Although treading only the flowery paths of life's morning, she had already made many warm and loving friends by the many beautiful traits of her lovely character. Her kind and loving ministrations to the poor and needy, her tender regard and solicitude for her friends, her kindly feelings towards all, had won for her that universal esteem which is enjoyed by comparatively few of her years. When but nineteen she united with the Congregational Church of Salisbury, and was devoted to her church, Sabbath-school, and all religious things. She seemed set apart as one too pure and delicate for the harsh scenes of life, and so, ere the way grew rough, and ere the meridian heat of life's noontide could scorch her fragile form, she was called away, leaving a whole community wrapped in gloom. In this we cannot enumerate all the influences which caused her associates to feel such regret for the departed, or such a great heart-throb of sympathy for the bereaved. From an article in the Connecticut Western News, shortly after her death, we extract the following: "An only child, reared in luxury, in love, in indulgence, the idol of her tender parents' hearts, just beginning life, with everything that this world can give to bind her here. . . . Seldom have we seen so few dry eyes as in the assemblage which attended her funeral. Her remains were arrayed in her bridal robes, unfolded for the first time since her marriage, placed in an elegant casket, surrounded by lovely flowers, and all that wealth and affection could do. Prayer was offered at the house of her father, after which the funeral cortege, consisting of some sixty carriages, proceeded to the Congregational church. The services commenced by the singing of the hymn 'Thou art gone to the grave, but we will not deplore thee.' Appropriate selections of Scripture were then read by the pastor, Rev. C. L. Kitchel, after which was sung that touching piece of music, 'Watching and Waiting,' a favorite of our departed friend. Then followed the sermon, by Mr. Kitchel, from the text, 'She is not dead, but sleepeth.' The services closed by the singing of the hymn, 'My Jesus, as Thou wilt,' and the long line of weeping friends proceeded to the cemetery, where all that was mortal of the loved one was committed to the dust, whence we are sure she will come in the resurrection morning, far brighter and more beautiful than ever, to a blissful immortality."

JAMES M. SELLECK.

James M. Selleck, son of Albert and Celina (Morgan) Selleck, was born in that part of Salisbury known as Selleck Hill, Nov. 27, 1836. His paternal ancestor, Bethel Selleck, was a native of Darien, Fairfield Co., Conn., and settled on Selleck Hill, Salisbury, Conn. Tradition says the first of the name to settle here was John Selleck.

Bethel was a farmer; died in 1818, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. He had five sons and five daughters.

Samuel Selleck, son of Bethel, was born on Selleck Hill; was always a farmer, and a member of the Congregational Church. He married Olive Andrews, and had seven children, viz.: Samantha, Harmon, Albert, Harvey, Sarah A., Maryette, and Phebe. Mr. Selleck died Jan. 6, 1849, aged eighty-one years.

Albert Selleck, son of Samuel and Olive (Andrews) Selleck, was born on the "old Selleck homestead," on Selleck Hill, Conn., June 29, 1802. In his younger days he was engaged in the manufacture of cloth. At the age of thirty, in 1832, he turned his attention entirely to farming, which he followed till his death, Jan. 11, 1868. In politics a Democrat. He was a member of the State Legislature, besides holding minor town offices. He married Celina Morgan, daughter of James Morgan and Sally Booth, of New Milford, Feb. 7, 1829. Mrs. Selleck was born July 21, 1802. Their children are as follows:

(1) Samuel H., deceased at thirty-three, was a merchant at Lakeville, Conn.

(2) Laura A., wife of Edmund Conklin (deceased), of Salisbury.

(3 and 4) James M. & George Booth, twins. George was a farmer with his brother, James M.; died Nov. 19, 1873, leaving a wife and four children.

(5) Maryette (Mrs. George Bower, of Salisbury).

(6) Phebe S. (Mrs. James R. Eggleston, a merchant miller in Salisbury).

Mrs. Selleck is a member of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Selleck was an attendant of the same.

James M. Selleck has always been an enterprising farmer. He received his education at the district schools of his native town. He has dealt more or less extensively in cattle, and stock generally, and has been successful. In 1874 he entered into partnership with his brother-in-law, James R. Eggleston, and purchased the Salisbury Flouring-Mills, the firm being known as Eggleston & Selleck. He is one of the largest farmers in Salisbury, and a man who has the confidence of his fellow-townsmen. In politics a Republican, and as such has been assessor and selectman. On the 20th of December, 1866, he married Mary P., daughter of Charles A. and Maria (Pierce) Hollister.

ERASTUS D. GOODWIN.

Ozias Goodwin, an Englishman, born in 1596, settled in Hartford in 1636, and died in 1683. He was a Revolutionary soldier, and settled in Sharon after the close of the Revolution; became a farmer and public man, and reared a large family. He was the first American ancestor of Erastus D. Goodwin.

Hezekiah Goodwin, son of Hezekiah, was born in Sharon, March 21, 1796, married Harriet Deming, Feb. 13, 1819. He served an apprenticeship to the combined trades of tanner and currier in his younger days; went to Central New York and followed that business for several years, when he returned to Sharon, and after remaining a short time settled in Salisbury, where he was an agriculturist until his death, Nov. 27, 1848. He was a modest, unassuming man, never aspiring to political positions; was an active, enterprising, accommodating business man, and very successful. He served as soldier in the war of 1812. His wife died Oct. 11, 1829. Their children were Laura A., wife of John E. Ensign, of Tennessee; Charlotte G., wife of Henry Daball, of Onondaga Co., N. Y.; Erastus D.; Julia G., wife of James Ensign, now residing on the old homestead; and Harriet, who died, aged twenty-three. By a second marriage, to Fanny Lowrey, he had one child, Frances (deceased), wife of Joseph Hallock, a prominent citizen of Catskill, N. Y. Mrs. Fanny L. Goodwin survived her husband many years.

Erastus D. Goodwin was born in Sharon, Jan. 7, 1823, and was conveyed by his parents to Salisbury in April of the same year; came up under his father's instruction on the farm; was educated at common schools and academy; became a farmer, and is truly a representative of the better class of agriculturists, owning a farm of several hundred acres. He is a Democrat in politics, and, elected by that party, represented Salisbury in the Legislature of 1869. He was selectman of Salisbury for two years. He married, Nov. 29, 1865, Julia, daughter of Samuel Emmons, of New Marlboro', Mass. Their children are Julia E., Hezekiah, Martha E., and Mary E.

JAMES LANDON.

of children, one of whom was named ——, born in Boston in 1685, and removed to Southold, L. I., where he married Nancy Vaill, and had the following children, viz.: Joseph, James, Daniel, David, John, Mary, Rachel, and Lydia. There is no record of his name or death.

Daniel Landon, grandson of James Landon, who came from Wales, was born at Southold, L. I., in 1714; married Martha Young, daughter of Rev. John Young, a Presbyterian minister of Southold, May 22, 1736. He was the first of the name to settle in Litchfield, Conn., and was numbered among her early settlers. He was very zealous in working for the welfare of St. Michael's Church, at Litchfield, Conn. From records we quote the following: "Capt. Daniel Landon officiated as lay-reader, being always anxious to promote the welfare of the church; all his family attended with him, through honor and dishonor, through good report and evil report." The war coming on, the salary ceased. Churchmen became unpopular. They were persecuted throughout the war of the Revolution. The church of St. Michael, in Litchfield, was a mark for the maliciously disposed, and its windows stood as shattered monuments of the vengeance of adversaries. When Gen. Washington passed through Litchfield in the Revolutionary war, the soldiers, to evince their attachment to him, threw a shower of stones at the windows; he reproved them, saying, "I am a churchman, and wish not to see the church dishonored and desolated in this manner."

Capt. Daniel Landon died suddenly, July 11, 1790, aged seventy-seven years. The following is the inscription on his monument in the West graveyard at Litchfield, Conn.:

"Sacred to the memory of Daniel Landon, of Litchfield, who died July 11, 1790, aged 77 years; who served as clerk to the Episcopal Church in Litchfield forty years.

"His God he served with pious zeal,
The sacred dome was his delight;
Far distant from his holy hill
He took his everlasting flight.
Lo! here I leave this earthly clay,
And fly beyond the ethereal blue,
Unchained into eternal day,
To sing the praise of God anew."*

Seth Landon, son of Daniel Landon, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Dec. 18, 1749; married Anna Beach, Dec. 26, 1771. He was a gentleman of good mental powers, amiable in the relations of life, of strict honesty, unbending integrity, and exemplary piety. He died Feb. 4, 1832, leaving children; one, Seth, Jr., born April 13, 1777, married Sally Catlin, March 11, 1802, and died Oct. 18, 1843, leaving children; one, Huldah Seymour Landon, married Frederick W. Plumb, of Litchfield.†

James Landon, an extensive farmer in Salisbury, is a son of Ashbel Landon, and grandson of James Landon, the first of this family to settle in Salisbury, Conn., before the Revolutionary war, on the place known as "Tory Hill." Said James Landon, Sr., was a Tory during the Revolutionary war, and a firm adherent of the old Episcopal Church, as his ancestors had been. He had eleven children, of whom Ashbel was the tenth, born Aug. 7, 1773, on the farm now owned by his son James.

James, Sr.'s, conduct during the Revolutionary war cost him his real estate during his lifetime. He was a member of the Colonial Legislature in May, 1759, and took an active part in everything that had for its object the building up of society. He was a farmer by occupation, and died at a ripe old age.

Ashbel Landon married Lorain Chapman, April 3, 1783. She was born June 3, 1764. Their children were Betsey, Letty, Edmund, William, Horace, and James.

Mr. Landon was a well-to-do farmer, and a man respected by all. He was a warden in the Episcopal Church, and held various town offices. He died Sept. 11, 1846, and his wife died Oct. 11, 1835.

James Landon, son of Ashbel, was born on the old Landon homestead, at Tory Hill, Salisbury, Conn., Oct. 2, 1804. His advantages for an education were very limited, yet, by that same indomitable energy which is a very marked characteristic of his nature, we find him able to teach school ere he had reached manhood's years. This he followed several winters; but as his father desired him to remain at home with him on the farm, he did so, and upon the death of his father, in 1846, came in possession of the old homestead by paying the other heirs.

To his once small farm he has kept adding little by little, until now (1881) he and his only son own some twelve hundred acres of as good land as there is to be found in old Litchfield County. He has dealt extensively in stock, and in that way has made money. In politics a Republican.

In the May session of the State Legislature of 1859, just one hundred years after his honored grandfather, James Landon, had occupied a place in the halls of legislation, we find him there, serving as a member on the bank committee. He also has filled many town offices to the general satisfaction of his constituents.

He has been twice married, first to Jane E. Heath, daughter of Stephen Heath, March 6, 1833. Their children are Jane L., wife of George B. Clark, of Salisbury; and James H., a large farmer in Sharon. Mrs. Landon died March 24, 1836. Mr. Landon's second wife was Mary Darrow, whom he married Oct. 10, 1838. She died June 11, 1868.

James H. Landon was born March 14, 1836; married Mary Barton, daughter of L. Barton, of Salisbury, and to them have been born three children, viz.: Harriet, Albert, and Edith.

* Composed by himself. † See history of Plumb family.

CHARLES H. BISSELL.

Charles H. Bissell, son of William and Ann Eliza (Loveland) Bissell, was born on the farm where he now resides, in Salisbury, Conn., Oct. 24, 1829. His great-grandfather was Col. George Bissell, who came probably from Litchfield, and settled on the farm above mentioned long before the Revolutionary war. He settled on "Tory Hill," and his property has always been in possession of the family. He had brothers and sisters, and married for his first wife a Gay, for his second, a Hoskens. He at the Revolution swore allegiance to George III.; was drafted, and fled; was pursued and captured, and was released by his sons. His children were Joseph, George, Azubal, Elizabeth, and John. This John was a captain, married a Kilbourn, of Litchfield, and died, a farmer, at an old age. Their children were Charles, Milo, Monrovia, Benjamin, Charlotte, William, Herman, Mary, John, and Lucy. Benjamin enlisted in the war of 1812, was wounded, and drew a pension for his services. Lucy married a Meigs, an army officer. Milo was killed by a horse. Monrovia was drowned. Herman died in the island of Cuba.*

William Bissell was born March 30, 1794, and died April 5, 1869. He settled on the homestead, and married Ann Eliza Loveland, by whom he had children,—Marion, Mary, Maria, Charles H., Jane, William, and Ann Eliza. He afterwards married Roxanna Nobles. Their only child, Frank, died, aged nine years. All are now (1881) living but Ann Eliza and Frank.

William Bissell was a farmer, and did well his part among the people. He was selectman, and held other town offices. He was a Democrat in politics.

Charles H. Bissell was reared to a farmer's life, and entered into his work, and is to-day, with his two hundred and thirty acres of fertile land, one of Salisbury's substantial and representative farmers. He married, Oct. 27, 1859, Thankful Ann, daughter of John Cleveland, of Salisbury. Their son Frank died young.

Mr. Bissell believes in the Democratic principles of government, and is a supporter of the candidates of that party. He has been selectman, member of board of relief, assessor, and represented his town in the Legislature of 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Bissell are supporters of Christianity, and attendants on its services.

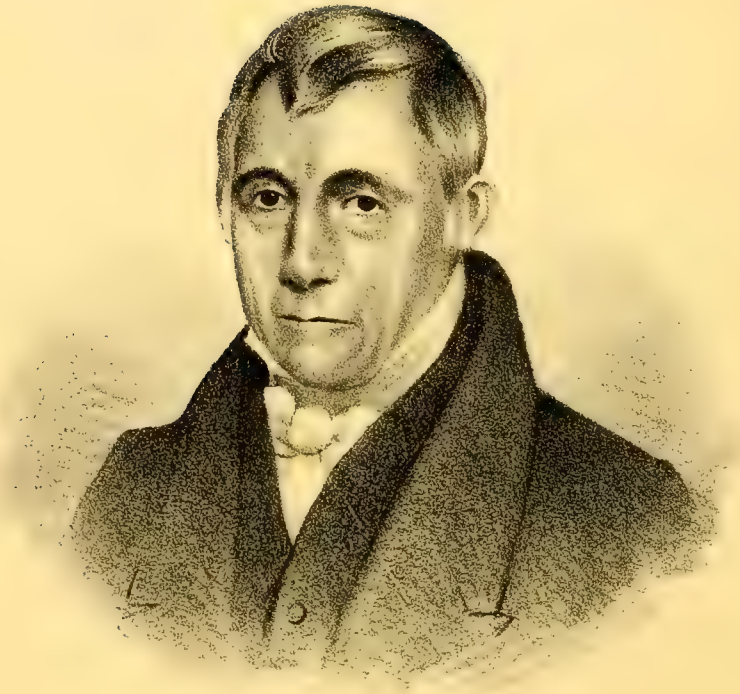
During all his life Mr. Bissell has walked among the people of Salisbury, and has won many friends. He is deeply interested in everything tending to advance the interests of Salisbury, and is respected and honored by a large circle. He is a true type of the genial New England farmer, whose local attachment is strong, and who, with intelligence, industry, and economy, is making those improvements and advancements which are the wonder of the world.

* For further history of Bissell family, see biography of H. B. Bissell, Litchfield.

JOHN F. CLEAVELAND.

John F. Cleaveland, son of Bradford and Eunice (Farnum) Cleaveland, was born in Copake, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1802. His father was a son of P. Cleaveland, and was born in Canterbury, Conn.; married Eunice Farnum, of Salisbury, and settled in Copake, N. Y., where six of his seven children were born, viz.: Elisha W., Mason, John F., Bezaleel (deceased), Cyrus, Mary J., and Frederick F. (deceased), born in Salisbury. In 1810, Bradford Cleaveland settled in Salisbury, Conn., with his family, where he continued to reside till his death, April 21, 1849. His wife died the same day, and was buried in the same grave with her husband. Mr. Cleaveland was a cooper by trade while a resident of Copake, N. Y., but after his settlement in Salisbury, Conn., he followed the occupation of a farmer, and in connection owned and ran a saw-mill.

John F. Cleaveland removed to Salisbury with his parents when but eight years of age, and with the exception of three years which he spent in the mercantile business in Livingston Co., N. Y., has resided in Salisbury. Mr. Cleaveland worked four years by the month at eleven dollars a month for his wife's uncle, Thomas N. Smith.



About 1826 or '27, Mr. Cleaveland went to Livingston Co., N. Y., where he was engaged in the mercantile business some three years. July 1, 1829, he married Mary S., daughter of Thaddeus and Hannah (Curtis) Smith. Mrs. Cleaveland was born Jan. 27, 1805, and at five years of age went to live with her uncle, Thomas N. Smith, and continued with him till her marriage. In March, 1830, Mr. Cleaveland returned to Salisbury, and took Mr. Thomas N. Smith's farm on shares, which he continued to work till the death of Mr. Smith (March 1, 1857), when he purchased the same of the heirs, his wife receiving about the half interest as a munificent gift from her uncle. Mr. Cleaveland now owns some five hundred acres of well-improved land on Town Hill, Salisbury, Conn. In politics a Republican. He has held various town offices. Mr. and Mrs. Cleaveland are regular attendants and supporters of the Congregational Church. Their children are Thankful A., wife of Charles H. Bissell, and Smith, who resides at home, unmarried.

THOMAS N. SMITH.

Thomas N. Smith, son of Jared Smith and Dorcas, daughter of Ebenezer Beecher, was born in Southbury, Conn., Sept. 10, 1768. He settled in Salisbury, Conn. (that part known as Town Hill), some time previous to the year 1800, where he owned some three hundred acres of good land, and where he followed the occupation of a farmer. He was twice married, first to Thankful, daughter of Aaron Page. She died in 1837, and he married for his second wife Susan Hinman, of Southbury, Conn. She died in 1867. In politics a Republican, he was a prominent man in Salisbury, having been selectman fourteen years, member of the State Legislature three terms, besides holding many other town offices. He was often called upon to settle estates, which he did with credit to himself, and generally to the satisfaction of the parties interested. He was a member of the Congregational Church, and a liberal supporter of all religious institutions. He died March 1, 1857, aged nearly eighty-nine years. He lived respected and died regretted.

Thaddeus Smith was born in Southbury, Conn.; married Hannah Curtis, and had four children, viz.: Ira D., Maria, Harriet, and Mary S., wife of John F. Cleaveland. Mr. Smith settled in Salisbury about 1803, and continued there till he was killed by a horse, in June, 1805.

CHAPTER LVI.

SHARON.*

Geographical—Topographical—Conflicting Claims to Territory—Survey of the Town—Line Between New York and Connecticut Defined—Indian History—The First Settlement—Richard Sackett—Sale of the Town—List of Original Purchasers—Patent of the Town—The Settlement in Distress—The First Death—The First Birth—First Marriage—The Moravians—The Revolutionary War—Shay's Rebellion—List of Early Settlers.

THIS town is located in the western part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Salisbury; on the east by the Housatonic River, which separates it from Cornwall, on the south by Kent, and on the west by Dutchess Co., N. Y. The surface of the town is hilly in the eastern part, while the western portion forms a part of an extensive valley.

"The northwestern part of Connecticut was sold and settled at a much later period than any other portion of the State. As early as the year 1686 nearly all the lands in the colony had been disposed of, except those lying north of Waterbury and Woodbury and west of Simsbury. Under the charter of Charles II., obtained in 1662, the colony of Connecticut, though nominally dependent on the crown, enjoyed, in fact, a strictly republican form of government, the only service they were required to render to the crown of England being the one-fifth part of the produce of such mines of gold and silver as should be discovered. Charles was succeeded by his brother, James II., a prince of very arbitrary and vindictive propensities, and no sooner was he firmly seated on his throne than he began to manifest his tyrannical disposition by causing the charters which had been granted by his predecessors to be vacated, and by assuming to himself the right of appointing Governors for the different colonies. It was feared by the people that these royal Governors would seize upon all the public lands which had not been sold and granted by the colony, and measures were taken to prevent such unjustifiable proceedings. It was believed that if the public lands were sold, and the title to them guaranteed by the Governor and Company of the colony, they could not be seized for the king, and under this impression the lands within the limits just mentioned were, on the 26th day of January, 1686, conveyed to the towns of Hartford and Windsor. The grant, however, did not include the lands west of the Ousatonic River, the Assembly probably supposing that, on account of their great distance from the settled parts of the colony, they were beyond the reach of the royal Governor's rapacity. In October, after the grant just mentioned, Sir Edmund Andross came into the colony, and, by virtue of a commission from King James, took upon himself the administration of the government, and continued in it about two years, or until the deposition of King James, when the people quietly resumed their ancient form of government under the charter.

"The lands above mentioned being deemed of little value, and the more fertile parts of the State being but thinly populated, it was more than thirty years before any attempts were made to settle them. About the year 1722 the public attention was turned to the 'Western Lands,' as they were called; and as they began to rise in value the towns of Hartford and Windsor laid claim to them, under the ancient grant which had been made to them under the circumstances which have been mentioned. This claim created a strong excitement throughout the colony, and a long and bitter controversy ensued, which resulted in a division of the lands between the towns and the colony, the towns taking the eastern portion and the colony the western.

"This contention with Hartford and Windsor had retarded the sale of the 'Western Lands,' but that difficulty was now adjusted, and the Assembly took measures, soon after 1730, to effect this object; and for this purpose they were surveyed, and laid out into townships of suitable dimensions. At the session in May, 1732, Edmund Lewis, Esq., Capt. Stephen Noble, and Mr. William Gaylord were appointed a committee to view the colony lands west of the Ousatonic River, and to lay out a township in the northern section of them. They were also endowed with discretionary power to lay out a township on the south of the one just mentioned, if, upon viewing the lands, they should be of opinion that they were of such a quality as to render them a desirable place for a new settlement. This committee entered promptly upon their duties, and by their report, dated at New Milford, Oct. 9, 1732, it appears they laid out both townships. The north township, now Salisbury, they denominated 'the township of M,' and the south township they called N. S. The remainder of the country lands west of the Ousatonic River were afterwards annexed to Kent. The boundaries of the second township are thus described by the committee:

* Condensed, by permission, from Hon. Charles F. Sedgwick's excellent "History of Sharon."

"'Then, having taken a view of the whole tract, we proceeded and laid out a second township, which begins at the southwest corner of the aforesaid township of M, it being a stake set in the ground, and many stones laid to it, standing on the east side of a pond, as above set forth; and from thence the line runs 12½ D. W., with the line of partition between said province of New York and the Colony of Connecticut, nine miles to a heap of stones laid on a rock, in the aforesaid line of partition, and is about two miles east from Captain Sackett's dwelling-house, which is the southwest corner bounds of said second township,—from thence we run the south line of said second township E. 9½ D, south four miles and a half and 115 rods, to the Ousatonic River, where we marked a white-oak tree, and laid many stones to it, for the southeast corner bounds of said second township, and we have marked many trees and made many monuments in the said south line. Thus we have surveyed and laid out the township of N. S., and it is bounded north on the township of M., south on the country lands, west on the aforesaid line of partition between the province of New York and the Colony of Connecticut, and east on the Ousatonic River.' The above work was completed October 7, 1732.

"It would seem that the way was now prepared for the sale and settlement of the township, but the Hartford and Windsor lands, being nearer the settled portions of the colony, probably afforded a more desirable field for the enterprise of new settlers, and the colony lands were neglected. Other circumstances also existed which produced a serious delay in bringing the lands in Sharon into market. The line of partition between the colony of Connecticut and the province of New York was defined and established in May, 1731. The commissioners to settle the boundaries between the different jurisdictions on the part of Connecticut were Samuel Eells, Roger Wolcott, and Edmund Lewis; on the part of New York, Cadwalader Colden, Vincent Mathews, and Jacobus Bruyn, Jr.; and the articles of settlement are dated Dover, May 14, 1731."

INDIANS IN SHARON.

"There was a somewhat numerous tribe of Indians in Sharon before its settlement by the white inhabitants. Their principal village was on the eastern border of Indian pond, in the northwest corner of the town, where they had considerable clearings. The Indian name of this pond was Weequagnock. There were numbers of them, too, on the borders of the other pond, and in the valley of the Ten-Mile River. The Indian name of this stream was Webotuck. They were never sufficiently numerous to prove dangerous to the safety of the settlers, but their dissatisfaction because of the refusal of the proprietors to acknowledge their claims to a certain quantity of land which they insisted was reserved to them in their sale to Thomas Lamb, and the agitation of that matter for nearly fifteen years, was a cause of fear and anxiety to their immediate neighbors during that period. The matter was brought before the Assembly by a joint memorial of the proprietors and Indians, presented in 1742, which will at once give an explanation of the pending troubles, and which was in the words following:

"'To the Honorable, the General Assembly of the Colony of Connecticut in General Court assembled, at Hartford, in said Colony, on the second Thursday in May, A.D. 1742.

"'The memorial of Peter Pratt, Nathaniel Skinner, and Jonathan Dunham, agents for said town, and Stephen Nequitimaugh Nanhoon, and others of the Indian nations, residing in said Sharon, humbly showeth—

"'That they, the said Stephen Nequitimaugh Nanhoon, and others of the Indian natives, residing in Sharon, were the proper owners of the lands contained in the said township of Sharon and Salisbury, adjoining to said Sharon, and that a considerable part of said lands was honorably purchased of said Indians, and paid for by Thomas Lamb of said Salisbury, and that he, the said Lamb, in negotiating the said purchases of said Indians, did take advantage of their ignorance, and as they have since understood, did obtain a deed or deeds from them or some of them for more of said land than ever they sold or intended to sell to said Lamb, and particularly the place at the northwest corner of Said Sharon, where the said Indians live and improve, and always designed to reserve to themselves for a settlement, besides several other parcels that have never been sold to the English; that the Government's Committee have obtained the rights purchased by said Lamb of the Indians, and have sold all the lands in the townships of Salisbury and Sharon to the proprietors of said Towns, who are now improving and are entering on the said lands still claimed by the said Indians, which has aroused a great deal of uneasiness among the Indians, they looking upon themselves as defrauded of their rights.

"'That many of the Proprietors of Sharon are likewise inclined to believe that the said Indians, who were the proper owners of said land, did never, to this day sell to the said Lamb or to this government, all the lands in said Sharon or Salisbury, but that they have still an honest right to that said tract where the said Indians now live, as also to one mile in width across the south end of said town of Sharon, and that they are willing the said tract where the Indians now live should be restored to them and confirmed to the said Indians, though the Proprietors have purchased the same of the government, Provided they can have it made good to them by other reasonable satisfaction.

"'Whereupon your Honors' memorialists humbly pray that the Honorable Assembly would take the case into their consideration and would appoint a Committee to repair to Sharon to hear and examine and to enquire into the claims of the said Indians, and purchases that have been obtained from them either by the said Lamb or others, with power to agree, settle, and determine all matters of difference and controversy relating to the premises, and for the quieting the said Proprietors and the said Indians, or that your Honors would in some other way, as in your wisdom you shall think fit, find a remedy.

"'Your memorialists further show that their is a very considerable number of said Indians, living at said northwest corner of said Sharon, and others not far from them, that are desirous of being instructed in the Doctrines of the Gospel; to be taught to read the Holy Scriptures, and be informed of the way of salvation therein revealed; and that their children may be educated according to Christianity: which your memorialists also recommend to your Honors consideration, hoping that your Honors will be inclined to do something towards their encouragement; and your Honors' memorialists as in duty bound shall ever pray. Dated in Hartford this 13th day of May A.D. 1742.'

"Upon this memorial a committee was appointed, consisting of the Hon. Thomas Fitch, afterwards Governor of the colony, Daniel Edwards, Esq., of Hartford, afterwards a judge of the Superior Court, and Robert Walker, Esq., of Hartford, who was a large proprietor of the lands in Salisbury, whose duty it should be to investigate the subject matter of the memorial; and they met the parties in Sharon on the 11th day of October, 1742, and heard them by their interpreters and witnesses.

"They made a long and elaborate report, in which they gave a history of Lamb's purchase, and, believing that the Indians had misunderstood the bargain, recommended that a certain quantity, not exceeding fifty acres, should be set off to them, that some equivalent should be allowed the proprietors, and that some provision should be made for the religious teachings of the Indians.

"The Assembly approved the views of the committee, and requested Mr. Pratt, the minister of Sharon, to devote some time to the advancement of the spiritual interests of the tribe, but, as they made no provision to remunerate the proprietors, no final adjustment of the difficulty was effected. The Indian improvements contained some ninety acres, and, besides this, they demanded a large tract on the adjoining mountains for firewood. To this the proprietors would not consent without a compensation from the government, and the old troubles returned with increased acrimony.

"In 1745 another effort was made to call the attention of the Assembly to these Indian troubles. The proprietors of Sharon advised their honors that the Indians were uneasy and restless, in view of the state of their affairs, and they added: 'We can't but think needful for some proper care, in this difficult time, to be taken.'

"This memorial was continued in the Assembly till 1746, when William Preston, of Woodbury, and Samuel Canfield, of New Milford, were appointed a committee to lay out the Indian lands by metes and bounds. This committee, in the prosecution of their duties, employed the celebrated Roger Sherman, then a humble shoemaker at New Milford, to lay out the Indian lands, in his capacity of county surveyor, and to mark out definitely their boundaries. All this was accomplished by Mr. Sherman, but nothing was done to remunerate the proprietors, and both parties were left to contest their rights as best they could. The Indians were stimulated in their quarrel by certain disorderly persons, who made them believe they were their special friends, whose counsels were prevalent in shaping their course. Under the guidance of those persons they were emboldened to resistance, and gave great uneasiness and trouble to the proprietors. One Van Arenan, a Dutchman, pretended to make a new purchase of their lands, and it became necessary to take strong measures to prevent open and forcible collision. This state of things portended so much danger that Governor Law found it necessary to issue a formal proclamation to the intruders, warning them that their Indian titles were worthless, and that the rights of the proprietors would be protected at all hazards.

"About the year 1750, Thomas Barnes moved into the town from New Fairfield, in Fairfield County, and purchased a large tract of land in the neighborhood of the Indian territory. In the course of a year or two he persuaded the Indians to sell out their lands to him, and took a formal deed of their possessions from two of their chiefs, Nequitimaugh and Bartholomew. It was contrary to law to take deeds of the Indian proprietors in that way, but the Legislature, on the petition of Barnes, confirmed his title, and he took possession of the disputed territory, the Indians having gone to other parts. They carried with them, however, a deep sense of the wrongs they had sufferd, and some of them were often back among the inhabitants, complaining that they had been overreached, and often giving significant hints of the resentment which was rankling in their bosoms. The old French war commenced about this time, and the stories of Indian atrocities which were borne on every breeze filled the whole country with terror and alarm. Four persons were murdered about this time between Stockbridge and Lenox, and this, with other alarming incidents, produced a very general consternation in Sharon.

"In 1754 one Thomas Jones had purchased a tract of land near the Indian pond which had been claimed by the Indians, and built a log house upon it. His family were frequently disturbed in the night season by what they supposed to be the noise of Indians about the house, and an armed guard was kept there during nights for several weeks. A memorial was presented to the Assembly detailing the causes of danger from the Indians, by which the settlers were alarmed, and the statements of the memorial were fortified by the depositions of some half-dozen persons who kept the guard, detailing with minuteness the incidents of one night. The testimony of one witness was as follows:

"'John Palmer, of lawful age, testifieth and saith, that some time ago I came to dwell, as a hired man, with the above named Mr. Thomas Jones, and have been a member of his family in the time of the late disturbances, which he has testified about, but have not seen any Indians but one night, when I was upon the watch with several other men, but have frequently heard their whoops and whistles near his house, which noises of the Indians I am well acquainted with, having been a considerable time a captive among them and released from them last May. The time when I saw the Indians near Mr. Jones' was the latter part of the Sabbath day night before last. He came and put his head partly in at the door-way, against a blanket that hung before the door. This he did twice. A man near me proposed to shoot, but I prevented him, hoping for a fairer shot, but he not coming there again, I went to the side of the house and looked through a crack between the logs of which the house was made, and saw an Indian but a few rods from the house, it being clear moon light. I then put my gun through the crack and shot, but not having advantage to take good sight, suppose I did not hit him. I then went to a place cut out for a window and saw him clearly, and shot again with a gun that was put into my hands, and supposed I had killed him, for I thought he fell down, upon which I took another man's gun and went out to see what I could discern, but not finding him at the place, scouted some time for him, at length discovered him at a small distance behind a tree. I endeavored to shoot again, but my gun missed fire. I called to know if any one of the company was near me when one man came to me. He went further in search of him, and presently had a sight of him, when the other man presently shot. Afterwards I shot at him again, but don't know that we hit him, except my second shot. I supposed him to be much wounded then, for he walked very poorly, stooping near the ground, his left hand holding up his blanket to his right side and his right arm hanging as if it was broken. But the men all coming out of the house after I had shot the last time, I run to the house, fearing lest some other Indians might get into the house in our absence and kill the women and children, so I saw the Indians no more. I saw no more Indians, but one of the company said he saw another, which by his account I believe he did. I have since seen no more, but heard their whoops and whistles as aforesaid. Dated October 14, 1754, and sworn before John Williams, Justice of the Peace.'

"Such is a specimen of the exciting incidents of the early years of the history of the town. The peace between England and France in 1761 put an end to all Indian claims.

"There is no tradition or record bearing upon the history of the town which has any reference to the old French war other than these Indian alarms, except the simple fact that Col. Elmore, of the war of the Revolution, was a lieutenant in the service of the previous war."

THE FIRST SETTLEMENT.

"Several years before the settlement of the boundaries one Richard Sackett had located himself at the place now called the Steel-Works, in the beautiful valley of the Ten-Mile River, about seven miles south of the now village of Sharon. The whole region was a wilderness, and, it being in the time of Queen Anne's war, he was exposed to imminent peril from hostile savages. He acquired large possessions of land, and his settlement is spoken of in contemporary documents and records as Sackett's Farm. He had been a sea-captain in early life, and, in connection with wealthy individuals in the city of New York, he commenced at an early day to purchase the Indian title to the lands near him. The colony line not having been established, he probably availed himself of his knowledge of astronomy, acquired in the study of navigation, and made experiments and observations, based upon a treaty of partition made in 1683, but which had never been carried out by actual survey, and persuaded himself that the boundary line, when surveyed, would run within about two miles of the Ousatonic River. In this belief he purchased of Metoxon, the great chief of all the Indian tribes in that region, whose residence was probably at Copake Flats, N. Y., about twenty-two thousand acres of land, more than seven thousand acres of which the survey of the boundary line showed to be in Connecticut. The boundaries were definitely traced in the treaty of purchase, but in general terms they were as follows:

"The east line commenced at a place which the Indians called Wimpeting, at the western base of a range of mountains, about seven miles south of Sharon village, and from that point it followed the western base of the mountain-range northerly to a point in Salisbury a little east of Town Hill, so called. From that point the line ran northwesterly to the base of the mountain north of the Ore Hill, which in the Indian deed is called Ponsumpsie, thence southwesterly to the foot of the mountain west of Spencer's Corner, then, following that range, southerly through the Wassaic valley to Sackett's other possessions. Looking at this territory, in all its characteristics and resources, we can hardly conceive of any other which exceeds it in rural beauty or sources of wealth.

"He, believing that the whole tract was within the territory of New York, obtained a confirmation of his title from the provincial government, and from Queen Anne's Most Excellent Majesty. He exercised acts of ownership in different parts of the territory. He built a dwelling-house in what is now called Sharon Valley, which stood west of the Ten-Mile River, a little west of the malleable-iron works, and just within the territory of Connecticut. There he settled a tenant by the name of Baltus Lott, a Dutchman. There can be no doubt that the house occupied by this individual was the first house built by a white man in Sharon, and that he was the first white inhabitant of the town. Sackett also made other improvements in various portions of the lands claimed by him; but the running of the boundary line in 1731 showed him that a large and valuable portion of them were within the jurisdiction of Connecticut, and that so much of them would be lost to him unless he could obtain a confirmation of his title from that colony.

"He immediately commenced petitioning the General Court of Connecticut for the recognition of his title, and prosecuted his suit for nearly seven years. He urged, from time to time, his claims to the land for the reasons that he had expended large sums of money in the purchase of it, in the full belief that it was in New York; that he had braved many dangers during a long residence in the wilderness, encountered perils and privations of various kinds, had built a grist-mill for the benefit of the neighboring inhabitants, and in various other ways urged a confirmation of his title. His petitions were uniformly rejected by the Legislature, and he, after several years of effort, satisfied that a further prosecution would be useless, abandoned it forever; but his tenant, Baltus Lott, held on to his possession for several years after the town was settled, despite the many efforts of the proprietors to dislodge him, and finally compelled them to pay him a liberal price for his improvements.

"The colony of Connecticut ever made it a practice to deal justly by the Indian claimants before they attempted to dispose of its land by settlements. Treating Sackett's purchase as a nullity, the Governor and Company employed Thomas Lamb, who lived at Lime Rock, in Salisbury, to buy up the Indian title to the lands in Sharon, and in October, 1738, he effected a purchase from the tribe claiming title to them for about four hundred and fifty dollars. The indefiniteness and uncertainty of this contract with Lamb as to how much, if any, land was reserved to the Indians afterwards, as will be seen, caused no little trouble to the settlers.

"It will be observed that the committee who laid out the township mention in their report to the Legislature that there had been laid out in country grants about four hundred acres of land. This was the designation given to lands patented by the colony to individual purchasers. The land thus described was near Hitchcock's Corner. It was laid out in two parcels,—one, of three hundred acres, to Samuel Orvis, of Farmington, and another, of about one hundred acres, to Jonathan Bird, of the same town. Both pieces were surveyed by Mr. Lewis about the time of the original survey of the town. This grant included lands of the very first quality, and extended as far north as to include the farm of the late Southard Hitchcock, Esq. Orvis and Bird never occupied their lands, but before 1734 sold them to one Daniel Jackson, and the patent was taken out in Jackson's name, and the land for many years was called Jackson's patent. Daniel Jackson was the first New England man who lived in Sharon. His house stood where the house lately owned by the Sharon Manufacturing Company stands. He was originally from Newtown, in Fairfield County, but at the time of his purchase he resided in Dover, N. Y. His son, Jehiel Jackson, who once lived where George Maxam now lives, in the Great Hollow, was the first white child born in Sharon. Mr. Jackson lived but a few years in town. In February, 1739, he sold his patent to Garret Winegar, and removed to Great Barrington, Mass."

THE SALE OF THE TOWN.

"The town was divided into fifty-three rights, and sold at public auction at New Haven, in October, 1738. The following is a list of the original purchasers: Nathaniel Skinner, Thomas Skinner, Nathaniel Skinner, Jr., Samuel Calkin (two rights), Samuel Gillet, Joshua Lyon, Joseph Skinner, Ichabod Foot, Stephen Calkin, Samuel Hutchinson, Timothy Pierce (three rights), James Smith, Ebenezer Mudge, John Sprague, John Pardee, Niles Coleman, Matthew Judd, Jabez Crippen, William Goodrich (two rights), Jonathan Petit, Zephaniah Swift, Joseph Parke, Joseph Holley, Caleb Chappel, Josiah Gillet, Jr., Samuel Beach, Joseph Monroe, Eben Case, Samuel Butler (three rights), Benjamin Johns, James Talmadge, Daniel Hunt, Thomas Spafford, John Goold, Benjamin Owen, Ebenezer Norton (three rights), Samuel Comstock, Jonathan Peck, Jonathan Case, Moses Case, John Woodin.

"These purchasers formed a legal corporation, whose designation was and is 'The Proprietors of the Common and Undivided Land in the Township of Sharon.' The clerks of the corporation have been Nathaniel Skinner, John Williams, Daniel Griswold, Samuel Canfield, Samuel E. Everitt, and Eben W. Chaffee. The corporation had power to set out to each proprietor in severalty his share of the lands, and at different times they have been thus deeded, and each right has furnished to its owner nearly seven hundred acres of land. The average price of each right was about one thousand dollars, and each deed to the purchaser contained the following condition, which would insure the speedy occupancy of the lands:

"'Always provided, and these presents are upon this condition, that if the said ——, shall by himself or his agent, within the space of two full years next after the date hereof, enter upon the said granted premises, build and finish an house thereon not less than eighteen feet square and seven feet stud, subdue, clear, and fence six acres of said land, and continue thereon for the space of three successive years, commencing after the two years aforesaid (unless prevented by death or inevitable Providence), and do perform all duties and orders, pay all taxes that shall be granted, then the aforesaid deed shall remain in full force and virtue.'

"The records do not show how much, if any, of the purchase-money was paid on the sale, or that any other security than the personal bond of the purchaser were required before giving the deeds.

"Of the original proprietors the following became inhabitants of the town: Nathaniel Skinner, Nathaniel Skinner, Jr., Joseph Skinner, Stephen Calkin, Samuel Hutchinson, James Smith, Ebenezer Mudge, Joseph Holley, John Sprague, John Pardee, Jabez Crippen, William Goodrich, Jonathan Petit, Joseph Parke, James Talmadge, and Daniel Hunt.

"Many of the original purchasers sold their rights to those who were also among the first settlers of the town. Some of them were as follows: John Williams, Ebenezer Jackson, Jonathan Dunham, Caleb Jewett, Obadiah Chapman, Caleb Strong, John Corbet, Caleb Curtice, Ebenezer Frisbie, Benjamin Fuller, John Gay, David Hamilton, Thomas Hamlin, Bartholomew Heath, Samuel Hurlburt, Jonathan Lord, John Marvin, Jonathan Rowley, Matthew St. John, John Tickner, Bezaleel Tyler, George Way.

"Immediately after the sale of the township a number of the purchasers came on for the purpose of exploring, and to determine in what part of the town the settlement should be made. After exploring the lands and viewing their situation, it was found that the centre of the township was very unfavorably situated for the town-plot. It was on a high ridge of land, where the face of the country was forbidding and uncomfortable. After mature deliberation it was determined to fix the settlement on a street, laid out from Jackson's patent to Salisbury line, and the place designed for the centre, or site of the public buildings, was laid out in squares of a half-mile each.

"All the individuals who came on to explore in the fall of 1738 returned to their families, except one, who was William Goodrich. He brought his family with him and spent the winter, which was a very severe one, with no other neighbors than the Indians nearer than the Dutch settlements in the oblong. The next spring, however, brought a large accession to the number of inhabitants, and from that period the settlement of the town may be said to have commenced.

"The first division was into lots of about eighty acres each, which was to furnish the home-lot, or residence, of the proprietor. A committee was appointed to lay out a lot of eighty acres, which was called the standard lot, and all the other lots were made to conform to this in value, the quantity to be more or less according to the quality. Some of the home-lots were laid out wholly on one side of the street, and some on both sides, according to the situation of the land. The standard lot was the one adjoining Jackson's patent, owned by the late Charles T. Lovell. The settlers principally located on the main street leading from Jackson's patent, now Hitchcock's Corner, to Salisbury. Some, however, settled on the mountain and some in the valley, and in the course of a year or two nearly the whole territory of the first society was occupied. A large proportion of the first inhabitants of Sharon were from Lebanon and Colchester, in the county of Windham; some few were from Norwalk and Stamford, in Fairfield County, and several families were from the old Plymouth colony. As they removed into the town they located themselves upon the several home-lots which they had taken up, and by the next fall were all comfortably provided with homes and other necessaries."

PATENT OF THE TOWN OF SHARON.

"THE GOVERNOUR and Company of the English Colony of Connecticut, in New England, in America: To all to whom these presents shall come.

"GREETING: Whereas, The said Governour and Company in General court assembled, at Hartford, on the 11th day of May, A.D. 1732, did order that a township should be laid out in the Southwest parts of the country lands, on the west side of the Ousatonic River, and appointed Messrs. Edmond Lewis, Stephen Noble, and William Gaylord a committee to lay out the same.

"And, Whereas, In pursuance of said order, the said committee laid out the same, and bounded it as follows, viz.: Beginning at the Southwest corner of the township of M, it being a stake set in the ground and many stones laid to it, standing on the east side of a pond; from thence the line runs south 12 degrees 30 minutes west, with the line of partition between the Province of New York and the Colony of Connecticut, nine miles to a heap of stones laid on a rock, being in the aforesaid line of partition between the Province of New York and the Colony of Connecticut, and is about two miles east of Captain Sackett's dwelling-house, which is the southwest corner bound of said township; and from thence the south line runs E. 10° 30 S. four miles and one-half and one hundred and fifteen rods, to the Ousatonic River, where they marked a white-ash tree and laid many stones to it, for the southeast corner bounds of said township, and marked many trees and made many monuments in the said south line, which township in their survey is called the township of N. S., and is bounded north on the township of M., south on country lands, west on the aforesaid line of partition between the Province of New York and Colony of Connecticut, and east on the Ousatonic River, as by the return of said committee bearing date October 7th, A.D. 1732, entered on the records of said colony Liber. 4th for patents, Deeds and survey of land, folio 472–3, in the Secretary's office, reference thereto being had more fully and at large may appear.

"And, Whereas, The said Governour and Company in General Court assembled, at Hartford, on the 10th day of May, A.D. 1733, did enact that said township, among the townships then lately laid out, should be disposed of and settled according to such time and regulations as the said assembly should order. And, Whereas, The said Governour and Company in General Court assembled, at New Haven, A.D. 1737, by their act did order that township should be divided into fifty-three rights, of which fifty-three rights one should be for the use of the ministry that should be settled in said town, according to the regulation in said act provided, one for the first gospel minister settled as aforesaid, and one other right for the support of the school in said town, and ordered that fifty of said rights should be sold, and that the other three rights should be for the uses aforesaid; and that the committee by said act appointed should sell, and, in the name of the Governor and Company aforesaid, execute deeds of conveyance of the said several rights to the purchasers thereof respectively, with conditions to such deed annexed according to the directions in the said act contained. And, Whereas, The said committee, in pursuance of and according to said act, have sold, and by their several deeds under their hands and seals, have granted unto Samuel Hutchinson, Nathaniel Skinner, John Sprague, John Pardee, and to the rest of the original purchasers of rights in said township, fifty rights or fifty-third parts of said township, upon condition as aforesaid, which township is now called and known by the name of Sharon. And, Whereas, Mr. Peter Pratt is settled in the ministry in said town, according to the directions aforesaid, their heirs or assigns having performed the conditions in the said deed expressed, and now moving for a more full confirmation of the said lands sold and granted them as aforesaid.

"Now know ye, that the said Governour and Company, by virtue of the powers granted and derived to them by His late majesty, King Charles the Second, of blessed memory, in and by his Letters Patent, under the great seal of England, bearing date the three and twentieth day of April, in the fourteenth year of his reign, and in presence of the several acts and orders of assembly before in these acts referred to, have therefore given, granted and confirmed, and by these presents do fully, freely, and absolutely give, grant, ratify, and confirm for themselves and their successors unto, to the said Samuel Hutchinson, Nathaniel Skinner, John Sprague, John Pardee, and to the rest of the original purchasers aforesaid, and to their heirs and assigns and such as legally represent or hold under them, in proportion to their respective purchases, and in such proportion as their assignees and legal representatives do hold under them as aforesaid, the said fifty rights or fifty-third parts, and to the said Peter Pratt, the said settled minister, the said one right or fifty-third part of all the lands in the township of Sharon aforesaid, and the said two rights ordered for the use of the ministry and school in said town, which two rights are hereby granted and confirmed unto the said purchasers and the said Peter Pratt, their heirs and assigns to and for the use aforesaid, and all and singular the lands, trees, woods, underwoods, ponds, rivers, fishings, fowlings, huntings, mines, minerals, and precious stones within the said township, and all the rights, royalties, powers, privileges, profits, and services to the premises belonging. To have and to hold the said granted, or hereby intended to be granted, premises, together with the privileges and appurtenances thereof, unto the said Samuel Hutchinson, Nathaniel Skinner, John Sprague, John Pardee, and Peter Pratt, and to the rest of the said purchasers, and to their heirs and assigns and such as legally represent and hold under them in manner as aforesaid, and to their only use, benefit, and behoof as aforesaid forever, as a good, sure, and indefeasible estate in fee simple to be holden of our Sovereign Lord the King, his heirs and successors as of his majesty's manor of East Greenwich, in the County of Kent and Kingdom of England, in fee and common socage, and not in capite nor by Knights Service, yielding and paying therefor to his majesty King George the Second, his heirs and successors only the fifth part of all the ore of gold and silver that shall be there gotten or obtained, in lieu of all other services, duties, and demands.

"In witness whereof the said Governour and Company have caused these presents to be signed by the Governour and Secretary, and the public seal of the said Colony to be affixed. Dated in Hartford, the 26th day of May, Anno Domini, 1747.

"J. LAW, Governor.

"By order of the Governour and Company of the Colony of Connecticut in General Court assembled, May, Anno Domni, 1747.

"GEORGE WYLLYS, Secretary.

"Received May 30th, 1747, and here recorded.

THE SETTLEMENT IN DISTRESS.

"The first year (1739) was one of great promise and prosperity. The population rapidly increased and the productions of the soil richly rewarded the toil of its cultivators, but the month of May, 1742, was marked by the commencement of a wasting sickness which overwhelmed the settlers with distress and threatened the entire breaking up of the enterprise. This calamity put it out of their power to comply with the condition of their bonds, and in their extremity they made application to the Assembly for relief. The following is a copy of their memorial, drawn up by the Rev. Mr. Pratt, which is a remarkable specimen of suppliant eloquence. It was addressed to the Assembly in the usual way, and proceeded to say,—

"'That notwithstanding the smiles of Divine Providence upon us at our first settling in this place, in which we thankfully encouraged ourselves, yet so numerous have been the frowns, and so heavy the strokes of the Almighty in the year past, and so dark is the countenance of our present state, that we have not only been brought to uncommon continued distress, but even to despair of future prosperity unless relieved by your Honors' favor. In May last it pleased the Almighty to send a nervous fever among us, which continued eleven months, in which time more than one hundred and twenty persons were long confined with it; some have lain more than one hundred days, some eighty, many sixty, and few have been capable of business in forty days after they were seized with the distemper, by reason of which many were unable to plow for wheat in the year past, many who had plowed were unable to sow, and some who had sowed unable to secure it by fence, and much wheat that was ripe rotted on the ground. By reason of the sickness of the people, which was not only exceeding expensive to the persons and families sick, but also to those who were in health, their time being taken up in tending those that were sick, many of whom were obliged to suffer for want of help. Twenty are dead, many widows and fatherless children are left among us, not a man but that has sustained loss; many who were more than level with the world are impoverished. The distress of the winter has been exceeding great and impoverishing. Our cattle are so destroyed that there is not a cow left to half the families in the town, and now many men are obliged to leave their business at home and go twenty miles to labor for bread and corn, and so must continue to do until harvest; so that we are not now able to take up our bonds without being wrecked in our estates, some torn, others quite broke, so that not above three-quarters of us can save our home-lots and pay our purchase. Neither can we maintain our minister or build our meeting-house, but must quit the place or become tenants, we and our children, to neighboring rich merchants who are seeking our lands, but at their own price.

"'Therefore we, a withering branch of this commonwealth, and the poor of this colony, would now humbly pray for your Honors' assistance and gracious notice. And as our industrious improvements have been the admiration of all who have beheld our settlement, and far exceeding any other instance of late plantation, we trust we may not, after three years' toil, sickness, and want, be turned off from our lands, become tenants, or seek another settlement under worse circumstances than when we settled in this place, which, that your Honors would take into your wise consideration, and upon it graciously act towards us, is the earnest and necessary prayer of your Honors' dutiful and humble memorialists.'

"The second application was successful to this extent, that the time for the payment of the bonds was extended some two or three years, and thus the settlers were able to meet their payments without further embarrassments.

"These memorials explain how Philip Livingston and Martin Hoffman became large owners of real estate in Sharon at an early day, a fact which before was obscure. They were, undoubtedly the rich neighboring merchants referred to in the memorial. The representatives of Philip Livingston are still proprietors of the common land in Sharon.

"The first death recorded of those residing in Sharon is that of Miriam, the wife of William Goodrich, Jr., which occurred on the 22d of April, 1740. The following persons also, as appears of record, departed this life during the same season, viz.: Asa Rood, David Skinner, Mary, wife of Nathaniel Skinner, Esq., Deacon Hezekiah King, Benjamin Fuller, Jonathan Dunham, Jr., Daniel Bouton, Daniel Bouton, Jr.,—in all, nine persons.

"The first person born in the town after Jehiel Jackson, before mentioned, was Sarah Bates, daughter of John and Anna Bates. She was afterwards the wife of John Randall, and lived to a very advanced age. The first marriage in the town was that of Elnathan Goodrich to Elizabeth Showers. It was celebrated on New-Year's Day, Jan. 1, 1740."

THE MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

"The diligent and successful labors of the Moravians for the conversion to Christianity of the Indians in Sharon is an item in the history of the town well worthy of record. This body of Christians established a mission among the Indians in this region as early as 1740. Their special fields of labor were at Shekomeko (Pine Plains), in New York, and at Wequagnock (Sharon) and Schaghticoke (Kent), in Connecticut. The first minister who labored here and established the mission was the Rev. Christian Henry Rauch. He was succeeded in 1742 by the Rev. Gotlieb Buetner, who labored in the mission until his death, in 1745, at the age of twenty-eight years. He was buried in the field of his labors, and his memory is well preserved by an enduring monument and an appropriate epitaph. If the fact were not well authenticated as a matter of history, it would scarcely be credited now that the mission was broken up in 1745 by the government of New York from the belief that the missionaries were Jesuits and Papists, and emissaries of the Pope and the French king. On the occurrence of this event many of the Christian Indians of Shekomeko joined the tribes of Sharon. Several clergymen labored here at stated periods up to 1749. In that year David Bruce, then the missionary here, died, and was buried in the beautiful field of his labor, on the eastern shore of the Indian pond. He was a Scotchman from Edinburgh. He was not a clergyman in the Moravian sense, but an assistant. He acted rather as a teacher or catechist. He labored in the mission at Sharon but a few months. As everything relating to his history is interesting, a more extended notice of him is copied from Loskiel's 'History of Moravian Missioners:'

"'Brother David Bruce was now appointed to the care of the Christian Indians at Schaticook and Wequaguock, who since the forementioned visit of the bishop had formed a regular settlement. He resided chiefly in a house at Wequagnock, belonging to the brethren called Gnadansee (Lake of Grace), but sometimes resided at Schaticook, whence he paid visits to Westenhunk, by invitation of the head chief of the Mohikan nation, sowing the seeds of the gospel wherever he came; but as he was not ordained, Bishop Camerhoff with Brother Beyold, went again to Wequaguock to strengthen the brethren and to administer the sacraments there. Twenty Indians were added to the church by baptism. Brother Bruce remained in this station till his happy departure out of time, which, to the great grief of the Indian congregation, took place this year. He was remarkably cheerful during his illness, and his conversation edified all who saw him. Perceiving that his end approached, he called the Indian brethren present to his bedside, and, pressing their hands to his breast, besought them fervently to remain faithful unto the end, and immediately fell asleep in the Lord. His funeral was committed to one of the assistants, who delivered a powerful discourse upon the solemn occasion to the company present, among whom were many white people, who had often heard our late brother's testimony of the truth with blessing.'

"So reads the book, and so died the missionary. The exact date of his death was July 9, 1749. The missionary at Schaghticook in 1752 wrote as follows:

"'They have permitted me to put a stone on Brother David's grave, and then inclose it with a fence.'

"The stone was in good preservation in 1825, but has since been broken into many fragments. What remains of it is in the possession of the Moravian Historical Society of Nazareth, Penn. It contained the following epitaph:

"'DAVID BRUCE,
From Edinburgh in Scotland.
Minister of
The Brethren's Church,
Among the Indians.
Departed 1749.'

"The Indians of Sharon having sold their lands in 1755, and dispersed to different parts of the country, the mission was then abandoned by the brethren; but a congregation of white people built a meeting-house on the western border of the Indian pond, on land now owned by Col. Hiram Clark, and retained the services of one of the missionaries, the Rev. Joseph Powell, until his death in 1774.

"It will be observed that all the missionaries who labored here were under the direction of the Moravian authorities at Bethany, Pa., from whom they received their appointments. After the breaking up of the mission here, and the death or removal of the missionaries, missionary stations were established in parts of the country west of Bethany, and for nearly a century the scene of the labors and place of the graves of the faithful and devoted missionaries in this region had passed from the knowledge of the Moravians at Bethany; and it was owing to investigations made by the Rev. William J. McCord and the Rev. Sheldon Davis, of Dutchess County, that this field of missionary labor, so interesting in Moravian history, was brought to their knowledge. The Moravian Historical Society, at Nazareth, Pa., on the 11th day of July, 1859, determined to mark the resting-places of the missionaries by the erection of suitable monuments, and thus to revive and perpetuate their memories, so long neglected and forgotten. These monuments were set up under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Davis, and of Benson J. Lossing, Esq., and a single monument over the remains of David Bruce is for a memorial of him and of the Rev. Joseph Powel. The inscriptions on that monument were as follows:

"On the north side:

"'JOSEPH POWEL,
A Minister of the Gospel,
in the
Church of the United Brethren.
Born in 1710,
Near White Church, Shropshire, England.
Died Sept. 23, 1774,
At Sichem in the Oblong,
Dutchess Co., N. Y.'

"On the south side:

"'DAVID BRUCE,
A Minister of the Gospel,
in the Church of the United Brethren, from Edinburgh, in Scotland.
Died July 9, 1749,
At the Wechquadnock Mission,
Dutchess Co., N. Y.'

"On the east side:

"'How beautiful upon the mountains
Are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace,
That bringeth good tidings of good,
That publisheth salvation.
Isaiah lii. 7.'

"On the west side:

"'Erected by the Moravian Historical Society,
October 6, 1859.'

"Solemn and impressive, as well as instructive, services, performed by the Moravians from Bethany, were rendered at the dedication of that monument, on the 6th day of October, 1859. As the remains of the missionaries had been committed to the grave without the performance of the cherished rites of that body of Christians, it was deemed appropriate that those portions of the Moravian ritual which relate to death and the resurrection should be employed in the ceremonies. For the same reason, the Easter Morning Litany, which is prayed annually on Moravian burying-grounds, and the choral music of trombonists, a characteristic element of Moravian obsequies, were added to the programme of religious exercises. The services were held in the open field in which the monument stands, and were performed by the bishop and several Moravian clergymen, with a select band of trombonists and choir of singers, in the presence of some seventeen hundred people. The venerable Bishop Wolle had the principal charge, and his white locks, his clerical costume, and his solemn and deliberate utterances, with a slight German accent, of the various portions of the Moravian funeral ritual, with the earnest and solemn responses from the people, and from the trombonists, gave an indescribable interest to the ceremonies. After a historical discourse by the Rev. Mr. De Schweinitz, in which a minute history of the mission and missionaries was given, the following stanzas from the Moravian Hymnal were sung by the congregation:

"'How sweetly these our brethren sleep,
Enjoying endless peace!
The grave in which their Saviour lay
Is now their resting-place.

"'Naught can disturb these heirs of life,—
All earthly cares are fled,—
To be with Christ was their desire,
And now they're perfected.

"'To Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,
One God, whom we adore,
Be glory as it was, is now,
And shall be evermore.'

"And thus ended the solemn burial services."

THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.*

"We have now arrived at the period of the commencement of the Revolutionary war. The citizens of Sharon, almost without exception, partook largely of the feeling which pervaded the whole country at the commencement of the struggle. Parson Smith, like the other clergymen of the day, was a most ardent and decided Whig; and his personal influence contributed not a little to lead the public mind in the right channel. In his public ministrations, too, there was mingled much of the stirring patriotism of the times. In the prayers which were offered, and in the praises which were sung, there were interspersed many allusions to the tyrannical edicts of the British king, and to the degraded and suffering condition of the colonies. Hymns were written, and music was composed, which were used for public worship on the Sabbath, the effect of which would seem to be to stir up martial rather than devotional feelings, and to excite in the worshipers the deepest hatred of their oppressors. The following stanza was the commencement of one of the hymns which was frequently sung for Sabbath worship:

"'Let tyrants shake their iron rod,
And slavery clank their galling chains,
We fear them not, we trust in God,—
New England's God forever reigns.'

"The intelligence of the battle of Lexington was brought to Sharon on the Sabbath, and Mr. Smith, at the close of the morning exercises, announced it from the pulpit, and made some remarks tending to arouse the spirit of the congregation to firmness and to resistance. Immediately after the congregation was dismissed, the militia and volunteers to the number of one hundred men paraded on the west side of the street, south of the meeting-house, and prepared to march immediately to the scene of action. David Downs, Esq., was captain, James Brewster lieutenant, and David Gould ensign. After further deliberation, however, it was determined to send Lieut. Brewster to Litchfield, to inquire more fully into the accuracy of the intelligence, and whether the service of the militia would be required immediately. Lieut. Brewster* performed this mission, and learning that the British had returned to Boston, and that no pressing necessity existed for further military aid, it was determined not to march until further hostile movements on the part of the enemy should render it necessary.

"The General Assembly was forthwith convened, and a large military force raised. One company was raised in Sharon and its vicinity. Samuel Elmore received a major's commission, and also had the command of this company. Amos Chappell was the lieutenant.

"The last survivors of this company were Thomas Heath and Adonijah Maxam. Deacon Isaac Chamberlain, Capt. Sylvanus Gibbs, and Mr. Ebe Everitt, lately deceased, were also members of this company, as were William Gray, Samuel Lewis, Jr., and David Goff. This company was attached to a regiment which marched to the Northward in 1775 for the conquest of Canada, under Gen. Montgomery.

"Before St. John's was taken it was determined by Cols. Allen and Brown to make an attempt upon the city of Montreal with a few volunteers, if they could be obtained. The troops were paraded, and Allen marched in front of the Connecticut Line, and invited volunteers to join him. Of the soldiers who belonged to Sharon, Adonijah Maxam, David Goff, William Gray, and Samuel Lewis stepped forward and offered to share in the perils of the expedition. It was arranged between Allen and Brown that the latter should land on the island, below the city, while Allen, with about eighty men, should land above the city, and there wait until they should hear the firing from Brown's party, when they were to rush on to the attack. Allen crossed the river St. Lawrence with his detachment on the evening of the 24th of September, on a raft, and waited in the expectation of hearing the firing from Brown's party through the whole night, but he waited in vain. For some reason the expedition on Brown's part had failed, and the morning light found Allen altogether in the power of the enemy. This rash adventurer, however, determined to defend himself to the last extremity against the seven or eight hundred men that were brought him, and he fought until twenty-five of his men were killed and seven wounded, when he and his brave associates, including Maxam, Goff, Gray, and Lewis, from Sharon, and one Roger Moore, of Salisbury, were compelled to surrender. They were loaded with irons and sent to England, for the avowed object of receiving the sentence and punishment of traitors. The threat of retaliatory measures, however, on the part of the Americans, prevented such summary proceedings against them, and after being kept in close confinement in England and Ireland during the winter, the prisoners just named were brought back to New York in the spring of 1776. They were confined in an old church, with a large number of others who had been taken during the campaign at Fort Washington and other places. From this place the persons above named contrived to make their escape within a few days after they were put into confinement. The old church in which they were confined was surrounded by a high fence, and thus a little daily out-door exercise was allowed the prisoners. While enjoying this liberty, William Gray managed to loosen one of the long planks of which the fence was made, but did not remove it, and the appearance of things were so little disturbed by the act of Gray that it escaped the observation of the officers in charge of the prisoners. Through the opening in the fence, thus made practicable, the five soldiers above named made their escape as soon as it was sufficiently dark to conceal their operations. They had been habited in sailors' clothes during their captivity, and on this account they were less liable to be detected. They divided into two parties, Maxam and Moore forming the one, and Gray, Goff, and Lewis the other. The three latter very soon found means to land on Long Island, and from thence passed over the Sound to the continent, and returned to their friends in Sharon. Maxam and Moore had more difficulty. They were two or three days in the city before they found it possible to leave it, and after landing on Long Island they suffered much from hunger. After traveling several days they found means to embark in a boat on the Sound, and to reach Saybrook. Their return to Sharon astonished their friends, who, having learned from Gray and his comrades the circumstance of their escape from confinement, and having heard nothing further from them, had concluded that they had been retaken by the British. The last survivor of this band of sufferers was Mr. Adonijah Maxam, who died at the age of ninety-seven years.

* "This young gentleman was at this time a clerk in Col. Gay's store. He was originally from Windham, and came to Sharon in A.D. 1770, with his mother, who was the second wife of Capt. Caleb Jewitt. He died, much lamented, of a consumption, on the 22d day of February, 1777."

"In the campaign of 1775, Parson Smith went with the army to the Northward as chaplain to Col. Hinman's regiment, and spent several months in the service.

"There was one soldier from Sharon who joined the expedition led by Gen. Arnold through the wilderness of Kennebeck to Canada, whose name was Alexander Spencer. He died, however, on the march, from sickness.

"The exigencies of the times calling for a large army at the commencement of 1776, a large number of men, more than one hundred, enlisted from the town of Sharon. One company marched for Canada. It was commanded by Capt. David Downs, already mentioned. The first lieutenant was Adonijah Griswold, and the second lieutenant was David Doty. The last survivors of this company, which was a large one, were Joel Chaffee and Adonijah Pangman, of Cornwall. Charles Gillet, another member of the company, was killed near the 'Cedars,' so called, by a party of Indians in ambush, as he was riding along the road, having gone on some business connected with his duty as commissary. The other soldiers raised in Sharon for the campaign of 1776 were distributed among three other companies, and all marched for New York, against which an attack by the British was now apprehended. Of one company Dr. Simeon Smith was captain, of another Elijah Foster was captain, and of the third, Nathaniel Hamlin was lieutenant. These companies were in the campaign of 1776, under Gen. Washington, on Long Island, and in the vicinity of New York, and shared in the fatigues and perils of that disastrous period. David Wood, Nathaniel Buel, Josiah Coleman, Jabez Jennings, Asahel Somers, John Randall, Jr., and Thomas Ackley were taken prisoners at Fort Washington, of whom Wood and Ackley died during their captivity, and Buel and Coleman on their return. The British having obtained possession of New York, Gen. Washington determined to make an effort to dislodge them during the winter which followed the unfortunate campaign of 1776. For this purpose a large military force was raised in the fall of that year for two months' service, and one company was enlisted in Sharon. William Boland was captain, Hezekiah Frisbie lieutenant, and Azariah Griswold ensign. As the period of enlistment was so short, there was no difficulty in filling the company. The survivors of this company were Messrs. Adonijah Maxam and Thomas Heath. New York was not attacked, and the company was discharged at Kingsbridge at the expiration of their term of service.

"The forces that had hitherto been called into the service were raised on the authority of the State. To provide for the campaign of 1777, Congress undertook to raise an army, which was called the Continental army; and of this army, two regiments, Swift's and Bradley's, were raised in the western part of Connecticut. Of one company David Strong was appointed lieutenant, and he enlisted a number of recruits, one of whom, David Goodrich, was killed at the battle of Brandywine, in the subsequent campaign. Of another company Reuben Calkin was lieutenant, and a number of men enlisted under him.

"A large depot of provisions and military stores had been established at Danbury, and in the month of April an expedition was sent out from New York to destroy them. It was commanded by Maj.-Gen. Tryon, of the British army, and consisted of two thousand men. They landed at a place called Compo, in the southwest part of the town of Fairfield, and, proceeding through the towns of Weston and Redding, reached Danbury, and effected their object, which was the destruction of the stores. The most active measures were taken to spread the alarm through the adjacent country, and to collect the militia to repel the invaders. On the evening of the 26th of April a messenger arrived in this town bringing the intelligence, and requiring the immediate marching of such forces as could be collected to meet the enemy. The bell commenced tolling, and it was kept tolling through the night, and it was a night of great terror and solemnity. Col. Ebenezer Gay, who then commanded the militia in this vicinity, gathered together as many troops as could be collected on so short notice, and marched for the scene of action; and on the morning of the 28th reached Danbury, and, finding that the British had retreated, pursued them. The route which the British had taken on their retreat brought them on the west side of the Saugatuck River, which empties into the Sound a mile or two west of Compo, where their fleet lay. They were intercepted in their attempt to reach the bridge over this stream by Gen. Arnold, who was then in command of a few regular troops, and were guided by some Tories to a regular fording-place a little higher up, and it was while they were marching up on the west side of the stream to reach this fording-place that they were first observed by the troops from Sharon, who were endeavoring to reach the bridge, and to join the corps under Arnold. As the British marched by them on the low grounds which bordered on the river, Adonijah Maxam, who had not forgotten the injuries which were heaped upon him while a prisoner in England, begged permission of the commanding officer to steal down the hill from the left flank and shoot a few of them. He was strictly forbidden, however, to execute this perilous undertaking. The British marched by unmolested, and our troops took undisputed possession of the bridge. The enemy came down on the east side of the river, and, having taken ground a little to the east of the bridge, fired upon our men who were stationed there. Arnold, perceiving the danger to which his men were exposed, brought his artillery to bear upon the new position of the enemy, and firing upon them over the heads of such of his men as were upon the bridge, soon drove them beyond the reach of his cannon. They took new ground a little to the southeast of their first position, and it was determined to attack them there with small-arms. A few regular troops, under Arnold, commenced the action with great bravery, and our men at the bridge were ordered to join them. They marched up the hill with a good degree of resolution to sustain the regular troops. As they came within the reach of the enemy's musketry, however, some one, and it was never known who, cried out 'Retreat!'. As this word was uttered, Lieut. Samuel Elmer, Jr.,* perceiving the effect it was producing, and the trepidation which was taking hold of his comrades, stepped up on a stone wall, and cried out, 'For God's sake, men, don't retreat, don't run, march up the hill and drive them off!' He had barely uttered these words when he was shot through the body. The only words he spoke afterwards were addressed to his uncle, Mr. George Pardee, who was near him: 'Uncle George,' said he, 'I am a dead man.' A general retreat of our men then followed, and the British, being left unmolested, marched to their shipping, and sailed for New York.

"A large depot of provisions had been established in this town early in the war. The store-house stood a little west of the Messrs. Goodwin's, on the old road that formerly ran through their land, before the present turnpike-road was established, and a guard was constantly kept at the depot during the war. The fate of the stores at Danbury caused much apprehension for the safety of those here. There were frequent alarms, and the citizens frequently collected in arms to defend the public property at the store-house. On one Sabbath day, during the sermon, Jonathan Gillett, who lived directly opposite the meeting-house, came out of his house during the public service, and proclaimed with a loud voice that the British were coming. A dense smoke was seen rising beyond Tower Hill, a mountain in the State of New York, a few miles southwest of Sharon, and the belief was general that the enemy was at hand. Parson Smith was foremost in exhorting the people to firmness and resistance, and he entreated them to stand firm, not only as soldiers of the cross, but as soldiers of their country and of liberty. The alarm, however, proved groundless.

"The approach of a large British army from Canada, under Gen. Burgoyne, and the expedition up the North River, under Gen. Vaughan, filled the whole country with terror and despondency, and frequent alarms were spread, requiring the constant and active duty of the militia. The Tories, too, in Dutchess Co., N. Y., where they were numerous, took courage from the prospect of success which the progress of the British arms afforded, and embodied themselves into a formidable force. Information was brought to this town during the summer that four hundred of them had assembled at Carpenter's, as it was then called, now Washington Hollow, and that they were threatening destruction to all the Whigs in the neighborhood. An expedition was immediately set on foot to break up the gang. Volunteers to the number of fifty or sixty immediately assembled. They marched immediately for the Hollow, and were joined by others in their progress, so that when they arrived at Bloom's Mills, which is about four miles north of the Hollow, their numbers amounted to two hundred men. There they encamped for the night, and marched the next morning to attack the Tories. They found them paraded in the meadow just north of the public-house, and, marching up with spirit, fired upon them. The Tories fled immediately, and as many as could made their escape. About thirty or forty of them, however, were made prisoners and brought to this town, and locked up in the old church at the head of the street. They were taken to Exeter, in New Hampshire, where they were kept in close confinement for two years. This proceeding broke up the gang, and no further trouble was had from this class of persons during the war.

"A company of light-horse, which belonged to Sharon and its vicinity, were kept on duty during the whole summer of 1777, on the North River, watching the motions of the enemy in that quarter. It was commanded by Capt. Dutcher, of Salisbury, and David Boland, of Sharon, was the cornet of the company. The smoke of burning Kingston was distinctly seen from our mountain when it was destroyed by the Hessian troops. Adonijah Maxam belonged to this company.

"A large number of men marched from this town, under the command of Col. Gay, to the Northward to oppose the progress of Burgoyne's army, and shared in all the conflicts which preceded its surrender.†

* "This brave young officer was a son of Col. Samuel Elmer, and a lieutenant in the New York Line of the Continental army. He had returned home on a short furlough the very day the intelligence of the invasion of Danbury was received in Sharon, and was one of the first to volunteer to drive off the enemy. He was buried on the spot where he was killed by two of his comrades soon after the battle. His body was afterwards removed to the burying-yard at Green's Farms, where it reposes to this day.

EPITAPH.

"'Lieut. Samuel Elmer, son to Col. Samuel Elmer of Sharon, was killed at Fairfield, fighting for the liberties of his country, April 28th, 1777, in the 25th year of his age.

"'Our youthful hero, bold in arms,
His country's cause his bosom warms;
To save her rights fond to engage,
And guard her from a tyrant's rage,
Flies to ye field of blood and death,
And gloriously resigns his breath.'"

† "The following is the record of an adjourned church-meeting, holden on the 23d of September, 1777: 'Met according to adjournment, but by reason of a great number being called off into ye service of their country, and but a few members met, adjourned to the 4th Tuesday of November next ensuing.'"

John Hollister, one of the soldiers from this town, was killed at the battle of Stillwater, on the 7th of October.

"The intelligence of the surrender of Burgoyne's army was received here under circumstances which produced a deep impression. Nothing had been heard respecting the state of affairs at Saratoga, excepting that two severe battles had been fought without any very decisive result. This state of uncertainty produced extreme anxiety regarding the issue of the campaign, and many trembled at the prospect of defeat and disgrace to the American arms. The firmness and confidence of Parson Smith, however, never forsook him, and he did everything in his power to rouse the drooping spirits of his people. On Sabbath, the —— day of October, he preached a sermon from Isaiah xxi. 11: 'Watchman, what of the night? the watchman saith the morning cometh.' The discourse was entirely adapted to the condition of public affairs. He dwelt much upon the indications which the dealings of Providence afforded, that a bright and glorious morning was about to dawn upon a long night of defeat and disaster. He told the congregation that he believed they would soon hear of a signal victory crowning the arms of America, and exhorted them to trust with an unshaken and fearless confidence in that God who, he doubted not, would soon appear for the deliverance of his people, and crown with success the efforts of the friends of liberty in this country. Before the congregation was dismissed a messenger arrived bringing the intelligence of the surrender of Burgoyne's army. Parson Smith read the letter from the pulpit, and a flood of joy burst upon the assembly.

"During the next year a large part of Burgoyne's army was marched through this town on their way to the South. They were met here by a regiment of Continental troops, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Jameson, who was afterwards somewhat conspicuous in the affairs connected with the capture of Major Andre, and who here took charge of the prisoners.* One of Burgoyne's soldiers, by the name of Robert Gibbs, a Scotchman from Dundee, who was wounded and taken in the battle immediately preceding Burgoyne's surrender, was here left by his comrades. He died at the age of ninety-four.

"After the campaign of 1777, the seat of the war was removed to so great a distance that no further call was made for the militia of the town, except for the purpose of keeping guard on the sea-coast. The burdens and privations of a pecuniary kind, however, which are incident to a state of war, were borne by the people of this town without a murmur, and the almost unanimous feeling in favor of the cause which marked the commencement of the war continued with unabated ardor to the close of it.

"The records of the County Court show that several of the citizens of Sharon were delinquent in responding to the calls for temporary service in the army, but it does not appear that their neglect was owing to any want of fidelity to the cause of the country; but it was probably for some reasons which were deemed satisfactory to themselves, but which were not deemed sufficient by the court. Abner Curtice, David Hollister, Elijah Pardee, and Apollos Smith were each fined ten pounds and costs of prosecution 'for refusing to muster and march to the assistance of the Continental army,' about the time of the apprehended invasion of this part of the country by Burgoyne's army.

"Stephen Sears was fined ten pounds for not marching to the relief of Peekskill. Theodore Elmer, Thomas Hamlin, Jr., Joseph Barrows, Jesse Goodrich, Amasa Hamlin, Robert Whitcomb, David Hollister, James Henry, and Nathaniel Curtis were prosecuted for the same offenses, but were able to show good reasons why they had not reported for muster, and were discharged."

The following list of names of soldiers of the Revolution belonging to Sharon, who served in 1775, were taken from the controller's books, in Hartford:

Reuben Cartwright, David Manning, Reuben Calkin, sergeant, Jehiel Jackson, Jude Bill, Zenas Goodrich, John Hollister, Isaac Chamberlain, Solomon Goodrich, Southard Swetland, Aaron Swetland, Sylvanus Gibbs, William Goodrich, corporal, Ebe Everitt, John Tickner, Jesse Calkin, Asa Rogers, David Ackley, Elisha Calkin, Thomas Heath.

SHAY'S REBELLION.

In the spring of 1787, during the existence of the insurrection under Shay, in Massachusetts, Dr. John Hurlbert, who resided in the town of Alford, Berkshire Co., Mass., and who was an active partisan of Shay's, came to Sharon for the purpose of awakening a similar spirit in this vicinity, and of producing an efficient co-operation. Having received his medical education here, and possessing qualities calculated to give effect to his representations, Hurlbert soon succeeded in organizing a considerable number of men, under the guidance of one William Mitchell, who was constituted their captain, and who, in as private a manner as possible, and chiefly in the night season, trained and drilled them for service. Hurlbert, Mitchell, and two others were arrested, and taken to Litchfield for examination. Hurlbert was prosecuted under the act against "vagrants, vagabonds, and common beggars," but on his solemn promise to leave the State forthwith he was suffered to depart. The others, being charged with treasonable practices, were bound over to the next term of the Superior Court.

The following account of these proceedings is copied from a Litchfield paper of May 21, 1788:

"Last Thursday evening arrived in this town from Hartford Col. Samuel Canfield and Uriah Tracy, Esq., with orders from the General Assembly to repair to the town of Sharon and put a stop to the insurrection

*"A large proportion of the prisoners of this detachment were Hessians. They were subjected to the most severe discipline, and were entirely offensive. Each regiment was furnished with a chaplain, and divine service was frequently performed. They encamped here over-night, and when they started in the morning, the whole body sang devotional music on the march. Governor Smith informed the author that he, then a lad, followed them some miles to hear their singing."

that appeared to be raising in that town. The same evening they set off, accompanied by the sheriff and one of his deputies, and arrived at Sharon about daybreak, and soon after arrested five persons who were supposed to be the principal actors and abettors in the insurrection. They were conducted to and safely lodged in our gaol on Saturday last, in order for examination. It is hoped the early and spirited exertion of our Assembly will prevent further disturbance in that town. Much praise is due to the gentlemen employed on that occasion for their prudence, humanity, and judicious proceedings."

The insurrection in Massachusetts was soon after suppressed, and the prosecutions against Mitchell and others were discontinued.

LIST OF EARLY SETTLERS.*

David Abel was from Lebanon, and came to Sharon in 1760.

Thomas Ackley, from Chatham, came to Sharon in 1768. He had three sons,—Thomas, David, and Abraham. Thomas entered the Revolutionary army in 1776, was taken prisoner at the capture of Fort Washington, and died in captivity.

Jacob Bacon was from Canaan in 1741.

Zebulon Badcock was from Coventry, and came in 1745.

Joseph Bailey was from Lebanon, and came to Sharon in 1774.

Thomas Barnes was an early settler in the northwest part of the town, and lived near the present residence of Mr. Roswell H. Hazzard. He came into the town in 1750. He had three sons,—Thomas, Dan, and Jonah. Jonah, the youngest son, was a physician, and a man of great wit and shrewdness. He lived at what is now called the Evertson place, west of the Governor house.

David Barrows came from Mansfield before the Revolutionary war.

Amos Barrows was a brother of the preceding, and lived many years where Stephen White lately lived, in the Great Hollow. He kept a tavern, and was accidentally killed by falling from the hay-loft in his barn, on the 5th day of December, 1779, at the age of fifty years.

Seth Barstow was from Rochester, Mass., in 1771. He lived at the lower end of Abel Street, where his grandson, Seth B. St. John, now lives. He had five sons,—Allen, Samuel, Seth, Gamaliel, and Charles. Samuel was a physician, who formerly lived in Great Barrington, Mass., and who died there in 1813. Gamaliel was also a physician, residing in Broome County, N. Y. He was a member of Congress, and a member of the Senate and treasurer of the State of New York.

John Bates was one of the first settlers of the town. He lived a little below Henry Reed's present residence. His daughter Sarah, who was born on the 25th day of February, 1739, was the first white child born in Sharon, except Jehiel Jackson.

Nathan Beard was from Milton, in Litchfield. He came to Sharon in 1779. He for several years carried on the forge in Hutchinson Hollow.

John Beardslee was from Newtown in 1760.

Capt. Edmund Bennet was from the parish of Columbia, in Lebanon, and came to Sharon soon after the Revolutionary war. He was a blacksmith by trade. One of his sons, Hon. Milo L. Bennett, was a judge of the Supreme Court of Vermont.

James Betts was from Norwalk, and came to Sharon at an early day.

Dr. Simeon Blackman was from Newtown, and came to Sharon in 1789, and settled on the mountain, where John Jackson, Sr., now lives. He studied medicine with Dr. Shepherd, of Newtown, and here acquired eminence and distinction in his professional career. He enjoyed a large share of the public confidence, and represented the town in the Legislature at five sessions. He left no children.

Daniel Bouton was from Stamford, and was the first settler on the lot owned by the late Cyrus Swan, Esq. He died Nov. 14, 1740, at an early age.

Walston Brockway, the first of the Brockway family in Sharon, came from Branford in 1752. He settled in the southwest part of the town, near the line of Kent, and died there in 1813, at the age of ninety. His son, the late Asa Brockway, was a soldier of the Revolution, and a pensioner.

Eliphalet Buel was from Salisbury, and was brother of the late Col. Nathaniel Buel, of that town. He came to Sharon in 1767, and settled where Homer Pardee lived. He died of the smallpox, on the 5th of February, 1777, aged forty-nine. His only son, Nathaniel, died a prisoner in New York, a short time before, and his wife soon after, of the same disease.

Walter Burr was from Fairfield. He lived at what is called the Burr place, in the valley.

Lieut. Stephen Calkin was from Lebanon, and was an original proprietor of the town. He drew the thirty-first home-lot, and lived where Abraham Weed lately lived.

Abel Camp, from New Milford, came to Sharon in 1769.

Hon. John Canfield was a son of Samuel Canfield, of New Milford, who was one of the judges of the County Court for Litchfield County, and a deacon of the church in New Milford. Mr. Canfield was born at New Milford in 1740, and graduated at Yale College in 1762. He studied law, and established himself in the practice of his profession in this town in 1765, being the first lawyer that lived here. He purchased of Parson Smith the lot next south of Judge Sterling's, and built the old brick house owned by that gentleman. Mr. Canfield enjoyed an enviable reputation, and was held in high estimation by his fellow-citizens. He represented the town in the Legislature at ten different sessions. He was a professor of religion, and enjoyed the reputation of a sincere and humble Christian. In 1786 he was elected a member of the Continental Congress, and had he lived to take his seat in that body, would probably have been a distinguished member. He died, however, on the 26th day of October, 1786, at the age of forty-six. The grief of the community at his death was general and deep, and the old men in after-years spoke of him with unbounded confidence and attachment. He left but one son, John M. Canfield, Esq., who resided at Sackett's Harber, N. Y., and a number of daughters. The Hon. John C. Spencer, Secretary of War, was his grandson.

Hon. Judson Canfield was a son of Col. Samuel Canfield, of New Milford, and a nephew of Hon. John Canfield. He graduated at Yale College in 1782. He came to Sharon in 1787, and commenced the practice of law. He was a member of the House of Representatives at seventeen sessions, and for several years a member of the Council. He was also a judge of the Court of Common Pleas. He left Sharon in 1815, and removed to the State of Ohio, where he died in 1839, at the age of more than eighty years.

Col. Samuel Canfield was a brother of the preceding, and came to Sharon in early life. He was an assistant commissary of issues in the war of the Revolution, and towards the close of his life drew a handsome pension. He was for many years a merchant of extensive business, and was town clerk from 1792 to 1815, having succeeded Daniel Griswold, Esq., in that office. He was a member of the Assembly at several sessions. He died while on a visit at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on the 1st day of October, 1837, at the age of eighty-three.

Deacon Timothy Carrier was from Colchester in 1747. He was appointed a deacon of the church in 1766, which office he held until his death.

Nicholas Cartwright was the common ancestor of the Cartwright family, which have been numerous in the town. He was originally from Barnstable, Mass., and lived a short time on Philip's patent, now Southeast, N. Y. He came to Sharon in 1756. He died in May, 1782. He had three sons,—Reuben, Christopher, and Samuel. Christopher, in 1775, joined the army under Gen. Montgomery, and was in the battle of Quebec, in which Montgomery fell. He died of the smallpox, in the American camp, on the island of Orleans, before the retreat from Canada. Samuel was also in the army with his brother Christopher, but escaped his untimely end.

Joshua Chaffee was from Mansfield, and came to Sharon in 1755.

Deacon Isaac Chamberlain was born in New Marlboro', Mass., and came to Sharon with his stepfather, Mr. John Hollister, in 1756. He was a carpenter and joiner by trade. He entered the army early in the Revolutionary war, and was sergeant of artificers. He was appointed deacon of the Congregational Church in 1799, which office he held till his death.

Obadiah Chapman was from Colchester, and came to Sharon in 1741. He settled in the south part of the town. He had four sons,—Obadiah, Pelatiah, Matthias, and Robert. Robert, the youngest, was a soldier in the old French war.

Samuel Chapman was from Colchester. He came with the first settlers, and settled on the forty-sixth home-lot.

Amos Chappel was a son of Caleb Chappel, of Lebanon, one of the original proprietors. He came to Sharon in 1760, and settled in Ellsworth where Charles B. Everett lives.

Jehiel Church was from Great Barrington, Mass. He died May 1, 1819, at the age of seventy-seven. He had nine children.

Samuel Cluxton was originally from the old Plymouth colony. He came to Sharon in early life. He was a faithful soldier in the Revolutionary war, and died in 1820.

Caleb Cole was from Norwalk, and came to Sharon in 1748.

Josiah Coleman came from Hebron in 1771. He was a practical surveyor, and was considerably employed in that business. He was a member of the General Assembly in October, 1783, and in May, 1784, and again in May, 1788. He was also a delegate to the convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States, to the adoption of which he was very strongly opposed. One of his sons, Josiah, was taken prisoner at Fort Washington, in 1776, and on his return died at Milford, Jan. 8, 1777, of disease contracted in the British prison-ships.

Samuel Comstock was from Lyme, and came into Sharon with the first settlers.

Capt. Benjamin Conkling was from Norwalk, and lived for many years where Charles Van Dusen lived, in the valley. He was often appointed selectman of the town, as well as to other offices.

John Corbet was from Lebanon in 1743. He built a saw-mill at an early day near Abel Benedict's.

Jabez Crippen was from Colchester, and was an original proprietor of the township. He drew the twenty-first home-lot, and his house stood on the ground now occupied by the Grosvenor house, so called, nearly opposite Governor Smith's. He was the first selectman ever chosen in the town. He had sons Jabez, John, Samuel, Thomas, and Joseph.

Oliver Crocker was from Lebanon before the Revolutionary war.

Caleb Curtice was from Hebron, and was an original proprietor. He drew the thirtieth home-lot, and lived where Ezra H. Bartram, Esq., now lives.

Deacon Thomas Delano was from Wareham, Mass. He lived a short time in Tolland, and came to Sharon in 1759.

Daniel Deming was from Saybrook, and came to Sharon in 1782.

Capt. Ebenezer Dibble was from Salisbury in 1776.

Ebenezer Dibble was a son of Rev. Ebenezer Dibble, of Stamford, formerly Episcopal missionary in Sharon. He was a merchant, and owned the brick house now known as the Taylor house.

Capt. Samuel Dotey was the ancestor of the Dotey family. He was from the old Plymouth colony, and came to Sharon in 1747. He had a son David, who was a physician and lived near Hitchcock's Corner, and was for a while a captain in the Revolutionary service.

David Downs, Esq., was from New Haven, and came to Sharon about the year 1768. He was a tailor by trade. He was captain of a company in the Revolutionary service, and was, with his company, taken prisoner at the "Cedars," in Canada, in 1776. He was for many years one of the magistrates of the town, and one of its representatives in the Assembly at eleven sessions.

Capt. Jonathan Dunham was from Colchester, and was a leading man in the first settlement of the town. He lived opposite Richard Smith's, and there kept the first tavern in the town. He was the agent to the Assembly to procure the incorporation of the township, and was appointed to call the first town-meeting. He was standing moderator of all the town-meetings held during his lifetime, and selectman of the town during the same period. His race, however, was a short one, as he died on the 28th day of February, 1745, at the age of fifty-nine.

Samuel S. Elliott was from Killingworth, and came to Sharon in 1780.

Deacon Jonathan Elmer was from Norwalk, and came to Sharon in 1746.

Martin Elmer was a son of the preceding, and was a cooper by trade, and a Baptist by religious profession.

Col. Samuel Elmer was a son of Deacon J. Elmer, and was a brave officer in the Revolutionary war. He was appointed a major in Col. Hinman's regiment in 1775, and was engaged in active duty in the campaign of that year. The next year he was appointed a colonel in the New York Line, and continued in command of a regiment while he remained in the army.

Ebenezer Everett was from Hebron in 1745, and settled where Adolphus Everett lived. He had three sons,—Isaiah, Ebe, and Eliphalet, the two latter of whom were Revolutionary soldiers. Eliphalet was for several years the steward of Gen. Washington's military family.

John Everett was a brother of Ebenezer Everett, and came to Sharon from Windham in 1757. He was a blacksmith by trade, and lived on the road which formerly led north from Joel Whitford's, now discontinued.

David Foster was from Lebanon in 1750. He was a leading man in the affairs of the town for many years. He was a member of the Assembly at the October sessions in 1763 and 1764, and selectman eight years.

Elijah Foster was a son of the preceding, and was a highly respectable man. He entered the Continental army as a lieutenant in the campaign of 1776, and was in active service till the close of the year.

Deacon Ebenezer Frisbie was from Branford, and was the first settler at the place occupied by the late Benjamin Bailey, on the Ellsworth turnpike. He came to Sharon with the first settlers, and, being a surveyor, he was much employed in laying out lands in the early location of the township. He was town clerk from December, 1743, to January, 1746, and one of the deacons of the church nearly the whole of the time of his residence in the town.

Benjamin Fuller was from Colchester, and came with the first settlers. He was among the first who died in the town.

Dr. Samuel R. Gager was born at Norwich, May 23, 1763, and was an assistant surgeon in the navy in the Revolutionary war. Soon after the close of the war he visited England. He established himself in Sharon in the practice of surgery in 1788. He was long celebrated in his profession, and was much respected as a citizen. He represented the town in the Assembly in the years 1821–22 and 1829. He was also for many years a justice of the peace. He died Aug. 4, 1835.

Joseph Gallow was from Hudson, N. Y., in 1785.

John Gay, Esq., was born in Dedham, Mass., and in early life settled in Litchfield, and was among the first white inhabitants of that town. In 1743 he came to Sharon, and purchased of Israel Holley the thirty-ninth home-lot, which was in the north part of the town. He had sons John, Ebenezer, Fisher, and Perez. John was the father of the late Capt. Daniel Gay. He died Jan. 1, 1776, at the age of forty-eight. Ebenezer was a merchant, and built the brick house lately owned by Reuben K. Hunt. He was a colonel in the militia, and frequently commanded detachments in the Revolutionary war. He was the father of the late Mr. David Gay.

Job Gibbs was from Wareham, Mass., and came to Sharon in 1747. His house was the one next south of the Governor's mansion. Mr. Gibbs was a merchant, and did a large business for those times. He had three sons—Sylvanus, Heman, and Job. Capt. Sylvanus Gibbs, the eldest, was an officer in the Revolutionary war, and died on the 19th of June, 1834, at the age of eighty-one.

Jonathan Gillett was from Colchester in 1745. He was representative to the Assembly at the May and October sessions in 1788, and a delegate to the convention called to ratify the Constitution of the United States.

Charles Gillett was a brother of the preceding, and came to Sharon from Colchester in 1755. He was a blacksmith by trade. He was town treasurer from 1760 to 1771. He enlisted into Capt. Downs' company, and marched to the Northward in 1776. While the army lay at the "Cedars," in Canada, he was killed by a party of Indians lying in ambush, as he was riding out on business connected with his duty as commissary. He left several children, one of whom was the wife of the late Capt. Edmund Bennett.

Eleazar Gillson was from Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y., and came to Sharon in 1784. He had been a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and settled a little north of Elijah Juckett's. He was one of the first emigrants to Ohio, and the first mail-carrier on the post-road between Pittsburgh and Cleveland. He carried the whole mail in his pocket on foot. He died at the age of nearly ninety years.

William Goodrich was the ancestor of the Goodrich family, which has been quite numerous in the town. He was originally from Wethersfield, and first moved to Litchfield, where he remained ten years. He afterwards removed to Sheffield, Mass., and when the township of Sharon was sold he became the purchaser of two rights. He brought his family to the town in the fall of 1738, and built a hut near the outlet of Mudge pond. Here he spent the winter, with no neighbors, except Indians, nearer than the Dutch settlements at Leedsville. He went to mill on foot during the winter, once to New Milford, and once to Red Hook, N. Y., on snow-shoes, and carried his wheat on his back. That he was a sincere Christian we may well believe from the introductory clause in his last will and testament, the first recorded on the probate records for the district of Litchfield. After speaking of the uncertainty of life as a reason for making his will, he says, "Wherefore, committing my body to the dust from whence it was taken, and my soul to the bosom of my dear Lord Jesus Christ, hoping and believing that he will raise me up with all his saints at the glorious morning of the resurrection, I give, etc." Mr. Goodrich died on the 31st day of March, 1743, at the age of fifty-six. He had sons Samuel, Jared, William, Elnathan, David, Elisha, and Solomon, and their descendants have been very numerous.

John P. Goodwin was from Hartford, and came to Sharon in 1784. He was a corporal in the Continental army, and was eight years in the service. His discharge, under the hand of Gen. Washington, spoke highly of his merits. He was a representative to the Assembly in May, 1818. He was killed at the raising of a small building belonging to Benjamin Hollister, Esq., on the 15th of May, 1833, and his untimely end was deeply lamented.

John Gould was an original proprietor from Hebron, and drew the thirty-fourth home-lot. He was gravedigger for many years.

Job Gould was from New Milford in 1763, and purchased of Deacon Jackson the place on the mountain lately owned by his grandson, Major David Gould.

John Gray was from Scotland, and came to Sharon in 1743. He first settled in the valley, and his house stood on the bank, a little east of the valley store.

Joseph Gregory was from Norwalk in 1759. He was a merchant for many years.

Ephraim Griswold was an early settler. He had three sons,—Azariah, David, and Jabez. Azariah was a subaltern officer in the Revolutionary army.

Daniel Griswold, Esq., was from Norwich in 1756. He lived where Richard Smith, Esq., now lives. He was a physician, and pursued the practice of his profession for many years. He was appointed a justice of the peace at an early day. On the death of Col. Williams, in 1774, he was appointed town clerk, which office he held till his death. He also succeeded the latter gentleman as deacon in the church.

Francis Griswold was a brother of the preceding, and came to Sharon in 1762. He was a tanner and currier.

Capt. Adonijah Griswold, another brother of Daniel Griswold, Esq., came to Sharon in 1762. He was a lieutenant in Capt. Downs' company in 1776.

David Hamilton was from Lebanon, and was the first settler on the place owned by Judge Sterling. He afterwards lived opposite Governor Smith's. He appears to have been the great land speculator of the day, his name appearing on the records as the grantor or grantee in deeds more frequently than any other. He was also for a time deputy sheriff. He died in 1781, leaving sons Dudley, John, and Joseph. Joseph was a physician, and practiced medicine in the town for several years. Dudley formerly lived where William Marsh now lives. Mr. Hamilton disposed of most of his real estate in town previous to his death. He was largely interested in land in Vermont, and in what was called the Susquehanna purchase.

Cornelius Hamlin was an early settler from Wareham, Mass.

Deacon Ebenezer Hamlin was also from Wareham.

Deacon Benjamin Hamlin was son of Deacon Eleazar Hamlin, of Fredericksburg, now Carmel, in Putnam Co., N. Y. He came to Sharon in 1780, and lived at different places in the northwest part of the town. He was elected deacon of the Congregational Church in 1793, and held the office till his death.

Sylvanus Hanchett was from Salisbury in 1769. He is celebrated as being the first person who formally invited the Methodist preachers into Sharon, in 1788. It was at his house that the first Methodist society was formed by Rev. Freeborn Garretson, and where public worship was celebrated for several years. He removed to the State of New York many years since, where he died.

Joel Harvey was from New Milford in 1742, and settled in the valley. He built a grist-mill, which stood more than sixty years. He also built the stone house in the valley in 1747. He was a large landholder, and had a very numerous family.

Capt. Ebenezer Hatch was from Kent in 1768.

Bartholomew Heath was from Lebanon, and was among the first settlers.

David Hide was from Lebanon in 1748. He was appointed constable in 1750, and served in that capacity, and as collector, ten years. He was also a deputy sheriff for several years.

William Hide was from Lebanon in 1759.

Samuel Hitchcock was from Norwalk in 1752. It was at his house that the first Methodist sermon preached in the town was delivered.

Israel Holley was an early settler from Stamford.

Joseph Holley was from Stamford, and was the original owner of one-half of the thirty-sixth home-lot, the same on which the late George Bissell afterwards lived.

Josiah Hollister, from Glastonbury, was the common ancestor of the Hollister family which resided in the south part of the town.

Samuel Hollister, from whom the family of that name in the southeast part of the town are descended, was from the parish of Kensington, in Farmington, now Berlin. In 1744 he purchased of Dr. George Holloway, of Cornwall, one hundred acres of land on the Ousatonic River, which had formerly been laid out by Joseph Skinner. There he settled and died.

Rev. Aaron Hunt, who for the last thirty years of his life was a citizen of Sharon, was a Methodist clergyman of high standing in that denomination of Christians, and whose reputation is eminent among the early lights of the church. He commenced preaching in 1791, and for more than fifty years was an able, active, and efficient itinerant minister.

Daniel Hunt was from Lebanon at the earliest settlement of the town.

Phineas Hunt, a brother of the preceding, was from Lebanon in 1747.

Jonathan Hunter was from Wareham, Mass., where he had been deacon of the church. He came to Sharon in 1747, and purchased of Benjamin Richmond the farm on which Benjamin Sears lived.

Ebenezer Hunter was from Norwich about the year 1760. His son, Nathaniel Hunter, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Capt. Samuel Hurlburt was from Lebanon in 1743.

Samuel Hutchinson, Esq., was one of the first settlers, and the second magistrate in the town. He was from Lebanon, and drew the tenth home-lot, the same on which the stone house owned by Anson Boland stood.

Deacon Ebenezer Jackson was from Norwalk, and settled on the forty-second home-lot, now owned by John Jackson, on the mountain. He was an early deacon of the church, and was a useful man.

Capt. Caleb Jewett was from Norwich, now Lisbon, in 1743. He was selectman of the town twelve years, and representative to the Assembly at eleven sessions.

Joseph Jennings was from Fairfield in 1771.

Benjamin Johns was an early settler in the valley, and lived on the Burr place.

Evans Jones was the first settler upon the place owned by Deacon William M. Smith, which was the old parsonage of Parson Smith.

Elijah Juckett was originally from old Plymouth colony, Mass. He served faithfully and honorably through the Revolutionary war, and was a sergeant in the light infantry under Gen. Lafayette. He was in the severe conflict at Stony Point when that post was taken by Gen. Wayne, as well as in several other battles. He was a pensioner under the act of 1818. He died in 1839, at the age of seventy-eight.

Oliver Kellogg, Esq., was from Sheffield, Mass., and settled in Sharon in 1788. He was a clothier by trade, and lived at Hitchcock's Corner. He was a highly respectable and influential citizen, and was a representative to the Assembly at sixteen sessions. He was also for many years one of the magistrates of the town. He died Sept. 17, 1830, at the age of seventy.

Elihu Ketchum was the first settler on the Bates place, so called.

George King was from Windsor in 1784. He had previously been connected with the commissary department of the army, and at the close of the war established himself as a merchant in company with Eli Mills.

Rev. Ebenezer Knibloe. Some account of this gentleman is given in a foregoing part of this work. It may here be added that he had three sons,—William, Elijah, and John P.,—all of whom were cut off within a few weeks of each other by the epidemic which swept over the town in 1812.

Cornelius Knickerbacker was one of the early Dutch inhabitants of Salisbury, and lived at the Furnace village.

Joseph Lake was a soldier in the old French war and in the war of the Revolution. He came to Sharon from Stratford in 1772.

Joseph Landers was from Wareham, Mass., in 1748. He bought of Caleb Chappell the eighth home-lot.

Joseph Landers, Jr., was a son of the preceding, and lived with his father on the eighth home-lot. He was appointed a deacon of the church in 1781, in the place of Deacon Frisbie, resigned, which office he retained till his death. He was a representative to the Assembly at the May session in 1782.

Samuel Lewis was from Hebron in 1743. He was the first settler on the ninth lot in the first hundred-acre division in Ellsworth. He continued in town about thirty years, and then removed to New Ashford, Mass. His son, Samuel Lewis, Jr., was a soldier in the early part of the Revolutionary war, and a history of his captivity in England and his escape is given in the former part of this work.

David Lillie was from Windham in 1765.

Nathaniel Lockwood was from New Canaan in 1784, and purchased the farm on the mountain known as the Lockwood place, near Mr. Jewett's.

Jonathan Lord was from Colchester, and was one of the first inhabitants of Ellsworth, where he settled in 1743.

Joseph Lord, Esq., was a son of the preceding, and came to the town with his father in 1743. He was for many years the only justice of the peace in Ellsworth. He was for several years a selectman, and member of the Assembly in October, 1777. He was the first person buried in the burying-yard now used in Ellsworth.

Baltus Lott. This individual appears to have been a squatter upon the public lands before the township was sold. He was probably a Dutchman, and had taken possession of a considerable tract of land in Connecticut and New York, and had erected a house and barrack, and made considerable clearings. His territory embraced what is now called the Burr farm. The proprietors made many efforts to remove him, but he resisted them all until March, 1742, when Joseph Skinner purchased his possessions for three hundred pounds, old tenor, and he went away. He afterwards lived in the north part of Amenia, N. Y.

John Lovell came to this part of the country from Rochester, Mass., in 1745.

Joseph Lovell was from Rochester, Mass.

Joseph Manrow was from Norwalk in 1744.

Noah Manrow was for more than forty years an inhabitant of Mudgetown. He came from Salisbury in 1751.

Amos Marchant, from Newtown, came to Sharon in 1773.

Capt. Ephraim Marriner was from Colchester in 1765. He was a member of the Assembly in May, 1787, and in May and October, 1788.

Pelatiah Marsh was from Lebanon in 1764.

Eliphalet Martin was from Windham in 1786.

John Marvin, Jr., was from Norwalk in 1748. He bought of Elihu Ketcham the farm called the Bates place, about one mile easterly from the meeting-house, and lived there. He was also a part owner in the iron-works at the mouth of Mudge pond. Mr. Marvin was a member of Assembly in May, 1756, and 1768.

Adonijah Maxam was from the old colony in 1748. The name in the early records is spelled Muxam, and is so pronounced by elderly people at the present day. Mr. Maxam settled where Orrin Abel lived, on the Ellsworth turnpike, where he died in 1760. He left four sons,—Samuel, Benjamin, Adonijah, and Jacob. The third son, Adonijah, after having gone through the active and perilous services of the Revolutionary war, died at the age of ninety-seven years.

Joshua Millard was from Cornwall in 1768.

Henry Miller was from Branford in 1750.

Deacon Gain Miller was born in Ireland in 1716.

Ebenezer Mudge was one of the original proprietors of the town, and was from Colchester. He drew the twenty-fifth home-lot, lying on both sides of Town Street.

Capt. Thomas North was from Wethersfield in 1743. He was one of the first proprietors of the iron-works in the Hollow. He lived on the twenty-sixth home-lot.

Calvin Noyes was from Lyme, and was a direct descendant of the Rev. Mr. Noyes, the first minister of that town. He came to Sharon in 1792, and purchased a large and valuable real estate in the neighborhood of Benedict's mill, where he resided. He was distinguished for his public spirit, and for his many acts of private charity. He lived a bachelor, and for the last few years of his life was entirely blind. By his last will he gave the greater part of his estate to the Congregational society in Sharon, the American Education Society, the Connecticut Missionary Society, and the Connecticut Bible Society. Each of those societies has received nearly seventeen hundred dollars from his estate. He died at the residence of his brother, Deacon Moses Noyes, in Poultney, Vt., Jan. 22, 1831, at the age of eighty.

Selden Noyes was a younger brother of the preceding, and came with him from Lyme in 1792.

John Orton was from Litchfield in 1764.

Lieut. John Pardee, the patriarch of the numerous family of Pardee in Sharon, was from Norwalk, and was an original proprietor. He was a shoemaker and tanner by occupation, and settled near the stone bridge, north of the meeting-house. He was a leading and prominent man in all the affairs of the town, and was a very large land-holder. He was one of the first representatives of the town in the Legislature, being elected such in October, 1755, when the town was first represented in that body; and he was chosen to that office at six sessions. He died July 13, 1766, aged sixty-nine. He had six sons, who settled in the town, and whose descendants are very numerous.

Joseph Park was from Middletown, and was the first settler on the place owned by the heirs of the late Samuel Beecher.

Capt. Enoch Parsons was from Newtown in 1763. He was a carpenter by trade, and settled where his great-grandson, Frederick L. Parsons, now lives. Being a man of more than a common education for those days, he was appointed for many years to "line the psalm," agreeable to the ancient manner of singing in public worship. He served as selectman and constable for several years, and was member of the Assembly in October, 1795.

Abel Patchen was from Welton in 1783. He purchased of Zebulon Badcock the south half of the twenty-sixth home-lot, originally Deacon Skinner's, and kept a public-house during his life. He was a representative to the Assembly in October, 1798, and May, 1799.

Dr. Abner Peck was a physician, and came to Sharon in 1751 from Salisbury. He purchased a place of Luke St. John, a little south of Joel L. Whitford's. He died of smallpox, Oct. 11, 1756, leaving a widow and two daughters.

John Pennoyer came from Stamford in 1742. He purchased a part of the twenty-second home-lot, originally owned by Samuel Calkin, being the place where the late Gen. Augustine Taylor lived.

Jonathan Petit was from Stamford, at the earliest settlement of the town. He owned the thirty-second home-lot, and he lived on the road, which is now discontinued, leading north from Joel C. Whitford's. He was much employed in public affairs. He was constable nine years. He died in 1772, at an advanced age.

Samuel Petit was a son of John Petit, of Stamford, and a nephew of the preceding.

Joel Petit was a brother of the preceding, and was for many years an inhabitant of Sharon. He lived to a very advanced age. His son, Joel T. Petit, Esq., was a young gentleman of great promise, who was educated for the law, and settled in the town. After a short professional career he died of consumption, Sept. 13, 1807, aged thirty-two.

Jonathan Pratt was originally from the old Plymouth colony, and came to Sharon in 1753. He first lived in the Hollow, near the outlet of Mudge pond, and was a partner in the iron-works.

Capt. Abraham Pratt was from Saybrook in 1783.

Abner Quitterfield is supposed to have come from Norwalk in 1752.

John Randall was from Wareham, Mass., in 1753. His wife, who was the daughter of John Bates, was the first female, and the second child, born in the town.

Daniel Raymond came from Woodbury in 1748.

Moses Reed was the first settler on the place lately owned by Capt. Abraham Pratt.

Arthur Rexford was from Wallingford in 1757.

Asa Rice was from Wallingford, now Meriden, in 1774.

Nathaniel Richards was from Norwich in 1744, and settled on the lot lately owned by Samuel Beecher.

Benjamin Richmond was one of the first proprietors and settlers, and came to Sharon in 1742.

Nathaniel Roberts was from Salisbury in 1759. He lived in Abel Street, a little north of Stephen Tickner's. He died July 15, 1766, at the age of fifty-five. He left sons John, William, Lebbeus, and Amos.

Samuel Roberts, Esq., was from Windsor, and came to Sharon in 1784. He was at one time a magistrate of the town, and twice its representative in the General Assembly.

Dr. Samuel Rockwell was born in East Windsor, Feb. 18, 1759. While he was young his father removed to Colebrook, and was one of the first settlers of that township. In 1776 he was in the army, for which he drew a pension after 1831. He entered Yale College in 1779, but soon left that institution, and commenced the study of medicine under the celebrated Dr. Lemuel Hopkins. He settled in Sharon in 1784, and, except about five years, when he lived in Salisbury, remained here till his death, which occurred on the 24th of June, 1836, at the age of seventy-seven. He represented the town in the Legislature at the session in 1815.

Jonathan Rowlee was from East Haddam in 1741, and lived near Richard Woodward's.

Deacon Matthew St. John was from Norwalk in 1745. He bought of Samuel Comstock the thirty-second home-lot.

Timothy St. John came from Norwalk in 1756.

Daniel St. John was a brother to the preceding, and came to Sharon in 1761. He was a blacksmith by occupation.

Silas St. John was also a brother of Timothy and Daniel St. John. He lived in Ellsworth. He was the first deacon of the church in Ellsworth, and was for several years town treasurer. He died Sept. 21, 1805, at the age of sixty-four.

Amos Sanford was from Newton in 1768.

Capt. Stephen Sears was originally from Barnstable, Mass., and came to Sharon in 1760.

Dr. Asher Shepherd came from Hartford in 1772, and was a partner with Dr. Simeon Smith in the druggist business.

Benjamin Skiff was from the town of Chilmark, on the island of Martha's Vineyard, and came to Sharon in 1774. He lived in Ellsworth.

Samuel Skiff was a cousin of the preceding, and came from the same place.

Nathaniel Skinner, Esq., was from Colchester, and was one of the first and principal proprietors of the township. He drew the twenty-sixth home-lot, known as the Patchen place. He was the first magistrate, first town clerk, and first deacon of the church. He remained in town until 1760, when he removed to Salisbury, and was an owner of the mill now known as Benedict's mill.

James Smith was from Bolton, and was one of the original proprietors. He drew the eighteenth home-lot, which lay on both sides of the Town Street, and bounding south on the highway leading by Dwight St. John's. Mr. Smith was the first person ever chosen constable in the town, and was elected to that office for three successive years.

For sketch of Hon. John Cotton Smith, see Chapter II.

Theophilus Smith was a brother of the preceding, and first lived near where Dr. Deming now lives. In 1749 he bought of Mica Mudge the grist-mill known as Gay's mill, which stood near Merrills McLean's present residence.

Samuel Smith was from the Great Nine Partners, N. Y., and came to Sharon in 1754. He was a blacksmith by trade, and lived on the Burr place, in the valley. He was a selectman for several years.

Dr. Simeon Smith was a younger brother of the Rev. Cotton Mather Smith. He came to Sharon about 1756, and was a physician of extensive practice. He kept a large store of drugs and medicines, importing his articles direct from London. In 1776 he commanded a company of six months' men, and was on service in the vicinity of New York. He was a large land-holder, and built the large stone house now known as the Governor's house. He represented the town in the Legislature at several sessions. He went to West Haven, Vt., in 1787, and there resided till his death, February, 1804. He left no children. He was a man of great activity and enterprise.

Paul Smith was the youngest brother of Rev. Cotton M. Smith, and came to Sharon in 1770. He lived in the house originally built by Job Gibbs, next north of Jay S. Canfield's, now demolished. He was a constable of the town for a great number of years. He died March 28, 1825, at the age of ninety.

Dr. Phineas Smith was a son of Dan Smith, an elder brother of Rev. Cotton M. Smith. He came to Sharon when young, and resided with his uncle, Dr. Simeon Smith, by whom he was educated as a physician. He relinquished the practice, and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He built the house owned by the late Cyrus Swan, Esq. He died June 4, 1794, at the age of forty.

Apollos Smith was a younger brother of Phineas Smith, who came to Sharon in early life, and resided with his uncle, Dr. Smith, by whom he was assisted in establishing an extensive pottery before the Revolutionary war, which proved a profitable business.

Deacon Paul Smith, Jr., was a son of Paul Smith, and was born in Suffield in 1763. He came to Sharon with his father, and resided here until his death. He was elected a deacon of the church in 1793, and discharged the duties of that office with great fidelity and acceptance for forty-six years.

David Smith was from Litchfield, and came to Sharon in 1801.

Thomas Spafford was an original proprietor from Lebanon, and drew the thirteenth home-lot, on which Samuel Beecher lived.

Alexander Spencer was one of the first settlers from East Haddam, and he lived opposite Dwight St. John's present residence.

Capt. John Sprague was from Lebanon in 1739.

Hon. Ansel Sterling was born in Lyme, and settled in Sharon as a lawyer in 1808, where he spent his life. As a lawyer his forensic ability was of a high order, nor was he deficient in legal science. His language flowed readily and rapidly, and sometimes his appeals to the jury were very effective. He held a seat in Congress for two terms. He died Nov. 5, 1853, at the age of seventy-three years, leaving a large estate to his numerous family.

Robert Stedman was one of the first settlers, and came to Sharon in 1743.

Caleb Strong was from Colchester in 1743.

Josiah Strong was originally from Colchester, but lived a while in Litchfield. He came to Sharon in 1747.

Josiah Strong, Jr., was a son of the preceding, and was born in Sharon, June 16, 1758. His life was eventful as illustrating the dangers and sufferings of a Revolutionary soldier in the course of two years' active service. He enlisted into Capt. Downs' company in 1776, and marched to Canada. He was taken prisoner, with the rest of the company, at the "Cedars," on the 19th of May following. They were released by Gen. Arnold on his return from Quebec, and Mr. Strong returned to Sharon. He immediately enlisted into Capt. Smith's company, and joined the army under Gen. Washington. He was in the battles of White Plains, Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown, in which last action he was so severely wounded in the leg as to render amputation necessary. He was, of course, compelled to leave the army, but he carried with him an honorable discharge from Gen. Washington. He was placed upon the roll of invalid pensioners. He died at Geneva, N. Y.

Joshua Studley was from Hanover, Mass., in 1771. He settled in the south part of Ellsworth.

John Swain was from Branford in 1745.

Cyrus Swan, Esq., was born in Stonington in 1770. He was in early life engaged in mercantile pursuits in the district of Maine. He afterwards pursued the study of law, and established himself in the practice in this town in 1798. He was a successful practitioner, and acquired a respectable standing at the bar. He died Aug. 20, 1835, aged sixty-five.

Rowland Swetland was the first settler on the place where Lyman Merwin lives.

Gen. Augustine Taylor was from New Milford in 1784. He purchased of Robert C. Livingston, who had come to Sharon during the Revolutionary war, the place now called the Taylor place, where he resided until 1815, when he left the town. He rose to the rank of major-general in the militia, and for a while commanded the troops which were stationed for the defense of New London, during the late war with England. He died soon after he removed.

Amos Thurston lived in the Great Hollow, near the school-house. He came to Sharon in 1768.

William Tickner was from Lebanon in 1739. He drew the thirty-eighth home-lot, next north of Mr. Sprague's, in Gay Street.

John Tickner was a brother of the preceding, and came from Lebanon in 1749.

Elisha Tobey was from the old Plymouth colony.

Bezaleel Tyler was from Branford.

Cyprian Waldo was from Windham in 1770.

Lieut. James Warren lived on the place now owned and occupied by Edwin N. Hartwell.

George Way was from Lyme.

George White was from Wareham, Mass., and was the first settler on the place owned by Chesterfield Chapman. He came to Sharon in 1747.

Israel White was from Danbury in 1775. He settled in the Great Hollow, where he purchased a large and valuable farm of David Wood.

Capt. John Wilson came to Sharon, after the Revolutionary war, from Westchester Co., N. Y.

Col. John Williams was originally a physician, and came to Sharon in 1743 from Lebanon. He was for many years a very distinguished inhabitant of the town. He lived nearly opposite Judge Sterling's, and the house which he occupied was standing sixty years since. He was elected town clerk in the fall of 1745, which office he held twenty-nine successive years, till his death. Previous to his appointment the records had been badly kept, and a good part of them are very unintelligible; but from the time they passed into his hands they were kept with great accuracy. It would seem that for nearly thirty years he wrote almost every deed which passed title to real estate in Sharon, judging from the fact that they were nearly all witnessed by him and acknowledged before him; and it is interesting to observe with what remarkable accuracy and strict legal propriety they are all expressed. He held the office of selectman seventeen years, and was chosen member of the Assembly at twenty-seven different sessions, being the first ever chosen to that office in the town. When the county of Litchfield was organized, in 1751, he was appointed one of the judges of the County Court, and in about five years afterwards was made chief judge. He was also the first judge of probate for the district of Sharon, which was established in 1755, which office he held while he lived. He also went through several military grades, and for several years commanded a regiment of colonial militia. He was a man of tall and slender frame, but of great gravity and very dignified deportment, and his word was law. He was a deacon in the church from June, 1766, till his death. He died on Sunday, March 14, 1774, at the age of sixty-eight, and as it was in the exciting times which immediately preceded the Revolution, and he had been a military character, he was buried with military honors. His sword was borne upon his coffin, and volleys of musketry were fired over his grave. The funeral services were performed under the direction of Capt. David Downs.

Abel Wood was from Wareham, Mass., in 1748.

David Wood was from Ridgefield, and was the first settler upon what is called the White place, in the Great Hollow. He came to Sharon in 1754.

Elias Woodruff was from Southampton, L. I., in 1768. He purchased a part of the ninth home-lot of Amos Tyler, and lived on it till his death, June 17, 1807, at the age of seventy.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

At the first town-meeting a committee consisting of Nathaniel Skinner, Jonathan Dunham, and John Sprague was appointed "to go after a minister." The committee made application to Mr. Peter Pratt, of Lebanon, a candidate for the ministry, and a graduate of Yale College of the class of 1736, and on Jan. 8, 1740, the town called him "upon trial for some convenient time," and laid a tax of fifteen shillings on a right for the payment of his services. His labors were acceptable to the people, and on the 14th day of March following he was invited to settle over the church and congregation in the work of the ministry. The town voted him a salary which would amount to about two hundred dollars per annum.* Mr. Goodrich and Mr. Sprague were appointed to treat with Mr. Pratt, and to present to him the offers of the town. These were accepted by him, and the time fixed for the ordination was the last Wednesday in April. It is supposed that it took place at that time, and that the services were performed in a private dwelling, as no place of public worship had been provided at that time.

The records of the Congregational Church in Sharon for the first fifteen years are lost. The exact date of the organization of the church cannot, therefore, be determined. At a meeting of the church in Winchester, a parish of Colchester, Conn., on the 28th day of April, 1740, Nathaniel Skinner (deacon), Jonathan Dunham, Jabez Crippen, Benjamin Fuller, Nathaniel Skinner, Jr., Thomas Skinner, David Skinner, Jonathan Skinner, Jabez Crippen, Jr., Samuel Mudge, Micah Mudge, Cornelius Hamlin, Alexander Spencer, and Josiah Skinner "received letters of recommendation, in order to be embodied into a church at Sharon, where they have for some time resided."

At a meeting of the same church on May 18, 1740 (about three weeks after the former meeting), Jeremiah Foster, Mary Foster, Mary Skinner, Content Fuller, Elizabeth Skinner, Abigail Mudge, Mary Hampton, Mary Dunham, Mary Skinner, Jr., Eunice Mudge, Elizabeth Dunham, Lydia Crippen, Deborah Crippen, Thankful Crippen, Waitstill Heath, Abigail Skinner, Patience Fuller, Hannah Dunham, and Martha Mudge received a letter of recommendation "to the church in Sharon," which indicates that this church was organized between the meetings of the church in Winchester.

* "March 20, 1740.—Voted, To Mr Pratt for his stated salary 210 pounds a year in money, which is as silver at 20 shillings per ounce, and for this year 140 pounds, and to rise ten pounds a year until it comes to the 210 pounds, and there to stand during the time of his ministry amongst us."

Mr. Pratt was dismissed in 1747, and after a number of candidates being heard, the Rev. John Searl was chosen, and in August, 1749, was ordained. He was dismissed June 4, 1754, and in the summer of the same year the Rev. Cotton Mather Smith, of Suffield, was employed by the town to preach as a candidate for settlement. He came upon the recommendation of Matthew St. John, who had been an inhabitant of Sharon, but who had now removed to Suffield, where he became acquainted with Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith was a descendant of the Rev. Henry Smith, the first minister of Wethersfield, who came from England in 1638. The mother of Mr. Smith was a daughter of Atherton Mather, a cousin of the celebrated Cotton Mather, and she died in this town at a very advanced age. Mr. Smith was born at Suffield, Oct. 16, 1731, and graduated at Yale College in 1751. He spent the year previous to his visiting Sharon at Stockbridge, Mass., with the very celebrated Jonathan Edwards, engaged in the benevolent duties of instructing the Indians. Mr. Smith preached as a candidate for more than a year, and in the mean time boarded with John Jay, Esq., at the north part of the town. He was ordained minister of Sharon on the 28th day of August, 1755.

"He purchased the place which was owned by his predecessor, Mr. Searl, the same which is now owned by his great-grandson, Dr. Robert W. Smith. He was married soon after his settlement to Mrs. Temperance Gale, widow of Dr. Moses Gale, of Goshen, N. Y., and daughter of Rev. William Worthington, of the parish of Westbrook, in Saybrook. Mr. Smith was the minister of Sharon for more than fifty years, and during the whole of that period occupied a large space in public affairs. Probably no minister ever had in a greater degree the confidence and affection of his people. He was never spoken of by those who knew him but with the most unqualified respect and veneration.

"During the early years of the history of the town ecclesiastical affairs were the subject of business in the town-meetings. Churches were built, pastors settled, and taxes laid for their support in the same manner that all other public expenses were provided for. This method of the support of religious institutions was continued long after the dissenters had become numerous, and after they had been relieved from taxes levied for the support of the standing order. Before the close of the last century the inconvenience of conducting ecclesiastical and civil business by one organization had become so great that a law was passed authorizing the formation of ecclesiastical societies in the different towns, from which all secular business was to be excluded and turned over to the towns in their corporate capacity. The law required that, on the application of a certain number of the principal inhabitants of a society thus proposed to be organized, a warrant might be issued by a justice of the peace, summoning the members to meet at the place of holding town-meetings, to organize the society, and assume the charge of ecclesiastical affairs in the town. The warrant in this case was issued by David Downs, Esq., a justice of the peace, on the application of Pelatiah Pierce, Paul Smith, Jr., Nathaniel Lowrey, David Gay, Silas St. John, Thomas St. John, Eliphalet Martin, and Edmund Bennett.

"At this first meeting of the society, Deacon Isaac Chamberlain, Mr. Pelatiah Pierce, and David Downs, Esq., were chosen society's committee, to act in society matters in the same capacity as selectmen act in the town affairs. Col. Samuel Canfield was chosen society's clerk, which office he held till 1805, when Dr. Samuel Rockwell was chosen clerk, which office he held till 1836. Richard Smith, Esq., was then chosen clerk. Parson Smith, when in the maturity of his powers, was deemed one of the best preachers of his time in the ministerial circle with which he was connected. Other elements of character combined to make him very strong in the affection and respect of his people, and when old age with its attendant infirmities came upon him, it does not appear that the parish entertained any desire for a change of its clerical relations. The first movement in that direction was from Parson Smith himself. At a meeting of the society held on the first Monday of March, 1802, the following communication was laid before the meeting:

"'To the Church and First Society in Sharon:

"'Beloved Brethren and Friends,—The fifth of October last completed a period of seven and forty years since I first came into this town to labor with you in the work of the gospel ministry; however, I was not ordained to that sacred work until the 28th of August following. During this length of time I have labored with you by night and by day, in season and out of season. I could have wished that my labors might have proved more successful, but this was not in my power to command, however sincerely desired and ardently prayed for; and now, at length, worn down with age and bodily infirmities, I find myself unable to discharge the duties of that sacred office in such a manner as would be most useful and beneficial to you. The support of the gospel ministry will richly compensate for the good derived to society, as it respects the life that now is; but if we take eternity into view, it becomes an object of infinite magnitude and importance.

"'It is, therefore, brethren, my sincere desire that you would invite and call in some suitable person to take part with me in the evangelical ministry, as a colleague and fellow-laborer in this vineyard of our common Lord; and I shall always be ready to afford you my assistance, so far as my strength and abilities will permit. And that the burden of support might not be too great I offer to resign my salary, except the parsonage money, which is about twenty pounds ten shillings, and nine pounds ten shillings in addition, which will amount to one hundred dollars, whenever another minister shall be settled in this place.

"'This small compensation you will not think unreasonable to grant towards my support and comfort during the remainder of my days, which in all probability will be but of short continuance. And if any other method can be devised which will be more agreeable to the church and society, it shall meet with my hearty concurrence.

"'May the great Head of the Church guide and direct you in this important affair, and that the result may be for the honor of God, the interest of the Redeemer's kingdom, your present peace and future tranquility and happiness, is the most devout wish and fervent prayer of your sincere friend and aged pastor and teacher,

"'Cotton M. Smith.

"'Sharon, Feb. 9, 1802.'

"The only action taken by the society at its first meeting called to consider the application of Parson Smith was a vote directing the committee to hire some person to assist him in preaching, but at a subsequent meeting, held April 12, 1802, the society voted to comply with his request. During the two years which elapsed before the settlement of a colleague, Mr. Smith must have preached for a considerable portion of the time, as the society paid him two hundred and twenty dollars for his services for the first year, and two hundred and eighty-seven dollars for the second."

Oct. 3, 1803, the society voted a call to Rev. David L. Perry, as an assistant to Rev. Mr. Smith, which he accepted, and was ordained June 6, 1804. Rev. Mr. Smith continued in the ministry until his death, which occurred Nov. 27, 1806. The following epitaph is inscribed upon his monument:

"The Rev. Cotton Mather Smith,
Born in Suffield, Oct. 16, 1731, ordained in Sharon, Aug. 28, 1755, died Nov. 27, 1806, in the 76th year of his age and 52d of his ministry.
Sound in the faith, in life and conversation as becometh the Gospel, in doctrine incorrupt; in manner forcible and persuasive;
A fond husband; a tender father; an unvarying friend;
Having for more than fifty years earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, he is gone to render his final account to the great captain of his salvation.
People of his charge, he still speaks to you in a voice awful as death, solemn as the grave,
Prepare to meet your God."

Mr. Perry continued in the ministry until his death, Oct. 25, 1835.

The following-named gentlemen have been pastors of the church since Mr. Perry's death for the times indicated: Rev. Mason Grosvenor, installed Sept. 28, 1836; dismissed May 14, 1839. Rev. Grove L. Brownell, installed May 20, 1840; dismissed Aug. 1, 1848. Rev. Thomas C. Carver, installed Oct. 1, 1851; dismissed Aug. 6, 1853. Rev. Leonard E. Lathrop, installed July 18, 1854; died Aug. 20, 1857. Rev. Daniel D. T. McLaughlin, installed Jan. 18, 1859; dismissed June 7, 1865. Rev. Alexander B. Bullions, D.D., installed May 28, 1868; dismissed in 1878. Rev. John C. Bourne is the present pastor.

The following is a list of the deacons in the church: Nathaniel Skinner, Ebenezer Jackson, 1739; Matthew St. John, 1745; Jonathan Elmer, 1746; Ebenezer Frisbie, 1755; John Williams, Timothy Carver, 1766; Daniel Griswold, 1774; Gain Miller, Joseph Landon, 1781; Benjamin Hamlin, Paul Smith, Jr., 1793; Isaac Chamberlain, 1799; Aaron Read, 1812; William Mather Smith, 1828; Charles Sears, 1854; John Cotton Terrett, 1864; Abel C. Woodward, Edward F. Gillette, 1874.

Services were first held at the houses of Capt. Dunham and Mr. Pardee, and in the milder seasons of the year in Mr. Pardee's barn. The first meeting-house was a log structure thirty-six by twenty feet, erected in 1741. This, however, was used but a short time, as the erection of a new house forty-five feet by thirty-five, with twenty-feet posts, was commenced in 1742, and in October of that year services were held in it, although it was not completed until five or six years later. A new church building was commenced in 1767, and completed in the following year. This was occupied until 1824, when the present brick church was erected. This structure was remodeled and beautified in 1863, and was dedicated March 2, 1864.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF ELLSWORTH.

In May, 1800, a new society, named Ellsworth, was incorporated in the southeastern part of the town, embracing a part of Sharon and a small portion of Kent, and two years later, March 15, 1802, the Congregational Church of Ellsworth was organized with the following members: Samuel and Martha Young, Ebenezer and Lucy Everett, Timothy St. John, Anna Rice, Silas Newton, Bathsheba Newton, Enoch Parsons, Abigail Parsons, Stephen Skiff, Dennis Skiff, Mary Chaffee, Anna Studley, Phinehas Benjamin, Jemimah Benjamin, Benjamin Young, Mehitabel Young, Joel Chaffee, Dolly Chaffee, Calvin Peck, Betty Peck, Rebecca Foster, Prudence Frink, Hephzibah Swift, Esther Skiff, Silas St. John, and Abigail St. John.

The following-named clergymen have been pastors of the church: Daniel Parker, ordained May 26, 1802; Orange Lyman, ordained Aug. 26, 1813; Frederick Gridley, ordained June 7, 1820; John W. Beecher, installed Dec. 1, 1841; William J. Alger, ordained Feb. 4, 1852; Robert D. Gardner, installed June 9, 1858; John D. Stevenson, ordained Oct. 26, 1875.

The following is a list of the deacons: Silas St. John, July 1, 1802; Abel Woodward, May 3, 1805; Amos Seymour, Sept. 6, 1806; Jabez Swift, Jan. 17, 1812; Calvin Peck, July 3, 1829; Nathan Dunbar, June 2, 1839; Abel C. Woodward, June 2, 1839; William Everett, June 2, 1839; Gibbs W. Skiff, March 4, 1859.

The first meeting-house was located near the cemetery, on the Ellsworth turnpike, but it was subsequently removed to its present location. A new house was erected in 1838, which was destroyed by fire in 1847. The present church edifice was erected during the following year.

A boarding-school was established by the Rev. Daniel Parker, which attained to considerable celebrity, and was continued by him for some time after his dismission. Several men who have risen to eminence are said to have been members of this school. A fund was raised by subscription about the time of the organization of the church, amounting to one thousand pounds (to which was added two thousand five hundred dollars in 1813), the subscription payable in farmers' produce or bar-iron, at the market price, with provision that it should be loaned on mortgage for double the amount, and in case of any loss it was to be made good by the society, under the penalty of the incomes reverting to the subscribers, or to their heirs, until the conditions are complied with. A similar penalty is annexed to a failure to provide preaching for the term of a year, either by a pastor or candidates for settlement.

Another religious society was formed at an early day at the south part of the town, embracing inhabitants of both colonies. The meeting-house stood near the colony line, and was known for many years by the name of the Round Top meeting-house. The Rev. Ebenezer Knibloe was its minister for more than twenty-five years. The Round Top meeting-house was built previous to 1755, and in 1786 was removed to the present site of the Oblong Presbyterian church.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

From the first settlement of the town there had been several families of the communion of the Church of England, as it was called, before the Revolutionary war, but they were never sufficiently numerous to form a separate congregation, or to maintain public worship, until about the year 1755. On the 14th day of April of that year leave was given by the town to those of that communion "to erect a church at the corner of the highways that come from the upper end of the town and the Iron-works Hollow." This was at the head of the street, near Capt. King's. This building was erected, and stood for nearly forty years. It is mentioned as a singular circumstance, in regard to its construction, that its external covering was a coat of mortar. Public worship was maintained in it for a number of years, the desk being supplied by missionaries sent out by the "Honorable Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts." The first of the missionaries who labored here was the Rev. Ebenezer Dibble, whose permanent residence was at Stamford, but who had the care of many of the churches in the western part of the colony. After Mr. Dibble, the Rev. Solomon Palmer and the Rev. Thomas Davies had the charge of the church, in connection with those at New Milford, Roxbury, New Preston, and New Fairfield. The leading churchmen in the town were Messrs. Joel Harvey, Job Gould, Elnathan Goodrich, John Pennoyer, Simeon Rowley, Samuel Hitchcock, Solomon Goodrich, and perhaps some others. At one time during his ministry Mr. Davies reported the number of families belonging to the parish to be twenty-two, and the number of communicants to be nineteen. During the Revolutionary war the church building was deserted, turned into a barrack, and never afterwards occupied as a place of worship. Mr. Richard Clark succeeded Mr. Davies in the mission, and resided in New Milford until the close of the war. It would seem that there was perfect harmony and good feeling between the two denominations. At the annual town-meetings for a great number of years Charles Gillett was appointed key-keeper to the meeting-house, and John Pennoyer key-keeper to the church; and this practice was continued as long as the church was used for public worship. For many years after the Revolutionary war the Episcopalians in Sharon had no regular stated worship. There were several families in the town who conformed to that church, but they were never organized as a legal ecclesiastical corporation until the formation of the present society in 1809. In 1809 the number of Episcopal families in Sharon had increased to about twenty, and it was deemed expedient that they should be organized into a legal corporation, under the laws of the State, so that they could be empowered to hold property, lay tax, and enforce other legal rights. A legal warrant was issued on the 18th day of May, 1809, by Gen. Augustine Taylor, a justice of the peace, commanding him to summon sundry persons named in the warrant to meet at the academy in Sharon on the 27th day of the same month, "to form and regularly organize themselves as an ecclesiastical society of the order and denomination called Episcopal, and to choose the proper officers for the society."

At the meeting thus warned the society was duly organized according to the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. The following-named persons were the first members of the society: David Lambert, Samuel Jarvis, Jr., Asa Hitchcock, Barnabas Tobey, Luther Gay, Thomas S. Barnum, Simon Beebe, Isaac Daw, Samuel R. Gager, Simon Blackman, David Parsons, Israel Camp, William Chapman, Daniel Patchen, Peter W. Smith, Abel Hall, John Griswold, and Rufus Wright.

The following were the first officers elected, May 5, 1810: Israel Camp, Clerk; Thomas S. Barnum, David Lambert, Wardens; Thomas S. Barnum, Treasurer; Dr. John Sears, Collector; Samuel R. Gager, Isaac Daw, Asa Hitchcock, Samuel Jarvis, Vestrymen; David Lambert, Delegate to Conventions.

The Rev. Sturges Gilbert was employed soon after the society was organized to perform clerical services, in connection with a like engagement at Kent, where he resided; he conducted public worship at each place on alternate Sundays. The place of worship here for two or three years was at the academy, which stood on the present site of the Sharon Hotel. The upper room of the building was fitted up for the purpose, and was sufficiently large to accommodate the worshipers.

In 1812 the first steps were taken towards the erection of a church building. Ebenezer Dibble, of Pine Plains, N. Y., Col. Reuben Warner, of New Milford, and Moses Seymour, Esq., of Litchfield, were chosen by this society to establish the site, and such progress was made in raising funds that at the close of 1813 the present commodious building had been erected, and temporary interior accommodations furnished, so that public worship was celebrated in the church early in 1814. It was not furnished within until 1819, when it was completed in a neat and comfortable state. It has undergone several modifications since, to conform to the conditions of public taste in regard to church architecture. It was dedicated by Bishop Brownell, with solemn ceremonies, on the 24th day of November, A.D. 1819.

Rev. Ebenezer Dibble served here as a missionary from the venerable society in England, commencing in 1754; Rev. Thomas Davies from 1763. The following clergymen have served as rectors of the church in Sharon from the dates indicated: Rev. Sturges Gilbert; 1818, Rev. George B. Andrews; 1833, Rev. Lucius M. Purdy; 1837, Rev. Charles W. Bradley; 1839, Rev. S. T. Carpenter; 1844, Rev. Martin Moody; 1849, Rev. Alonzo G. Shears; 1852, Rev. Ezra Jones; 1856, Rev. Louis French; 1857, Rev. John V. Striker; 1866, Rev. Henry R. Howard; ——, Rev. David N. MacDonald; 1871, Rev. Joseph W. Hyde; 1873, Rev. Edwin J. K. Lassell; 1877, Rev. P. H. Whaley.

In 1866 the parish erected a commodious parsonage, and its close contiguity to the church makes it a very convenient residence for the rector.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Methodist services were first held in this town in 1788 by a Mr. Cook, an Englishman, who preached several times at Samuel Hitchcock's, in the south part of the town, and also in the ball-room at Gallows Tavern. The celebrated Freeborn Garretson also held services in this town.

"Mr. Alpheus Jewett, father of the late Rev. William Jewett, of the New York Conference, and of the late Hon. Judge Jewett, of Skaneateles, N. Y., and his wife were the first persons who joined the Methodist Church in this State.

"The young society in Sharon was supplied with preaching once in two weeks, in the afternoon of a week-day. Mr. Jewett was a farmer, and in the season of haying and harvest employed a number of extra laborers. He always invited his workmen to accompany him to the preaching, and they usually went. One day a Mr. Maxam, a poor man, declined thus going for the reason that he was poor and could not afford to lose the time. On Mr. Jewett's offering to pay him for the time thus spent he went, was awakened and converted, and lived to extreme old age, a faithful and useful member of the church."

As the Methodist society in Sharon is located contiguous to the State of New York, it has always been connected with circuits and districts in that State. Meetings were held at private houses, and the preaching-place in Sharon was at Mr. Jewett's. The old gentleman used to speak with great satisfaction of the large number of Methodist ministers, including Bishop Asbury, whom he had entertained at his house. The society has never been destitute of regular preaching since its formation.

THE FIRST CAMP-MEETING IN CONNECTICUT.

The first camp-meeting in Connecticut was held in the summer of 1805, in a grove near the road leading north from Austin Cartwright's, and such success attended the proceedings that another was held the next year near the house of Mr. Jewett.

The first house of worship was erected in 1808 in Calkinstown, so called.

The church was reorganized in 1835 with the following members: Zaccheus W. Bissell, Ira Williams, Elijah H. Williams, John Williams, Daniel G. Miller, Samuel Roberts, Jr., Samuel Fenn, John Senigo, Ely Rowley, Frederick A. Hotchkiss, Henry Williams, David H. Cole, James Calkin, Horace Reed, Merrills McLean, James R. Jenkins, Ezra H. Bartram, Hector W. Roberts, Edgar J. Reed, Jr., Miles B. Lewis, Alden Bryan, Dennis Brusie, Gilbert Bryan, and D. Gibson.

The following is a record of the proceedings of the first meeting of the society:

"At a meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Society of Sharon, holden on the 13th day of January, A.D. 1835, in pursuance of a warrant under the hand of Charles F. Sedgwick, Justice of the Peace for the County of Litchfield—

"Rev. Julius Field was chosen moderator.

"Zaccheus W. Bissell chosen clerk pro tem. and duly sworn.

"Horace Reed was chosen clerk for the year ensuing of the Society.

"Elijah Williams was chosen treasurer for the year ensuing.

"Zaccheus W. Bissell, Ira Williams, Richard Clark were appointed a Society committee for the year ensuing.

"Richard Clark, Ira Williams, Zaccheus W. Bissell were appointed trustees of the Society.

"Virgil B. Roberts, Horace Reed, Zaccheus W. Bissell, Ira Williams, and Elijah H. Williams were appointed a building committee.

"Voted, That the church about to be erected by this Society shall be located in Sharon Village, on such piece of land as may be purchased by this Society for the erection of said church, and of which a deed shall be executed by the owner of said land to the Society, for the purpose aforesaid."

The new church building was erected and finished in 1836, and in the spring of 1837 was dedicated by the Rev. Nathan Bangs, D.D., an eminent clergyman of the denomination. The house has since been altered and improved, and is now one of the finest churches of that denomination in the county.

The following is a list of the preachers who have supplied the pulpit in Sharon since 1828: David Miller, Phineas Cook, Billy Hibbard, Aaron Pearce, Theodore Clark, T. Sparks, Julius Fields, J. B. Wakely, Richard Wymond, Sanford Washburn, George D. Sutton, Fitch Reed, D. Holmes, William K. Stopford, Hart F. Pease, Fitch Reed, S. N. Vail, William S. Stillwell, Lucius H. King, M. R. Lens, D. B. FORMATION OF NEW COUNTY.

In 1751 the town passed the following vote in regard to the formation of a new county:

"Sept. 2, 1751—Voted, That we do desire a new county in this part of the government.

"Voted, That we apply to the honorable assembly in May next for that end.

"Voted, That we do desire, with submission to the pleasure of the assembly, that the limits or bounds may be, on the south, the south bound of the government's land on the west side of Ousatonic River, the north bounds of New Milford and the south bounds of Litchfield. The east line, the east bounds of Litchfield and of Torrington, and from thence northward to the Massachusetts line; the north line, the line between us and the Massachusetts; the west line, the line between this government and the government of New York, and that Cornwall be the county town.

"Voted, That John Williams, Esq., be our agent to go to the Honorable General Assembly upon said business in October next.

"Dec. 17, 1751.—Put to vote whether we will send an agent or agents to Kent, to meet some gentlemen from Woodbury to consult upon the affairs of the county. Voted in the negative."

MILITARY RECORD.

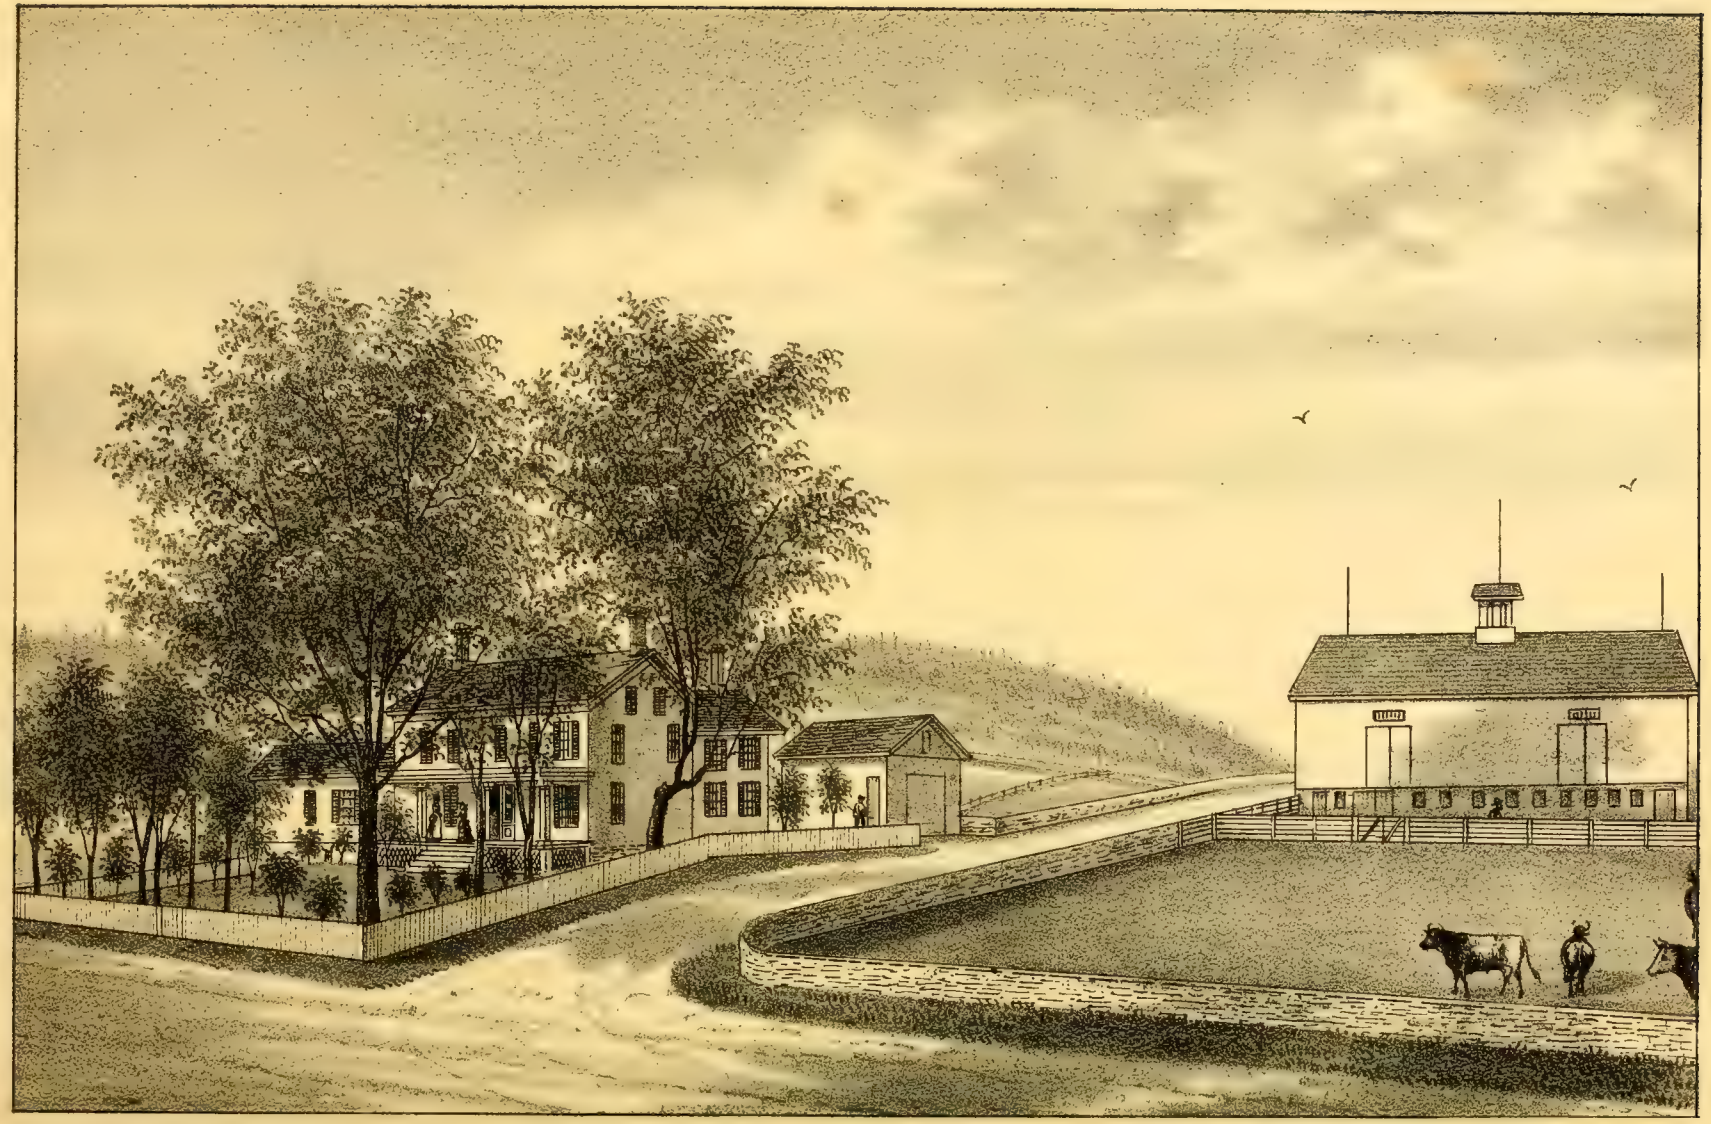
All of the above named procured substitutes except William Chapman, son of the late Lovell W. Chapman, who died in the hospital in Washington within a few weeks after being mustered into the service.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN C. JACKSON.

John C. Jackson was born in Sharon, June 3, 1813. He is a direct descendant of Deacon Ebenezer Jackson, who came from Norwalk and settled in an early day on the same lot on Sharon Mountain now in possession of his descendants. Deacon Ebenezer was early chosen deacon of the church (the second who held that office in Sharon), and was a highly-esteemed and useful citizen. He had six sons, most of whom settled in the eastern part of Sharon. An uncommon interest attaches to the place on which he settled, from the fact that it has been held by only two families from its settlement to the present time.

John C. was eldest son of Calvin and Mary (Williams) Jackson, and has resided during his whole life within half a mile of his birthplace. His education was confined to such attendance at the primitive schools of Sharon as could be obtained by a hard-working farmer's boy, and that acquired by practice with the axe and plow. He was brought up to thoroughly understand farming, and has never desired to change his avocation. Nov. 18, 1840, he married Jane, daughter of James Jarvis and Mrs. Lucy Sandford, his wife, whose maiden name was Platt. They have six children, one other dying in early life; they are Helen (Mrs. Hannon Fairchild, of Cornwall), Julia (Mrs. Martin Hungerford, of Gaylordsville), John C. (who married Fanny, daughter of Nelson Landon), Frances (Mrs. Levi Blydenburgh, of New Haven), Florence (Mrs. William Hawley, of Sherman), and Charles Sedgwick, who lives with his parents. Mr. Jackson has never wanted to attract public attention, has never taken office, but patiently, steadily, and unostentatiously has pursued a quiet life, and has been highly favored with success in his calling. In politics is a Republican; before that party was formed a Whig.



We add some further facts of the early family here.

Ebenezer Jackson's grandson John settled where John Jackson, Jr., now lives. He was a thoroughly unselfish man, and would always disoblige himself to accommodate a neighbor. It was a common saying, quaint but expressive, "He always took hold of the butt end of the log." He was particularly noted for his strict honesty, which trait was also prominent in his descendants, and strongly manifested in his son Calvin, father of the present John Jackson. The Jacksons were peaceable men, attending strictly to their own business, yet always ready to extend a helping hand to any one in time of need.

The Jarvis family, to which Mrs. Jackson belongs, is one of the oldest and proudest families in America. They are found in nearly every one of the United States, and consequence of the firm loyalty to the crown of some of those living in the Revolutionary days, in the British provinces as well. It is generally conceded that they are of English extraction, coming to England from Normandy at the time of William the Conqueror. The Norman spelling of the name was Gervais. The first name found is Jean Gervais, resident at Bretagne about 1400. The changes of the name from Gervasius, or Gervais, to Jervis, Jarvie, Jarvis, have by no means clouded or in any way thrown doubt upon its identity. It has been strikingly the same through all its variations, as well as the features and peculiar characteristics of the people. In every generation have been found men of talent and exalted worth. Probably a greater number of the name have been professional men—clergymen, lawyers, judges—than of any other family now resident on this continent. "The name has given dignity to the bench and bar; it has graced the professions of medicine and surgery; it has adorned the pulpit and the stage; it has entwined its garlands of poetry with music and painting; it has thundered its deeds of daring over the ocean wave, and among the distant isles of the sea."

Mrs. Jackson is a lineal descendant, in the sixth generation, from William Jarvis, of Huntingdon, L. I., whose sons, William and Samuel, and daughter, Mary Seymour, settled in Norwalk, Conn., in the early part of the eighteenth century. It is a pleasing task to record the virtues and excellences of the brave men and loyal women who have borne the name of Jarvis, and to find the same characteristics in the present as in the oldtime generations, showing the same distinctive qualities of integrity, honor, and love of country. To show the atmosphere in which Mrs. Jarvis was reared, we quote the following from a letter written by her brother, David S. Jarvis:

"On the breaking out of the Rebellion I was on a visit to my parents, whom I never failed to visit once a year. I told them it was a critical time for our country (this was in 1862), when both became much excited. They hoped I could give them some good news; but I could not. My mother exclaimed, 'David, you have three good boys, Abram, Charles, and Howard: go yourself, with them, to the war, and I will go, as I can take care of the sick, or make lint for the wounded,—this government must be preserved! Your forefather was of Revolutionary stock, and the country must live!' My father also added that he hoped to live long enough to see the Rebellion crushed, when he would be willing to die. He wanted to feel that he had left a country untorn by civil war, and as it was designed by the founders of the republic."

All three of the sons mentioned went to the war, and one of them died in Charleston. The mother, above alluded to, was then over seventy years old, and the spirit she manifested would have honored many a younger woman. It is a pleasure to add that both she and her husband lived to see the long, dark night of war succeeded by the sunshine of peace and the triumph of the Union.

JOHN S. JEWETT.

Capt. Caleb Jewett was from Norwich, now Lisbon, in 1743. He first purchased the lot on which George Smith lived, but sold it in 1744 to Deacon Elmer, and bought the farm now in possession of his great-grandson, Simeon B. Jewett. He was selectman of the town twelve years, and representative to the General Assembly at eleven sessions. He was a man of energy, and useful in his day and generation. He died Jan. 18, 1778, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. He had sons,—Caleb, Nathan, Thaddeus, and Alpheus.

Alpheus married Abigail Sears, Feb. 15, 1781, and in Rev. Fitch Reed's "History of Methodism in Sharon" occurs the following: "Mr. Alpheus Jewett (father of Rev. William Jewett, of New York Conference, and of Hon. Judge Jewett, of Skaneateles, N. Y.) and his wife were the first persons who joined the Methodist Church in Connecticut. Freeborn Garretson was the first Methodist preacher who visited that section." Mr. Jewett had a long life of much public employment and of great usefulness, and died Oct. 5, 1841, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. He had the great satisfaction of seeing his children filling some of the most responsible positions with credit to themselves, and to the thorough training of their Christian parents.

John S. Jewett was born in Sharon, Sept. 19, 1806. His years of childhood were passed on the homestead, which has been for four generations in possession of the family. He was educated at the public and private schools of Sharon, and always resided on the place where he was born. He was twice married, first to Julia Ann Stephens, April 15, 1832, by whom he had two children,—Mary W. (Mrs. John Sears, of Cornwall, Ill.) and Julia A. S. (Mrs. V. G. Sears, of East Bloomfield, N. Y.). She died March 8, 1835. March 10, 1838, he married Caroline, daughter of Henry Johnson, of Norwalk, Conn. They had four children,—Nathan H., Simeon B. (born June 22, 1846), Rebecca G., and William. Simeon is the only one surviving. When he was of age, Mr. Jewett assumed the management of his father's farm, and was ever after identified with the farming interests of Sharon. About 1835 he engaged in manufacturing at Sharon Valley, and continued for several years making goods of malleable iron. After selling out this business he remained a farmer only until his death. He was a good and shrewd business man, was often chosen to hold the various responsible offices of the town, represented Sharon in the Legislature, and was a railroad commissioner for the State of Connecticut. He died Oct. 13, 1878, of an apoplectic stroke.

RALPH DEMING, M.D.

The first ancestor of Dr. Deming in this country was John Deming, who settled at Wethersfield, Conn., as early as 1635. He was a prominent man, often a member of the colonial Legislature from 1641 to 1661, and his name appears in the charter of 1662. His wife was daughter of Richard Treat, an early settler of distinction, and sister of Governor Robert Treat, well known for his civil and military record, and for fifteen years the chief magistrate of the Connecticut colony.

Dr. Deming's father, Daniel Deming, came from Saybrook to Sharon in 1782, and here Ralph was born, Oct. 19, 1798. From a very early age he manifested the traits of thoroughness and energy which marked his whole life, and by his own exertions obtained a good academic education. He studied medicine under the instruction of Dr. John Sears, attending medical lectures at the Medical Department of Yale College, New Haven, where he was graduated Feb. 25, 1824. Returning to Sharon, he commenced his professional life, which lasted for more than half a century, during which time he attained a professional standing second to none in the State. One who knew him well says, "He possessed a thorough knowledge of disease, its points of difference from other diseases, its symptoms, their relations to each other, and to the state of the different organs and functions of the body, generally comprehended under the title of diagnosis in works of medical research. He carefully studied the constitutions of his patients, and adapted his treatment to the varied temperaments of different and opposite physical organizations. This insured him wonderful success in cases often of extraordinary delicacy of system." While Dr. Deming was moderate and conservative in his theory and practice, he at the same time studied with attention the works of the great writers, and was often called in council by the ablest of the profession, and his advice was heeded as that of a wise and safe counselor. He was a good thinker, a careful observer, and a close reasoner. His motives were right, and he thoroughly believed in the power of conscientious action in the ministrations of his profession. "Character, Christian character," he used to say, "adds to the ability and power of the physician." Dr. Deming was an active member of the Connecticut Medical Society, often a fellow of the State Society, and for years a permanent member of the American Medical Association, and was a delegate from Connecticut to a meeting of the last-named body at Chicago.

Dr. Deming married, June 5, 1827, Miss Mary T. Cornwall, of Paterson, N. Y. Two children, Erastus A. and H. Eliza, survive him, and now reside in Sharon.

Dr. Deming was as strong and prominent in politics as in his profession. Believing, with Andrew Jackson, that Democracy gave the "greatest good to the greatest number," he was unswerving in his allegiance to its principles. He represented Sharon in the Legislatures of 1835, 1839, and 1867, and his district in the State Senates of 1853 and 1854.

Dr. Deming commenced life with absolutely nothing, acquired a large landed estate, was fond of agriculture and its improvement, and when he died left a handsome property to his descendants. From early manhood he was connected with the Episcopal Church, and was for twenty-seven years a warden, and contributed liberally to its support.

A wise physician, a cherished neighbor, a worthy Christian, a kind and loving husband and father, he died July 21, 1877, universally mourned, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years.

GAMALIEL H. ST. JOHN.

Gamaliel H. St. John was born Sept. 2, 1804, on the same place, in Sharon, as his brother. When about seven years old he had a severe attack of the terrible epidemic which then raged in Sharon, and never fully recovered. Being thus left weak, and not fitted for the rough work of the farmers of that day, he applied himself to study diligently at the district schools, and under instruction of Rev. Mr. Gridley, then pastor of the Congregational Church. He was an apt student, and made good progress. He read medicine with Dr. Clark Chapman, attended medical lectures at Yale College, and was graduated from that celebrated school as M.D. about 1826. Shortly after he commenced the practice of his profession at Gaylordsville, and by his attention to his patients, and the skill manifested by him, he soon acquired a large practice, which he held many years. He worked hard, never sparing himself when suffering humanity called for his aid. He was prospered financially, and at his death (as he was never married) he was able to give (and did do so) substantial tokens of remembrance to his near relatives. In 1873 he removed to Sharon, retiring from practice, and made his home with his sister, Mrs. Gibbs W. Skiff, of Ellsworth. His death occurred Aug. 15, 1877, and a handsome monument in the little cemetery of Ellsworth, bearing his name and the inscription, "The Beloved Physician," testifies to the general belief of his worthiness.

THE PECK FAMILY.

William Peck, the first of this family in America, arrived in Boston, from England, June 26, 1637, with his wife Elizabeth and son Jeremiah. He was born in London or vicinity in 1601, and was there married, about 1622. In 1638 he became one of the original proprietors of New Haven, Conn., and his signature is affixed to the agreement or constitution for the government of that colony, dated June 4, 1639. He was made a freeman of the colony Oct. 20, 1640, and was evidently a man of means and high social standing. He was a merchant, and was also trustee, treasurer, and general business manager of the "Colony Collegiate School." In the old records he is recorded as "Mr.," then a title of honor and distinction. From 1659 until his death, Oct. 4, 1694, at the advanced age of ninety-three years, he was a deacon of the New Haven Church. His four children, Jeremiah, John, Joseph, and Elizabeth, all children of his first wife, Elizabeth, survived him. His grave is in that part of the old burial-ground now under the Centre church, in New Haven.

Jeremiah was born in London or vicinity in 1623. He had a classical education, and had been preaching or teaching school at Guilford, Conn., for some time, when, Nov. 12, 1656, he married Johanna, daughter of Robert Kitchell, a prominent man, and one of the founders of Guilford. He continued in the same calling until 1660, when he was invited to take charge of the collegiate school at New Haven, Conn., instituted by the General Court in 1659 as a classical school for the colony. It was not supported properly, was temporarily suspended, afterwards revived, and comes down to the present generation as "Hopkins Grammar School." After a few years' settlement as pastor at Saybrook, he became one of the first settlers of Newark, N. J., and finally was settled at Elizabethtown, N. J., about 1670, as their first minister. After numerous calls to pastorates in divers places, in October, 1678, he accepted one from Greenwich, Conn., and became the first settled minister in that town. His pastorate was a useful one, but, owing to differences in views about baptisms, he resigned his charge in 1689. He then commenced preaching in Waterbury, Conn., received and accepted the unanimous call of the residents of that town to settle with them in the ministry, removed thither in 1690, and became the first settled minister in that town also. He was then nearly seventy years of age, was always possessed of much energy and ability, and did much good, both as teacher and minister. He continued, with failing health, to discharge his official duties until his decease, in Waterbury, June 7, 1699. His wife survived him twelve years. Their children were Samuel, Ruth, Caleb, Anne, Jeremiah, and Joshua.

Samuel,[1] eldest son of Rev. Jeremiah, was born in Guilford, Conn., Jan. 18, 1659; came to Greenwich, Conn., with his father, in 1678; was well educated; married, Nov. 27, 1686, Ruth, daughter of Peter, and granddaughter of Jeffrey Ferris, of Stamford, Conn.; became a man of large wealth and influence; for fifty years was justice of the peace, held other prominent positions, and was the progenitor of the numerous Peck families of Greenwich, where he died, April 28, 1746, leaving children,—Samuel,[2] Jeremiah, Joseph. David, Nathaniel, Eliphalet, Theophilus, Peter, and Robert.

Samuel Peck[2] was born in Greenwich, March, 1688; married in 1715; was a carpenter, and also a farmer. He lived in Greenwich during his life, and died in December, 1733. (His widow married John Clogston in 1735, soon removed to Redding, Conn., where she died, leaving two daughters, born in Redding, one of whom, Abigail, married Capt. Enoch Parsons, and died in Sharon, June 6, 1807. Betsy, their daughter, was the wife of Deacon Calvin Peck, spoken of farther on in this sketch.) The children of Samuel[2] and his wife Elizabeth were Mary, John, Samuel[3], and Ruth.

Samuel Peck[3] was born in Greenwich, Conn., in April, 1720, and married Mary, daughter of James Ferris, of the same town. Mr. Peck resided in old Greenwich, was a valuable citizen, a man of great force and decision of character, and for years was deacon of the First Congregational Church in Greenwich. His death occurred Jan. 29, 1793. He left nine children, of whom Calvin was seventh child and fourth son.

Calvin Peck was born in Greenwich, Dec. 4, 1764, and married, as above stated, Betsy, daughter of Capt. Enoch Parsons. Mr. Peck became a resident of Sharon about 1788. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, a carpenter by trade, and deacon of the Congregational Church in Sharon. He was an honest, industrious man, and held in high esteem by his fellow-townsmen, and was intrusted with numerous public trusts. He had nine children, of whom Enoch P. was eldest son, and died Sept. 1, 1837.

Enoch Parsons Peck was born in Greenwich, Nov. 14, 1787, and came in infancy with his parents to Sharon. He early learned the carpenter trade of his father, and continued that avocation until about forty years of age, earning by it the money which purchased the place now owned and occupied by his son, Augustus L., and after the death of his father he bought the interests of the other heirs in the old homestead. He afterwards purchased the Tanner farm, and became the owner of about four hundred and forty acres of land in Sharon. He was married, Nov. 7, 1815, to Mary, daughter of Ebenezer and Hannah (Lockwood) Peck, of Greenwich, and had three children,—Augustus L., Elias R., and Charles W. He at various times held important town offices, was a lifelong member of the Congregational Church, and for many years was connected with that of Sharon. He was an "Old-Line" Whig, as was his father, and none of his sons have ever deviated from his principles. He died Aug. 24, 1858, in the same house that his father built on his settlement in Sharon, and where he also died. Mrs. Peck survived him, dying March 28, 1866.

Augustus L. Peck was born in Sharon, Sept. 8, 1816. He spent his boyhood with his father on the farm; had common-school advantages; stayed with his father until his marriage to Mary, youngest daughter of Freeman W. Parsons, Jan. 6, 1841,* when he moved to the place where he now resides. He always has been a farmer, and has taken pride in his calling. He has particularly devoted himself to producing fine cattle, and has received very large prices for them. He has never accepted office, but has been a hard-working, energetic citizen of independent thought and action. Knowing the secret of taking care of property, as well as acquiring it, he is to-day in the front rank of Sharon's representative agriculturists, and possessed of a handsome property. He has been an active Republican from the organization of that party.

Elias R. Peck was born Oct. 10, 1824. He was educated at public and private schools in Sharon, worked as a farmer at home till he was thirty years old, when, Oct. 28, 1854, he married Miss Euphemia E. Nodine, and soon moved to Stamford, Conn., and entered into trade as a merchant in company with Hiram Reynolds. He afterwards moved to South Norwalk, was a merchant there a few years, but the salt air not agreeing with him, he returned to Sharon, and after his father's death occupied a portion of the old homestead, where he died, Oct. 21, 1864, leaving no children.

Charles W. Peck was born Dec. 18, 1831. He always lived with his father, working the farm for the two years previous to his father's death in 1858. He had the instruction given at district schools, and also attended a private school taught in Cornwall by a Mr. Howe. He married, Nov. 3, 1858, Julia M., daughter of Austin and Thirza D. (Jackson) Cartwright.

* See biographical sketch of Charles M. and F. L. Pierson.

This family is one of Sharon's old families, and Mrs. Peck is a distant relative of the celebrated Rev. Peter Cartwright. Mr. Peck is a successful farmer, attending strictly to business, and by inheritance and diligence, economy and industry, he is now in possession of a fine property. While a strong Republican, he is not a politician, and voted for Horace Greeley for President in 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Peck have but one child now living, Ella M., who was born Sept. 29, 1873.

LEMUEL PECK.

Julius Peck, son of Amiel Peck, was born in Brookfield, Conn. He was a tanner and currier, and also a farmer. He married Sarah Dunning, and had nine children,—Polly (deceased), Amiel, Betsy (deceased), Lemuel, Sarah (deceased), Amanda (deceased), Harriet, Julius B., and Cyrenus H.

Amiel now resides in Ohio, Julius B. in Illinois, and Cyrenus H. in Brookfield, Conn.

Julius Peck settled in Sharon, on the farm now owned by his son Lemuel, and where all the family, save the eldest, were born. He died March 23, 1823, aged fifty-eight years. Amiel, Sr., was a tanner and currier, and shoemaker and farmer. He died far advanced in life.

Lemuel Peck was born July 25, 1802. He had no other educational advantages than those secured by attendance at the common schools of Sharon, and about 1819 he began to learn the trade of country cloth-dressing, and had finished it in 1822. For three or four seasons he has worked at his trade, but farming has been his principal business. He was the eldest son, and by his father's death the responsibility of "head of the family" devolved on him, and faithfully did he discharge this duty, changing for this the whole tenor of this life. His infirm mother and maiden sisters have never lost his care nor ceased to experience his affectionate solicitude.

In politics Mr. Peck has been a lifelong Democrat, and has been called to fill various town offices. He has been frugal, and is in possession of a handsome property.

CHARLES M. PARSONS AND F. L. PIERSON.

Stephen Pierson (called Parsons), who died in Derby, Conn., May 14, 1739, aged ninety-four years, is the oldest ancestor that can be traced of this family. His will was dated Sept. 2, 1733. He married Mary Tomlinson, of Stratford, Conn., who died Sept. 25, 1715. His second wife, Esther, survived him. He had six children (perhaps more),—Stephen, Abraham (called Sergeant), John, Mary, who married Josiah Baldwin, Sept. 19, 1700; Sarah, married to John Twitchell, Jan. 21, 1679; Bathsheba (Mrs. Adam Blackman, of Stratford). Mary Tomlinson was daughter of Henry Tomlinson and Alice, his wife. They removed from Watertown, Mass., about 1644, to Milford about 1652, to Stratford about 1665, where he died, March 16, 1681. His widow married John Birdsey, under a contract of Oct. 8, 1688.

Stephen Pierson was born in England about 1645, was apprenticed by his mother, probably a widow, to Thomas Mulliner, of Branford, Conn., to learn the carpenter's trade, and came to New Haven about 1654. The colonial records say he testified in court at New Haven on a case of witchcraft, June 30, 1657. He was a resident of Derby, then Pangasset, on March 15, 1667, and was probably there in 1666. The reservoir in Derby covers a part of the home-lot of four acres where Stephen first resided in that town.

Abraham Pierson and Sarah, his wife, resided in Derby, and had six children,—Sarah, Abraham, Mary, Hannah, Stephen, and Bathsheba. His list in 1717 was forty-eight pounds ten shillings. His will was dated April 26, 1750, and he died about 1773. His son Stephen was born March 4, 1720, and married Hannah Munson, June 15, 1738. She was born in Derby, March 7, 1721, and was daughter of John and Elizabeth Munson, of Derby, and granddaughter of John and Hannah Munson, of Brook Haven, L. I. Their children were Enoch, Elijah, Rachel, Daniel, and Eli. Mr. Pierson's will was dated Feb. 2, 1753, and he died in Derby about 1754. His widow married Elijah Davis, of Derby, survived him, and died in Alford, Berkshire Co., Mass., Nov. 19, 1815. (The spelling of the name was by this time almost universally Parsons.)

Enoch Parsons was born June 18, 1739, in Derby, and after the death of his father, being then about fifteen years old, went as servant of a British officer to Canada, in the French and Indian war of 1755. After he returned he learned the carpenter's trade, and worked in Newtown, Conn., where, Feb. 11, 1761, he married Abigail, daughter of John Clogston and Elizabeth, his wife, widow of Samuel Peck, Jr., of Greenwich, Conn. She was born in Redding, March 22, 1738. They had two children born in Newtown, Betsy and Mary Wakeman, and removed to Ellsworth society, Sharon, April 9, 1764. There Abigail, Amarillis, Stephen, Enoch, Freeman W., and Amideus were born. Mrs. Parsons died in Sharon, June 6, 1807. Capt. Enoch, as he was called, bought the homestead where he settled of John Jackson, son of Deacon Ebenezer Jackson, and it is in the possession of his great-grandson, F. L. Pierson, and his present home. Capt. Enoch was a man of more education than most of his day, and was appointed to "line the psalm," agreeable to the ancient manner of singing in public worship. He became a large landowner, and was a man of great energy, prominent in public affairs, represented Sharon in the Legislature of October, 1795, and was selectman, assessor, etc., several terms. For his second wife Capt. Enoch married Abigail, widow of Deacon Silas St. John, of Ellsworth, Oct. 8, 1809. She died Nov. 12, 1823. He died Oct. 1, 1827, at the hale old age of eighty-eight years.

Charles M. Parsons

Gibbs W. Shiff

SAMUEL SKIFF

Amideus was born April 29, 1780. He married Aurelia Miles, and had several children. Charles M., his son, was born March 12, 1812, in Ellsworth parish, Sharon. He had a common-school education, and never left his parents, but became a farmer, and lived with his father until his death in 1866. He had the management of the farm after he was thirty years, and specially devoted himself to stock-raising, and was very successful. Charles was a prominent man in town affairs and local politics. He was selectman for years, judge of probate, and represented Sharon in the Legislature of 1858. He was an old-fashioned Whig, but acted with the Republican party from its formation. He was a generous and public-spirited man, responding promptly to every call for aid, whether in church matters, town improvements, or individual charity. His health failed so that he discontinued farming for the latter part of his life. He never married, and died at Norfolk, Aug. 2, 1872. His mother died Jan. 13, 1871. Mr. Parsons was a man who had an unusual number of friends, and at the time of his death had probably not a single enemy. "The memory of his deeds lives in pleasant remembrances."

Freeman W. Parsons was born March 16, 1776, and was not named when the news came that the "Declaration of Independence" was signed, and the patriotic parents, to testify their joy and commemorate the occasion, named him Free-man Washington. He was born, lived, and died on the place in Sharon where his father settled. He married Mary Skiff, in October, 1797, who was born in Ellsworth, Sept. 23, 1774. She was daughter of Samuel and Mary Skiff, from Martha's Vineyard. (See biography of Samuel Skiff.) They had five children,—John, Betsy, Daniel, Paulina, and Mary L. (Mrs. A. L. Peck.). Mrs. Parsons died Nov. 18, 1846, and he married Anna Maria Boardman for his second wife. Mr. Parsons was selectman and constable several times. He was a good scholar, and was fond of an argument. His occupation was farming. He died July 21, 1861.

John, his son, was born Nov. 6, 1799, on the old homestead, and married, in Greenwich, Conn., Nov. 30, 1821, Sarah, daughter of Frederick and Deborah (Reynolds) Lockwood, of that town. She was born Sept. 19, 1799, in Greenwich. Her grandparents were Jonathan and Mercy (Finch) Lockwood, and Nathaniel and Sarah (Lockwood) Reynolds. They had children,—Frederick Lockwood, Mary Elizabeth, Harriet Louisa, John Albert, Caroline (Mrs. F. A. Hotchkiss, deceased), Sarah Augusta, Frances Aphelia, Cordelia, and Augustus. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pierson are living at this writing.

Frederick Lockwood Pierson was born on the old homestead, in Sharon, Sept. 23, 1822, in the same house where he now resides, and which was built by his grandfather, Freeman W., about 1800. Frederick had a common-school education, and began to teach district schools when eighteen years old. He taught ten winters and two summers, and between his terms of school was employed in farming. He married Susan, daughter of Herman and Caroline (Whitcomb) Skiff, in Ellsworth, Feb. 2, 1851. Their children are Mary, Edward, Eliza, and George. Mr. Pierson is an active man of good judgment, and occupies a high position in the estimation of his fellow-citizens. He is an ardent advocate of education, and a supporter of all things tending to the advancement and betterment of society. He has steadily refused office, and devotes himself fully to his "profession," farming, and were all farmers to take the pride he takes, and strive as he strives, to advance the dignity of agriculture, it would not be long before it would be really a "profession" to all, instead of a drudging employment.

SAMUEL SKIFF, JR., AND GIBBS W. SKIFF.

The Skiff family was originally from England, James Skiff and two brothers residing in London at the time of the "Great Plague" (1665). The brothers fell victims to the epidemic, and James emigrated to Martha's Vinyard, settling there, or on the mainland near by. The branch of the family of whom we write are his descendants.

Samuel Skiff, Sr., was born in Martha's Vinyard, Mass., Jan. 23, 1744. In early life he was a farmer, afterwards, becoming a sailor, went on four whaling voyages. He married Mary, daughter of Benjamin Skiff, and moved to Sharon, Conn., in 1774, when it was almost a wilderness, and purchased the place so long in the family when but one-half acre had been cleared of the original forest. He was an active, energetic man, well fitted to endure the hardships of pioneer life. He had six children,—Arvin, Gibbs, Mary (Mrs. Freeman W. Parsons), Asa, Elizabeth (Mrs. James Woodward), and Samuel, Jr. The last four were born in Sharon. He and his wife died within two days of each other, and both were eighty-one years of age. He died Dec. 27, and she Dec. 29, 1824.

Samuel Skiff, Jr., was born in Sharon, Sept. 21, 1781, on the place now owned and occupied by his son, Gibbs W., in the house built by his father. He had a common-school education, became a farmer, married, April 28, 1808, Jerusha, daughter of Abel Woodward, of Watertown, and always resided where he was born. They had three sons,—Gibbs W., Clark S., and George L.; the last two are dead. Mr. Skiff was a quiet man, a good citizen, a consistent Christian,—a man who said but little, but who was esteemed a worthy man in his day and generation, his actions speaking louder far than words of a well-ordered life. His word, when given, was as good as his bond, and neither were ever repudiated. In the home circle he was kind and affectionate, and enjoyed its society more than that of any other place. He never cared for office, but was a quiet voter of the Whig ticket. He was much respected in his neighborhood and church. He died March 2, 1862; Mrs. Skiff died March 13, 1844.

Gibbs Woodward Skiff was born July 13, 1810, in Sharon, in the house built by his grandfather on the place where he first settled. He passed his early life in the customary employments of a farmer's boy, was educated at the public and private schools of Sharon, and commenced teaching winter terms of district school when but seventeen years of age. He continued teaching for twelve winters, working on the farm in summer. Jan. 1, 1834, he married Abigail E., daughter of Silas and Olive (Barstow) St. John, of Sharon.* She was born Nov. 8, 1811. For four years the young couple lived at the old homestead, for six years more on the place adjacent, where Gibbs Skiff now resides. After his mother's death, Mr. Skiff moved again to the old homestead, and assumed charge of the farm. For nearly fifty years this worthy couple have walked hand-in-hand the pathway of life, for forty years have belonged to the Congregational Church of Ellsworth, and in all ways have given their best efforts to the advancement of every good and Christian enterprise. For over twenty years Mr. Skiff has held the honorable position of deacon in his church. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and is now a Republican. He has been selectman, assessor for many years, and represented Sharon in the State Legislature of 1851. His only child, Lucy M., was married, April 4, 1835, to Giles Skiff, and lives close to the old home. They have two sons, Clark E. and Francis S.

Mr. Skiff is justly entitled to take rank as one of Sharon's leading and successful agriculturists, he and his son-in-law having about three hundred and seventy-five acres of land in their possession.

* For fuller sketch of her family, see history of the St. John family, on another page.

SETH B. ST. JOHN AND HENRY ST. JOHN.

It is with pleasure that the historian records on the pages of history a few words to tell to coming generations something of the men engaged in the work of the first century of civilization in Sharon. In this welcome task perhaps no one family deserves more notice, from their numbers, than that of St. John. The branch of this family settling in this town has borne the family characteristics, and its members have been intelligent, industrious, reputable citizens. Timothy, Daniel, and Silas St. John, brothers, came from Norwalk, Conn., to Sharon,—Timothy in 1756, Daniel in 1761, and Silas during the Revolution. Silas purchased land in Ellsworth parish, near where his grandson, Henry St. John, now resides. He was the first deacon of the church in Ellsworth, and was for several years town treasurer, and died Sept. 21, 1805, aged sixty-four years. Silas St. John, Jr., was born in Ellsworth, Sept. 11, 1772. He learned the mason's trade, but became a farmer, and married Olive, daughter of Seth Barstow, of whom Gen. Sedgwick's "History of Sharon" says, "Seth Barstow was from Rochester, Mass., in 1771. He lived at the lower end of Abel Street, where his grandson, Seth B. St. John, now lives. He had five sons,—Allen, Samuel, Seth, Gamaliel, and Charles. Samuel was a physician, who formerly lived in Great Barrington, Mass., and who died there in 1813. Gamaliel was also a physician, residing in Broome Co., N. Y. He was a member of Congress and a member of the Senate, and treasurer of the State of New York. Mr. Barstow, the father, died in 1822."

Mr. St. John was selectman for many years. In politics he was a Federalist in early life, and afterwards a Whig. He was highly esteemed by his fellow-townsmen, and noted for his conscientiousness and strict honesty. He died Oct. 22, 1848. He left three sons,—Seth B., Gamaliel H., and Henry.

Seth Barstow St. John, his oldest son, was born July 19, 1798. He passed his early life on his father's farm, and became a diligent farmer. From the time he was of age until he was twenty-nine he worked farms on shares. He was economical, as well as industrious, and was prospered. Nov. 27, 1827, he married Henrietta, daughter of Aaron and Polly Dunbar. They had four children,—Beriah B., Melissa (Mrs. Leavitt Mills, of Bristol), Alvah R., and Elmore C. She died Sept. 16, 1837. He married for his second wife Emily Cartwright, March 12, 1839. Her death occurred Oct. 10, 1852. They had one child, Henrietta. He subsequently married Marilla S. Lyman, of New Hartford. Mr. St. John has had an uncommonly vigorous constitution, and has labored hard. He has been a successful agriculturist, and has amassed a good property as the result of his skill. He has held many positions of trust, has served various terms as selectman, has been assessor many years, and represented Sharon in the Legislature of 1859. At the first election by the people for justice of the peace, Mr. St. John was elected, but never qualified. He has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Ellsworth since 1865, and has been treasurer and trustee of that society for years. He is a man of positive convictions, and a strong Democrat, ever clinging to the Constitution as the bulwark of American liberty, and steadily opposing any departure from its teachings.

Henry St. John was born on the old homestead, in Sharon, Oct. 10, 1806. He passed his early years at home, received a common-school education, and when about twenty-one years old commenced teaching winter terms of district school. This he continued for several years, working on the farm in summer. From the time he was of age he had a share in the products of the farm, and worked with his father until 1848, when, on the death of his father, he purchased the interests of the other heirs, and now occupies the old home, one of the pleasantest places in Sharon, a view of which may be seen on another page of this history. He also is one of Sharon's leading farmers, owning about two hundred and thirty acres in Ellsworth. He has been prominent in local matters, is always progressive, and ready to aid all things tending to improve or elevate the community or town. His fellow-citizens have often called him to offices in their gift. He has been, at different times, selectman, assessor, member of board of relief, and represented Sharon in the Legislature of 1856. He was first a Whig, afterwards a "Know-Nothing," but from the formation of the Republican party has been an active member of that organization. He has been twice married, first, June 10, 1835, to Catharine A. Wheeler, of North East, N. Y. Their only child, Catharine, married Richard F. Everett, and now resides at Galva, Ill. Mrs. St. John died Jan. 3, 1837. His second wife was Almira C., daughter of Amideus and Aurelia (Miles) Parsons, of an old Sharon family. They were married Nov. 1, 1838. She was born March 6, 1815. Their children are Charles P., Aurelia M. (Mrs. William Marsh), Cordelia M. (deceased), Pluma B. (Mrs. H. A. Stanard, of Norfolk), and Belle.

SAMUEL DEAN.

Daniel Dean was a resident of Cornwall, Conn., a weaver by trade, and moved to Ellsworth, afterwards to Amenia, where he died in April, 1850. He had five children,—Joseph, Samuel, Ira, Clorinda, and Daniel. Samuel was born in Cornwall (Great Hill), Nov. 21, 1812. His early life was passed with his father, with common-school advantages. He became a farmer, living with and supporting his parents until his marriage, Nov. 19, 1840, to Jennette, daughter of

SAMUEL DEAN.

Elijah Knibloe, of an early Sharon family. She died Feb. 22, 1848. He then purchased the place, of about one hundred acres, where his son, E. K. Dean, now resides. The children of this marriage were Ira, Edward K., and Clarinda J. Samuel Dean was a quiet and retiring man, but accepted such town offices as grand jurors, etc. He was an industrious, law-abiding citizen, and early a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was a trustee and steward. Feb. 20, 1850, he married Lucy E., daughter of Austin and Lucy (Morgan) Allen, of Goshen, who survives him. His death occurred Nov. 7, 1864. Edward K. Dean was born July 30, 1843. He had common-school education, supplemented by one term's instruction at "Fort Edward Collegiate Institute." He has always lived on the place of his birth, has been, and is, a progressive farmer, using science as well as practice in his vocation. He married Frances E., daughter of Henry and Mary Calkins. She was born in Milton, Conn. Mr. Dean has been selectman, and been elected to other town offices, but refused to qualify, preferring to attend to his own affairs rather than to public matters. Mr. and Mrs. Dean have had six children,—Lizzie, Samuel (deceased), Daisy, Wilbert, Harvey, and Burton.

ASA EVERITT.

On the Everitt monumental stone in Ellsworth churchyard is this historic inscription:

"Ebenezer Everitt, died July 24, 1810, aged 88. Lucy Moulton, his wife, died Sept. 28, 1813, aged 85. 'Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.' They came from Hebron in 1745, and were the ancestors of the numerous Everitt family of Sharon. Of nine children, eight settled within one and a half miles of the paternal residence. Their youngest and last surviving child died in 1854, one hundred and nine years after they came to Sharon. This monument is erected as a tribute of respect by their grandchildren and great-grandchildren."

The names of the children of these worthy pioneers were Isaiah, Ebe, Eliphalet, Olive (Mrs. John Lord), Lois (Mrs. Thomas St. John), Irene (Mrs. Caleb Chapman), Lucy (Mrs. —— Avery), Sylvia (Mrs. David Marvin), and Mehitabel. Isaiah was twice married, first to Deborah Lord; their three children were Martin, Cynthia (who married a Rexford), and Adolphus. His second wife was Elizabeth Chaffee; they had nine children,—Asa, Deborah (Mrs. Gillet), Betsy (Mrs. Beardsley), Roswell, Russell, Gamaliel, Lovina (Mrs. Joseph Lord), Ruth (Mrs. Alpha Carrier), and William. Isaiah was a farmer; in politics a Whig; was reputable and respected, and died Aug. 4, 1834, aged eighty-two.

Asa Everitt was born on the farm now owned by Eben Chaffee, nearly opposite the present residence of his son Joshua, in September, 1780. He always was a farmer, and a plain, unassuming man. He was three times married. His first wife was Mary Ann, daughter of Joshua Studley; their only child was Joshua. His second wife was Anner Hatch; his third, Mary, daughter of William Kellogg, of Cornwall, Conn. Mr. Everitt began life in humble circumstances, and by prudence became a well-to-do farmer. He, like his father, was a Whig, but had little taste for office, yet held some of the minor ones of Sharon as his part of public service. He died, respected and mourned, March 2, 1857. His wife is still living (1881), hale and hearty, at the age of seventy-seven, and retains much of the vigor of maturity.

Joshua Everitt, son of Asa, was born March 19, 1811, on the old farm, now in his possession. He, too, has always been a farmer. He married, Feb. 12, 1834, Elmina, daughter of Walter Skiff, of Sharon. She was born April 15, 1811. They have two children,—Charles W., born May 3, 1841 (married Jane, daughter of Horace Dunbar, and has one child, Hattie L.), and Elizabeth A., born April 17, 1850 (married Edward Per Lee, a farmer in Sharon). Joshua owns about three hundred acres of land in a good state of cultivation, and erected his present residence (on the place formerly owned by Charles Parsons) in 1870–71. He is a useful and honorable citizen of Sharon, doing faithfully and well the duties of his station; is a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Everitt is a consistent member. In politics Mr. Everitt has been a Republican.

ICHABOD S. EVERITT.

Ichabod S. Everitt, grandson of Isaiah, and oldest son of Adolphus Everitt, died in 1867, aged 88; and Lydia Studley, his wife, was born Jan. 22, 1808, on the farm where Ebenezer settled. His father was born on the same farm. Adolphus had nine children; the seven attaining maturity were Thomas A. (deceased), Ichabod S., Ruby R. (deceased), Russell A. (now of Ohio), Abby C. (Mrs. John Tichnor, deceased), Betsy A. (deceased), and Caroline (Mrs. D. P. Griswold, deceased). The advantages of young Ichabod for learning were only those of the common schools of Ellsworth. His political education was acquired from his father, a Democrat, and he has never swerved from those teachings. At the age of twenty-one he commenced life for himself, and became noted as a layer of stone walls. These he constructed with skill and rapidity, and his services were in demand in all parts of the town. To a greater or less degree he has been engaged in this all his life, and enjoys the reputation of making the best wall in Sharon. His character is, like one of his stone walls, of solidity and worth, and whatever has fallen to his lot to do in life has been done thoroughly and well. He has held the office of selectman several times, has been assessor, and in 1874 was member of the Legislature. He occupies no unenviable place among the farmers of Sharon, and is one of the pillars of society in that part of his town. He settled on his present place in 1854. He has been twice married, first, to Emily, daughter of Thomas St. John, of Sharon, Nov. 28, 1836. Their only child, Mary L., was born May 27, 1843, and married David L. Smith, of West Cornwall, Conn., Feb. 26, 1879. Mrs. Everitt died July 20, 1870. Mr. Everitt, for his second wife, married, Sept. 6, 1876, Louisa L., daughter of Erastus Lord, of Sharon. She is a very intelligent person, and many of the younger generation can testify to her skill and adaptation as a teacher. Thus, in tracing the Everitt family from its settlement in Sharon to the present time, we find them to bear the same characteristics of defense to law and order, devotion to principle, honest industry, and prudent thrift, supporters of what tends most to improve the town, its institutions, and its people, always reputable citizens and law-abiding, a quiet, unostentatious family of sterling worth, much appreciated by their contemporaries, and of value to the community.

AUGUSTUS EVERITT.

Ebenezer Everitt was from Hebron, settling in Sharon in 1745. He had three sons,—Isaiah, Ebe, and Eliphalet, the last two of whom were Revolutionary soldiers. Eliphalet was for several years steward of Gen. Washington's military family. Isaiah died Aug. 4, 1834, aged eighty-two, leaving five sons, —Adolphus, Asa, Gamaliel, Russell, and William.

Ebe Everitt was born in Ellsworth parish, in January, 1754, was a farmer, and purchased the place now the residence of his grandson, Samuel E. Everitt. He was an ardent patriot, serving in the Revolution. As his first son was born on this place in 1781, Ebe must have settled here shortly after his return from his service as soldier. He married Mabel Elmore, who was born Jan. 14, 1756, and died Feb. 15, 1831. They had seven children,—Samuel E., Augustus, Ann (Mrs. Clark Pardee), Elmore, John, Polly, and Hovey,—all born on the same place. Mr. Everitt died Jan. 5, 1840. He was a plain, unostentatious farmer, but a man of fixed principles, a good type of the man who endured patiently the toils, marching, suffering, and bloodshed of the conflict from which emerged the American republic.

Augustus Everitt was born May 17, 1783. When nine years of age a white swelling came on his foot, drawing it into such a shape as to make him lame for life. When fourteen years old he was apprenticed to a tailor in Warren, who, selling out and removing to Troy, N. Y., was accompanied by Augustus. After he became of age, Augustus went to New York City, and for a short time worked at his trade as journeyman. He then returned to Sharon, where he married, June 12, 1815, Abigail, daughter of Joel and Dolly (Hyde) Chaffee, of Sharon. She was born July 17, 1790, and died Dec. 5, 1845. Their children were Dolly Hyde (Mrs. Cyrus W. Gray), Mary Elmore, Samuel E., Mabel (Mrs. Benjamin F. Barlow), Mary L. (Mrs. R. K. Woodward), and Julia A. After his marriage Mr. Everitt purchased a small place near the old homestead, and, moving thither, pursued his trade. He cut and made the first suit of clothes, it is said, that Amasa Parker, afterwards judge of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, ever wore. During the latter years of his life he suffered much from his lame leg, which he endured with Christian patience. He was a member of the Congregational Church of Ellsworth from 1839, and died Aug. 23, 1867, much respected by all who knew him.

Samuel E., his son, was born Dec. 15, 1822. He was educated at the district schools, was brought up a farmer, and always has continued one, commencing life for himself when of age, by not only working out by the month, but taking his uncle's (Samuel, from whom he was named) land "on shares." He married, Jan. 12, 1854, Ann Eliza, daughter of George and Cornelia H. (Beecher) Canfield, of South Britain, Conn. Both her father and mother were of old Connecticut families, and she was a niece of Rev. John W. Beecher, at one time pastor of the Congregational Church of Ellsworth. They have two children,—Mary Cornelia (Mrs. F. E. Buckley) and George Augustus. Mr. Everitt cast his first Presidential vote for Henry Clay electors, and has since been Whig and Republican. Both Mr. and Mrs. Everitt are members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Everitt is an honest, hard-working farmer, a good citizen, and a charitable man.

BENJAMIN S. REED.

Benjamin S. Reed was a lineal descendant of the fourth generation from John Reed, an Englishman, who came from England at the time of the restoration of the Stuarts, and settled in Norwalk, Fairfield Co., Conn., and became the ancestor of a very numerous and highly respectable family. It is said that all the Reeds of Connecticut are descendants of him. Benjamin Reed, father of Benjamin S., was probably born in Norwalk, Conn., was a surveyor by occupation, married, and removed to Sharon, where he had a family of children, among whom was Benjamin S., born March, 1810.

Benjamin S. was a farmer by occupation. In 1840 he removed to Fairfield County, and settled in the town of Darien, where he continued to reside till his death, Oct. 4, 1864. In politics a Republican, and as such held many town offices, such as assessor, magistrate, selectman, and member of the State Legislature several years. He took an active part in religious matters, and was a member of the Congregational Church. He was twice married, first to Elizabeth Johnson, of Norwalk, Conn., and to them were born three children, viz.: (1) Angeline, who died at eighteen; (2) Benjamin F., and (3) Henry, both of whom are farmers and reside at Hart, Mich.

Mr. Reed married for his second wife Mary J., daughter of Bradford and Eunice Cleveland, of Salisbury, Dec. 21, 1853. No citizen was more universally respected and trusted than was Mr. Reed. He was a good citizen, a kind husband and father, liberal to the church, and charitable towards the poor. His widow now (1881) lives with her brother, John F. Cleveland, of Salisbury, and inserts this brief biography and the accompanying portrait of Mr. Reed in memory of him.

CHAPTER LVIII.

THOMASTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Thomaston in 1825—Seth Thomas—The Seth Thomas Clock Company—Ecclesiastical History—Civil History—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Present Town Officers—Representatives.

THE town of Thomaston, the youngest town in the county, is located in the southeastern part of Litchfield County, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Litchfield and Harwinton, on the east by Plymouth, on the south by Watertown and New Haven County, and on the west by Watertown and Litchfield. The surface of the town is hilly, and soil generally fertile. The early history of the town has been given in detail in the history of Plymouth, of which this town formed a part until 1875. Names of the early settlers, proprietors' meetings, early rules and regulations, etc., will be found in the history of the mother-town.

THOMASTON IN 1825.

The section occupied by the village of Thomaston was originally known as Plymouth Hollow, and fifty-five years ago consisted of about thirteen dwellings, located as follows: On East Main Street, on the site of the Plume & Atwood office, stood a dwelling occupied by Lyman Fenn, and on the premises now occupied by John H. Wood was also a house, but its occupant is unknown. There was a house standing on North Main Street, where Dr. B. W. Pease now resides, and Junius Blakesley lived in a dwelling which stood near the present residence of Henry R. Warner. On the property now owned by Miles Morse, on Main Street, stood a hotel. Bela Blakesley lived on the premises now occupied by the Bradstreet Block and the widow of Edward Thomas, and the property now owned by Aaron Thomas was in the possession of the Ford family. The premises now occupied by T. J. Bradstreet and Mrs. Blakesley were owned by Mica Blakesley, and on the place now occupied by Mrs. George Reynolds was a tannery. The next location on the north side of the street belonged to Seth Thomas, and was occupied by him a number of years; it is now covered by the clock-shop. The next place below has been occupied by the Blakesley family a long time. One of the oldest buildings in the village stood on Centre Street, and was occupied by Levi Castle. The "farm-house" of Seth Thomas, so called, was also standing at the time of which we are writing.

But all this is changed. The quiet little hamlet of less than a score of buildings has grown to one of the loveliest manufacturing towns in Connecticut, and is due chiefly to the enterprise of one family, Seth Thomas and sons. Seth Thomas, Sr., commenced the manufacture of clocks in 1809, in company with Eli Terry and Silas Hoadley, at what is now Hancock Station, on the New York and New England Railroad. Here he remained until 1813, when he came to Plymouth Hollow, now Thomaston, and purchased the site where the case-shop is now located, and commenced the manufacture of clocks.* He gradually increased the business, and in 1853 the Seth Thomas Clock Company was organized under the joint-stock laws of Connecticut. At the beginning of business about twenty persons were employed, and the annual product amounted to about ten thousand dollars. The manufacture rapidly increased, until now the corporation employs about nine hundred workmen, with a monthly pay-roll of over thirty thousand dollars, and a yearly production of about one million dollars. About four hundred thousand clocks are manufactured annually, and one hundred and seventy different styles. The most expensive clock was manufactured in 1876 for Independence Hall, Philadelphia, costing six thousand dollars. The building covers about twenty acres. The Seth Thomas clocks have obtained a world-wide reputation, and shipments are made to every civilized country on the globe.

The present officers are Aaron Thomas, President; Seth Thomas, Secretary; and Seth E. Thomas, Treasurer.

THE THOMASTON WATER COMPANY.

The act incorporating the Thomaston Water Company was approved March 25, 1879. The incorporators were Aaron Thomas, William G. Woodruff, George B. Pierpont, George A. Stoughton, Randal T. Andrews, Bennett E. Osborn, James E. Bishop, Chauncey Bidwell, Berry Platt, Edwin P. Parker, Noah A. Norton, Nelson Bennett, Israel B. Woodward, Ralph S. Goodwin, and Byron W. Pease.

THE THOMASTON EXPRESS

was started by three young men, April 1, 1880, as a joint-stock concern, with a capital of five thousand dollars. After running it a few months the company became embarrassed financially, and sold the property to C. James, who had a few months before sold the Wolcottville Reporter to its present owner. C. James took possession Oct. 12, 1880, and is the present editor and proprietor. The paper is an eight-column folio, and has already a circulation excelled by but two papers in the county.

THE THOMASTON WEEKLY NEWS,

the youngest paper in the county, was established in March, 1881, by C. R. Smith & Co.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.†

The following we gather from Nehemiah Griffin, who was identified with the church from its earliest history. He came to Plymouth in April, 1818, soon after Aschel McKee and Alfred Myrich came. A Methodist was a curiosity at that time. Lockwood Dickinson was the first local preacher. He preached in the school-house near where the band-stand is now located. That was in June or July, 1818. Rev. Cyrus Silman preached in the door-yard of Herman Clark about the middle of July. In the fall of 1820 the first class was formed, with Amos Andrews leader. The class consisted of Amos Andrews and wife, Nehemiah Griffin, Aschel McKee, and others. Since the 2d of June, 1833, Sabbath preaching has been continued in the Hollow, unless we except a short time they were held in a school-house near Bennett Hibbard's. The ministers that have preached are as follows: 1843–44, Charles Bartlett; 1845, George Kerr; 1846–47, Henry J. Fox; 1848–49, Moses Blydenburgh; 1850–51, T. B. Chandler; 1852, John Pegg, Jr.; 1853, William Silverthorn; 1854, William F. Smith; 1855, supplied by Joseph Smith; 1859–60, Daniel Tracy; 1861, A. V. R. Abbott; 1862, John S. Breckinridge; 1863, Moses Lyon; 1864, supplied by Beach and Sanford, from university; 1865–67, Elias B. Sanford; 1868, Alexander Graham; 1869, Friend W. Smith. During the year 1866 the society built a new church edifice, and sold the old one to the Episcopal society. In the spring of 1857, E. B. Sanford, having served his time of three years as pastor, left the Methodist Church and united with the Congregationalist. 1870, Frank W. Lockwood; 1871–72, William Make; 1873–74, C. P. Corner; 1875, David Nash; 1876, Henry S. Still; 1877, Josiah R. Bucklew; 1878–80, Horace L. Judd; 1881, William H. Barton.

The stewards are William Bickley, William B. Foster, Henry O. Wood, Luther J. Holt, John N. Watrous, C. H. Cables, Ambrose A. Curtiss, Daniel E. McKinley, Charles E. Morse; Trustees, Joshua H. Wood, George W. Baldwin, William W. Lees, William Bickley, William C. McKinley, Warren M. Wood, Watson N. Smith, Bishop Smith, Charles E. Morse; William Bickley, President; C. E. Morse, Clerk; Lines C. Bushnell, Superintendent of the Sunday-school.

For many years previous to the erection of a house of worship by the Methodists in this place it was favored with circuit preaching by the New York Conference. During these years the tide of opposition was strong against this small band, which finally eventuated in their being prohibited the use of the school-house, which for some years they had occupied.

The members here at the time, though small and feeble, now felt the need of a house of worship. The subject of building soon became agitated, which in the course of two or three years resulted in the erection of a very neat and commodious church. This church was erected in the year 1842, principally through the influence and labors of Bennett Hibbard, a leader and steward in the charge. The house being finished in the early part of the winter, was dedicated by the Rev. L. D. Ferguson. During the winter they were favored by the great head of the church with a most gracious revival, which resulted in adding strength and members to the society. After having these accessions to the church, and being under the strong impression that it would be best for them, as individuals and as a society, to be set off as a station, a petition expressing their desires to be thus set off was sent to the Conference.

The first pastor was Charles Bartlett. The first officers were as follows: Bennett Hibbard, Nathan A. Daniels, Leaders; Bennett Hibbard, Hiram S. Turning, Stewards; Bennett Hibbard, Samuel Coley, Sherman Lines, Trustees.

The following is a list of the members in the year 1842: Bennett Hibbard, Laura Hibbard, William McAliston, Hiram Turney, Jenett Turney, Ruth A. Dunning, Emily Smith, Julia E. Thompson, Jane M. Thompson, Mary Fuller, Fanny Munger, Lucius Alcott, Emily Alcott, Caleb Austin, Louisa Austin, Abijah A. Dunning, Maria Fuller, and Lucy Yale.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This church was organized Dec. 7, 1837, with the following members: Josiah Warner, Thomas Sutliff, Abel C. Judson, Abel Judson, Hiram Pierce, William P. Judson, Samuel Beach, Silas Hotchkiss, Edward Nettleton, James Cargill, Seth Thomas, Joseph P. Mansfield, P. D. Potter, Lafayette Comstock, Munson Adkins, Nathan Cook, Fanny Warner, Nancy Sutliff, Huldah Sutliff, Ruby Judson, Sabrina Hart, Sally C. Northrop, Mehitabel Booth, Ruth Bush, Harriet Nettleton, Martha Marsh, Chloe Boardman, Eunice Cargill, Mary M. Judson, Hannah M. Comstock, Clarissa E. Cook, Laura Thomas, Martha Thomas, Amanda Thomas, Mary E. Blakesley, Esther Potter, Amanda Adkin. The pastors have been as follows: Harvey D. Kitchell, Joseph D. Hull, James Averill, J. B. Pearson, R. P. Searle, J. W. Backus, H. C. Hitchcock, S. M. Freeland, present pastor. C. H. Gilbert is present deacon, and A. R. Nettleton clerk and treasurer. The present church was erected in 1837, but has since been repaired and improved.

TRINITY CHURCH, THOMASTON.

Trinity parish sprang from St. Peter's, Plymouth. The Rev. Benjamin Eastwood commenced holding evening services in the Academy Hall, but in 1866 Academy Hall was sold to the school district. It was then thought best to purchase the old meeting-house of the Methodist society, and in March, 1867, it was deeded to Randal T. Andrews, Edwin Welton, and Robert Alcott, to be held by them in trust until such time as a parish might be organized. In the fall of the same year the building was enlarged by adding a vestibule and belfry, and a bell in memory of Mrs. Hannah Williams. The parish organization was effected Jan. 2, 1869. The names of the first members were Robert Alcott, Augustus E. Blakeslee, Jerry M. Curtiss, Herman D. Saul, David S. Plume, Richard Chapman, George G. Alcott, Harvey Sperry, Alfred J. Winton, Randal T. Andrews, John Chapman, Hugh Lawton, Edward T. Gates, William C. Gates, Thomas Chapman, George W. Canfield, Martin L. Judd, Augustus Merrill, and Daniel H. Stevens.

The first rector was Rev. David Bishop; first clerk, Robert Alcott; first treasurer, R. T. Andrews; first wardens, Edward T. Gates, George G. Alcott; first vestrymen, David S. Plume, Randal T. Andrews, Robert Alcott, Augustus E. Blakeslee, Jerry M. Curtiss, William C. Gates, Hugh Lawton, Isaac R. Castle, and John Chapman. The present church edifice was erected on the site of the old one in 1871.

Rev. David Bishop resigned Feb. 1, 1874, and was succeeded by the present rector, Rev. Thomas S. Ockford, Feb. 10, 1874.

The present church was enlarged, at an expense of three thousand dollars, in the fall of 1879, and a fifteen-hundred-dollar organ placed therein in memory of George W. Bradley, a former organist of St. Peter's, Plymouth. The present officers are Robert Alcott, Clerk; Frank H. Hotchkiss, Treasurer; Wardens, Edward T. Gates, Randal T. Andrews; Vestrymen, Dwight L. Kenea, Edwin Alvord, Garwood B. Judd, Homer W. Welton, Fred H. Ridpath, Jonathan Brown, Daniel H. Stevens, James S. Eastwood, James White, Frank W. Filley, Augustus Merrill, and Augustus E. Blakeslee.

LIST OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1876, Benjamin Platt; 1877–78, Albert P. Bradstreet; 1879, Israel Woodward; 1880, Benjamin Platt; 1881, Aaron Thomas.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

SETH THOMAS.

Seth Thomas, son of James and Martha Thomas, was born in Wolcott, Conn., Aug. 19, 1785. His advantages for education were very meagre, consisting of a very few days' attendance upon a distant public school. He served an apprenticeship to the trade of a carpenter and joiner; a considerable portion of the time was spent in the construction of Long Wharf, in New Haven. Leaving at his majority, with a small kit of tools and a very small amount of money, he was strongly inclined to avail himself of water-power to facilitate his business, and entered into negotiation for a site on Mad River, in Wolcott. Needing a short piece of road the better to get to the site, he petitioned the town to lay out and construct the same, which petition in town-meeting was defeated, upon which he abandoned the project and came to Plymouth.

He associated with Eli Terry and Silas Hoadley, under the firm-name of Terry, Thomas & Hoadley, in the southeast part of the town, now known as Hancock Station, on the New York and New England Railroad, and commenced the manufacture of clocks. After one year, in 1810, Mr. Terry sold his interest, and the firm continued two years—viz., 1811 and 1812—as Thomas & Hoadley. At the expiration of two years he sold his interest to Mr. Hoadley and came to Plymouth Hollow (now Thomaston), and purchased the site where the case-shop is now located, and commenced the manufacture of clocks on his own account.

He was twice married, first to Philena Tuttle, daughter of Lemuel and Lydia Tuttle, April 20, 1808. She died March 12, 1810. He was married, second, to Laura Andrews, daughter of William and Submit Andrews, April 14, 1811, who survived him. She died July 12, 1871. He was the father of nine children, issues of these marriages, three of which, and all then living, died in September, 1815, in the year memorable as the one of the dysentery scourge.

The business at that time was small, employing about twenty operatives, which has steadily increased, until the corporation now employs about nine hundred, with a monthly pay-roll of over thirty thousand dollars, and a yearly production of about one million dollars.

Seth Thomas

Yours truly,
Aaron Thomas

J. F. Bradstreet

In 1853, feeling the infirmities of years coming upon him, in order to avoid the stoppage of the works consequent upon his decease, he organized the Seth Thomas Clock Company, under the joint-stock laws of the State of Connecticut. He died Jan. 29, 1859. He built during these years a cotton-mill and brass-rolling and wire-mill.

The building now used for the manufacture of pendulum movements was originally built for cotton sheetings, and part of the present brass-rolling and wire-mills, now occupied by the Plume & Atwood Manufacturing Company.

The village, which the writer remembers as containing thirteen dwellings, has grown to quite a respectable town, consequent upon the business founded by the tact and energy of Seth Thomas.

Politically he favored the Whig party; religiously he was a Congregationalist, and contributed largely to the building of the present Congregational church edifice of Thomaston.

SETH THOMAS, JR.

Seth Thomas, Jr., eldest son of Seth and Laura Thomas, was born in Plymouth Hollow (now Thomaston), Dec. 31, 1816.

His educational advantages were such as were afforded in the common schools of those days and one year at the Plymouth Academy and a little more than one year at Farmington Academy, under the instruction of Deacon Simeon Hart.

He was engaged in mercantile pursuits in his native place between twenty and thirty years.

He was commissioned postmaster under Francis Granger, March 1, 1841, which office he held upwards of twenty years.

He was appointed justice of the peace for several years, and twice elected to represent the town of Plymouth in the Legislature.

He married Charlotte D. Parker, of Belchertown, Mass., March 7, 1838.

Politically he is a Republican, and a member of the Congregational Church.

He is secretary and assistant treasurer of the Seth Thomas Clock Company.

EDWARD THOMAS.

Edward Thomas, second son of Seth and Laura Thomas, was born in Plymouth Hollow (now Thomaston), May 28, 1824.

His educational advantages were in the public schools of the day and two years in the Farmington Academy.

He was engaged in the manufacture of clocks until the founding of the corporation, in 1853, when he was chosen secretary, which office he continued to hold until his decease, Feb. 10, 1862. He married Clarissa Marsh, Dec. 3, 1846. Their children are as follows: Walter A., now connected with the clock company, and one of its directors, Martha B., and Laura A.

Mr. Thomas was elected representative of the town of Plymouth in the Legislature of 1852.

Politically he was allied with the Whig and Republican parties, and was a member of the Congregational Church at Thomaston.

Mr. Thomas was diligent and efficient in business, and the company suffered a great loss in his waning health and early departure, but the community in which he lived hold him in tender remembrance for that uniform kindliness of manner which he wore as a garment.

AARON THOMAS.

Aaron Thomas, third son of Seth and Laura Thomas, was born in Plymouth Hollow (now Thomaston), March 13, 1830. His educational advantages were in the public schools of the day.

He was engaged in the manufacture of clocks and teaming until January, 1859, when he was chosen president of the Seth Thomas Clock Company, Jan. 17, 1859, which position he holds to the present time.

A new clock company was started in October, 1865, named Seth Thomas' Sons & Co., and Aaron Thomas was chosen president, and held that position until the company consolidated with the Seth Thomas Clock Company, Jan. 31, 1879.

He married Phebe A. Hine, Oct. 4, 1848. They have three children now living, viz.: Edson Thomas, Minnie, and Aaron Thomas, Jr. He was elected representative of the town of Thomaston for 1881. Politically he is a Republican, and religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church at Thomaston, Conn. A friend being asked what are some of his leading traits replied, "Untiring devotion to business, an indomitable will, with high and generous impulses, ready, with a long and strong pull, for any and all improvements."

THOMAS JEFFERSON BRADSTREET.

Thomas Jefferson Bradstreet, now a resident of Thomaston, Conn., traces his ancestry back eight generations to a Non-conformist minister, who died in 1617, leaving a son, Simon Bradstreet, who was born at Horbling, Lincolnshire, England, in 1603. Young Simon, soon after the death of his father, was taken under the patronage of the Earl of Lincolnshire, by whom he was probably sent to Cambridge for his education. His name is found entered on the books of Emanuel College, Cambridge, in 1617; his matriculation in 1618; and his admission, in due course, to the regular degrees, the first in 1620, and the second in 1624. After leaving the university he was employed for several years as steward in the household of his kind and generous patron. Here he probably became acquainted with the family of Thomas Dudley, who was also in the earl's employ, and whose oldest daughter, Anne Dudley, he married in 1628. For reasons common to many of the emigrants at that period,—"the constraints of the English laws and the severities of the English hierarchy,"—Simon Bradstreet, Thomas Dudley, with many others with similar feelings and purposes, came over to this country, to the young settlement at Massachusetts Bay, in 1630. Dudley and Bradstreet both took a prominent part in the affairs of the new settlement, and held many positions of trust and honor in the Massachusetts colony,—positions, it should be remembered, very onerous in the establishment of a new form of government that should give to all the greatest freedom consistent with security and needed protection. Thomas Dudley was one of the distinguished Governors of the colony. He died July 31, 1653, aged seventy-seven years. His virtues are portrayed in an epitaph written in poetry by his daughter Anne. His wife died Dec. 27, 1643, aged sixty-one; and her character, in all her family and social relations, her benevolence and piety, is also commemorated by her daughter in verse.

Simon Bradstreet first settled in Cambridge, and remained there for several years; afterwards he was for a short time a resident of Ipswich, Mass., then of Andover, Mass., and also of Salem, Mass., as most convenient, probably for the discharge of his public duties. In 1639 he received from the court a grant of five hundred acres of land. He was the first secretary of the colony. In 1641 he traveled on foot, with the famous Hugh Peters, from Salem, to New Hampshire, with a commission from Massachusetts to learn the cause of a quarrel among the people in that colony. When the confederacy of the colonies of New England, formed in 1643, and its affairs were intrusted to a board of commissioners, Bradstreet was appointed one of the two from Massachusetts; and in 1653 his independence and conservatism appear in his successful opposition to his fellow-commissioners, who were anxious to declare war first against the Dutch, and then against the Indians.

In 1662 the Massachusetts colony, alarmed at the apparent intentions of Charles II., commissioned Bradstreet and Norton, a highly-esteemed and popular minister, to proceed to England and plead their cause. This was regarded as a perilous mission, for which they were promised indemnity in case of detention or loss. This mission was reasonably successful, but did not secure all the people desired. A storm of abuse arose, too severe for the delicate sensibilities of Norton, who was overwhelmed by the unreasonable charges, and soon died of grief. Bradstreet, more experienced in the inconsiderate charges of political opponents, with his usual balance, outrode the storm, and again rose to public favor by his strenuous opposition to the arbitrary measures of Andross, and was elected Governor of Massachusetts in 1689, an office he had previously held. This office he held till Sir William Phipps arrived with a new charter, 1692, when Bradstreet retired from public life, in his ninetieth year, and died at Salem, 1697, aged ninety-four years. By annual election he is said to have been in public office for more than sixty years. He is credited as having been one of the first of the magistrates of the colony to come out for toleration; and in the case of Elizabeth Morse, of Newbury, condemned by the court in 1680 to die for witchcraft, Governor Bradstreet, by his prudence and firmness, undoubtedly saved an innocent victim from the violence of that popular delusion. Simon Bradstreet had several sons and daughters; his fourth son, John, settled in Topsfield, on a portion of the land granted to his father. He was succeeded by his son Simon, who married a daughter of Rev. Joseph Capen, of the same town. Their son John, the grandfather of T. J. Bradstreet, also a farmer, married Elizabeth Fisk, of Wenham, Mass., March 2, 1718. They had several daughters and one son, Dudley,—a name that has been well preserved among the Bradstreets, while Simon has ceased to be a family name. Dudley Bradstreet was born Oct. 8, 1765; he married Mary Porter, of Danvers, Mass., Sept. 29, 1789. When young, Dudley Bradstreet commenced the study of Latin, with the intention of going to college; but his father, who was forty-seven years older, and now well advanced in years, needed him at home on the farm. By these considerations he was induced to relinquish the higher object of his ambition to follow in the humbler but more independent employment of several generations of his ancestors; he, however, retained a great fondness for reading—besides his weekly newspapers—the standard works of the best English authors.

As a politician, he was of the Jefferson school. As soon as he was of sufficient age he joined a cavalry company of the State militia, in his native town, and was early promoted to its highest office, and ever after went by the name of "Captain Dudley." He was not a professor of religion, and had not much respect for a profession that was contradicted by practice; yet he was very familiar with the Bible, believed in it, and made it the text-book of the family, and was regularly in his seat on the Sabbath, in the Congregational church, with a well-filled pew. In 1809, Dudley Bradstreet left his farm in Topsfield—which he inherited from his father, still retaining the ownership of the same, and which has been in the Bradstreet family from the time of the grant to Simon Bradstreet to the present time (1881)—for a larger farm in the adjoining town of Danvers. Here he remained, an industrious and successful farmer, where his large family of seven sons found plenty of room and labor so long as they remained at home. In April, 1813, his wife, Mary P., died,—a much-loved wife, mother, and friend,—leaving, besides her seven sons, four daughters to lament their loss. After a few years, Mr. Bradstreet married Hannah Prim, a maiden lady of Marblehead, Mass., who survived her husband for several years. He died April 23, 1833.

M. Woodruff M.D.

Thomas G. Bradstreet, the sixth son of Dudley Bradstreet, was born April 7, 1807, on the old farm at Topsfield, and removed with the family to Danvers in April, 1810. As soon as old enough to be of any service on the farm, he worked summers and went to school winters until he reached his eighteenth year; he then worked for his father until well advanced in his twentieth year, when he entered the academy at East Bradford, now Groveland, for the purpose of better qualifying himself for whatever might be his future condition and fortune. In the following spring he returned to the homestead and its toils. The next autumn he again went to the same school for one term. During this term an aged physician invited him to his house, and during the interview advised him to go to college. The subject opened a new and more advanced view of life. It looked like an up-hill journey; and then there was that large farm and that aged father, his strength and vigor diminishing year by year, his sons all gone from him but one: how could he leave him? Not only was his consent to be obtained, but from him the means must come to pay his way. He left the academy, and took a school for the winter; went home in the spring, laid the subject of going to college before his father, and urged his motives for so doing. He was nearly one and twenty: an education was what he wanted. His course of life depended upon the decision; the conditions of a farmer's life were not very inviting to him. His father, now passed sixty years, offered him one-half of his farm if he would remain with him so long as he lived. To this proposition it was replied "that that would be an unequal distribution of property, and would justly entail upon him the ill-will of the rest of the family." The interview resulted in the assent of his father, the son promising to help him through his haying season, which he fulfilled till the season he entered college. In the fall of 1830, Mr. Bradstreet entered Yale College, with the intention of studying law on the completion of his college course. During the winter of 1830 and 1831 he became interested in the subject of religion, changed his plans, and after graduating in 1834, he entered the theological seminary in New Haven to study for the ministry. At the close of the usual term of three years he received an invitation to preach to a church and society just organized in that part of Plymouth that is now Thomaston. After laboring here for about two months his health began to fail, and he left for several weeks, after which he returned and renewed his labors, assisted for a short time by a young man who had supplied his place during his absence. These two men, fresh from the seminary, full of hope, encouraged by the earnest co-operation of many of the members of this young church, prosecuted their labors with ardor. A powerful revival attended them, and in due time large numbers were added to the church. Mr. Bradstreet's health again failed, and he spent the following summer in trying to restore his strength. Having partially recovered, he engaged to supply the pulpit of the Congregational Church in Meriden for four months. At the close of this engagement he found himself about as he was the previous spring, and spent most of the summer in the same struggle for health, attended with about the same success. The following winter—1838 and 1839—he preached in the Second Congregational Church, in New London, Conn. These labors, with the confinement of the study-room, were followed in the spring by enfeebled health. By this time the subject of health began to assume a serious aspect; stern necessity suggested a more stirring life as the only hope of recovery. After much deliberation, with many regrets, he gave up his chosen profession. The next autumn, Nov. 4, 1840, he was married to Amanda Thomas, daughter of the late Seth Thomas, and engaged in his employ the next spring as superintendent of his cotton-factory. In this occupation he continued for fifteen years, when he gave up his position to travel for the Seth Thomas Manufacturing Company. In this employment he continued till the commencement of the late civil war. Since then he has been engaged in various kinds of business for himself: improving land near the village, conducting farm-work, doing such business as is usually connected with house-building, running a saw-mill, grist-mill, feed- and flour-store, etc.

Mr. Bradstreet has not been much of a politician, but his sympathies on all public questions have been on the side of Whigs and Republicans, and he has uniformly voted for their nominees. For one year he has been a member of the board of selectmen of the town of Plymouth, and represented that town in the House of Representatives for one term, and has served on the board of education in the towns of Plymouth and Thomaston for thirty-seven years. In the education of the young for many years he has taken an active part; served several years as chairman of the district school committee, chairman of a private school association, and president of an academical association till merged in a public high school. In the Congregational Church at Thomaston, of which he is a member, he has been connected with the Sabbath-school most of the time for nearly forty years,—twenty-five years as superintendent. He has also for a few years been a member of the board of directors of the Connecticut Home Missionary Society.

Mr. Bradstreet has reached his seventy-fourth year with such a degree of strength and vigor that he feels authorized in recommending to health-seekers regular, temperate habits, plenty of out-door exercise, and an open fireplace in winter.

DR. WILLIAM WOODRUFF.

Dr. William Woodruff is the third and youngest son of Dr. Gideon Woodruff and Sarah Heation, of Plymouth, Conn. He was born in New Haven, and traces his lineage to Matthew Woodruff, who came to Farmington from Hartford in 1641; was one of the original proprietors of the town, and is the ancestor of the various branches of the Woodruffs of Connecticut. The names Woodruff, Woodroffe, and Woodrow (originally the same) first appear in English history early in the fourteenth century, in the reign of Edward III. In his infancy the parents of Dr. Woodruff returned to Plymouth, where they had previously resided, and remained till the death of the elder Dr. Woodruff, who for many years was a medical practitioner in the town. The subject of this sketch, after completing his academical studies, became the pupil for several years of the late Rev. Luther Hart, and enjoyed the benefits of his training and scholarship. About the year 1824 he commenced the study of medicine under the care of Dr. Jonathan Knight, and subsequently of Dr. Nathan Smith, names known and honored by all who hold medical science in esteem. He was graduated from the Medical Department of Yale College in 1826, and began professional life in Waterbury, but was soon and urgently invited to return to Plymouth, where for many years he controlled a large practice. In 1838 he married Martha, the oldest daughter of Seth Thomas, an extensive manufacturer, by whom he had four children, of whom but one survives. About ten years ago he relinquished the profession to a large degree, and in travel sought to restore the health of an invalid daughter (since deceased), visiting Europe, California, and the various latitudes of our own country and Canada, from Montreal to Jacksonville, Fla. The variable, and to an invalid the most trying, seasons of the year have been spent at various sanitary resorts South,—St. Augustine, Aiken, and others. At present he is enjoying the otium of life, without much of the dignitate, and, with such philosophy as favoring circumstances will permit, rests from the more exacting labors of the profession, and in trusting patience awaits the twilight.

GEORGE W. GILBERT.

George W. Gilbert, son of George Gilbert and Sylvia Colton, and grandson of John Gilbert, of Belchertown, Mass., was born in Belchertown, Mass., March 3, 1821. His father was a practical farmer, and was born in Hebron, Conn., and at seventeen years of age settled with his parents in Belchertown, Mass., where he married Sylvia Colton, and had six children, four sons and two daughters, only two of whom—Charles and George W.—are living.

George Gilbert and wife settled in Thomaston Sept. 8, 1859, and lived with their son, George W., till their death. He died Aug. 27, 1862, and she died March 20, 1865. Mr. Gilbert was a captain in the war of 1812, and was familiarly known as "Captain Gilbert."

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert were members of the Congregational Church. John Gilbert, the grandfather of George W. Gilbert, was a farmer by occupation, and a lineal descendant of the Gilberts, who were among the earliest settlers of Hebron, Conn. He was born Feb. 26, 1749, and died April 16, 1817. He was the father of sixteen children. He was a major in the Revolutionary war, and a member of the Congregational Church.

George W. Gilbert remained at home, working on his father's farm summers and attending school winters, until he was nearly eighteen years of age.

On the 20th of October, 1838, he came to Thomaston and entered the employ of Seth Thomas as clerk, and soon after was clerk for Seth Thomas & Sons, and remained nine years, during which time he married Elizabeth, daughter of Seth Thomas, Dec. 3, 1845. They have had two children, viz.: Mary E. (deceased), who married Dr. A. G. Heaney and left one son, Harry Gilbert; George Colton, married Eliza W., daughter of Garwood Judd, and is a farmer. After the death of Seth Thomas, Jan. 28, 1859, the Thomas Bros. Cotton Company was formed, with G. W. Gilbert as its agent till the war of the Rebellion put an end to their enterprise, and the factory was changed to the Seth Thomas Clock Company, of which he was its secretary and treasurer for a short time, and at one time one of its directors. Since the war he has not been very much engaged in any kind of business. He owns a fine farm, which is in a good state of cultivation. In politics he is a Republican. He has been selectman of the old town of Plymouth. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert are members of the Congregational Church.

MARCUS PRINCE.

Marcus Prince, son of Truman Prince and Phebe Thomas, sister of Seth Thomas, Sr., was born in Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Conn., Dec. 11, 1808. His father was a native of Woodbridge, Conn., and settled in Litchfield Co., Conn., when a young man. He was twice married, first to Emma Lounsbury, and had one son, Castle; second to Phebe Thomas, by whom he had three children, of whom Marcus Prince was the second.

Truman Prince was a farmer and teamster by occupation. In politics he was a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Prince were members of the Baptist Church. He died May 23, 1840, aged fifty-seven years. She died on the 3d of March, 1869, aged eighty-eight years.

Marcus Prince worked on his father's farm summers, attending the district school winters, till March, 1829, when he settled in Thomaston, which has ever since been his home. He immediately commenced to work for Seth Thomas as an apprentice to the manufacture of clocks, and after some fifteen years of close application, having become thoroughly acquainted with his trade, and having made in 1842 the first brass clock, he assumed the entire control of the manufacture of the movements of Seth Thomas' clocks, in 1844 or 1845, and was made superintendent of this department of the clock-factory, which position he held for more than twenty-five years, since which time he has continued to work in the factory till the present time, January, 1881. During these years he has made many valuable improvements in the way of better tools to use in the manufacture of brass clocks. He was one of the earliest stockholders in Seth Thomas Clock Company, and for several years one of its directors. He is decidedly Republican in his political convictions. He has been twice married, first to Harriet W., daughter of Austin Blakeslee, of Plymouth, April 29, 1835. They had three children, viz.: (1) Charlotte D., who was the first wife of Geo. B. Pierpont, and to them were born two daughters, viz.: Mary E. and Lottie P. Mrs. Geo. B. Pierpont died Jan. 23, 1867. (2) Phebe T., who is the second wife of Geo. B. Pierpont, of Thomaston. (See sketch of his life.) (3) Truman, who died at fifteen years of age, April 15, 1854.

Mrs. Prince died Oct. 22, 1841, aged twenty-eight years. She was a fine Christian lady, and a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Prince married for his second wife Sabra E., daughter of Otis Parsons, of Granville, Mass., Jan. 2, 1844. Mr. Prince has been a member of the Congregational Church of Thomaston for many years.

RANDAL T. ANDREWS.

Randal T. Andrews, only son of Randal T. Andrews and Philena Blakeslee, was born in Thomaston, Conn., May 13, 1831. Randal T. Andrews, Sr., was a son of Luther Andrews, who was of English descent, and was born in Wolcott, Conn., in 1797, and died at his residence in Plymouth, Conn., Jan. 28, 1830. His wife was a daughter of Micah Blakeslee. Their children are as follows: Philenda, Harriet, and Randal T.

Mr. Andrews settled in Plymouth, now Thomaston, when a young man, and was engaged in the manufacture of clocks for Seth Thomas till his death. Although he died in the prime of manhood, he was very proficient as a workman.

Mrs. Andrews was a member of the Episcopal Church at Thomaston. She died in 1876, aged seventy-six years.

Randal T. Andrews received the advantages of a common-school education till he was fourteen years of age, when he commenced as an apprentice for Seth Thomas, in the manufacture of clocks, with Marcus Prince as foreman. In 1853 or 1854 he went to Cincinnati, and was there engaged as a clerk in a clock-store for an uncle by the name of Garret Blakeslee. He returned in about a year, and was again engaged for Seth Thomas as an engineer, and upon the organization of Thomas' Sons & Co. he had charge of the setting-up department, and was chiefly engaged in making models for the company, which is his principal business at the present time. Is known as a master-mechanic, and has been a stockholder in the company for many years. He is also one of the directors in the savings bank at Thomaston. In politics a Democrat. He has been selectman two years, and member of the State Legislature, besides holding other town offices. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, has been a vestryman many years, and at present is junior warden. Mr. Andrews is ingenious, industrious, patient, cool, and calculating, and is well fitted for his particular business.

BENJAMIN PLATT.

Benjamin Platt, second son of Benjamin Platt and Nancy Bristol, of Milford, Conn., was born in Prospect (formerly Waterbury), Conn., Feb. 22, 1806. His father was born in Milford, Conn., in 1782, and died Aug. 3, 1870, in East Hampton, Mass. He married Nancy Bristol, and removed to Prospect in 1805. They had seven sons and five daughters, all of whom except one grew up to be men and women. Names of children are as follows: Mark, Mary A., Benjamin, Nancy B., Henry, Henry P., Adelia, Harris, William B., Jane E., John R., and Augusta A. Benjamin Platt, Sr., was a farmer and drover by occupation. His wife died in Prospect, October, 1862, aged eighty-two years.

Benjamin Platt, the subject of our sketch, had very limited advantages for an education. He remained at home, working on his father's farm, till he was twenty-one years of age, when he removed to Waterbury, Conn., and was there engaged in the employ of Mark Leavenworth & Co. as a teamster for six years. In 1828 he settled in Thomaston and entered the employ of Seth Thomas, and continued for more than forty years, performing faithfully whatever he had to do. Some twenty years of the forty he had charge of the packing department, and a portion of this time he worked on contract. He has been a stockholder in the Seth Thomas Clock Company, and at the present time (December, 1880) he owns an interest in the Cheshire Manufacturing Company. In politics a Republican, he has been a member of the board of relief for many years, and is at the present time.

During 1876 and 1880 he was a member of the State Legislature. He married Agnes, daughter of Willard Welton, of Hamilton, N. Y., May 1, 1839. Their children are as follows:

(1) William Benjamin, born May 23, 1841; was a soldier in the Union army, of the Fourteenth United States Infantry band; served some two years, sickened, and died Nov. 27, 1863, at Mine Ford, Va.

(2) Helen E., born Sept. 7, 1845, married Jonathan M. Peck, a farmer of Bristol. They have three children, viz.: Mary C., Arthur B., and William J.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Platt are members of the Congregational Church of Thomaston.

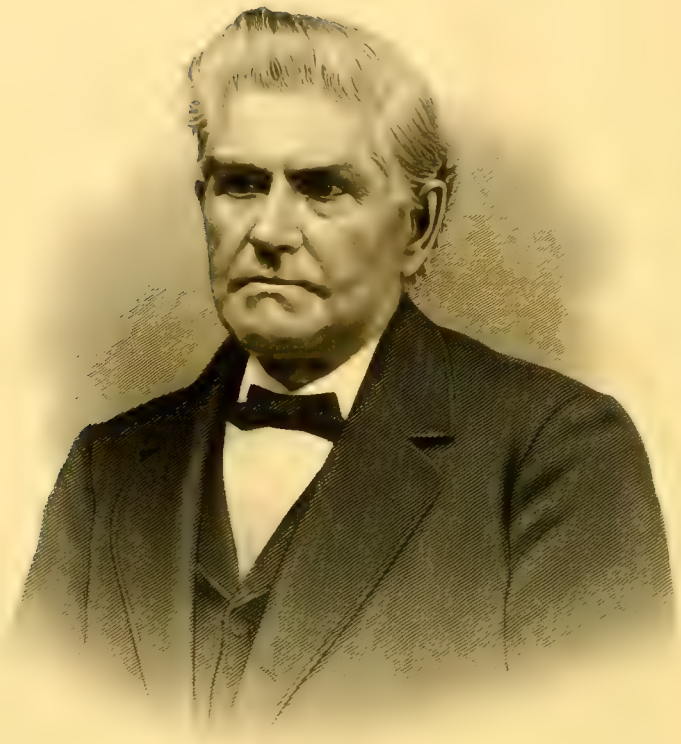
GEORGE B. PIERPONT.

George B. Pierpont, second son of Edward Pierpont, and a descendant of the Rev. James Pierpont, one of the founders of Yale College, was born in the town of Plymouth, Nov. 1, 1818. While very young his parents removed to the town of Litchfield. He received a good common-school education, and at the age of twenty-one engaged in teaching, in which occupation he was employed a greater portion of the time until 1850, when he purchased an interest in the American Knife Company and returned to his native town (that part now lying within the limits of the town of Thomaston), where he has since resided. In 1851 he was chosen secretary and treasurer of the American Knife Company, which position he held until the following year, when he was chosen president and treasurer. These offices, as well as that of active manager of the company, he has continuously occupied up to the present time. Mr. Pierpont has held several positions of public trust in his town; for six years he has been a member of the board of education, and in the general interest which he has taken in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the town, has made himself a respected and much-valued citizen in the community where he has so long resided.

MILES MORSE.

Miles Morse, second son of Miles and Charlotte (Wood) Morse, was born in the present town of Thomaston (formerly Plymouth), Conn., Sept. 22, 1816. His father was a native of Litchfield, Conn., and settled in Plymouth, Conn., where he continued to reside till his death, October, 1847. He was a farmer and manufacturer. He married Charlotte, daughter of James Wood, of East Windsor, Conn. Five of their children lived to grow up, four sons and a daughter, of whom Miles Morse is the second son. Mr. and Mrs. Morse were members of the Congregational Church of Plymouth. Mrs. Morse died June, 1862. Miles Morse, Jr., worked upon his father's farm summers and attended school winters until he was sixteen years of age, when he commenced preparing for college, entering Yale in 1839. He taught school while obtaining his education. In the fall of 1841 he began the manufacture of brass clocks where the American Knife Company now do an extensive business, with Jeremiah Blakeslee as his partner, under the firm-name of Morse & Blakeslee. They continued till 1849, when the factory was transferred to the American Knife Company for the manufacture of pocket-cutlery.

In 1850, Mr. Morse built, in connection with Gen. Thomas A. Davies, of New York City, a clock-factory on the West Branch of the Naugatuck River. Here they manufactured clocks, under the firm-name of Morse & Co., till they were burnt out, in January, 1855, when Mr. Morse became the general agent for the American Knife Company (in which he had a large interest), and traveled some ten years through various parts of the United States. He held his general agency till 1874, when he retired from active business. In his political convictions he is a Democrat, and as such is one of the leading men in his town. He has held various offices of trust and honor with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He has been justice of the peace many years, and in 1874 was a member of the State Senate, serving on a number of committees, of which he was chairman. He is often a delegate to county and State conventions. On the 25th of October, 1871, he married Laura A., eldest daughter of Seth and Charlotte (Parker) Thomas, of Thomaston. He built his present beautiful residence during the years of 1869–70, and settled here immediately after his marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Morse are members of the Congregational Church at Thomaston.



ISRAEL B. WOODWARD.

Israel B. Woodward is a lineal descendant from Henry Woodward, an Englishman, who settled at Dorchester, Mass., about 1650; thence he removed to Northampton, Mass., thence to Westfield, Mass., and, in consequence of Indian troubles there, finally settled at Lebanon, Conn.

The great-grandfather of Israel B. Woodward was named Capt. Israel Woodward. He served faithfully through the French and Indian war, and was familiarly known as "Captain Israel." His wife was Abigail Bayard. They had seven sons and two daughters. One of these was named Abel, who married Lucy Atwater, and had several children, viz.: Reuben S., Abel, James, David, John, Russel, Jerusha, and Eunice.

Abel Woodward was a captain in the Revolutionary war. He died at eighty-five years of age. His son David was born in Watertown, Conn., and married Lydia Welton, of Watertown, Conn. They had six children, viz.: Samuel W., died at twenty, David, Abby, Lydia, Israel B., and Andrew E. Mr. Woodward was a successful tanner and shoemaker. He was a captain of the State militia. He died December, 1822, aged forty-eight years, and his wife died March, 1872, aged ninety-one years and six months.

Israel B. Woodward was born in Watertown, Conn., on the old homestead, March 12, 1814. He received a common-school and academic education, spending his leisure months in his father's tannery. At seventeen years of age he began to work for his brother David in the tannery, and worked four years. In 1835 he went to Chicago, spent some time in travel, and returned. In 1838 he went West the second time, returned to Watertown, and in 1840 entered into business with his brothers, David and Andrew, having an interest in tanneries at Watertown and Thomaston. In April, 1846, he settled in Thomaston, where he has since continued to reside. For more than forty-five

FREDERICK E. WARNER.

Frederick E. Warner, son of Randal and Electa (Marsh) Warner, was born in the town of Thomaston, Conn., March 7, 1827. His father was born in Plymouth, Conn., Sept. 18, 1781, and died Nov. 25, 1853. He was twice married: first, to Ruth Atwater, and had two children who grew to maturity; second, to Electa, daughter of Jonathan Marsh, of New Hartford, Conn., and had four children, three of whom are living,—viz., Jonathan M., Ruth A., Frederick E., and Horace, who died at fourteen years of age. Randal Warner settled on the farm now owned by his son F. E. when a young man. He was a successful farmer.

F. E. Warner

In politics a Democrat. His wife died Feb. 12, 1860, aged seventy-five or seventy-six. Frederick E. worked on his father's farm summers, and attended the district school winters. He also went a few terms to an academy. He is one of the successful farmers and business men of Thomaston. He is quite extensively engaged in dealing in horses and cattle, in which he has been successful. On the 19th of November, 1850, he married Sarah R. Lum, daughter of Bennet Lum, Esq., of Oxford, Conn. They have four children,—viz., Addie, Henry R., Wilbur L., and Nellie. In politics, Mr. Warner is a Democrat, and as such he has been a selectman of Thomaston ever since the organization of the town.

William P. Judson.

years Mr. Woodward was successfully engaged in the tanning business. Nov. 20, 1844, he married Caroline M., daughter of Charles Everett, by whom he has had three children, viz.: Samuel W., died young; David Arthur, died at ten years of age; and Emma A., wife of Henry R. Warner, of Thomaston. Mrs. Woodward died March 10, 1876, and Mr. Woodward married for his second wife Mrs. Adeline E., widow of Samuel E. Hotchkiss, and daughter of J. Blakeslee, of Thomaston, Oct. 7, 1880. In politics Mr. Woodward is a Republican. He has been an assessor in Thomaston ever since the organization of the town, selectman in Plymouth two years, magistrate several years, member of the Legislature in 1879, serving on the committee of State-house and grounds. Mr. Woodward retired from active business in 1879. Mr. and Mrs. Woodward are members of the Congregational Church at Thomaston.

HENRY F. REYNOLDS.

Henry F. Reynolds is of Scotch-Irish descent; very little is known of his early ancestors. His great-grandfather was James Reynolds, who was one of the first settlers of Watertown, Conn., where he married and had a family of children, one of whom was Samuel, who was born in Watertown, Conn., married Sarah Foote, and had the following children, viz.: Jonathan, Abigail (Mrs. Fenn), Russel, Charlotte (died young), Sarah (Mrs. Caleb Humiston), Charlotte (the second), Samuel, and Polly (Mrs. Abijah Painter). Mr. Reynolds settled in Plymouth (now Thomaston) in 1795, with his family, on the farm now owned by his grandson, Henry F. He was a member of the Congregational Church. He died at sixty-three years of age, and his wife died at seventy years of age. Russel Reynolds, son of Samuel, was born Jan. 25, 1781, in Watertown, Conn., and removed to Plymouth with his parents in 1795. He married Mary Castle, daughter of Amasa Castle, of Plymouth, in January, 1800. Their children are as follows: Pamelia, Clarissa, Emeline, George, and Henry F., all born where Henry F. now resides, and all are living. Russel Reynolds was a successful farmer. In politics he was a Jackson Democrat. He held various town offices, and was a member of the Episcopal Church. He died May 3, 1869, aged eighty-eight years, and his wife died in September, 1868, aged eighty-eight.

Henry F. Reynolds was born on the farm where he now resides, in Thomaston, Dec. 4, 1820. His advantages for an education were confined to the common schools of his day, working on the farm summers. At nineteen years of age he left school and commenced to work by the month for his father, and continued till he was thirty years of age, when he assumed control of the farm. In 1847 he built a saw-mill, and has been extensively engaged in lumbering ever since. He owns a farm of three hundred acres, which is in a good state of cultivation. In all his business relations as a farmer or manufacturer of lumber he has been moderately successful. He is a lover of good music, and in 1839, at twenty years of age, he was mainly instrumental in organizing a brass band in Thomaston, called "Reynolds' Band," and for more than twenty-four years he was its favorite leader. In politics he is a Republican. He has been selectman two years, and assessor several years.

Sept. 24, 1842, he married Lorinda, daughter of David Edwards, of Ware, Mass., and has one daughter, Elizabeth C., born Feb. 24, 1848, married to Charles F. Williams, a druggist of Thomaston, Conn., Nov. 5, 1868. They have one son, Charles Henry.

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are members of the Congregational Church at Eagle Rock. Mr. Reynolds was principally instrumental in the building of the Congregational church at Eagle Rock. He is very liberal in all matters which have for their object the advancement of society, and the poor have in him a true friend.

WILLIAM P. JUDSON.

Deacon William P. Judson, of Thomaston, Conn., was a son of Joseph Judson, of Cornwall, Conn., and a lineal descendant of the Judsons, who were among the first settlers in Stratford, Conn. He was born in the town of Cornwall, State of Connecticut, Oct. 8, 1799, and remained there, working on his father's farm, till he was sixteen years of age, when he went to Watertown, Conn., and learned the cabinet-maker's trade with one David Pritchard. During a portion of this time he worked on the farm summers. In 1823 he settled in Thomaston, and immediately entered the employ of Seth Thomas, and was with him and his successors forty-nine successive years. During more than thirty years of this time he was superintendent of the case department. He retired from an active and busy life some two years before his death, which occurred Sept. 19, 1872. Early in life he made a profession of religion and united with the Congregational Church, of which he was ever a consistent and worthy member. About 1835, through his personal efforts, assisted by Seth Thomas, Sr., and some others, he organized, and was mainly instrumental in building, the Congregational Church at Thomaston. He was a deacon in the church for more than forty years, and was always liberal to the church and charitable towards the poor.

In his political convictions he was decidedly a Republican. He held various town offices to the satisfaction of his constituents, but the main bent of his mind led him to the church, and in it we learn he worked with a will, ever trying to do his whole duty.

He married Mary M. Bancroft, of South Windsor, Conn., Nov. 5, 1828. She was born in South Windsor, Conn., Nov. 6, 1798, and died June 14, 1862.

Their children are Hiram P., born Feb. 17, 1833;

Mary P., born Nov. 19, 1835, married Nathan F. Smith, and resides in Williamstown, Mass.; Elizabeth H., born Aug. 25, 1837, married John M. Gross, and resides in Providence, R. I.; Joseph K., born Feb. 18, 1840, married Eunice M. Fenton, and has two daughters, Helen S. and Mary M.; and William S., born Aug. 8, 1843. All the sons are at home, and are good farmers, and are quite extensively engaged in growing fine Jersey cattle. In politics they are Republicans.

HIRAM PIERCE.

Hiram Pierce, born in Cornwall, Conn., Dec. 27, 1800, died Oct. 17, 1875. He was the son of John Pierce, who was the son of Capt. Joshua Pierce, both of Cornwall. Hiram received a common-school education, his boyhood days being occupied with the duties of farm-life, afterwards teaching in the district schools of his native town. Subsequently he learned the trade of a joiner and cabinet-maker, living in Waterbury for a time, removing to Plymouth about the time of his majority to engage in the business of making clock-cases for Seth Thomas, and, in connection with Deacon W. P. Judson, for some years made, under contract, all the cases for the Thomas clocks, the work at that time being done almost entirely by hand. In 1828 he married Miss Charlotte S. Bancroft, of East Windsor, Conn., afterwards purchasing a farm in that town and removing thither, where he resided about two years, when he returned to Plymouth, at the solicitation of Mr. Thomas, to take charge of his office as accountant and correspondent. In addition to the clock business, Mr. Thomas also carried on the manufacture of cotton goods and farming operations on a large scale, the details of which all passed through the office. He possessed a good constitution, and was a most indefatigable worker, and in looking after the varied interests of his employer, outside of the office as well as in, carried burdens that but few men are able to do.

On the formation of the Thomas Manufacturing Company for the manufacture of brass he was made secretary of the company, and in the early development of that business had an active part. Of his relation to the educational and religious interests of the town, it is but just to say that he bore a prominent part, and helped to carry the burdens and develop the best that circumstances present and prospective rendered possible.

In 1830 he united with the Congregational Church at Plymouth Centre, Rev. Luther Hart then the pastor. He participated in the movement for the organization of the Congregational Church now in Thomaston, and on its organization transferred his membership to it. For more than forty years he was justice of the peace, and by long practical experience, and having a mind fitted to judicial consideration, became a trusted adviser and counselor for a wide circle. In matters of law and business he represented the town of Plymouth in the Legislature in 1861, and at various times served the town in an official capacity as assessor, selectman, etc. His character was that of a man without fear and without reproach, unostentatious, yet always felt in every effort for the improvement of the moral, religious, or political welfare of the people. In politics a Whig, an ardent admirer of Henry Clay; in later years a Republican. He buried his first wife in June, 1848, being left with five children; was married again, about a year after, to Miss Sarah E. Beers, of Cornwall, Conn., by whom he had one child. In later years he withdrew from the more active duties that had occupied his business life for half a century, and calmly awaited life's decline. Among his last efforts for the improvement of the place was the planning and securing of the substantial addition to the beautiful cemetery on the hillside, where he sleeps, awaiting the resurrection of the just. After his death the remains of his first wife were removed from the old burying-ground and reinterred by his side. His children are all married, and reside as follows: William J., married Elizabeth A. Capron, of New Britain, Conn., resides in Hartford; Joseph B., married Sophia A. Boardman, of Hartford, resides in Hartford; Charlotte S., married Horace A. Potter, of Thomaston, resides in Thomaston; S. Maria, married Alexander Hamilton, of West Hartford, Conn., died March 17, 1863; Edward H., married Susan C. Beers, of Stratford, Conn., resides in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Alice E., married Dr. E. T. Bradstreet, of Thomaston, resides in Meriden, Conn.

town was allotted to the Windsor proprietors by the Legislature, and it was named Torrington at the May session of the General Court in 1732, by the following enactment:

"Be it enacted by the Governor, Council, and Representatives, in General Court Assembled, and by the Authority of the same:

"That the first or parcel of land mentioned in said instrument of partition containing 20,924 acres, and bounded south partly in Litchfield and partly on land belonging to said patentees in Windsor, called the Half Township; east and north, by land belonging to the Governor and company of the colony of Connecticut, is hereby named, and shall ever hereafter be called and named Torrington."*

In 1732 the taxable inhabitants of Windsor were divided into seven companies, each owning a township, taking their company names after the towns they owned. The Torrington company are specified as "Matthew Allyn, Roger Wolcott, and Samuel Mather, Esqs., and others, of the town of Windsor, patentees of Torrington." The number of these persons was one hundred and thirty-six, and their names and tax-list were as follows:

"Recorded, March the 4th, Anno. Dom., 1733-34, by me, TIMOTHY LOOMIS, clerk for sd. Torrington proprietors.

"The sum total of Torrington list is £6431 9s. 5d."

"The vote to lay out a proportionate amount of land to each proprietor was passed on the 10th of September, 1732, and on the 18th of the same month the committee appointed for the purpose proceeded to draw the lots for the proprietors.

"The lots were laid half a mile in length, and therefore every rod in width made one acre of land. In the first and second divisions there was appropriated one acre to the pound of each owner's list; in the third there was not quite that amount.

"In the first division there was laid out five acres

* Torrington was a hamlet on the hill called Cookbury Black, in the southern part of Devonshire, the southernmost county in England. It was also the name of a village on the Torridge River, a few miles north of Cookbury Black.

as a meeting-house plot, and one hundred acres as a ministry lot, and these were said to be near the centre of the town.

"The lots for the proprietors, when completed, were all laid in thirteen tiers, except those in the swamp, one, on the south side of the town, running east and west, the other twelve running north and south, and, with the highways, covering the whole area of the town except the pine-timber. The swamp was laid in three tiers of lots running north and south.

"The first division was completed in November, 1734, Roger Newberry, Joshua Loomis, and Nathaniel Pinney being the committee. The second, voted to be made in March, 1736, was not completed until October, 1742, John Cook (2d), Joshua Loomis, Roger Newberry, and Daniel Bissell, Jr., being the committee.

"The third division was voted in October, 1742, and was completed in December, 1750. In this division two hundred and twenty acres were appropriated for the use of schools in the town. Samuel Messenger, surveyor, Thomas Marshall, and Aaron Loomis were the committee, and Rev. Nathaniel Roberts drew the numbers for the lots.

"Ebenezer Lyman, Jr., was the first permanent resident of the town. In January, 1735, his father, Ebenezer Lyman, Esq., of Durham, bought of Job Loomis lot 108, containing seventy-two acres. This lot constituted a part of the farm known ever since as the Lyman place, and upon it was built the fort, in the western part of the town. In June of the same year Ebenezer, Jr., bought the half of three acres, lot 109, on the corner, and adjoining lot 108 on the north, and erected a dwelling, undoubtedly a log house. In this house was born, June 16, 1738, so far as known, the first child born in the town, it being a daughter, and was named Lydia.

"Jonathan Coe, of Durham, married Elizabeth Elmer, of Windsor, Sept. 23, 1737, and brought his bride to Torrington, the second woman in the town. Mr. Coe had worked in the town two summers. This house must have been a log house,* and stood about eighty rods south of Ebenezer Lyman, Jr.'s, their farms adjoining. Here were two dwellings in the wilderness,—wilderness in every direction, and almost without end in every direction. The nearest place that looked like civilization was Litchfield, about six miles distant, and but few houses had been erected in that town before this time, and some of these were at considerable distance from the centre of the town, one or two being near the southern boundary of Torrington. At this time there were no families residing in Goshen, a few were in Harwinton, a few in New Hartford, none in Winchester.

"Abel Beach, of Durham, bought land in company with Jonathan Coe, lot 123, containing thirty-one acres, in 1735, where the second church was built, at Torrington green.

"In June, 1739, Daniel Stoughton bought of Abel Beach lot 82, with a dwelling-house on it, and made his home in the town, probably in that house. Joel Thrall became a settler during the summer of 1739.

"Thus did the work begin and go forward, so that in October, 1739, in their petition for religious privileges, the petitioners say there 'are nine families in the town.' It is impossible to say who all these families were. The petition, signed by twenty-five names, says these names represent 'inhabitants and proprietors.'

"The oldest deed recorded of Torrington lands was dated at Windsor, June 14, 1728, given by Daniel Griswold, to his 'dutiful and obedient son,' Nathan Griswold, for a right in undivided 'Western lands.' From this time to the spring of 1735 sixty deeds of rights were recorded in the Windsor company's book. Soon after the survey was made and the lots located the sales became more numerous, and were mostly to persons residing in Windsor, but in a few cases to persons residing in other parts of the State. These sixty deeds include nearly, if not all, the land sales by the Torrington company previous to the rendering of the report of the committee on the first division, in November, 1734.

"The first land cleared and cultivated in the town was located according to the following description:

"'At a meeting of the proprietors of Torrington, held in Windsor, Feb. 10, 1734, voted Lieut. Roger Newberry be a committee, and he is hereby fully empowered in the name of the proprietors to rent out to Josiah Grant, of Litchfield, about four or five acres of land lying in said Torrington, which is already broken up, as it lieth bounded south on Litchfield and east on Waterbury River, until such time as said proprietors by their vote shall see cause to call it in.'

"One deed, given by Joseph Ellsworth, of Litchfield, dated March 21, 1734, says lot 77 was a home-lot, which meant that it had a dwelling-house on it, and had been the home of somebody. This lot joined Goshen on the west, and was about one mile north of Litchfield line.

"In October, 1744, the town voted thirty-five pounds six shillings and sixpence, as one-half of the cost of building a fort. It was located near Ebenezer Lyman's dwelling, on the west side of the present road at that place, and was built of chestnut logs split in halves and standing in the ground, rising to the height of about eight feet. The object of the fort was protection to the inhabitants from the ravages of the Indians, especially the raids of the Mohawks, which were made for the one only purpose of pillage and destruction. The Connecticut Indians had learned, many years before, to make little trouble for the settlers. Various narrations are still repeated about the fright of the people, the haste with which they fled to the fort, leaving nearly everything in their homes, and remaining over-night, and sometimes several days, in great anxiety as to their own lives, and also the safety of their homes; and for a time the settlers sought homes near this fort. Several of them owned lots on the east side, but sold them and bought on the west side, and then brought their families into the town near the fort; and others lived on the west side, while they worked their lands on the east side.

* The lumber for making framed houses in 1740 must have been brought through the forests from Litchfield or New Hartford.

"This fear of the Indians was the greatest disturber of the peace of the people in the new settlements. The dread of the wild beasts, though no inconsiderable matter, was of little weight compared to the terror produced at the report of the coming of the Mohawk Indians. The alarm at the approach of the Indians was given by lighting signal-fires on the hills from Albany eastward as the party advanced; hence if an accidental fire occurred in the direction of the Hudson River it was taken as an alarm-fire, and the people hastened to the fort to wait until information could be obtained of the cause of the fire. This state of society came to an end soon after the close of the French war in 1760. The old fort served its purpose as a refuge in time of need, was a number of times occupied by the frightened inhabitants for several days at a time, then gradually tumbled down, leaving nothing but a mound seventy-five feet by one hundred, which still marks the place of its once warlike standing. There is said to be another mound about three-fourths of a mile westerly from the site of this old fort, which marks the place of some fortification, either of the Indians before, or by the first settlers of the town.

"A school-house was built within the fort in 1745,* the first institution of learning in the town. In this house religious services were held several years.

"So far as ascertained, the first settler in Torringford was Abraham Dibble, or his son Daniel, in 1744 or 1745, on the second lot laid out from Harwinton line, the place still known as the Dibble place. The next settler was Benjamin Bissell, a little north of the Shubael Griswold place, on the east side of the street, where Mr. Bissell kept a tavern a number of years. He came probably in 1745. The third settler was John Birge, on the present Roswell Birge place. Nehemiah Gaylord made his home opposite Benjamin Bissell's, a little north, in a log house first, probably in 1746. Elijah Gaylord settled on a farm that included the site of the present Torringford church and the burying-ground—his log house standing in the lot southeast of the present church—in 1747. Shubael Griswold built his house a little south of Nehemiah Gaylord's, in 1754, and made his home there. He lived on the west side of the town a year or two before this house was completed, and before he was married. In 1752 or 1753, John Burr settled on the place long known by his name, and Benjamin Matthews came about the same time, with Mr. Burr, from Farmington; the others were from Windsor. Soon after this came Deacon Jonathan Kelsey and his son Nathan from Woodbury. Between 1753 and 1760 came Joshua, David, Daniel, and Aaron Austin from Suffield, some of whom settled on West Street, and Aaron Yale from Wallingford, and some others from Windsor, and Samuel and Ephraim Durwin from Waterbury."

FIRST TAVERNS.

"One of the first taverns was erected and kept by Epaphras Sheldon, a little north of Ebenezer Lyman's, on the east side of the road. Mr. Sheldon having received quite a farm from his father, and having purchased several pieces of land, made his home here about 1760, and was of considerable importance as a new settler, and for thirty years he was as prominent as any man in the business transactions of the town, and in social, military, and political positions. His tavern was the headquarters for most doings of the town. The road running north and south past his house was the race-course for running horses, and the fields near his house were the parade-grounds for military drill until after the centre of the town became established at the green, after the building of the second meeting-house.

"Ephraim Bancroft lived a little north of Mr. Sheldon's, and also kept a tavern.

"Capt. Abel Beach kept a tavern, beginning some time before the Revolutionary war, but at what time he opened his house for public entertainment cannot be definitely ascertained.

"John Burr, of Farmington, bought in 1751, and in 1752, land amounting to over four hundred pounds money, and settled in the town in 1753, on the farm known many years as the Burr place, east of Burrville, on the hill. Here Mr. Burr was keeping a tavern in 1762, and may have opened such a house some years earlier.

"Shubael Griswold built his house on the corner of Torringford Street and what was afterwards the Torrington turnpike, in 1754, and opened it as a tavern about 1757. His son, Thaddeus Griswold, continued it as a public-house many years.

"Benjamin Bissell's tavern stood a little north of Shubael Griswold's, and was kept as a public-house some years before the Revolution; and still later David Soper kept a tavern on Torringford Street, west side, near the first meeting-house."

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

"The number of inhabitants in Torrington in 1774 was eight hundred and forty-three, of which there were only one hundred and thirty-two men and one hundred and thirty-four women over twenty years of age, leaving five hundred and seventy-seven persons under twenty years of age, and in a great measure dependent on the older people for sustenance, care, and protection. Besides this, the country was new, and the obtaining of food and comforts was much more difficult than it would have been under other circumstances. It is important to bear these things in mind as we attempt to estimate the struggle through which the inhabitants passed in order to obtain their political independence.

"The two military companies in 1774 included one hundred and sixty-nine men, or all the men in the town over twenty years of age, and thirty-seven under that age. When hostilities commenced at Concord, in this same year, these companies were not called on to go to Boston, but were notified to be in readiness at a minute's warning. In the autumn session of the Assembly of that year an act was passed offering a sum of money to every member of the military companies of the State that would train twelve half-days in the spring of the next year, and the officers were required to report to the justices of the town, and they to the Assembly and draw the pay. The following are the reports made from Torrington. The report was made by the clerk of the company, and addressed:

"'To Captain Amos Wilson, 5th Company of the 17th Regiment in the colony of Connecticut; and to John Cook and Epaphras Seldon, Esqrs., Justices of the peace, etc.

"'This may certify that the following persons, in pursuance of the late act of law of the colony, passed October last, respecting the military, each one has trained in his own person, according to order, as follows:

"In 1775 Goshen sent thirty-nine soldiers, New Hartford fifty-five, Cornwall twenty-nine, Harwinton thirty-two.

"Early in August, 1776, the aspect of affairs at New York was so threatening that, at the urgent request of Gen. Washington, the Governor and Council of Connecticut ordered the whole of the standing militia west of the Connecticut River, with two regiments on the east side of the river, to march to New York City. This order took two companies from this town.

"For the comfort of the militia when they should go into the service, the Assembly directed that each town should provide one tent for every thousand pounds on the list, and Torrington, standing five thousand eight hundred and sixteen pounds fifteen shillings, was required to provide five, if not six, tents; hence Deacon John Cook, then town treasurer, paid one order to the Widow Mary Birge by the hand of her son, John Birge, for tent-cloth, amounting to five pounds and six shillings, and also paid Capt. John Strong, one of the selectmen, seven pounds and sixteen shillings lawful money for tent-cloth.

"In December, 1776, to raise an army for the following two years, ten pounds were offered as a premium or bounty, and the same pay continued; and in 1779 the authorities of this town paid as high as thirty pounds for one soldier for three years or during the war.

"Capt. Epaphras Sheldon, of this town, was appointed captain in the second of the six battalions ordered in June, 1776, to be 'raised and marched directly to New York, and there join the Continental army.' The other officers of this company were: first lieutenant, John Rockwell; second lieutenant, Abner Wilson; ensign, Charles Goodwin. In this company were probably two of the sons of the captain, viz.:

"Epaphras, aged twenty years, served his time, returned home, and after many years removed to Hannibal, Oswego Co., N. Y., where he died in 1850, ninety-four years of age.

"Remembrance, nineteen years of age, was taken prisoner by the British at Fort Washington; was poisoned by the water, and died in January, 1777.

"Wait, son of Capt. Epaphras, served in the war, and must have entered the army when fourteen or fifteen years of age; returned, lived in this town, and died in 1849, aged eighty-four years.

"The captain lived in this town until 1809, when he removed to Winchester, where he died in 1812, aged eighty years.

"Elijah Loomis, son of Ichabod, was probably in this company, and died a prisoner.

"Capt. Shubael Griswold was appointed captain in December, 1776, with the following officers in his company: Jonathan Mason, first lieutenant; Theodore Catlin, second lieutenant; Jesse Buell, ensign. The men were enlisted from Torringford, Litchfield, and Cornwall. The pay-roll of this company is reported in the State library as lost, yet Capt. Griswold made an extra roll, which he placed in the pocket of his journal, where it remained to the present, in spite of three generations of children, and more than a hundred years of wear and tear. It is well preserved, and beautiful to behold, except some hawk-eyed pictures, which have been scribbled on it either by soldiers in the army or those of the household.

"The company marched to Sawpits, where it joined the army.

"The marching roll of Capt. Griswold's company, March 4, 1777:

"From Torrington: John Burr, Seth Coe, Charles Roberts, Ambrose Fyler, Jonathan Miller, Asaph Atwater, John Birge, Isaac Filley, Timothy Loomis, Ebenezer Bissell, Return Bissell, Daniel Winchell, Frederick Bigelow, Cotton Mather, Benjamin Frisbie, Thomas Skinner, Nathaniel Barber, Timothy Kelsey, Thomas Matthews, Stephen Rossiter, Elisha Kelsey.

"From Litchfield: Stephen Smith, Gideon Phillips, Abel Catlin, Simeon Ross, Timothy Gibbs, Benjamin Stone, Ashbel Catlin, Calvin Bissell, Benjamin Palmer, John Way, Abner Baldwin, Philemon Wilcox, Solomon Linsley, John Woodruff, Enoch Sperry, Dyer Cleaveland, Enos Baines, Solomon Hurson, Harris Hopkins, Timothy Linsley, Joel Taylor, John Bissell, Solomon Woodruff. Philo Woodruff, Simeon Gibbs, Belah Benton.

"From Cornwall: John Mebbins, Samuel Burton, Josiah Hopkins, Asahel Leet, Solomon Johnson, Henry Philemor, Samuel Emmons, Israel Dibble, Thomas White, Elisha Damon, Jernas Wadsworth, Joshua Hartshorn, Noah Harrison, Asa Emmons, Jonathan Bell, Simeon North.

"The Torringford and Cornwall men marched eighty-five miles, and the Litchfield men seventy-five, before reaching the army, on which account the former received seven shillings and onepence each, and the latter six shillings and threepence, as traveling expenses. Tradition says this company was in the Northern campaign, going to Crown Point and Montreal, taking Fort St. John's, and returning in the winter; and this agrees with the reports preserved by the State.

"Capt. Medad Hills was appointed captain in December, 1776, and raised his company from Goshen, Torrington, and Winchester, with the following officers: Timothy Stanley, lieutenant, and John Dowd, ensign. Capt. Hills resided in Goshen, near the Torrington line, and is celebrated for the guns which he made during the war more than for the battles he fought; for the reason that his guns have been seen more than his battles have been heard of, although he was a brave and honored soldier. He is said to have been in command of two companies at the taking of New York City by the British, and to have conducted himself and men to the honor of his country in that perilous time.

"The several volunteer companies of the State this year were put into one regiment, and the Assembly appointed Noadiah Hooker colonel, James Root lieutenant-colonel, and Medad Hills major. Mr. Hills was afterwards appointed colonel.

"The following persons being detached [drafted] in 1777, paid their fines, each five pounds of money:

"Asahel Wilcox, Joseph Taylor, Isaiah Tuttle, Moses Loomis, Jr., Epaphras Loomis, Jr., Roger Wilson, Ephraim Loomis, Thomas Marshall, Noah Fowler, Arial Brace, Samuel Beach, William Wilson, George Baldwin, Moses Loomis (for his son, second time), George Baldwin (second draft), Noadiah Bancroft, Pardon Thrall, Ashbel North, [Samuel] Cummings, Benjamin Beach.

"In addition to these, Capt. Epaphras Loomis reported the fines of nine others in 1777. Twenty-three others gave their notes for these fines, and paid the notes in 1779, one hundred and fifteen pounds, amounting, in all, to two hundred and sixty pounds. These funds were used by the town in giving extra pay to those who did go and in hiring other soldiers. Capt. Epaphras Loomis' company received of this forty-six pounds.

"Benjamin Phelps, in January, 1779, 'paid two hundred dollars for a fine for his son Jonathan; being detached and not going, sixty pounds.'

"In 1779 the town treasurer paid the following sums for men as soldiers:

"'Paid Samuel Roberts for his service in the army, £6 10*s*. Paid an order in favor of Noah North for his hiring a man in the service, £10; to Capt. Amos Wilson for his hiring a man, etc., £10; to Urijah Cook for his hiring a man, etc., £10; to Ebenezer Leach for his service in the army, £10; to Daniel Grant for money paid for clothing, £43 7*s*. 6*d*.; to Samuel Kelsey for his service in the army; to Bushniel Benedict for cartouch-box, £4 4*s*.; to Daniel and Abraham Loomis for their hiring a man into the army, £10; to Jabez Gillett for two soldiers' blankets, £18; to Daniel Waller for his hiring a man, etc., after he was detached, £10; Dea. Miller for two blankets for the soldiers, £16; to Daniel Dibble for a soldier's blanket, £9; to Ambrose Fyler, a Continental soldier, £13; to Jabez Gillett for a pot detached for the State use, £12 12*s*.; to Abner Loomis to hire John Dear to go into the service in Phelps' boy's room, who paid his fine, £60.'

"In 1780 the treasurer received fines as follows: by Col. Sheldon, from Ulysses Fyler, Samuel Clark, Clement Tuttle, William Wilson, and James Ferguson, two hundred and sixteen dollars; by Maj. Strong, a fine from Stephen ———, two hundred and forty dollars.

"In 1781 the following moneys were received: by several notes given for fines by those who were detached, £5 each, £35; also by Ebenezer Bissell, as fine, £10; sundry other notes, £5 17*s*.

"In 1781 the treasurer of the town paid the following for services in the army:

"The following are some of the actions taken in town-meeting in support of the Revolution:

"'Dec., 1777.—Voted, That Abner Marshall, Capt. Noah Wilson, Mr. Ebenezer Coe, Sergt. Aaron Austin, and Capt. Shubael Griswold shall be a committee to look into the matter, in respect to fines, and to do justice and equity to them that were fined.'

"'Voted, That Capt. Abel Beach, Capt. Ebenezer Coe, Capt. Noah Wilson, Mr. Aaron Austin, Capt. Benjamin Bissel, and Lieut. Nehemiah Gaylord shall be a committee to get clothing for the Continental soldiers, according to an act of Assembly, and that the committee give prizes as they judge just and reasonable.'

"At a meeting of the town held Jan. 6, 1778, 'to try the minds of the town, whether they would approve and adopt the Articles of Confederation,'—

"'Voted article by article, and adopted the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th articles, and approved the same by a very clear majority.'

"'Voted, That the selectmen let those families whose husbands are in the service have what salt they judge reasonable.' 'That the widow Preston have given to her gratis one bushel of salt, when it comes, as a free gift from the town.'

"'Voted, That Nathaniel Barber, Jr, Samuel Kelsey, Jr., Clerk Roberts, Ambros Fyler, Ebenezer Scovill, Ebenezer Leach, who are now in our service to fill our quota, and all those men who will enlist or are detached, have given them twenty shillings a month for each month they are in the service, until the first day of January next, except those who take the benefit by law provided to support their families.'

"'Voted, That Lieut. Ebenezer Miller and Ensign Elijah Gaylord, Capt. Abel Beach, and Mr. Caleb Lyman be a committee to divide to each family the town salt according to the number of inhabitants in the town.'

"In March, 1778, they

"'Voted, That Capt. Noah Wilson, Capt. Abel Beach, Capt. Ebenezer Coe, Capt. Benjamin Bissell, Mr. Aaron Austin, and Lieut. Nehemiah Gaylord shall be a committee to provide for those families that are left, and whose husbands are in the army, as the law directs.'

"'Voted, To appoint a committee to provide the clothing for our quota, and that the committee divide into six districts, and that each district provide their equal proportion, and that Lieut. Ebenezer Miller, Mr. Daniel Hudson, Mr. Asahel Strong, Mr. Abner Loomis, Ensign Daniel Grant, and Mr. Ashbel North be a committee to divide and procure their equal proportions of clothing.'

"In December, 1778, another committee was appointed to procure clothing, consisting of George Baldwin, Dr. Elkanah Hodges, Ensign Benjamin Whiting, John Wetmore, Ezekiel Bissell, Jr., and John Birge.

"In September, 1779, a special town-meeting was called for the purpose, and they directed the selectmen, with the committee, to borrow money, if necessary, to provide clothing and provisions for soldiers' families.

"In the next December, at the regular meeting, they decided that 'Daniel Dibble, Reuben Burr, Noah Wilson, Jr., and Ensign Wait Beach be a committee to take care of the soldiers' families the year ensuing.' And at the same time they appointed Nehemiah Gaylord, Jr., Michael Loomis, Elisha Smith, Caleb Lyman, Hewit Hills, and Eli Richards a committee to procure clothing for the soldiers for the year ensuing.

"On Dec. 4, 1780, when war matters were looking gloomy, and further call had been made for soldiers, the town appointed Lieut. Jesse Cook, Ensign Daniel Grant, Lieut. John Burr, Sergt. Benjamin Beach, Mr. David Soper, and Mr. Ashbel North a committee to procure men for three years or during the war, to fill our quota of the Continental army; and to leave the matter with the committee now appointed, to get the men as reasonable as they can, and for whatever they do the town will be reponsible, and will satisfy their contract with those they hire, and satisfy all reasonable expenses.

"In this year, and in 1781, it required a great effort to procure the number of men required of the town, and the votes passed were of a very stringent and thorough character, so as to meet the demands made; extra taxes were levied, authority to borrow money given; Daniel Grant was kept in the saddle collecting taxes almost the year round; three special town-meetings were held in 1781; the town was divided into classes or districts, and every district must furnish the men adjudged to be its proportion; and the very language in which the acts are expressed indicate the extremity to which they were driven. Their town-meetings were like councils of war rather than anything else, and on one occasion continued (June 2d) in the old Torrington meeting-house until after dark, and they adjourned to the house of Ephraim Bancroft to have light to see to record the transactions. The great question was how to get men without oppression and injustice, for they say to the committee 'to make out the town quota in the most equitable way and manner as they possibly can to do equal justice,' for the drafts fell so heavy that there was danger of rebellion, and, if not, who could be found to arrest a man, take him from his already suffering family, and drag him into the army? One resolution has the ring of defiance:

"'Voted, That if the militia officers neglect to detach three weeks (against the order), the town will defend from cost that may arise therefrom.'

"That is, they must and would have a little time to do the work assigned. This was not all: when the men were procured, the demands for provisions must be met.

"'Voted, That the civil authority and selectmen divide the town into four equal classes by the lists, and draw lots which class shall pay the first month's beef, and so on for the four months.'

"This means that the authorities took a man's ox or cow whether he would or not, and sent it to the army, that those sons and fathers already there might not starve. For any such thing taken the town always paid a full price; but every ox and cow was wanted in the town, and were not for sale.

"The year 1782 came, and with it another call for men from this town, the number being eleven.

"'Voted, That the four classes as set out last year be assigned to procure eleven men for one year, as follows, viz.: That the first class be divided into three classes, each to procure one man; the second class remain as they were last year, to procure two men; the third class to be divided into three classes, each to procure one man; the fourth class to remain together to procure three men; and that the selectmen first divide and set out by the list of 1781 into four classes or equal parts, as set out last year, and then divide as aforesaid.'

"These eleven were State men, and others must be procured.

"'Voted, That the committee above mentioned be a committee to hire what men are wanted to fill our quota aforesaid of the Continental army, as well as the State men.'

"This was the last draft they had to meet, and well it was, for they could not have procured many more soldiers, unless the women had volunteered.

"In all the votes of the town there appeared no hesitancy, but great cheerfulness in meeting all requirements as to the army and the care of the soldiers' families at home, in hope of final and lasting success in freedom.

"Not an intimation is given on the town records of any person being disloyal to the American cause, and, as far as can now be judged, those who took the oath of fidelity to this cause, beginning in 1777, include all the voters in the town at that time, and onward as they became of age or came into the town. That list is a noble showing for the town.

"Epaphras Sheldon, as colonel, entered complaint against Matthew Grant, Sr., in May, 1777, as an officer in the militia, that he neglected and hindered in the exercising of the militia, and he was summoned before the Assembly; but he took the oath the next September."

TAXES DURING THE REVOLUTION.

"They were very high, and, on account of the scarcity of money, extremely difficult to pay; and the actual suffering consequent was very considerable.

"The town tax in 1775 amounted to £27 1*s.* 7½*d.* for the west side, and £14 3*s.* 2*d.* for the east side, or, both, £41 4*s.* 9½*d.* In 1777 the two assessments made amounted to £181 12*s.* 10*d.*, or more than four times that of 1775. In 1779 they amounted to £308 4*s.* 3*d.* In 1780 the amount in figures was £3054 1*s.* 10*d.*, which they could not have paid if the figures represented hard money, but they meant Continental money, which was abundant, but worth very little. In 1781 the two assessments amounted to £506 5*s.* 3½*d.* in State money, which money was then becoming the reliable currency, gold and silver being almost unknown practically.

"In the collection of these taxes Daniel Grant became a celebrated and almost indispensable man, because of his success in obtaining the money, and also in making it as easy as possible for the people.

"There was a company of troopers, or soldiers on horseback, formed in this town in 1799 or '80, who took active part in the Revolutionary service, as the records show that they received pay for such service in the same proportion as the other militia companies. Two horse-pistols are still preserved, and are in the hands of Mr. George Allyn, that were a part of the equipment of this company. They were made by Medad Hills, and bear his inscription."

OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS.

"Gen. Epaphras Sheldon was lieutenant under Col. Oliver Wolcott, and afterwards was made major, colonel, and general after the war.

"Capt. Shubael Griswold was lieutenant in two campaigns in the French war, in 1758 and '59, and was captain in two campaigns in the Revolution.

"Capt. John Strong was captain of the militia, and was probably in two or three campaigns.

"Capt. Amos Wilson enlisted a company, went to the war, but was taken ill by sunstroke, and returned home.

"Capt. Epaphras Loomis, probably, was elected to Capt. Amos Wilson's position in the commencement of the war, and as captain of the Torrington company was in several campaigns with the militia, and was afterwards appointed captain of an enlisted company.

"Capt. Noah Wilson was the first captain of a military company in the town, and he resigned, and his brother Amos was elected in his place, and, as near as can be ascertained, Amos resigned soon after the commencement of the war, and was not in the service long.

"Noah Wilson may have gone in the call for the militia in 1775.

"David Lyman served in the army some time, and was honorably discharged to run a grist-mill in New Hartford for the supply of the Revolutionary troops; resided in Torringford a number of years before his death. He is said to have been known by the name of Gen. Lyman.

"Capt. Jabez Gillett was in the service.

"Dr. Isaac Day, of Torringford, was appointed surgeon's mate in the regiment of Col. Webb in 1777.

"Dr. Oliver Bancroft was in the army.

"Dr. Elkanah Hodges was probably in the army with the militia two or three terms when they were called out, as he received pay as others.

"Dr. Samuel Woodward was in the army, but probably with the militia.

"Capt. Seth Coe was a soldier in the Revolution, enlisting when but seventeen, and remaining through the war, and was probably made captain in the war.

"Levi Watson was at Danbury when it was burned by the British.

"Thomas Watson was in the State service, which he entered at the age of fifteen, and joined the Continental army when but nineteen.

"Shubael Griswold, Jr., was an officer in his father's company in the Revolution, and afterwards became general of the militia at East Hartford.

"Pardon Abbott, from Rhode Island, was a soldier in the Revolution; drew a pension many years; lived in the old house on the little hill below the nickel-furnace in Torrington Hollow.

"Asahel Strong was conductor of teams.

"The following persons are known to have been in the Revolution for various lengths of time, some in the militia, and some of them in the regular army:

"Oliver Coe, Oliver Coe, Jr., Dr. Oliver Bancroft, Nathaniel Barber, Jr., Bushniel Benedict, Daniel Benedict, Simeon Birge, Elijah Bissell, John Dear, Noah Drake, Sr., Andrew Ely, John Standcliff, John Ellsworth, Ebenezer Scoville, Ambrose Fyler, Benjamin Whiting, Benjamin Gaylord, Jesse Whiting, Stanley Griswold, Henry Whiting, Shubael Griswold, Jr., Eliphalet Hough, Joseph Hoskins, Sr., Samuel Kelsey, Elisha Kelsey, Nathaniel Kelsey, Samuel Kelsey, Jr., David Lyman, Epaphras Loomis, Jr., Wait Loomis, Elijah Loomis, Richard Leach, Ebenezer Leach, Roger Marshall, Barber Moore, Jared Palmer, Abel Roberts, Samuel Roberts, Clerk Roberts, William Williams, Stephen Rowley, John Williams."

THE WHIPPING-POST.

"This method of penalty was continued to a later day in Torrington than in some other towns, but was resorted to largely in cases of stealing. Mr. Israel Coe, as constable, whipped two men about the years 1817 and 1818,—one for stealing a piece of broadcloth at the woolen-mill, the other for stealing a silver spoon at Capt. Samuel Bradley's.

"'At a justice court holden at Torrington, in the county of Litchfield, on the 15th day of January, 1830, in presence of R. C. Abernethy, justice of the peace for said county holding the same, Nelson Fyler, of said Torrington, was brought before said court by virtue of a warrant issued by the said R. C. Abernethy, . . . on complaint of Luther Cook, grand juror of said Torrington, charging the said Nelson Fyler that on the 14th day of January, 1830, at Torrington aforesaid, did feloniously take, steal, and carry away one certain gold finger-ring, with a stone set therein, of the value of five dollars, the proper estate of Ransom Hine, of said Torrington, against the peace and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and the said Nelson Fyler, being put to plead, for plea says he is not guilty in manner and form as in such complaint is alleged. And this court having heard the evidence, as well on the part of the State as of the said Nelson Fyler, find that the said Nelson Fyler is guilty in manner and in form as in said complaint is alleged, and also find that the said ring was, when stolen, of the value of two dollars fifty cents. It is therefore considered and adjudged that the said Nelson Fyler pay a fine of five dollars to the treasurer of the town of Torrington, together with the costs of the prosecution, taxed at nine dollars and thirty cents, and also pay to the said Ransom Hine seven dollars and fifty cents, being treble the value of said ring stolen, as aforesaid; and the said Nelson Fyler, neglecting and refusing to pay said fine and costs, shall be punished by whipping four stripes on his naked body and pay the costs of prosecution, and stand committed till this judgment be complied with.

"'RUSSELL C. ABERNETHY, Justice of the Peace.'

"The warrant for execution was granted, and delivered to William Leach, constable, the same day; but tradition says the prisoner was whipped, but on his way to prison escaped from the constable.

"This is said to have been the last case of whipping in the town."

A PROSECUTION FOR PROFANITY.

"'To Ebenezer Norton, Esq., his majesty's justice of the peace for Litchfield County, in Connecticut:

"'Benjamin Whiting, grand juror for said county of Litchfield for the time being, and other informing officers for said town and county, on their oath, in the name and behalf of our sovereign lord the now king, complaint and information make against Matthew Grant, of Torrington, in said county, for breach of law, for that he, the said Matthew, being at the dwelling-house of Epaphras Sheldon, Esq., and at Mr. Ebenezer Coe's, in Torrington, on or about the 21st day of January last past, and several of his majesty's subjects being present, the said Matthew did at the aforesaid place, in a very tumultuous and angry way and manner, did with a loud voice swear by God vainly, rashly, and in a passion and profanely, and used those vain words following: viz., "The south end of Torrington is as bad as hell, and that the Wilsons would all go to hell, and that they would go to the devil," and many other rash and profane words did then and there express in a very wicked way and manner, all which the complainers say was contrary to the peace of our sovereign lord the king and the law of this colony, and pray that the said Matthew Grant may be proceeded with as the law directs, made and provided in such cases.

"'Dated at Torrington this 5th day of March, 1773.

"'Joseph Allen,
"'Joseph Tanter,
"'Benjamin Beach, } Evidence for the king.

"'Benj. Whiting,
"'Noah Wilson,
"'Isaac Goodwin, } Grand Jury.

"'Ephraim Bancroft,
"'Jabez Gillett, } Constables of Torrington.'

"On the back of this paper is written the order for Mr. Grant's arrest, dated Sept. 23, 1773, or six months after the complaint was made, by which time the hot excitement had probably cooled down a little."

SLAVERY.

In January, 1837, a number of the citizens of this county met in Wolcottville for the purpose of organizing a county anti-slavery society; but when they "began to look around for a place for the meeting of the convention," says the Rev. Mr. Orcutt, "they found every church and public and private hall closed against them, and heard whisperings of threatenings against any who might have the noble daring to encounter the pro-slavery element of the village and of the town. At this juncture a barn was offered for the use of the convention, and it was promptly accepted, and fitted for the occasion. It was not the first time that strangers found the shelter in a barn, 'because there was no room in the inn.' In that barn the friends of impartial liberty and justice gathered in goodly numbers, some of them the most reliable and respectable citizens of Litchfield County. The barn was filled,—the floor, scaffolds, hay-mow, and stables. It was an intense cold day in January, and there was much suffering from the severity of the weather. The convention was called to order, and Roger S. Mills, of New Hartford, appointed chairman. The Rev. Daniel Coe, of Winsted, offered prayer. After appointing a committee to nominate permanent officers, the convention was addressed by the Rev. Nathaniel Colver, agent of the American society, and others. The county society was then organized, and the following officers appointed: President, Roger S. Mills; Vice-Presidents, Erastus Lyman, of Goshen, Gen. Daniel B. Brinsmade, of Washington, Gen. Uriel Tuttle, of Torringford, and Jonathan Coe, of Winsted; Secretary, Rev. R. M. Chipman, of Harwinton; Treasurer, Dr. E. D. Hudson, of Torringford. While thus peacefully engaged, though suffering with the cold, and counseling together for the relief of the oppressed and the elevation of humanity, a furious mob was collecting in the village, and elevating their courage for their deeds of violence by the intoxicating cup. A class of men from the adjoining town, as well as from Torrington, had gathered for the very purpose of disturbing this meeting, if it should attempt to exercise the liberties of religious and civil citizens. This mob, after parading the streets, making hideous and threatening noises, gathered around the barn, and by their deafening shouts, the blowing of horns, and the ringing the alarm of fire by the bell of the Congregational church, and the display of brute force, broke up the meeting, which hastily took an adjournment. Then the old Puritan spirit was manifested by the Torringford people, who offered the use of their meeting-house to the convention, and it repaired to that place, and continued the session two days. The opposition in Torringford, though violent, was undemonstrative, for lack of the mob element and rum, and partially from the fact that the fury of the mob had run its race in Wolcottville. When the convention left the barn, the shouts, thumping of pans and kettles, and the furious ringing of the church-bell characterized pandemonium broken loose. When the people were leaving Wolcottville in their sleighs, the entire village seemed to be a bedlam. That good man, Deacon Ebenezer Rood, was set upon in his sleigh, to overturn him and frighten his horses. This excited his righteous indignation, and in a voice of defiance he shouted to them, 'Rattle your pans, hoot and toot, ring your bells, you pesky fools, if it does you any good;' then put his horses on a run and cleared himself from the gang.

"When the meeting assembled in Torringford it was inspired with new life, energy, and courage. The beacon-fires of liberty and freedom blazed much higher than they would but for the violence manifested in the village. Deacon Rood's spirit of defiance to the mob took possession of the whole company, and every man and woman enlisted in the cause gloried in the name of Abolitionist, and felt anointed for the work of preaching 'deliverance to the captives in chains.' Such was the beginning of anti-slavery agitation and times in the town where John Brown—'Ossawattomie Brown'—was born.

"This society, moved now as well by the sense that despotism had come to their own doors and threatened the very sacredness of church and homes as by the thought of freedom for the slave, proceeded to hold monthly meetings throughout the county. These meetings were held in barns and sheds, in groves and houses, and anywhere that the people would assemble for such a purpose. It raised funds by systematic method, distributed tracts, books, and papers. The State Charter Oak Society was organized in 1838, and employed lecturing agents, who besides lecturing solicited subscribers to the anti-slavery papers and scattered anti-slavery literature.

"They were opposed everywhere, and yet moved on in their work as though everybody knew they were right. They were called all sorts of opprobrious names; were proscribed and derided as 'nigger friends,' disturbers of Israel.' Some were unceremoniously excommunicated from the churches for no crime but speaking against slavery,—the very thing that many of the fathers had done for a hundred years without objection having been made. All argument with anti-slavery men started with the Bible, where the Quakers started nearly one hundred years before, and this brought the question into all the churches as well as committees. Some withdrew from the churches because they deemed it sinful to hold fellowship with those who voted to uphold a system acknowledged to be guilty of more crime than any other system in the land.

"The opposition had but one argument, namely, it offended the South; slavery was for their interest. This argument had been gradually obtaining adherents from the time the Constitution of the United States was adopted. Before that some of the Southern States were as much anti-slavery as any in the North. When the South changed the spirit of proscription began to rise in the North, hence in the first meeting-house in Torrington there was no slave pew nor nigger pew, but in the second one there were two. These pews were located in the gallery over the stairs, boarded up so high that when the colored people sat in them they could see no part of the congregation, and could be seen by no one in the assembly. Jacob Prince, after being made a freeman by his master, Abijah Holbrook, joined the church in Goshen, and then, being placed in such a seat, and treated in other ways by the same spirit, refused to go to church, because, as he said, he was not treated as a brother, and thereafter held prayer-meetings in his own house on the Sabbath, whereupon the Goshen Church proceeded to and did excommunicate him for neglect of duty. This same Jacob is said to have been as fine a looking man, head and features, as nearly any one in the town, except the color of his skin.

"Two such pews were in the old church in Torringford, but the Rev. Samuel J. Mills (whether as a rebuke to the spirit of caste or not is not known) always seated Henry Obookiah, Thomas Hooppo, and other tawny brethren of the Sandwich Islands, when they visited him from the Cornwall mission-school, in his own pew, in the front of the congregation, quite to the dissatisfaction of some even of that congregation."

ABIJAH HOLBROOK'S LETTER OF EMANCIPATION.

"Know all men by these presents, that I, Abijah Holbrook, of Torrington, in the county of Litchfield and State of Connecticut, being influenced by motives of humanity and benevolence, believing that all mankind by nature are entitled to equal liberty and freedom; and whereas I, the said Holbrook, agreeable to the laws and customs of this State, and the owner and possessor of two certain negroes which are of that class that are called slaves for life, viz., Jacob Prince, a male negro, and Ginne, a female, wife of said Jacob; and whereas the said negroes to this time have served me with faithfulness and fidelity, and they being now in the prime and vigor of life, and appear to be well qualified as to understanding and economy to maintain and support themselves by their own industry, and they manifesting a great desire to be delivered from slavery and bondage,

"I therefore, the said Abijah Holbrook, do by these presents freely and absolutely emancipate the said Jacob and Ginne, and they are hereby discharged from all authority, title, claim, control, and demand that I, the said Holbrook, now have or ever had in or unto the persons or services of them, the said Jacob and Ginne, and they, from and after the date hereof, shall be entitled to their liberty and freedom, and to transact business for themselves in their own names and for their own benefit and use.

"To witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 18th day of August, A.D. 1798.

"ABIJAH HOLBROOK."

JOHN BROWN.

John Brown, known to history as "Ossawattomie Brown," was born in this town,—in the house an engraving of which is herewith shown,—May 9, 1800.

HOUSE WHERE JOHN BROWN WAS BORN.

The history of this in some respects remarkable man is so well known that no extended notice is deemed necessary in this connection. Sufficeth it to say that he carried his Quixotic attempt to liberate the serfs of American bondage into the heart of slavedom, and met his tragic fate by hanging at Charleston, Va., Dec. 2, 1859.

TORRINGTON (Continued).

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

WOLCOTTVILLE.*

"THE first business transaction that led the way of all others in building Wolcottville as a village was the purchasing by Amos Wilson of the proprietors of the town the mill-privileges on Waterbury River, west branch, in March, 1751,—the site known since as that of Wilson's mill. He was then twenty-five years of age; had been in the town less than a year; was the owner of fifty acres of land given him by his father; and by this transaction started himself in business for life. His brother Noah had been in the town seven or eight years, and was the owner, at this time, of two or three hundred acres of land. The next step of progress was the formation of the stock company, and the building of the mill soon after, probably the same year. The company bought at different times various portions of the pine timber-land, and Noah and Amos Wilson bought for their individual possession strip after strip, as the owners were willing to sell, until a considerable part of the pine-timber was under their control. In October, 1752, Amos Wilson married Zerviah Grant, daughter of William Grant, one of the proprietors of the mill,—a transaction with a foresight to business as well as domestic felicity,—and made his home west of the mill, near the present residence of Mr. Burton Patterson.

* Name changed to Torrington in 1881.

"The next enterprise of Amos Wilson was a store and a shoe-shop. His account-book, still preserved, reveals the extent of this department of usefulness, as well as the work done at the mill. The earliest date in this book is 1759, and the book shows that there had been another previous to this, kept by Amos Wilson.

"It was this saw-mill that was to clear the pine-timber from the swamp and open the way for a beautiful village. This timber was valuable. Mast Swamp has been represented as a worthless piece of territory, so much so that the committee, in laying out the town, could scarcely devise a plan to dispose of it, whereas it was reserved during all the other divisions, for the reason that it was of such value that every proprietor demanded his share in proportion to the amount of his list. For twenty years the proprietors, by various committees, protected the pine-timber, and ordered prosecutions in court, even at large expense, upon any person who should cut it, and for what reason? Because it was so worthless? Any of the old proprietors would have laughed at the idea. They had houses and barns to build; and they knew that pine-lumber was far preferable and more durable than hemlock for such purposes, and to suppose to the contrary is a disparagement of the keen-sighted calculations of the fathers of Torrington. Many of the farmers cut this timber as they needed it; hired the use of Wilson's mill to saw it, and worked at the mill night and day to that end, and then used it at their homes; and after this process had been going on fifty years and more, they sold their lots with what remained on them, some of them, as the deeds show, for sixty dollars and over per acre. Between 1790 and 1800, Roger Wilson and Roswell Wilson bought, in company and separately, between twenty and thirty of these lots, paying the above prices for a number of them.

"A highway through the swamp was laid at the time of the first division, in 1734, half a mile north of and parallel with the Litchfield line, and crossed the West Branch some distance above Wilson's mill, passing eastward a little north of the present Congregational parsonage, and was a traveled road very early. It was, indeed, the only road through the swamp for twenty or more years. In 1752 a highway was laid through the swamp, near the middle, from north to south, twenty feet wide, which is now Main Street. In the same year another one was laid from the mill-place 'east, twenty feet wide, until it comes into the other road.' That is now Water Street. The other highway, known now as South Main Street, was made at a later date. The first road leading to Waterbury began at the west end of the bridge above Wilson's mill, and passed down on the south side of the river, crossing the brook below the park, and was called the New Haven road. The old Litchfield road came down the ravine into the New Haven road near this brook. On the east side of the river a highway was laid in 1752, from the Litchfield line running north as far as the pine-timber division of land. This road was extended south into Litchfield, and became a traveled road quite early, and several dwellings were standing on it before 1800.

"On the New Haven road there were settlers long before any houses were built in Wolcottville. Paul Peck had his hermit's house near this road some time before 1776. Samuel Brooker owned his hundred acres of land in this vicinity, and built his house near the site of Mr. Charles F. Church's present dwelling, about 1785. Below this dwelling resided a Mr. Elwell and Solomon Morse. Capt. Perkins lived in a house on the site of Mr. Frederick Taylor's present homestead. On the Litchfield road, some distance west from the New Haven road, were the homes of Thomas Coe, Asahel Wilcox, Chester Brooker, and others. Some of the land along this New Haven road and near the river has been under cultivation longer than any in the original town of Torrington. It was in this vicinity or up the Litchfield road that Josiah Grant resided in 1734, when he hired four or five acres of land then 'broken up on Waterbury River,' within the territory of Torrington. A carding and cloth-dressing mill was built opposite Wilson's saw-mill, on the river, at an early period. Joseph Blake dressed cloth at this mill many years, and is said to have come to the town for this purpose. Amos Wilson's account with Mr. Blake begins in 1769, and therefore it is probable that the mill was built before that time. This mill was gone in 1794. It is likely that when it began to decay, Joseph Taylor built the one that stood near the rock on the south side of the river, some fifty rods below Wilson's mill, and that Joseph Blake continued to work for Mr. Taylor at this second carding-mill, which became a flax-mill, then a turning-mill, and was finally consumed by fire.

"Wilson's new grist-mill was built in 1794, below and adjoining the saw-mill, where now the Messrs. Hotchkiss' planing-mill stands; and the old saw-mill continued some years until rebuilt.

"Several dwellings were built very early on the road east of Waterbury River, opposite the present Valley Park, and in one of these John Brooker and his wife Jerusha began housekeeping after their marriage in 1783. They afterwards lived a number of years in the house said to have been built by Ambrose Potter, a little east of the foundry, now owned by Turner, Seymour & Company. Mr. John Brooker built a house where Mr. L. W. Coe's dwelling now stands in 1803, which was the first frame raised in Wolcottville. Benoni Leach built a house the same summer opposite Mr. Brooker's, east side of the Waterbury road, there being a strife as to which house should be raised first. Mr. Brooker won the day by about a week.

"The night after Mr. Brooker's house was raised, a large company of men engaged in raising a high pole ornamented with rams' horns and the like, and named the place 'Orleans Village.' This is the name used in most of the deeds for ten or fifteen years afterwards. After Mr. Brooker finished his house, he made it his home for a few years only, keeping it as a tavern.

"Daniel Potter, of Johnstown, N. Y., bought in 1804, of Mr. Brooker and his wife, land where the Coe furniture-store now stands, and built a store building on it and a dwelling, which buildings were occupied by his brother, Ambrose Potter. When this dwelling was raised one of the sides fell, killing one man and hurting a number of others, which fact was indelibly fixed upon the mind of a young girl, and hence remembered to the present day. Mr. Potter sold this property to Ephraim Sanford, of Newtown, Conn., who took possession and went on with the store, and also bought the tavern, and about a year after Mr. Sanford was on his way to New Haven with a load of cheese, when the horses ran away and he was killed. His executors sold the store to Russell Bull and Frederick Robbins, of Wethersfield, in 1808. Mr. Bull, soon after, bought Mr. Robbins' half, and continued the store a number of years. Ambrose Potter built the tavern on the site of the American House for his brother Daniel, and afterwards owned and occupied it several years as a tavern. Between 1804 and 1812 a number of dwellings were erected in the village, and in 1814 the school-house, which stood on the east side of Main Street, where the present Register printing-office stands.

"When John Brooker was making plans to build his house, which became a public-house, Joseph Taylor was arranging to build a tavern where the Allen house now stands. His sudden decease in 1802 delayed the enterprise for a time, but about 1819, Mrs. Taylor and her son, Uri Taylor, completed the house, and thereafter kept it as a public-house for a number of years. In the winter of 1813, Joseph Allyn, Jr., bought the water-power and privileges from Wilson's mill to the flax-mill of the following persons for two hundred and eighty dollars: Roswell Wilson, Benjamin Phelps, Norman Wilson, Lemuel North, Samuel Beach and his wife, Keziah Beach, Joseph Allyn, Jonah Allyn, Roger Wilson, and Guy Wolcott. He sold it in the spring for the same price to Frederick Wolcott, of Litchfield, and Guy Wolcott, of Torrington; deed dated May 3, 1813. The Wolcotts purchased another plot, below the first, at the same time; and upon this they erected that year the woolen-mill. They purchased several other pieces of land, giving the owners until the next September to remove the timber. On the day of the raising of the woolen-mill, the Rev. Alexander Gillett being present, as well as a large number of the people of the town, proposed that the name of the place be changed; in response to which a call was made: 'What shall we call it? Name it.' He answered, 'Wolcottville,' and to this all agreed, and Wolcottville it is.

"In 1813, Nathan Gillett, who married a daughter of Deacon Guy Wolcott, was residing in the house north of the bridge, on the west side of Main Street. This house he built about 1808 or 1809, and occupied it until 1817, when he removed West.

"There were two or three houses built on the north side of the river between 1806 and 1810. At the northwest part of the village there were probably but two or three dwellings before 1800 within the territory now regarded as Wolcottville.

"In the Gazetteer of the States of Connecticut and Rhode Island, printed in 1819, we have the following description of this village:

"'Wolcottville, a village of eighteen houses, has been built principally since 1802, and is an active, flourishing place. Its growth has been chiefly owing to the establishment of an extensive woolen-factory, which now is owned principally by His Excellency Oliver Wolcott. It is one of the largest establishments of the kind in the State, employing about forty workmen, and manufacturing from twenty-five to thirty-five yards of broadcloth daily, of an average value of six dollars per yard. The cloths made have a substantial texture, and are manufactured in a style scarcely inferior to the highest finished English cloths.'

"Barber's 'History of Connecticut,' published in 1836, says,—

"'Wolcottville, the principal village in the town of Torrington, is situated in a valley near the southern boundary of the town, at the junction of the two branches of the Waterbury or Naugatuck River, twenty-six miles from Hartford, forty from New Haven, and seventeen from the New Haven and Northampton Canal at Avon. The village consists of about forty dwelling-houses, a handsome Congregational church, a three-story brick building used as a house of worship by various denominations, and also as an academy, four mercantile stores, two taverns, a post-office, and an extensive woolen-factory. The Congregational church stands at the northern extremity of the village, but, owing to the limited extent of the engraving, it could not be introduced. The brick building used for a house of worship is on the left, over which is seen the Litchfield turnpike, passing over the heights westward. The woolen-factory is the large building with a spire. This factory went into operation in 1813. One of the principal owners was the late Oliver Wolcott, Esq., formerly Governor of the State; the village owes its rise principally to this establishment. A short distance westward of the factory an establishment for the manufacture of brass is now erecting: it is believed to be the only one of the kind at present in the United States.'

"Wolcottville now contains thirty stores of all varieties, two hotels, four churches, a town-hall, a town clerk's office, a graded school building, the granite block, containing Wadam's Hall, a large hall for public assemblies, one bank, two daguerreian galleries, a post-office, one printing-office, issuing a weekly paper, and eight copartnership manufacturing companies, employing a capital of seven hundred thousand dollars.

"Its professional men are four settled pastors, five practicing physicians, and two lawyers. The graded school has a gentleman as principal, and six lady teachers."

SENECA LODGE, F. AND A. M.

This lodge was chartered June 13, 1817, with the following members: Chauncey Humphrey, Samuel and Leonard Hurlbut, Drake Mills, Henry Palmer, Aaron Smith, Amos Bradley, Hugh Kearney, William Crum, Lemuel Hurlbut, Truman S. Wetmore, John McAlpin, Daniel Phelps, Jr., William Bunnel, Stephen Fyler, Joseph D. Humphrey, Charles Andrus, John Wetmore (2d), Elisha Hinsdale, Raphael Marshall, Russell C. Abernethy, Asahel Smith, Edward Taylor, Samuel Bradley, Norman Wilson, Israel Coe, Christopher Pierce, James Green, Miles Beach, George Lyman, Norman Fowler, Alanson H. Kimberly, Joseph R. Judson, Phineas Reed, Ichabod Loomis. The lodge met at the dwelling of Stephen Fyler, at Newfield, until 1823, since which time it has been located at Wolcottville. There was no communication of the lodge from June, 1833, to December, 1836, after which they renewed and continued them until 1840, and then surrendered the charter to the Grand Lodge. In 1860, upon the petition of the following persons, the charter was returned: Samuel Burr, Russell C. Abernethy, Rev. J. F. Covell, Allen G. Brady, Henry J. Allen, Sr., William H. Moore, George B. Fish, Uri Taylor, James Palmer, Isaac C. Palmer, Edward Pierpont, James Ashborn.

The first officers were Truman S. Wetmore, W. M.; Russell C. Abernethy, S. W.; John McAlpin, J. W.; Aaron Smith, Treas.; Daniel Phelps, Sr., Sec.; Carlton Humphrey, S. D.; Alanson Kimberly, J. D.; Ichabod Loomis, Tyler.

The present officers are J. W. Brothwell, W. M.; Charles Alldis, S. W.; James Bell, J. W.; James Alldis, Treas.; O. R. Luther, Sec.; John D. Bishop, S. D.; Herman W. Huke, J. D.; Albert L. Tuttle, Tyler.

THE WOLCOTTVILLE SAVINGS BANK

was organized in 1868, with Francis N. Holley, President; Joseph F. Calhoun, Vice-President; and Frank L. Hungerford, Secretary and Treasurer. The present officers are as follows: Joseph F. Calhoun, President; Isaac W. Brooks, Treasurer; Joseph F. Calhoun, Ransom Holley, Bradley R. Agard, Lyman W. Coe, Elisha Turner, and Isaac W. Brooks, Directors.

BROOKS BROTHERS' BANKING-HOUSE.

This is a bank of discount and deposit, established by John W. and Isaac W. Brooks in 1872.

PHYSICIANS.

The following physicians have practiced in this town:* Erastus Bancroft, William Bostwick, Stephen E. Calkins, Adelbert M. Calkins, Jarvis Case, Isaac Day, Penfield Goodsell, Edward M. Hatch, Thatcher Swift Hanchett, Elkanah Hodges, Erasmus D. Hudson, Geo. O. Jarvis, Elijah Lyman, Jeremiah W. Phelps, Bela St. John, Joel Soper, Samuel Woodward, Elijah Woodward, L. H. Wood, Gideon H. Welch, Edward A. Kunkle, and —— Cole. The oldest settled physician is Dr. T. S. Hanchett, who was born in Canaan, Conn., Nov. 8, 1838. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Homer Darling, of East Douglass, Mass. He subsequently attended at the Medical Department of Harvard, and after remaining there one year entered the United States navy as hospital steward on the "Wamsutta." After leaving the service he returned to Harvard, later spent one year with Dr. A. W. Bennett, of Uxbridge, Mass., and in 1864 graduated from Bellevue Hospital, New York. He was an assistant of Dr. Wm. Welch, of Norfolk, one year, and in 1865 settled in Wolcottville, where he has since resided.

TORRINGFORD.

"Shubael Griswold's tavern was probably the first institution of a public character in Torringford. It is possible that it was something more than a tavern, for he may have kept articles of merchandise answering to a store, such as teas, indigo, sugar, and farm productions, as did Amos Wilson, John Whiting, and Noah North, on the west side of the town. Not long after Mr. Griswold's tavern became established, Benjamin Bissell opened a house of entertainment a little farther north, on Torringford Street, east side of the road, which was in full operation in 1776, for it is stated that during the Revolution the women of the eastern part of the town, whose husbands and sons were in the army, assembled at this tavern at certain times to obtain information from or concerning the soldiers and the army. Afterwards David Soper kept a tavern near the First meeting-house, which he continued a number of years. Another tavern was kept near the Greenwoods.

"William Battell, of Woodbury, bought ten acres of land, adjoining Rev. Samuel J. Mills' house on the south, on the 9th of October, 1783, giving for it three hundred and five pounds. On this land he erected a store building, and in it kept a store for many years. Mr. Battell was about thirty-five years of age when he settled in Torringford, and entered upon his mercantile business with energy and good judgment, as is indicated by the location he chose for himself. There was but one store in the town at the time, that being Dr. Hodges', on the west side, and Torringford was fast becoming a populous region by immigration and the growing up of the young people of the families of the first settlers. Dr. Samuel Woodward had recently established his home here as a practicing physician, and the place needed just such a store as Mr. Battell opened to the public; and although he was under the necessity of transporting his merchandise to Hartford and New Haven at first with ox-carts, yet he succeeded well, and his store became the place of a large amount of business transactions. He bought and shipped all kinds of farm produce,—grains, butter, cheese, pork, beef, eggs, and flax,—and brought in return all the articles usually sold at country stores in those days,—dry-goods, including silks and satins, imported broadcloths of costly style, groceries, hardware, drugs, shoes, and leather. All the various kinds of mercantile goods that at the present day are found by visiting a dozen stores were then crowded into one and called a country store. Such a store was not complete without a choice variety of wines, brandies, and liquors of all kinds, imported and of home manufacture; and this was not all: the people drank liquors by the gallon and barrel, and some of them made themselves drunk, and wallowed in the mire like beasts, as well as at the present day. The familiar pretense that persons did not become intoxicated and stagger in the streets, swear and fight and run horses and carouse, just like drunken men, is too shallow to be repeated by intelligent people. It may go for par a thousand years hence, but not quite yet. It was not a peculiarity of one store nor of one community to sell and use intoxicating drinks, but was the practice of a great portion of both stores and communities throughout the United States before and many years after the year 1800. Mr. Battell had also a manufactory of potash, which was an article of extensive sale in those days.

"He sold his store and the ten acres of land and the potash-works to his sons William and Joseph; the latter being in Norfolk in 1808, and probably retired from business life. His son William continued the store until about 1830.

"Nathaniel Smith, of Milford, and later of Bethlehem, came to Torringford a young man, and was clerk in the store of William Battell three years, when he engaged in the mercantile business for himself in a store at Griswold's Corners, where he continued until his death, in 1854, a period of forty-six years. He married Harriet, the daughter of Daniel Winchell, and built and resided in the brick house on the west side of the street at that place. He was appointed postmaster in 1812, and held the office without interruption forty-two years, a case probably without a parallel in this country, and was a very upright and careful business man, and highly esteemed among business men generally, his credit in New York and elsewhere being of the highest kind, and for a number of years he did a large business; but Wolcottville began to be the market for farmers' produce, and hence also of mercantile trade, and especially after the railroad was established. Therefore Torringford, as to commercial life, must decline, while the valleys surrounding it should increase. Mr. Smith's son, Charles B. Smith, came to Wolcottville as a merchant, and the business at the old store was not great during the last few years that it was continued.

"Quite an extensive tannery and shoe-shop had been conducted in the early time of Torringford, on the corner where Nathaniel Smith built his brick house, and here also he set up, in the rear of his dwelling, a leach for the making of potash.

"The brick building a short distance south of the church was used some years, beginning about 1860, by Darius Wilson, as a wagon- and blacksmith-shop. He removed to Wolcottville, and then West. Another wagon-shop stood half a mile east, and was a busy place a number of years, several men being regularly employed in making wagons, some of which were for the Southern market. This shop was started about 1840."

HOLBROOK'S MILLS.

"Abijah Holbrook came from Bellingham, Mass., to Goshen, and in July, 1787, bought, in company with Fisk Beach, land of Daniel Mills, of Goshen, at the place on Naugatuck River afterwards known as Holbrook's mills, and later as Appley's mills. When Mr. Holbrook and Beach made the purchase there was a forge or iron-works on the land, an attempt having been made to obtain iron from the ore found in this region, but the quantity obtained was not sufficient to encourage this kind of enterprise. Mr. Holbrook and Beach built a grist-mill and saw-mill, and Mr. Holbrook erected the building that is now falling to the ground a little south of the mill. Its ruins show that it was once more than an ordinary house. Mr. Holbrook was a man of wealth, and a 'polished gentleman, far in advance of his generation in that particular.' Elijah Pond, being brother-in-law to Mr. Holbrook, removed from Grafton, Mass., about 1790, and engaged in the mill and other enterprises with his brother-in-law, and it is thought they had a purpose or intent to work the foundry, in connection with the iron mine on Walnut Mountain. Sylvanus Holbrook, a nephew of Abijah, came from Massachusetts very early in the present century, and resided some years in the vicinity of his uncle, and removed to Goshen, where he died. He did a mercantile business in Baltimore, which required his absence from home some months of each year.

"About the year 1800, Capt. Elisha Hinsdale came from Canaan to this place and engaged in the manufacture of scythes and axes and general blacksmithing. Here were made in large quantities for those days the celebrated 'clover-leaf' scythe and axes, and were carried in wagons to water transportations. Soon after, or about the time the Hinsdales came to this place, Josiah Appley became a resident, and finally the owner of much of the property of the place. He built a grist-mill a little north of Holbrook's, on the Hall Meadow brook.

"Abijah Holbrook died in 1812, and in 1814 his widow, Mary, sold the homestead, grist-mill, and saw-mill to Erastus Lyman and Thearon Beach, of Goshen, for two thousand one hundred and fifty dollars, and removed from the place to Western New York. In 1816, Elisha Hinsdale sold his lands to his brother, Deacon Abel, and removed West, and from that day all business interests in that locality have taken the down-hill course until only one old mill building is left, and that looks as if ready to tumble down any day. There are two dwellings that are occupied, which are the only things that show signs of life except the trees, which grow with a thrift almost surprising to Connecticut people. The little graveyard, filled with graves, stands on the bank of the river, and is very beautiful, because of its quietness, in its almost unbroken solitude, where the tumult of the great city will never disturb the ashes that rest there, while the wild birds of the woods will sing their marvelous songs above the dust of some of the noble sons and daughters of the honored pilgrims."

HART'S HOLLOW.

"About a mile above Holbrook's mills, at a place called Hart's Hollow, in the edge of the town of Goshen, quite a business was conducted in making clocks about 1820; a number of buildings were erected, and for a time the place assumed considerable importance, and as the natural outlet of the place was through Torrington, the place seemed a part of Torrington, and the inhabitants usually attended Torrington church.

TORRINGTON HOLLOW.

"This locality was originally known as Poverty Hollow, subsequently Cotton Hollow, and finally Torrington Hollow.

"In February, 1813, Elijah B. Loomis, of New York, and Elisha Loomis and Abner M. Warriner, of Torrington, entered into partnership, and built a mill or factory for the purpose of manufacturing cotton, woolen, and other goods at this place. The factory was located near the bridge on Goshen turnpike, and was built in 1813. The next January other persons entered the partnership, under the name of the Torrington Manufacturing Company, and the firm consisted of Elisha Loomis, Elijah B. Loomis, Abner M. Warriner, John W. Walker, Christopher Pierce, James Green, and William Dexter, the stock being eight thousand dollars.

"In the next September it was mortgaged to David Wadhams and David Thomas, of Goshen, to procure capital to insure success in the making of goods. This business enterprise, like the first woolen-mill at Wolcottville, does not appear to have had any great success in making money, for it struggled along some years under disadvantages, yet with much apparent effort, but did not prosper. The cotton was spun in the mill, then sent abroad among the farmers to be woven, and although it brought new work to many homes, it is doubtful if every one who undertook to weave made a success of it, and with all the difficulties attending the work, there would have been no success but for the high price of the cloth, which sold from thirty to forty cents per yard.

"A store was also put up in connection with the factory, or about the same time, and was conducted by Mr. Green.

"In 1827 the cotton-factory was sold for debt, and changed hands several times until it came into the hands of Erastus Hodges, and as he had found success in nearly every enterprise he had undertaken, he pushed forward this with money and much energy, and he also interested himself largely in the making of clocks about the same time. Norris North engaged in the clock business about 1820, and Mr. Hodges became interested with him, if he was not a partner. The clocks were made at first in Harvey Palmer's old carding-machine, then in a part of Ormel Leach's grist-mill, and after that in a building called the clock-factory. Mr. Hodges also took the store of James Green, placing his sons in it and in the mill, to give them a start in business life. The store was removed to Wolcottville previous to 1834, and continued some time by these sons, with the aid of their father.

"In 1835 the brass-foundry was started by Mr. Hodges and others, and the buildings were located below the bridge on the east bank, where they are now in a falling condition. This business was started with the purpose of making brass kettles by the battery or hammering process; the preparations for the work were quite ample, and an agent was sent to Europe to procure men and machinery, and considerable quantity of machinery was shipped from Europe, but the vessel was wrecked and all was lost. Calamity and disaster attended nearly every effort in this undertaking, and after a little time the brass business at this place was purchased by Israel Coe, then of Wolcottville, engaged in the same enterprise.

"After some years these buildings were fitted for smelting ore, in hope of obtaining nickel; but the metal was not found to exist in sufficient quantities, or the process of separation was too costly to make it profitable to continue the work.

"After the business of making clocks was discontinued, a lock-factory was established, in which George D. Wadhams, Mr. Goodwin, and Edmund Wooding were interested and engaged. When the lock business was closed, the building was used for making skates until the skate company removed.

"In 1869, Chester L. Smith, from Litchfield, purchased this property, which the skate company had vacated, and commenced the manufacture of toys. After one year he began the making of sleds for children, which business he continued with success until his decease, in August, 1876. Since then his sons,

WRIGHTVILLE.

"Wrightville, a cluster of a dozen houses, was the outgrowth of the scythe-factory, organized in 1852 as a stock company, mostly of farmers, for the purpose of manufacturing scythes and hoes, with a certified stock of six thousand dollars, the stockholders being Uri L. Whiting, Robert Wright, Albro W. Cowles, Rodney Brace, George W. Loomis, Daniel A. Grant, William A. Grant, Augustus Grant, Daniel Brown, Charles Hotchkiss, Frederick A. Griswold, Phineas North, Rodney Pierce. The officers were Phineas North president, with Rodney Brace, Albro W. Cowles, Charles Hotchkiss directors. A commodious building was erected of stone, and machinery for conducting the work in an advantageous manner was placed in the building. The company subsequently failed."

BURRVILLE.

This hamlet is located in the northeastern part of the town, and its history is thus given in Orcutt's "History of Torrington":

"Elias Gilbert, of New Haven, bought land at this place of David Soper in 1812, on the west side of the river. This he sold the next year to Isaac Gilbert, with 'bark-house and tan-vats' on it. In 1816, Newton Rossiter bought land of David Soper, on the east side of the river, and in 1817 he bought of Chester Loomis a hammer-shop, which had been owned by Isaac Gilbert, and was probably built by him. In 1818, Mr. Rossiter bought Isaac Gilbert's tannery, and engaged in the tanning and shoe business extensively, and hence the name Rossiterville, by which the place was known a number of years.

"In about 1828 or 1829, Mr. Rossiter, having exchanged with the State of Connecticut his property at this place for 'Western lands,' removed West. The old tannery is now owned and used by Mr. J. M. Burr as a grist-mill and shingle-mill.

"Bricks were made at first on Torringford Street, near the old Burr tavern, and afterwards two or three kilns were established between that place and the Hollow, one of which, near Burrville, is still continued by Mr. John M. Burr. The Haydens, also on Torringford Street, made large quantities of bricks.

"While the tannery was in successful progress, Mr. Milo Burr entered upon the work of reducing the pine-timber then covering the valley at this place to lumber. For this end he had three saw-mills in full operation a number of years, and the larger part of his success in life resulted from this lumber trade. Other enterprises he pursued with much energy, and for the hope of public good, the enlarging of the place; but most of these efforts were to his own disadvantage, while the pine-timber brought some compensation of comfort.

"In 1851 he built a dam on the mountain west of the village, and constructed what is well known as Burr's reservoir, a most beautiful sheet of water, in the woods among the rocky hills. The place and scenery are as wild and lonely as any civilized creature could wish, except as to extent. Once the dam gave way, and the rushing waters came down the mountain gorge with such a noise as to give warning, and no lives were lost except one little child. The water in the reservoir is as clean and clear as is ever secured for family use, and the people of Burrville can have water with a hundred feet pressure in their houses at very little cost. On the brook leading from the reservoir to the village, near the latter, Mr. Milo Burr built in 1854 a large building to be used as a manufactory. This was occupied some time by Mr. Gale, under the first patent for putting up condensed milk by preserving with sugar. He began this work at Wolcottville, but removed to this place, as one reason, because of the purity of the water here obtained. He removed to Dutchess Co., N. Y., where his enterprise is in most successful operation, it having become of great importance to the people of large cities.

"On Saturday, May 12, 1877, this building was consumed by fire.

"Newton Rossiter, while conducting the tannery, kept a small store, probably in his own dwelling. Afterwards Capt. Milo Burr and Beach Baker removed the store building once used at Greenwoods Street for a people's store to Burrville, and Mr. Baker kept a store for a short time. Nelson Roberts took this store in 1848, and conducted it fourteen years, and then sold it to Lewis Johnson, who remained in it two years, and sold to Mr. E. S. Minor, who is still the merchant and railroad agent at the place. There is a post-office at the place, Mr. John M. Burr, postmaster.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.*

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, TORRINGTON.

THE first movement towards the organization of this church was a memorial presented to the General Assembly by Daniel Stoughton in October, 1739, asking to be organized into a society, and that taxes might be imposed for the "support of a gospel ministry." This memorial was signed by the following names: Jacob Strong, Jr., Ebenezer Lyman, Jr., William Grant, Jonathan Coe, Daniel Thrall, Isaac Higley, Joseph Beach, Joel Thrall, Abel Beach, Ebenezer Coe, Nathaniel Barber, William Cook, Amos Filley, John Cook (2d), Hezekiah Griswold, Daniel Stoughton, Joshua Loomis, Thomas Stoughton, Jr., Jacob Strong, William Bartlett, Samuel Bartlett, Abraham Dibble, Jr., Joseph Phelps, Aaron Loomis, Samuel Phelps.

Torrington was made a town, with town privileges, in October, 1740, and thereby became an ecclesiastical society, and a tax of twopence on the pound for the support of preaching was granted.

In the next spring another tax of twopence was granted, but in the autumn it was changed to threepence on the pound, for the purpose of raising a fund towards building a meeting-house.

An extra tax to raise five hundred pounds for the settlement of a minister was also ordered by the Assembly, which was a much larger amount than many ministers received, if the money was anywhere near par at that time. Another tax was granted in 1744, and one in 1750, for the support of the gospel in the town. These taxes seem burdensome in repetition and amount, but the people were quite willing to pay them. The first petition states that some of the signers lived in Windsor, "but, being desirous of having their lands improved as fast as possible, they were willing to be taxed."

No information is given as to the success of this effort to secure the preaching of the gospel before October, 1741, but as Nathaniel Roberts was graduated in 1732, and was probably through his theological studies before 1739, he may have preached here some time before he was settled as pastor.

The only records of the organization of the church are those written by Mr. Roberts, the first pastor. He introduces the matter and gives the record thus:

"Here I shall observe some things concerning the church in Torrington in y^e^ county of Hartford.

"1st. It was first planted October 21, 1741, by Mr. Graham, Mr. Humphrey, Mr. Leavenworth, Mr. Bellamy.

"2d. The first deacon that was chosen was Ebenezer Lyman (Sen'r.), and was set apart to the office by prayer, and laying on of the hands of the pastor of said church, January 1, 1742.

"3d. The first sacrament that ever was administered in the church was January 3, 1742, and the communicants who were then members of the said church; the number was seventeen; Dea. E. Lyman and his wife, E. Lyman, Junr., and his wife, E. North and his wife, J. Coe and his wife, Jacob Strong and his wife, Abel Beach and his wife, Nathaniel Barber and his wife, John Cook and his wife, Asahel Strong."

In regard to his own marriages, he does not tell what his wives' names were before marriage, nor where they resided, though he gives the number of the day of the week on which the marriage occurred. He calls himself Mr., and not Rev., as he does also Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Bellamy, never using Rev. to a minister. Mr. was then the aristocratic class name, applied to persons only in certain stations in life.

According to this record, the first marriage ceremony he performed was July 8, 1747, over six years after he was ordained, and the next one occurred two years and a half afterwards, and therefore, to all appearance, marriages were not numerous in Torrington in those days.

The record of baptisms runs in the same style:

"January y^e^ 3, 1741–2, I baptized a child for Isaac Hygly, and her name was Susannah."

"August 29, 1742, I baptized a child for Nathaniel Barber, and his name was Nathaniel."

The church was organized at the house of John Cook, the house yet standing and known as Deacon John Cook's. Tradition says that Mr. Roberts was ordained in Deacon Cook's house. Mr. Roberts says the church was organized Oct. 21, 1741, and that he, as the pastor of the church, ordained the first deacon, Jan. 1, 1742, or two months after the organization of the church. It is not probable that two meetings of such a nature, one to organize the church and another to ordain the minister, would be held within so short a time, and therefore it is quite clear that the ordination took place at the time of the formation of the church, and that the meeting was held in John Cook's house, and the services conducted in a regular form by the ministers named by Mr. Roberts. It is also probable that Mr. Roberts, being unmarried, was residing with John Cook at the time, and remained there until his marriage, two years afterwards.

The first recorded act preparatory to the building of a meeting-house was the increase of the tax from two to threepence on a pound, in 1740; the surplus, after paying the minister's salary, was to be placed in the hands of Capt. Joseph Bird, of Litchfield, to be "improved by him as best could be" until the inhabitants should engage in building the house, when it was to be used for that purpose.

In May, 1746, the Assembly appointed Ebenezer Marsh and Joseph Bird, of Litchfield, and Nathaniel Baldwin, of Goshen, a committee to locate a site for a meeting-house, and report to the next session of that body. Upon that report, rendered October, 1746, the Assembly

"Resolved, That the place to build a meeting-house in said town, shall be about thirty rods northward of the house of Ebenezer Lyman, Esq., in the cross highway, which runs east and west, where said committee have set up a stake with a large heap of stones about it, the sills of said house to inclose said heap of stones."

In the following winter a frame was erected on this site, thirty feet square, with eighteen-feet posts, under the directions of a committee appointed by the town. At this stage of the house somebody thought the house too high, and this committee was dismissed and another appointed, who cut down the posts to eight feet in height. A memorial was then carried to the Assembly, which stopped the proceedings of the town, restored the first committee, and ordered the house to be built with eighteen-feet posts. An execution was granted against the persons who cut down the posts of the house, and a fine of twenty-one pounds six shillings and fivepence imposed upon them. These proceedings delayed the building of the house more than a year.

A new memorial was presented in October, 1748, for a change of the site; a committee was appointed to look into the matter and report, which they did in May, 1749, and the place was established at a stake within the south line of a lot belonging to John Whiting, between sixty and seventy rods northward of the place which was heretofore affixed for a meeting-house, so as to include the said stake within the sills of the said house.

The meeting-house was built at the place last designated, and was standing there in October, 1751, when the road was laid running northwest from the meeting-house. It was a framed building, eighteen-feet posts, and thirty feet square. How it was covered is spoken of as a mystery, as something about the house gave it the name of the Hemlock church. It was built and seated, in the gallery and below, in the simplest manner. It is said that the seats were made of slabs, flat side up, with sticks for legs. This is tradition. Deacon John Whiting's account-book, still preserved, tells us that he was engaged at different times for many years to 1781 in repairing the seats to the meeting-house. Therefore it is probable that the seats were not stationary, and for that reason were soon out of repair.

During the summer of 1786 a meeting-house was built as individual property, and was thus owned about sixteen years, when it was made over to the Congregational society, then the established legal body. It was located a little north of Capt. Abel Beach's tavern, at the place known for many years afterwards as Torrington green. It was two-story, having two rows of windows on each side; one side of the house faced the south. The belfry, built a few years after, with a high steeple, was on the west end of the building, jutting out from the body of the house so far that the west door was on the south side of the belfry. There was a door on the south side of the building, and one on the east end. One of the conditions on the part of the society when Mr. Gillett settled here, in 1792, was that this meeting-house should be finished inside. In the "Church Manual," by Rev. J. A. McKinstry, we are told that this steeple was built in 1797, and the bell put in and the house thoroughly repaired. As to this bell, tradition says that the inhabitants contributed one hundred silver dollars, which were sent to the maker and the silver put into the bell.

The following have served this church as ministers from its organization to present time: Rev. Nathaniel Roberts, ordained October, 1741; died March 4, 1776. Rev. Noah Merwin, ordained Oct. 25, 1776; dismissed Nov. 26, 1783. Rev. Alexander Gillett, installed May 23, 1792; died Jan. 19, 1826, aged seventy-seven. Rev. William Ripley Gould, installed Feb. 28, 1827; dismissed Feb. 12, 1832. Rev. Milton Huxley (supply), 1833 to 1842. Rev. John A. McKinstry, ordained Oct. 5, 1842; dismissed 1857. Rev. Charles B. Dye (supply), one year. Rev. Sylvanus Marvin (supply), four years. Rev. Jacob H. Strong (supply), Nov. 12, 1865, to 1869. Rev. Michael J. Callan (supply), one year and a half. Rev. Samuel Orcutt, (supply), one year and a half. Rev. Charles P. Croft was a supply in 1876.

Ministers raised.—Rev. Timothy P. Gillett, Rev. James Beach, Rev. Luther Hart, Rev. Abel K. Hinsdale, Rev. Miles Grant.

Deacons.—Ebenezer Lyman, chosen in 1742, died in 1762, aged eighty; John Cook, chosen in 1755, died in 1779, aged sixty-one; John Whiting, chosen in 1764, died in 1820, aged ninety-two; Wait Beach, chosen in 1794, died in 1810, aged sixty-four; Abel Hinsdale, chosen in 1802, died in 1851, aged eighty-six; Dr. Elijah Lyman, chosen in 1814, died in 1819; Guy Wolcott, chosen in 1821, dismissed; Marvin Barber, chosen in 1822, died in 1840, aged forty-four; Giles Ward, chosen in 1838, died in 1845, aged seventy-six; Rodney Pierce, chosen in 1846; Lorrain Hinsdale, chosen in 1850, removed; Frederick P. Hills, chosen in 1869; Lyman R. Pond, chosen in 1877.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, TORRINGFORD.

Preaching services were held by Rev. Nathaniel Roberts, on the east side of the town, six Sabbaths in 1744, and also in 1755, and the next year the preaching was measured by the amount they paid to the society. The town vote, however, gave them the privilege of having preaching four months that year, and released them from paying for the support of Mr. Roberts. The meetings at this time were held in the house of Nehemiah Gaylord and Shubael Griswold.

"In 1757 a petition was sent to the Assembly, signed by nineteen persons, asking the liberty to have preaching such part of the year as they were able, and to be released from supporting Mr. Roberts. The number of families in that part of the town at that time is stated to have been about twenty. The following were the petitioners: Abraham Dibble, Jonathan Kelsey, Jonathan Gillett, Joshua Austin, Shubael Griswold, Benjamin Matthews, Nathan Kelsey, Nehemiah Gaylord, David Birge, Ebenezer Winchell, Charles Mather, Aaron Yale, John Burr, Jane Loomis, Benjamin Bissell, John Birge, Samuel Durwin, Thomas Dibble, Ephraim Dibble.

"At a meeting, held in Oct. 27, 1757, a committee was appointed to hire a minister, and a vote was passed to raise ten pounds for defraying the expense in so doing.

"In April, 1759, the town expressed its willingness by vote that four tiers and a half of lots in the eastern part should be made into a society, and in May next the people asked the General Assembly to incorporate a society to include these tiers and the western tier in New Hartford; and if this could not be granted they asked that the people might be exempt from paying in New Hartford, and be allowed to support preaching in the eastern part of Torrington. They entreated for the privileges of a society, though they were scarcely able to support preaching in an honorable manner, if the privilege was granted them. This request was denied.

"In October, 1759, they presented another petition, which was denied, and the next spring they renewed this petition, which met with the same result.

"In 1761, New Hartford gave its consent that four miles of the west tier of lots might be annexed to East Torrington for the support of the gospel. After this full consent of both towns, and their earnest entreaties heretofore, they were under the necessity of petitioning the Assembly at four successive sessions before they obtained their request.

"The society was incorporated in October, 1763, under the name of Torringford;* the territory included four and a half tiers of lots on the eastern side of the town and the western tier in New Hartford, four miles in length. The half of another tier was afterwards added, and thus the society continued for many years.

"At the first meeting after the incorporation they say: 'The inhabitants of "Torringford" (using the society name for the first time) being convened together, holden Dec. 21, 1763.' They seem to use that name with satisfaction, and well they might, for they had petitioned long enough to obtain it; and then they proceed to make arrangements for regular meetings and to elect officers for the year, who were as follows: Deacon Jonathan Kelsey,† Moderator; Nehemiah Gaylord, Clerk of the society; Deacon Jonathan Kelsey, Samuel Austin, and John Birge, Society Committee; Jabez Gillett, Society Collector.

"When the first meeting-house was proposed for the west side of the town, an agreement was made between the inhabitants that those on the east side need not pay towards the building of the house, provided they would relinquish all right as to the location or site, and a record of this agreement was entered among the deeds of land dated in 1748. The names of persons thus agreeing stand as follows: East side, Abraham Dibble, Benjamin Bissell, Nehemiah Gaylord, Elijah Gaylord, Gideon Loomis, John Birge, Thomas Dibble. These names probably represent nearly all the families east of the swamp at that time. West side, Noah Wilson, Israel Avered, Moses Loomis, Aaron Loomis, Jacob Strong, Ebenezer North, Wm. Grant, Joel Thrall, Asahel Strong, Ebenezer Coe, Isaac Higley, Zebulon Curtiss, Thomas Stoughton, Joel Loomis, Ebenezer Lyman, Thomas Curtiss, Aaron Loomis, Jr., Beriah Hills, Jonathan Coe, Nathaniel Barber, Abel Beach, Joseph Fowler, Joseph Beach, Thomas Marshall, Ebenezer Lyman, Jr., John Whiting.

"Why the names of John Cook, Noah Wilson, and Abel Beach were not on this paper is not clear, for the agreement was such as to which none seemingly could object, and, therefore, when the east side began to build they had no claim on the old church for assistance, because of aid previously rendered.

"The Torringford society, having made some provision towards building a meeting-house in 1763, voted in December, 1764, to 'add two feet to the length and breadth,' and arranged to obtain a committee to 'pitch the stake for a site which would accommodate the whole society.' In June, 1766, they voted to 'proceed to build a place of worship.' In April, 1768, they agreed to 'raise the house as they could conveniently,' and in September of the same year they 'voted that the annual meeting of the society should be held in the church;' therefore the house was built in the summer of 1768. In October of the same year they presented a petition to the General Assembly, showing that the territory of the society embraced about ten thousand acres of land, of which about seven thousand belonged to non-residents; that they had erected a church, which was covered, had doors, a floor, convenient benches, and glass windows for the lower story; that they desired to settle a minister as soon as they could; and that the list of the present inhabitants is only two thousand and eight hundred pounds, and they pray that the Assembly would grant a tax of threepence per acre for three years on all the land in the society, to provide a settlement for the first settling minister, and if any surplus remains it should be used towards completing the church. The petition was granted. This house stood on the highway, on the west side, some fifty rods south of the present church edifice.

"In December, 1783, a committee was appointed to consider and decide whether the church stands in the right place, and, if it did not, to pitch a stake where it ought to stand, and at the same time they voted to raise means to procure material to finish the inside of the meeting-house. These acts were rescinded afterwards, but in January, 1785, a tax was laid, payable by the 1st of June, to finish the house. In obedience to this movement, considerable work was done that summer on the inside of the house, but it was not plastered. In March, 1788, a committee was appointed to settle with David Soper for plastering the church. In December, 1788, a seating committee was appointed, and the appointment thereafter was made annually while they worshiped in that house.

"The house was painted in 1792, having neither bell nor steeple. Repairs went on thus until 1818, when a stove was placed in the house. In 1828 liberty was given to alter the front gallery for the singers. In 1835 the thanks of the society were voted unanimously to Uriel Tuttle, for the use of his organ for the time past, showing that in instrumental music they were in advance of many churches of that day; and Charles B. Smith and Frederick Phelps were complimented for their services at the organ by a vote of thanks from the society, and thereby, probably, received a larger salary than they expected.

The present church edifice was erected in 1838 and 1839, and in 1874 the interior was remodeled.

The following is a list of the ministers: Rev. Mr. Heaton (supply), in the autumn of 1760, some months. Rev. Ebenezer Devenport (supply), from summer of 1764, one year or more. Rev. Samuel John Mills, ordained June 28, 1769; died May 11, 1833. Rev. Epaphras Goodman (associate), March 6, 1822; dismissed Jan. 12, 1836. Rev. Herman L. Vaill, July 5, 1837; dismissed Sept. 29, 1839. Rev. Brown Emerson, July 21, 1841; dismissed Sept. 24, 1844. Rev. John D. Baldwin (supply), a short time, and received a call. Rev. William H. Moore, Sept. 30, 1846; dismissed Sept. 26, 1854. Rev. Stephen Fenn, Nov. 16, 1854; dismissed Sept. 4, 1857. Rev. Charles Newman, May 18, 1858; dismissed Oct. 28, 1862. Rev. Spencer O. Dyer (supply), one year. Rev. Franklin Noble, June 7, 1865; dismissed Nov. 30, 1866. Rev. Joseph F. Gaylord (supply), two years. Rev. Dana M. Walcott (supply), one year to 1871. Rev. Herrick Knight (supply), from 1872 to 1874. Rev. George R. Ferguson (supply), 1875 to 1877; went to Africa as a missionary preacher.

Ministers Raised in Torringford.—Rev. Luther Rossiter, son of Newton Rossiter, a tanner at Burrville, became an Episcopal minister, and his life has been spent at the West; Rev. Orange Lyman, Rev. Samuel J. Mills, Jr., Rev. Jonathan Miller, Rev. Harvey Loomis, Rev. David Miller, Rev. Stanley Griswold, Rev. Erasmus D. Moore, Rev. Lucius Curtiss, Rev. Warren H. Roberts, Episcopal, in 1857.

Deacons.—Jonathan Kelsey, at Woodbury and here, died in 1792, aged eighty-nine years; Nehemiah Gaylord, died in 1801, aged eighty years; Abraham Filley; Ebenezer Miller, died in 1814, aged seventy-nine years; Job Curtiss, died in 1807, aged sixty-two years; Ebenezer Miller (second), appointed in 1807, died in 1842, aged seventy-eight years; Elizur Curtiss, appointed in 1808, resigned in 1843, died in 1868, aged eighty-five years; Ebenezer Rood, appointed in 1826, resigned in 1843, died in 1851, aged seventy-five years; Thomas Watson, appointed in 1843, resigned in 1855, removed to Winsted; Thomas A. Miller, appointed in 1843, died in 1861, aged fifty-five years; Harvey L. Rood, appointed in 1855; William Watson, appointed in 1861; Giles L. Gaylord; Chester H. Barber.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, WOLCOTTVILLE.

This church was organized June 11, 1832, with the following members: David Baldwin, Mrs. Sarah Baldwin, Sarah Ann Baldwin, Elizur Barber, Mrs. Polly Barber, Mrs. Lucy Bissell, Ruth Brooks, Rebecca Goodman, Sarah Hungerford, Mrs. Charlotte Hungerford, Mrs. Elizabeth Eno, Mrs. Ursula Frost, Nancy S. Goodman, John Hungerford, Abigail Taylor, Lyman Wetmore, Mrs. Betsey Wetmore, Lorrain Wetmore, Mrs. Frances Wetmore, Louisa Wetmore, Amanda Wetmore, Leverett Scott, Mrs. Leverett Scott, Sarah Wilcox, Lydia Kimberly, Maria S. North, Ruhama Smith, George D. Wadhams, Mrs. Lucy Wadhams.

Rev. L. Perrin, in his centennial sermon, in 1876, says,—

"During all the years of effort by the people of Wolcottville to insure its rapid growth as a business place, a little band of thoroughly earnest Christians were watching, working, and praying, with a long-tried patience and a wrestling faith, for the establishment of a church of Christ, and for such help of the Holy Ghost as would lift up a standard effectually against the abounding wickedness of the place. While Christopher Wolcott, the devout and efficient agent of Frederick Wolcott, in managing the mill, and other kindred spirits which his position enabled him to bring to his aid, were trying to sow some good seed, the Methodists were contending nobly for truth and righteousness as well; and the older members of this church speak with becoming respect and affection of their fellow-disciples of the common Master.

"From the organization of the church the mutual action of the church and society has been harmonious, and a commendable zeal, prudence, and liberality has marked their efforts to sustain the ordinances of religion. Without zealous stickling for mere points of order in their mutual work, they have accomplished much toward the civil, social, educational, and religious culture of this community, and their outlook upon the opening future is full of hope and promise. But since the church is an institution of divine appointment, and since it is by inspiration called the body of Christ, it is meet and proper that in its relation to other agencies it should always have the precedence, without regard to numbers, wealth, or earthly distinctions. Any society that does not choose to have this rule observed is radically defective in its character as an ecclesiastical society; and any church that does not make the fitness of this rule apparent fails to execute its high commission."

The settled pastors have been Hiram P. Arms, Stephen Hubbell, Samuel Day, Samuel T. Seelye, Ralph Smith, Edward W. Bacon, and Lavalette Perrin, and the following have been stated supplies: E. S. Clark, R. M. Chipman, W. L. Adamson, George B. Newcomb, and others. It will be seen that during the forty-four years of its history this church has had a settled pastor about twenty-eight and one-half years, and acting pastor about six and a half years.

"The benefit of the Home Missionary Society in this State is realized to some extent in the aid this church received for several years from its commencement, making it possible to have a settled pastor when otherwise it could not, and giving it strength until it acquired strength of its own.

"The membership of the church has slowly though steadily increased in numbers, although its forty-four years of effort and labor have been amidst great national struggles and calamities.

"The Sabbath-school, under different forms, with such intervals as circumstances have made inevitable, has been sustained from the first. Indeed, before there was pastor, church, or society, Mrs. Charles Hungerford maintained such a school on Sabbath morning, and she attended service after it at Torringford. From that time forward the school has steadily increased until the numbers in it are nearly equal to the numbers in the regular service of the congregation.

"The membership of this church has steadily though slowly increased in numbers from the first. There have been seasons of special religious interest in the community, but no very remarkable times of refreshing, such as are on the records of other churches, have been experienced by this church. The following are the years in which ten or more persons were added to the membership of the church: 1834, thirteen; 1843, fifteen; 1852, thirty-four; 1858, twenty-one; 1867, thirty-nine; 1873, ten; 1874, ten; 1876, ten.

"Other years of its history have indicated more or less of spiritual vigor, but it has not been equipped and furnished as some churches are for aggressive work. From its membership of twenty-nine at the start it has increased to one hundred and seventy-five at the present time.

"All the ordinary means of grace have been sustained, and for a number of years the plan of Sabbath offerings has been successfully maintained, and thereby the benevolent institutions of the times receive monthly attention to the noted credit and honor of the congregation; the average amount is about eight hundred dollars annually.

"The service of song has quite uniformly been rendered, to the edification and quickening of all true worshipers, and from the beginning of its history this society has been favored with a specially competent choir, who have cheerfully and faithfully sustained this important service.

"This church and society have occupied two, and in a qualified sense three, houses of worship. This is a matter usually controlled by the society, and from the first there have been a few men of sound wisdom and high-toned morality worshiping with the church, though not members of it, who have infused energy into all the movements of the society, and enriched its records with many wise and liberal acts."

The first church edifice was erected by Capt. Uri Taylor. This was occupied until 1844, when extensive repairs were made.

In 1864 the question of reconstructing the meeting-house and building, or fitting up a conference-room, was brought before the annual meeting, and this proved to be the beginning "of that protracted, perplexing, and nobly sustained effort of the society, which, after long-continued struggles, resulted in the solid, chaste, and truly beautiful granite edifice now standing as a Sabbath home. Though the vicissitudes of the enterprise were many, and made doubly burdensome by the failure of the contractors in the early stages of the work to fulfill their engagements, yet it was carried to completion by the force of unyielding purpose and resolution, to the general satisfaction of those interested. The contract was taken by a New York firm for the sum of nearly nineteen thousand dollars, and when the last bill was paid the sum had increased to over thirty-two thousand dollars; and, as in all such cases, those who do most at the commencement are quite certain to do most in the final closing up of indebtedness, so in this case; the first were last. It is, therefore, a beautiful monument of earnest, wise, and well-directed energy in the accomplishment of a noble Christian object."

Ministers.—Rev. Hiram P. Arms, D.D., installed Feb. 7, 1833; dismissed July 6, 1836. Rev. Stephen Hubbell, installed Feb. 29, 1837; dismissed Sept. 29, 1839. Rev. Samuel Day, installed Sept. 23, 1840; dismissed June 4, 1845. Rev. Samuel T. Seelye, D.D., installed June 17, 1846; dismissed March 21, 1855. Rev. Ralph Smith, installed March 25, 1856; dismissed Sept. 29, 1857. Rev. George B. Newcomb (supply). Rev. Edward W. Bacon, installed Sept. 29, 1869; dismissed Oct. 31, 1871. Rev. Lavallete Perrin, installed July 31, 1872; present pastor.

Ministers Raised.—Rev. Edward Hungerford, Congregational; Rev. John Barbour, Episcopal.

Deacons.—Lorrain Wetmore, Dec. 22, 1822; Silas Humphrey, March 10, 1836; Amasa Scoville, June 29, 1837; Victorianus Clark, Nov. 7, 1841; Leonard Blakeslee, Oct. 31, 1845; Darius Wilson, July 5, 1846; Addison Palmer, 1851; Nelson Alvord, June, 1857; Charles Hotchkiss, March 3, 1861; Henry S. Barbour, Feb. 15, 1868; Samuel J. Stocking, Feb. 15, 1868.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first sermon in this town preached by a Methodist was about the year 1787, by a Mr. Bloodgood, at the house of Abijah Wilson.

"It is very probable," says Rev. Mr. Orcutt, "that there was a Methodist class in existence here not only as early as 1807,* but possibly twenty years before, in this immediate neighborhood; for it is difficult to conceive of two or three such families as Abijah Wilson's and Capt. Frisbie's living in a community such as was in this vicinity twenty-one or more years without a class-meeting. Methodists were not of that kind in those days. It would have been as easy for old Paul Peck, if he had lived, to have entrapped an alligator in the Pine swamp as to have caught a Methodist living twenty years without a class-meeting in those early days. It is therefore more than probable that class-meetings were held at Abijah Wilson's and Capt. Frisbie's and other places some years before 1800. Regular preaching by this denomination may have been established at the school-house in the village in 1809 or 1810, and from that time greater improvements in congregations and church enterprises may have been experienced. In 1808 a Methodist camp-meeting was held in Canada, in Goshen, which secured a more prominent influence to that denomination throughout this region.

* See a memorial sermon, by Rev. T. D. Littlewood, in the Bridgeport Standard, May 17, 1872.

"The ministers who preached at Mr. Coe's, and afterwards at Newfield, doubtless preached here also. A Mr. Sweet is mentioned as one of the early ones. Mr. Laban Clark, celebrated for more than fifty years in his denomination, preached here in 1810. Samuel D. Ferguson and Elbert Osborn were among the early ones, and two by the name of Hill, and Gad N. Smith, Mr. Canfield, Mr. Beach. Col. John H. Perry, a man of military education, became a minister, and preached here; became a very influential minister in New York and Brooklyn; went as a colonel of a regiment into the army against the late Rebellion; was promoted to a general's commission; returned in safety to his home in Brooklyn. Rev. Ebenezer Washburn is also mentioned prominently in regard to the prosperity of this denomination in this community.

"The real pastors, however, of Methodist churches in early days were the local preachers. The circuit ministers were preachers, traveling on tours that required their absence from each preaching-place two, three, and four weeks; and hence the real pastoral work, or care for the local churches, fell, in a great measure, on the local ministers and class-leaders. Such men as Daniel Coe, of Winsted, and David Miller, of Torringford, were the men who preached many funeral sermons, visited the sick, and supplied vacant places with preaching at no cost to any one but themselves.

"A number of families came into Wolcottville soon after the woolen-mill was started, and united with the Methodist congregation and church, who proved themselves true and faithful witnesses, and were of much value to the denomination and to the community in religious things. But the progress of the enterprise of making woolen cloths was not an even course of prosperity, and therefore the forward movement in the church was impeded for a number of years."

The ministers who had preached here to that time are mentioned in the following order:* Laban Clark, James Coleman, in 1810, Arnold Scoville, Benjamin Griffin, William Swayne, Gad Smith, Samuel Cochrane, Cyrus Culver, E. P. Jacobs, J. J. Matthias, Datus Ensign, Ezekiel Canfield, Nathan Emery, Smith Dayton, Ebenezer Washburn, John Nixon, James M. Smith, David Miller, Julius Field, Daniel Brayton, Elbert Osborn, Eli Barnett, John Lovejoy, Bradley Silleck, Milo Chamberlain, David Stocking, John Lucky, Richard Hayter, Morris Hill, David Osborn, S. W. Law, George Taylor, John M. Reid, George A. Hubbell, Robert Codling, William B. Hoyt, S. C. Keeler, C. T. Mallory, Otis Saxton, A. V. R. Abbott, Benjamin Redford, C. W. Powell, B. T. Abbott, J. Vinton, L. W. Abbott, S. H. Bray, T. D. Littlewood, H. L. Judd, S. K. Smith, George L. Taylor, —— Burns, and Rev. Mr. North.

The first church edifice was erected in 1843. The present building, which is one of the finest Methodist churches in the county, was erected in 1865, and is an honor to the self-sacrificing spirit of all who have aided in making it what it is.

TRINITY CHURCH.

Trinity parish was organized in February, 1843,† with the following members: Samuel Bradley, James Gaunt, M. W. Fyler, Henry B. Richards, Rodney Brace, James Ashborn, Samuel Workman, Charles B. Smith, Nelson Alvord, James R. Coe, Benjamin H. Morse, James H. Seymour, Edward Atkins, Charles Cooper, Demas Coe, Janna B. Phelps, James Ogleby, Allen G. Brady. The officers of the parish elected on the day of its organization were James Gaunt and Benjamin H. Morse, wardens; James R. Coe, Charles Cooper, Samuel Bradley, vestrymen; Demas Coe, treasurer; Benjamin H. Morse, clerk. This society continued to worship in the brick academy during the summer of 1843, and until their house of worship was completed in 1844.

This edifice is located on the corner of Water and Prospect Streets, and was consecrated by Bishop Thomas C. Brownwell, Dec. 4, 1844.

Jan. 6, 1845, Rev. Henry Zell was elected rector of the parish. At Easter, 1848, he resigned, and during the succeeding year the rectorship remained vacant, Revs. Enoch Huntington, Abel Nichols, and George L. Foot officiating. Rev. David P. Sandford became rector on Easter Day, April 8, 1849, there being then forty families in the parish, and eleven communicants. This relation Mr. Sanford held one year, when he resigned, and Rev. S. V. Berry was in temporary charge of the parish a little more than a year. In August, 1851, Rev. J. S. Covell became rector, and continued until October, 1855. Rev. Ezra Jones and C. B. Seymour officiated nearly a year each in succession, when the parish was united with Christ Church, Harwinton, as one cure, for one year, Rev. James Morton being the rector. On Oct. 10, 1858, Rev. J. S. Covell was recalled to the rectorship, and remained until 1863, when he removed to Huntington, Conn. Rev. David P. Sanford served his second term of office in this church, commencing in April, † Occasional services had previously been held by the rectors of St. Michael's parish, at Litchfield, and Christ parish, Harwinton. At the time of the organization of the church, Rev. Henry Zell was holding regular services here.

1864, and resigning Sept. 13, 1868. During this time the house of worship was considerably improved: a vestry-room was added, stained glass put into the windows, and other improvements were made upon the building. In 1868, Rev. Benjamin Eastwood became the rector, and remained until 1874. In June, 1874, Rev. Henry B. Ensworth became rector-elect, but resigned in the next December. He was succeeded, Sept. 1, 1876, by the present rector, Rev. Henry M. Sherman.

ST. FRANCIS' CHURCH.

Mass was first said in this village by Father James Fitten in 1835. Since that time the following priests have conducted services here as missionaries: Revs. John Brady, Fathers Lynch, O'Niel, James Lynch, Sillic, Quinn, Thomas Hendrickson, Richard O'Gorman, Michael Mangin, Daniel Mullen, Philip Sheridan, and Father Leo, O.S.F., the present pastor at Winsted. The first resident pastor was Father Isaiah, the present incumbent. The church edifice was commenced in 1859, and completed in 1860. It was enlarged in 1866, and beautified and improved.

BAPTIST CHURCH, NEWFIELD.

A Baptist Church was organized at Newfield, or "Noppet," as it is sometimes called, Sept. 17, 1788. Among the original members of the church, and those who united with it soon after, were Stephen Shepard, Aaron Marshall, Silas Fyler, Gideon Smith, Esther Beach, Chloe Marshall, Bethesda Brunson, Rhoda Agard, Joseph Drake, Ashbel Bronson, Remembrance North, Julia West, Sabra North, Esther Fyler, Jane Loomis (2d), Hannah Bronson, Olive Agard, Noah North, Levi Marshall, Norman Shepard, John Fyler, Lemuel Loomis, Elizabeth North, and Elizabeth Macomb. The first pastor was Stephen Shepard. The first church edifice was erected in about 1800 or 1804. It was subsequently improved and repaired, and July 5, 1875, was destroyed by fire. It has been unused for a number of years.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, NEWFIELD.

The first Methodist services were held here in about 1816 by Rev. Daniel Coe, of Winsted. These services were held in the Baptist church. Soon much interest was manifested, meetings were multiplied, and quite a number of persons were baptized in the brook north of Harlow Fyler's residence. A church was organized, and Capt. Levi Munsill was appointed class-leader. The church increased until it numbered about fifty members, and the interest became so general that the school children held prayer-meetings in the grove during the intermission of school exercises. Capt. Stephen Fyler and his sons, Harlow and Juba, the Munsills, Loomises, Grants, Thralls, Daytons, and Capt. Asahel Smith and Amasa Wade, of Winchester, and a number of other families, warmly espoused this cause, and for some years a thriving society existed. Besides Daniel Coe, who always manifested a fatherly interest in this church, David Miller, of Torringford, was a frequent early preacher. Afterwards several other ministers are remembered as having preached here, viz.: Mr. Canfield Cochrane, Billy Hibbard, John Nickerson, Morris and Aaron Hill, —— Washburne, Samuel D. Ferguson, John Beach, Gad N. Smith, Col. James Perry, Josiah Toy, Miles N. Olmstead, and Henry J. Fox. Some of the presiding elders were Nathan and Heman Bangs, Laban Clark, John Lucky, —— Washburn, —— Martindale, —— Ferguson, and Griswold. Among the class-leaders after Capt. Munsill were Augustus Grant, Archibald Dayton, and Chauncey Riggs.

Several of these ministers resided in Newfield, the circuit being at first, and for many years, a four weeks' circuit, with two ministers, each preaching in the same place once in four weeks, the other minister living in Burlington; the four preaching-places being Burlington, Newfield, Canada village (in Goshen), and Cornwall.

The Methodists and Baptists occupied the old meeting-house on alternate Sabbaths until a Methodist quarterly meeting occurred on the Baptists' Sabbath, and was conducted with closed doors, according to the custom of those days. Some young men insisted on going into this meeting, and finally broke down the door to effect an entrance. Much excitement followed. The next quarterly meeting was held in Harlow Fyler's wagon-house, and a great company gathered for the occasion. This occurred in the autumn of 1832. A meeting of the members of this church was held Nov. 26, 1832, when the Rev. Heman Bangs, presiding elder, was chosen moderator, and Rev. Charles Sherman, the pastor, was chosen scribe, and they voted that "we deem it expedient to make an effort to build a meeting-house." They appointed a committee, consisting of Levi Munsill, Harlow Fyler, Archibald Dayton, Elihu Barber, and Amasa Wade, to fix on a site and forward the movement as trustees of the society. The house was built in 1833, and seated with slips instead of the box-pew.

In November, 1833, a subscription of one hundred and ninety-five dollars was raised, and a bell purchased at Medway, Mass., and ordered sent by water to Hartford; but, navigation closing, Mr. Harlow Fyler sent his team to Medway for the bell, which had been shipped to Boston to come by water, and the team went to Boston, and brought the bell in time for the dedication. After a few years of full meetings and general interest the cause began to decline; families were removing from the community almost yearly, some of them going to the far West. A debt of four hundred dollars remained on the meeting-house property, which continued to increase, although several efforts were made to pay it, until about 1850, when it was sold to the Advent society, and a series of meetings were held by Elders Miles Grant and Matthewson. For a time there was much interest manifested; the meeting-house was filled on the Sabbath, and some meetings were held in the Baptist house also, and a Second Advent Church was organized with thirty members; but after ten or twelve years the meetings ceased, most of the members went to Wrightville, and the meeting-house stood unused until 1876, when it was sold and taken down.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.*

The Coe Brass Manufacturing Company.—The first effort to make brass kettles in America by the battery process was commenced in Wolcottville in 1834. The old Wilson mill-privilege and property was purchased, and other lands on the south and west side of the river, for a dam and a raceway, and for the location of buildings. The business was conducted in the name of Israel Coe, then of Waterbury, but who removed to Wolcottville. Anson G. Phelps, of New York City, and John Hungerford were associated with Mr. Coe, each owning one-third of the stock. The late Israel Holmes, of Waterbury, had an interest in the business, and removed to this village, and was the principal manager of the manufacturing part of the business. The enterprise included the rolling of brass in connection with the making of brass kettles. Christopher Pope, an Englishman, was the prime mover in regard to the making of brass kettles, although he was of no benefit in the end to the business as introduced here.

Mr. Holmes went to England for the purpose of procuring machinery and workmen. His efforts in this respect were hindered by every possible ingenuity and power of those interested in the same kind of manufacturing in that country, but after a time he sent two battery-men to Philadelphia, one of whom died the next day after his arrival. Subsequently he procured others, and thirty-eight men, women, and children, in one vessel, arrived in New York. Considerable trouble was experienced in transporting them without a railroad to Wolcottville. When they were landed here the mill was not ready for operatives, and thereby the troubles were multiplied. The men received their pay, and, having nothing to do, most of them gave themselves to dissipation and disquietude of disposition. In the mean time, Mr. Pope bargained with other parties for a rival concern, and took three of the men with him. This was at first thought to be an injury, but eventuated in advantage, as these men proved to be worthless in this business. However, some of the workmen remained, and the quick eye and ready hand of Wolcottville Yankees soon secured experts in the making of brass kettles.

The next difficulty which arose was the proportioning or mixing of the metal so as to form a compound that could be subjected to the hammering and annealing without cracking, and for some years the company were under the necessity of importing the metal ready cast for this purpose. In 1842, Mr. Coe went to England and obtained the right materials and mixture, and thereafter this difficulty was overcome. From this time the business in this form would have been a great success but for the invention by Hiram Hayden, of Waterbury, of a new process, called the rolling or spinning process, by which a smoother surface and uniform thickness of the kettle was secured. This new method soon superseded the battery business, and hence this part of the Wolcottville enterprise was not very profitable thereafter.

The rolling-mill part of the business was a success until 1837, when by the general suspension of business throughout the country, many who were indebted to the concern being unable to pay, the company were in a strait place, and for a time nearly suspended work in the mill; but finally all claims were paid in full and business resumed, and continued with success.

On the 19th of May, 1841, the special copartnership of Israel Coe was dissolved, and a joint-stock company formed under the name of the Wolcottville Brass Company, with a capital of fifty-six thousand dollars, of which Israel Coe, Anson G. Phelps, and John Hungerford were the stockholders, each owning one-third. Israel Coe was appointed president, and Lyman W. Coe secretary and treasurer, and Israel Holmes the general manufacturing manager. In 1842, Mr. Coe went to Europe, and Mr. Hungerford was appointed president. In 1843, Mr. Holmes retired from the company. In February, 1844, Israel Coe and L. W. Coe sold their interest in the company to Anson G. Phelps, and Mr. I. Coe then retired from the brass business. L. W. Coe remained as secretary and treasurer until 1845, when he resigned, and subsequently was elected secretary and treasurer of the Waterbury Brass Company, of which Israel Holmes was president. Mr. L. W. Coe then removed to Waterbury, where he resided until 1863, when he purchased the property of the Wolcottville Brass Company, and formed a new company under the name of the Coe Brass Company.

While Mr. Coe was at Waterbury, in March, 1848, Mr. Phelps sold his interest in this mill to Mr. Hungerford, and Mr. Hungerford, at different times, transferred portions of the stock to C. P. Marks, John Davol, J. H. Bartholomew, and Albert A. Mason, and others. About 1853, Marks and Davol, being large owners, sold their entire interest in this property to J. Hungerford, and he and his family became the owners of nearly all the stock.

Until 1852 the company had been moderately successful, but from that period to 1863 the property steadily declined in value. This decline was owing in part to the decline of the battery process in making kettles and the great commercial panic of 1857, in which the company were large losers by the failure of their customers, from which they never fully recovered.

* Principally from Orcutt's "History of Torrington."

In April, 1863, L. W. Coe purchased the entire capital stock, paying forty thousand dollars, and thereby became possessed of all its franchise and liable for all its debts. The Coe Brass Company was formed, with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, and the mill property and real estate of the old company transferred to the new.

The new company immediately took its position in the front ranks of the brass wire and German silver business, and has steadily increased its business until at the present time it is producing more pounds of metal than any mill of the kind. It has attained its former reputation as a water-mill of about one hundred and fifty horse-power, but has now in addition four steam-engines with a capacity of four hundred horse-power. Their buildings cover an area of about three acres; the whole mill property includes nineteen acres.

For the past five years it has made a specialty of brass for small-arms, cartridges, and has had extensive dealings with foreign governments for such metal. The aggregate of this foreign trade has constituted two-thirds of the production of the mills.

The annual aggregate of the business of the company now exceeds one and a quarter million dollars. Its present capital is three hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars. It employs directly from two hundred to two hundred and fifty men, and indirectly sustains a large proportion of the population of the town. During the last three years of financial depression in the country this mill has been under full operation, and some of the time working over-time, which fact has not only kept Wolcottville alive, but growing at the rate of nearly fifty dwelling-houses per year.

The annual consumption of wood at this mill is two thousand cords, and of charcoal fifteen thousand bushels, and of anthracite coal two thousand tons. The present officers are L. W. Coe, President; Elisha Turner, Vice-President; Charles F. Brooker, Secretary; Edward T. Coe, Treasurer.

The Coe Furniture Company.—This business was commenced in about 1840 by a company consisting of Henry P. Coe, Henry P. Ostrum, and Benjamin Smith, in a shop about forty rods east of Main Street bridge, on the north side of the river. After a short time Mr. Smith sold his share to the two others. About 1850, Mr. Ostrum sold to his partner, Henry P. Coe, who continued the business with success several years. When his sons, A. W. Coe & Brothers, took the enterprise, before 1860, they took possession of larger buildings on the south side of the river, and began to add the improvements in machinery by which their products and sales were greatly increased. This prosperity continued until 1870, when the Coe Furniture Company was formed, with a capital of twenty thousand dollars, for the purpose of making household furniture.

The Union Manufacturing Company.—This company was organized Feb. 18, 1845, with a capital of ten thousand dollars, and the same day purchased the brick building and water-privileges which had been used as a finishing-house by the old woolen mill company, and entered upon preparations for the manufacture of woolen goods, the stockholders being John Hungerford, president, and William R. Slade, superintendent and secretary, and from this time forward this mill appears to have been moderately successful. In 1849 this mill was burned, and a building much larger than the former was erected, and the business conducted by F. N. Holly and William R. Slade as the stock-owners, and success rewarded the efforts and skill with which they conducted it. In 1856 this building was burned, and all that was in it, leaving a mass of ruins unseemly and discouraging. Another one was soon erected and fitted for the same business, and the work started anew. The business was prosperous, and in 1859, Jesse B. Rose, Samuel Workman, and Ransom Holly became stock-owners, and the owners thus continued until 1873, when the Messrs. Holly retired, and others became members of the company in 1867.

The present owners are Jesse B. Rose, Samuel Workman, George D. Workman, Albert Tuttle, and James Iredale. Mr. Rose came from Plymouth in 1850, and engaged with this company as foreman of the carding-room, and continued in that relation nearly fifteen years, when he became a stock-owner and superintendent of the manufacturing work.

Mr. Samuel Workman came to New York, and thence in 1836 to this place, having been employed to work in the wool-sorting apartment in Wolcottville Manufacturing Company, and has continued in the same work to the present time. When the Union Company started he engaged with them, and has become largely interested in the business.

Mr. George D. Workman, son of Samuel, is the secretary, treasurer, and agent of the company, and became stock-owner in 1867.

Mr. Tuttle came from Woodbury in 1858, and was employed as finisher of cloth, in which relation he still continues. He became stock-owner in 1865. Mr. Iredale, formerly from England, came from Massachusetts in 1865, and became overseer in the "gig-room," or one department of cloth-dressing. He became stock-owner in 1867.

This company commenced with a stock capital of ten thousand dollars, which was increased to fifty thousand, where it has remained. The sales of the company amount to two hundred thousand dollars annually, which indicates prosperity even in moderate times. The capacity of the mill is much greater than that usually attained. The main building is one hundred and twenty-two feet by thirty-five, six stories high, and has an "L" part thirty-five by forty feet, three stories high. There is also a wing attached to the main building that is eighty-five by thirty feet, one story. The second building is one hundred by thirty-eight, two stories and a basement, and is used for a drying-house. The third building is eighty by thirty-five feet, three stories high, and is used for office and storage room; and besides the large water-power, they have three steam-boilers, with an engine of one hundred horse-power.

At first this company manufactured only plain black doeskin cloths, and from this they have varied but little until later years. They now make black doeskins, ribbed and diagonal goods, — all single breadth. Seventy-five persons are regularly employed in the mill, producing on an average about five hundred yards of cloth per day.

Jesse B. Rose, President; George D. Workman, Secretary, Treasurer, and Agent; Directors, Jesse B. Rose, Samuel Workman, George D. Workman, Albert Tuttle, and James Iredale.

The Turner & Seymour Manufacturing Company occupy the privileges of the first woolen-mill in this village. This woolen-mill was built in 1813 by Frederick Wolcott. It passed through various hands, and in 1844 was burned. A cotton-mill was soon after erected on its site, which passed through various vicissitudes, being known successively as the Wolcottville Manufacturing Company, the Torrington Manufacturing Company, and the Wolcottville Knitting Company. Before 1863 this property stood idle for a time, which fact being known to the Waterbury Hook and Eye Company, they began to consider the feasibility of removing their business to Wolcottville. At the same time the Wadhams Manufacturing Company had stopped work, and the buildings were standing idle. This latter was a company of more than twenty years' standing. In 1838 it was first organized, under the title of Wadhams, Webster & Co., "for the purpose of manufacturing gilt and other buttons, or any articles composed of brass, copper, or other metals," and the officers were Russell C. Abernethy, President, and George D. Wadhams, Martin Webster, and Laurin Wetmore, Directors, the capital stock being fourteen thousand dollars. In 1851, after apparently a successful term of twelve years, a new organization was effected under the name of the Wadhams Manufacturing Company, taking the property of the old company, and adding stock so as to make twenty thousand dollars. The stock-owners were George D. Wadhams, Phineas North, Demas Coe, Samuel T. Seelye, H. P. Ostrum, J. F. Calhoun, Albert A. Mason, Samuel J. Stocking, William S. Steele, Ebenezer Wilson, and William De Forest. The building of the old company was called the button-shop, and it stood east of Main Street, on the old road to Torringford, on the East Branch, at what is now called the iron foundry. After 1851 it took the name of the papier-maché shop, which indicated the character of an additional part of the business of the firm,—the making of daguerreotype-cases, work-boxes, writing-desks, and other articles made in part or wholly of paper. In the beginning of the war this company closed its business.

Some of the members of the hook and eye company at Waterbury formed a company in 1863, called the Seymour Manufacturing Company, to be located at Wolcottville, and these persons were F. J. Seymour, E. Turner, L. W. Coe, S. L. Clark, and J. S. Elton. They, with a capital stock of twenty thousand dollars, purchased the Wadhams property, or papier-maché shop, and continued some of the kinds of work which had been done there, and added others. They made a specialty of brass window-trimmings, including a variety of articles for hanging window-curtains and ornamenting windows.

In 1864 the Turner & Seymour Manufacturing Company purchased the knitting-mill, or the old cotton-mill property, the building standing on the site of the old or first woolen-mill, and transferred their hook and eye business from Waterbury to this mill.

In 1866 these two firms consolidated under the name of Turner & Seymour Manufacturing Company, retaining possession and continuing work in both mills. After a short time an iron foundry was erected adjoining the papier-maché building, where they have continued to cast a variety of articles, mostly for household use, including American scissors of several classes or sizes, ends or fixtures for window-curtains, and many other items, varying their work according to public demand or invention and use. Their illustrated catalogue covers one hundred and twenty pages, many of which pages are a condensed schedule of articles of the same name, but varying in size or style or adaptability.

The capital stock is one hundred thousand dollars, and their sales run from two to three hundred thousand dollars a year. They are now selling goods at half the price they sold the same article seven years ago. The wholesale store of this company is at 81 Reade Street, New York City.

The present officers are Elisha Turner, President; L. W. Coe, Treasurer; L. G. Turner, Secretary.

The Excelsior Needle Company.—This company was organized March 2, 1866, with twenty thousand dollars capital, and the following persons as directors: Achille F. Migeon, President; Charles Alvord, Secretary; and Elisha Turner, James Wooding, George M. Isbell. The superintendency of the work devolved upon Mr. Isbell until 1869, since which time that position has been filled by James Alldis.

This company has for its customers all sewing-machine companies except those who make their own needles. The Wheeler & Wilson Company, of Bridgeport, purchase their needles here, the contract with them for several years having been one hundred and fifty thousand needles per month.

The company have at the inventory of every year between four and five millions of needles, or, in other words, they carry about forty thousand dollars' worth of stock the year through. The capacity of the shop is twenty-five thousand per day. The amount of sales per year is about one hundred thousand dollars.

The Hardware Company.—This company was organized Jan. 1, 1864, with a capital of twelve thousand dollars, and the stock-owners were George B. Turrell, Franklin Farrell, and Achille F. Migeon. They commenced work in the old lock-shop in Torrington Hollow, formerly occupied by Edmund Wooding, where they continued one year and a half, during which time they purchased land- and water-privileges half a mile down the Naugatuck, and erected commodious buildings about one hundred and fifty feet long, and removed into them in the autumn of 1865. The leading work at this time was the making of skates of all sizes and various styles. In February, 1870, the capital stock was increased to fifty-two thousand dollars, and in October of the same year they bought of George B. Turrell, of New York, a patented beer-cooler, and increased their capital to one hundred thousand dollars. The work of making this beer-cooler has constituted a considerable portion of the business of the company since that time, being one important branch of business.

On Feb. 13, 1872, they bought the skate-manufacturing business of Frederick Stevens, of New York, and increased the capital to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and erected a new three-story building one hundred feet long by forty wide, thus greatly increasing the manufacture of skates, and many other articles have been added to the goods produced of iron, wood, and leather.

The company employ in good times about one hundred men, using both water- and steam-power, and their sales amount to about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year. Their buildings are located at the northwest corner of Wolcottville, and have been the occasion for the erection of a number of fine-appearing dwellings in that part of the village. This is one of the largest parlor-or roller- skate manufacturing establishments in the world. The present officers are George B. Turrell, of New York, President; Achille F. Migeon, Secretary; and J. F. Calhoun, Treasurer.

C. Hotchkiss & Sons.—In 1857, Deacon Charles Hotchkiss and his son, Edward C., purchased what was known as the Wilson mill property and fitted it for their work as builders, under the name of C. Hotchkiss & Son. This name was changed afterwards to C. Hotchkiss & Sons, in which form it still stands. Mr. Hotchkiss had been engaged in building previous to this, in Wolcottville and the country around, more than ten years, but his mill was two miles north of Torrington Hollow and inconvenient; now he secured this mill property, and arranged it for all the various parts of a complete business of building dwellings, meeting-houses, mills, and the like throughout the region. During the twenty years this firm have been engaged in this business, with what Mr. Hotchkiss had done previously, they have put up a large proportion of the buildings in the village, besides doing much work at distances from five to twenty miles.

The Alvord Carriage Manufactory was founded in 1831, and was a large concern. Its officers were Nelson Alvord, president; and among the directors were Henry Hopkins, A. G. Bradford, Charles B. Smith, and B. R. Agard. It closed upon the breaking out of the late Rebellion.

The Wolcottville Hardware Manufacturing Company was organized with the following stockholders: Wolcottville Brass Company, Norman Cady, Gordon W. Quinby, Elezur D. Harrington, Nelson Alvord, George D. Wadhams, Henry Hopkins, Charles G. Pond, George N. Pond, Virgil C. Goodwin, N. B. Lathrop, Darius Wilson, Edwin W. Moseley, and George P. Bissell.

The Hendy Machine Company was started in 1870 by Henry J. and Arthur Hendy, and is in successful operation.

THE WOLCOTTVILLE REGISTER

was established by Henry Bolton in August, 1874, by whom it was continued about three years and then sold to C. James, A.M. Mr. James published it three years, when it was sold to Mr. E. A. Hayes, the present proprietor. It is an excellent local journal, and justly merits its present prosperity. Independent. It is now called the Torrington Register, to conform to the change of name of the village.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MILO BURR.

Milo Burr was born at Torrington, Conn., Jan. 1, 1797. He was a lineal descendant of Benjamin Burr, who settled in Hartford in 1639, and was one of the original proprietors of that town. John Burr was the first of the family who settled in Litchfield County. He purchased land in Torrington, Torringford parish, in 1747, where he kept a public-house, which is now standing. His second son, Reuben, was a farmer, and resided about a half-mile east of the present village of Burrville, where he raised a large family, of whom Milo, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the youngest son. His early life was spent on his father's farm, with limited educational advantages. His only capital was his strong arm and resolute will. He first went to work by the month, and soon purchased land where the village of Burrville now stands, and commenced the task of making a home and fortune for himself. By his energy and judicious management he soon took rank among the leading business men of his day. He purchased a large tract of timber-land, and engaged in the lumber business. At one time Mr. Burr had three saw-mills engaged in the manufacture of lumber. He erected a dam, and constructed what is known as the Burr reservoir, west of the village. Other enterprises he pushed with much energy and vigor for the public good and the enlargement of the village. There were no sudden accessions of wealth, but year by year the improvements were made and other branches of business established. As the timber was taken from the land farms were made, houses erected, etc. In the location and construction of the Naugatuck Railroad Mr. Burr took an active part, with other leading men along the line. Upon the completion of the road a station and post-office were established, under the name of Burrville. Mr. Burr lived to see quite a pretentious village, bearing his own name, and of which he was the principal owner. He died in his seventy-sixth year, respected by all. He married Mary Skinner, of Winsted, by whom he had four children, of whom John M. is the only survivor. He was born March 8, 1833, and resides in his father's homestead, which was erected in 1827, and to which he has made substantial improvements, a view of which may be seen in this work. John M. Burr inherited not only the estate of his father, but in a large degree the enterprise and sagacity exhibited by him, and continues the improvements, in harmony with the spirit of the founder. He has held several town offices, and represented the town in the Legislature of 1871; has been postmaster of the village for more than twenty years, and is one of the active representative men of Litchfield County. He married Lavinia A., daughter of Samuel Hurlbert, of Winchester. They have one son, John Hurlbert, born Sept. 17, 1860.

JESSE B. ROSE.

Jesse B. Rose, son of Bela and Mary (Brockett) Rose, was born in the town of Wolcott, Conn., Jan. 10, 1821. The grandfather of Mr. Rose was from Branford, Conn., and his ancestors were from Massachusetts, where they were among the early settlers and influential people. Jesse B. Rose worked on his father's farm until he was sixteen years of age, when he went to Bristol, where he was employed in a woolen-mill until he was twenty-one. Soon after that he was employed in a woolen-mill at Naugatuck as foreman in the carding-room. He served in the same capacity in other mills until 1849, when he came to Wolcottville in the employment of W. R. Sladt, of the Union Manufacturing Company. Here Mr. Rose occupied the position of foreman of the carding-room until 1859, when he became a stockholder and superintendent. In 1873 he was chosen president of the company, which position he still occupies. Mr. Rose has been connected with the Union Manufacturing Company through all its changes, from its organization to the present time. He is also interested and is a stockholder in other manufacturing enterprises of the town. Politically, Mr. Rose is a Republican, and has been since the organization of the party. He has held several town offices, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1877. He has been twice married; his first wife was Perlina Hart, by whom he had three sons, two of whom are now living, Edwin E. and Willis A. His second wife was Mrs. Harriet E. Griswold, formerly Harriet E. Humphrey, of Goshen. She has one son, Frederick H., by her former husband.

FREDERICK P. HILLS.

Deacon Frederick P. Hills was born Sept. 1, 1808, in Goshen, and died at his residence in Torrington, April 10, 1881, where he had resided since 1846. He is descended from Benoni Hills, who was born in Northampton, Mass., in 1700. He moved to Suffield, thence to Durham, and settled in Goshen about 1740, where he raised a large family, of whom Medad was the fourth child. He was known as "Colonel" Medad Hills; was a Revolutionary soldier, and a man of note; was a large land-owner in Winchester, where he resided. He raised a family of five children, of whom Miles was the youngest. He was born Aug. 31, 1766; was twice married, first to Abigail Wilcox. After her death he married Anne Butrick, by whom he had nine children, viz.: Levi, born May 29, 1795; Medad, born June 17, 1797; Abigail, born July 17, 1799; Eben, born Oct. 8, 1801; Mary A., born Sept. 2, 1804; Frederick P., born Sept. 1, 1808; Lucy A., born March, 1810; Elisha, born May 23, 1812; Roxy, born Oct. 6, 1814.

Deacon Frederick P. Hills, the immediate subject of our sketch, married first Lucy E., daughter of John Wetmore, of Winchester, Sept. 11, 1833. She died Dec. 26, 1858, leaving one daughter, Lucy A., born Sept. 7, 1841. She married Leroy Wetmore, and died Aug. 24, 1871. Mr. Hills was a second time married, Dec. 7, 1859, to Mrs. Harriet B. Bailey, formerly Harriet B. Frisbe, oldest daughter of Levi Frisbe, a prominent farmer of Litchfield.

Deacon Hills was a man well known in this part of the county for his upright character and strict integrity; he was slow in coming to conclusions, but when once established he was as firm as the granite hills of Connecticut. His word was unquestioned, and his character above reproach. He was an active and consistent member of the Congregational Church, and a deacon for many years. He was called to fill many positions of trust and honor, especially as trustee to settle estates, and enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who knew him.

ORSON BARBER.

Orson Barber was the youngest of five children of Elihu Barber, and the only survivor of the family. His grandfather was Joseph Barber, an early settler in Windsor, Conn.

Elihu Barber was born April 19, 1765. He came to Torrington when a young man; married Jemima North, April 19, 1787. Their children were Mary, born June 22, 1793; Elihu, born Feb. 24, 1798; Jemima, born April 16, 1800; Elkanah, born June 25, 1803; Orson, born Nov. 6, 1806. When Elihu Barber came to Torrington his only capital was his strong arm and his resolute will. He became a large land-owner, and was a man of considerable property. He gave to each of his sons a farm, and to the daughters an equivalent in other property. He was a man of great physical strength and endurance. He is said to have been drawing a load of rye from the field with a yoke of oxen, and, going down a steep hill, the yoke dropped from one of the oxen, whereupon he took up the yoke and carried it, in place of the ox, down the hill safely. Orson, the youngest of his children, received the home-farm in Newfield, where he now resides. He is a man of strong common sense and good judgment, and commands the respect of all who know him. Has always taken a deep interest in the schools of his district, and for more than thirty years has held some office on the school board. Has been for more than forty years a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Barber has been twice married, first to Roxy Ann Eggleston, in 1829. She was born May 16, 1811; died June 29, 1840. He was again married, Dec. 4, 1842, to Martha, daughter of Roger Starks, of Winchester. She was born Aug. 9, 1823. Children are: by first wife, Elihu D., born Aug. 28, 1831, died May 27, 1839; Louisa R., born May 15, 1840, married Carlton C. Fyler, Aug. 15, 1861 (children are Carlton C., Sheridan B., and Walter S). By the second wife Mr. Barber has one daughter, Frances M., born April 29, 1854, married John W. Gamwell, Nov. 23, 1874; children are Louis J., Charles W., and Carrie F.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.*

"Six years previous to the organization of this church an ecclesiastical society was formed here, in July, 1750, called the Society of East Greenwich. It was a part of the town of Kent. In fact, it is said that the town of Kent was first settled in this part in 1737, and that the first white child in that town was born within our limits. This first child, born in 1738, seems to have been quite a historical character. Her father, Mr. Stephen Paine, came from Canterbury and located near the lake, on Potash Hill. His daughter Rhoda was not only the first in point of time, but she was also one of the first in the order of strength, being, as the story goes, 'able to lift a barrel of cider into a cart.'

"This society remained a part of Kent until May, 1786, when it was constituted a town and society by itself, receiving its name after Gen. Warren, who fell so valorously in the battle of Bunker Hill.

"The church was organized in 1756, with a membership of eighteen, twelve males and six females. The first pastor, ordained on the 29th of June, 1757, at which time the church was admitted into the Litchfield Consociation, was Rev. Silvanus Osborn, a graduate of Princeton College in 1754. He is spoken of by his successors as being an orthodox, plain, sensible preacher, and a man of eminent piety. He married Miss Abigail, the daughter of Mr. Stephen Noble, of New Milford. His widow married Rev. Jeremiah Day, of New Preston, and was the mother of four sons and one daughter. The daughter died young. The illustrious President Day, of Yale College, was one of the sons. Mr. Osborn's salary was to be thirty pounds for the first year, to increase, until the fourth year it was to be fifty pounds, payable in almost anything.

"This church had no house of worship until eleven years after Mr. Osborn's settlement. In the mean time they met for worship in private houses, and especially in a school-house, then standing on the hill beyond Deacon F. A. Curtiss'. The first meeting-house was raised in May, 1768, and completed the next year. It stood a little to the east of the present building, with doors on three sides, and was a very plain structure, as became the times. It had no steeple and no chimney and no paint. It had a high pulpit, with the mysterious sounding-board still higher. The seats were in the pew form, and the occupants faced one another, as in a modern omnibus. The building of such a house, plain as it was, was a great work for such a people, few in number and very limited in resources, with everything to do. The fathers had no church-building societies to call upon for help. They must help themselves, and they did, and the Lord blessed them.

"Mr. Osborn was succeeded by Rev. Peter Starr, who was ordained pastor March 18, 1772. The church was then composed of fifty-two members. Mr. Starr was the youngest son of Samuel and Abigail Starr; he was born in Danbury, September, 1744, and graduated at Yale College in 1764. He studied theology with Rev. Mr. Brindsmade, in Washington, and Dr. Bellamy, in Bethlehem, and was licensed by the Fairfield East Association in 1769. Before coming to Warren he preached (as a 'candidate,' it may be) in Danbury, New Canaan, Roxbury, New Milford, Greenfield, Winchester, and Morris. He was heard here first Sept. 21, 1771, and preached twenty-two Sabbaths previous to his ordination.

"Mr. Starr," says Mr. Bassett, "left behind some manuscripts, which I have had an opportunity to look over. Among them is a book in which he kept an account of his expenditures during the years preceding his settlement, and which is interesting as showing very marked changes to have taken place since that day. While ministers of our time have some expenditures which the fathers were saved from, we have some advantages in this respect over them. For example: this young candidate for the ministry in 1770 charges himself with having paid 'one pound and fifteen shillings (about nine dollars) for a wig.' Not only was this wig a pretty expensive article to purchase, it also cost a good deal to keep it in order. Quite occasionally he puts down in the debtor column, 'For dressing my wig, fourpence.' Quite likely, however, the dignity gained well compensated for the expenditure. We find other charges still more frequent. For example: 'One quart of rum, one shilling twopence;' 'one quart of rum, eightpence;' 'one quart of rum, tenpence.' Whether the 'rum' in these cases varied in quality with the price, or the young preacher took his refreshment at a more fashionable bar at sometimes than at others, does not appear. As he traveled about with his horse he would stop and feed, and then there would be a charge 'for oats and flip, fivepence.' This use of liquors was no peculiarity of Mr. Starr's, as we all know. Everybody in those days used them, as we use tea and coffee. They were among the prominent things always provided for every public entertainment. It may be doubted whether an ordination took place in the last century without a free use of such drinks. This habit continued through about one quarter of this century, when a more excellent way was learned. When Mr. Starr built his house in 1786, which is still standing, a cupboard was provided for the keeping of liquors (as can now be seen). He lived, however, to see the time when that cupboard could be at liberty for other purposes, and to do very brave battle in the cause of temperance.

* Condensed from a historical address delivered at Warren, July 23, 1876, by Rev. William Elliott Bassett.

"Mr. Starr died July 17, 1829, aged eighty-five.

"He had lived to preach his half-century sermon, and to sustain the sacred office seven years after that. Fifty-two years its undivided responsibilities and labors rested upon him. He outlived every one of those who were members of the church when he came among them.

"Mr. Starr's first wife was Sarah Robbins, daughter of a clergyman in Branford, and sister of Mr. Robbins, fifty-two years pastor in Norfolk. Four of their children preceded him into the other world; five survived him and lived honored and useful lives. He was a member of the corporation of Yale College from 1813 to 1817. He made three missionary tours into Vermont in 1794 and '95, twice with Mr. Robbins, of Norfolk, and once Mr. Hooker, of Goshen, accompanied him. He married, for his second wife, the widow of Rev. John Stevens, of Massachusetts, daughter of Elijah Smith, of Vermont."

THE REVOLUTION.

"Early in the ministry of Mr. Starr the struggle of the Revolution came on. While no utterances of his have come down to us, that he gave to it his warm sympathy we need no other evidence than his own training and character. This town was largely represented in the activities of that holy strife. Eleazar Curtiss was a major in the service; Joseph Carter and Peleg Sturtevant were captains; Deacon Ebenezer Tanner, Samuel Carter, and Nathaniel Swift were lieutenants. Besides them, Augustine and Lysander Curtiss, Deacon Fowler, Philip and Eben Strong, George Batterson, William James (colored), Chauncey Dennison, and John Holloway are known to have been connected with the army, and there were doubtless others. Of the particulars of this service I have learned but little. Maj. Eleazar Curtiss was in the battle at Danbury, and caught Gen. Wooster as he fell from his horse in that battle. No one that knows to what hardships those fathers had accustomed themselves will doubt that they did good service in those days that 'tried men's souls.'

"The house of worship, which was pretty new when Mr. Starr first preached here, showed signs of age before he did. It became, in process of time, very much dilapidated, occasioning the remark of one that he 'had heard often of the Lord's house, but never before of the Lord's barn!' The aged pastor urged to a rebuilding. His text on one occasion was the one so often used in similar circumstances, Haggai i. 4: 'Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?' As a result, in 1818 the present edifice was commenced, and was finished in 1820. It was patterned after the church in Norfolk, which had been recently built.

"While speaking of this new house, I will notice a very interesting memorial of that day which has come to us. The cushion and connections in that new church were furnished by the ladies, and they sewed up in the cushion, for the benefit of posterity, a paper, of which the following is a copy:

"'In the year of our Lord 1820, under the Presidency of Monroe, the Governorship of Oliver Wolcott, who was the first toleration Governor of Connecticut, and the 48th year of the ministry of Peter Starr, was built a new church in Warren, and this cushion made and placed in it on the first day of June, the day of dedication. When this cushion shall have turned into rags, then shall this paper be discovered, which is designed to excite in the hearts of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of those who, to their laud be it spoken, unitedly subscribed $30, and purchased therewith this cushion and branches for the pulpit. Then, too, will it be known that this cushion was made by the hands of three young virgins, whose names will be had evermore in tender remembrance: P. and F. Talmadge, and S. Saunders.'

"The first two of these 'virgins' afterwards had husbands whose labors had to do with 'pulpit cushions,' one being the wife of Dr. John Marsh, the apostle of temperance. The third lived single. All are counted with the dead.

"The good spirit showed in 1820 was followed afterwards, and we find in our cushion another paper, written by one who is remembered as the lamented wife of Dr. White, of New Orleans, who died in 1863:

"'In the year of our Lord 1845, under the Presidency of James K. Polk, and the Governorship of Roger S. Baldwin, and in the second year of the pastorate of Rev. John R. Keep, the ladies of Warren observed that this pulpit cushion, under the influence of twenty-five years of sound orthodox preaching, had, in the language of our predecessors, 'turned to rags.' Subscriptions were accordingly made by the ladies, and a new cover purchased to conceal the ravages of time. On Thursday, the 7th of August, assembled, for the purpose of re-covering the cushion, Mrs. Jane Sackett Hine, Mrs. Emily Sackett Comstock, Misses Laura Taylor, Lucy C. Sackett, Marion B. Bradley, Evelyn Starr, Sarah Robbins Starr, Helen Talmadge, and Mr. Henry J. Taylor. Upon opening the cushion the paper of 1820 was, to our great gratification, discovered. Trusting that the design of that paper is answered in the renewed zeal with which it has animated us, we follow the example of those gratefully remembered ladies whose skillful needles preceded us, and deposit this paper, hoping that the generations who come after may be encouraged to like laudable efforts.

"'EVELYN STARR, Scribe.

"'WARREN, CONN., Aug. 7, 1845.'

"There is laid away in the cushion still another paper, of a later date:

"'In the year of our Lord 1859, under the Presidency of James Buchanan, the Governorship of Wm. A. Buckingham, and the first year of the ministry of Rev. Francis Lobdell, the members of the Ecclesiastical Society of Warren saw fit to remodel the church, which for forty years had served as a place of worship, and to give to it a modern style. After due deliberation, the work of repairing was commenced on the morning of August 1st. The ladies of the church, wishing to give expression to their generosity, met at the Town-House for consultation upon the best method of procuring funds for the purchase of carpets, cushion, and pulpit fixtures, Aug. 10th. After much deliberation, Mrs. Jane Carter Starr, Mrs. Maranda Curtiss Strong, Miss Huldah Everitt, and Miss Maria Gilbert were chosen solicitors to visit each family who are in the habit of attending our church, and ask of them a gift for the Lord's house. The work was entered upon, and to our great surprise the handsome sum of $120 was secured, every lady giving of her substance as she felt disposed, which by unanimous vote was appropriated to purposes aforesaid. The work progressed in all its parts till Saturday, October 1st, when it was pronounced complete, and ready for our assembling on the morning of Oct. 2d, for divine worship. Having completed our work in behalf of the house of God, we would follow the example of our beloved predecessors, and deposit a record of our doings, hoping that their example, with ours, may serve as a stimulus to greater effort on the part of those who come after. When these generous hearts and active hands that have contributed so liberally of their substance and their labor are mouldering in the dust, may our words be held in grateful remembrance by those who are next called upon to rebuild the house of the Lord.

"'M. C. STRONG,

"'In behalf of the Ladies of the Church and Society of Warren.

"'Oct. 1st, '59.'

"At the time spoken of in the last paper, eight hundred dollars were raised by subscription for repairs upon the church. The pulpit and the pews were brought nearer to a level by putting the new pulpit lower, and also by raising the floor of the sanctuary. The house was new-seated.

"Other expenses to be spoken of are the purchase of the parsonage, in 1864, by a subscription of one thousand eight hundred dollars, and the organ, in 1872, for nearly one thousand three hundred dollars. 'Liberty' was given by the society 'to put up stoves' in 1833. Previous to that time people had kept warm as they could.

"The fund of the society was raised by subscription in 1790, amounting to three thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars, from one hundred and two subscribers. Miss Miriam Buck left to the society, by will, one hundred and ten dollars and ninety cents, which was received July 15, 1840. Mr. John Eyles and Mr. Abner Welch added to the fund. In 1875 it amounted to four thousand six hundred and sixty-five dollars and seventy-nine cents.

"Nineteen persons have served here in the office of deacon, including those now in office. Of the two first, Deacons Smalley and Lee, I have been able to learn nothing except the date of their appointment. Deacons Abel Comstock and Jonathan Hitchcock probably removed to Vermont, as Mr. Starr spoke of visiting persons of those names there in one of his missionary tours. Deacon Salmon Sackett removed to Talmadge, Ohio, and Deacon Joseph A. Tanner to Waverly, Ill. Deacons Justus Sackett, Ebenezer Tanner, Amos Fowler, John Talmadge, Jonathan Reynolds, and Gustavus Rouse lived and died among us.

"Besides these deacons at home, Warren has raised up deacons for other churches not a few. I am able to name Deacons Ralph C. and Theodore Curtiss, Waverly, Ill.; Eldred, of Janesville, Wis.; Myron and Moses Sackett, Canfield; Ephraim M. Sturtevant, Cleveland; Benjamin Carter and Etheil Strong, Edinburgh; Bradford and Isaac Sturtevant, and Harvey Sackett, Ruggles; Clarke Sackett, Talmadge, Ohio; George Sackett, Cuyahoga Falls; Rufus C. Swift, Cooperstown, N. Y.; George Starr, LL.D., Middlebury, Vt.; and George Starr Humphrey, New Preston, Conn.; besides Elders Frederick Starr, Rochester; Myron P. Hopkins, Medina, N. Y.; and Wm. H. Swift, Vineland, N. J.

"This is also the mother-church of many clergymen, some of whom are as distinguished as any in the country. Their names are Revs. Josiah and Prince Hawes, Reuben Taylor, Nathaniel Swift, Urban Palmer, Charles G. Finney, D.D., Seth Sackett, Alanson Saunders, Julian M. Sturtevant, D.D., John S. Griffin, Lucius S. Rouse, Julius Reynolds, John L. Taylor, D.D., Myron N. Morris, and George Edward Stone. Two of these, in their positions as presidents of colleges and preachers of great power, have had influence second to very few of this day. It will ever be a marked thing in the history of this town that it was the birthplace of a Finney and a Sturtevant. This may well be a stimulus to the young.

"And here I am reminded of one thing of which this church and community have reason to be proud, and that is the character of the people raised up here. Whatever Warren has failed to do, it has not failed to give birth and training to men and women. Not to speak of those now among us, concurrent testimony assures us that the men of the last and former generations were, many of them, of marked excellence. The late Dr. McEwen, of New London, related the following incident in an address at Litchfield in 1852:

"'A Dr. Thompson, of New London, was traveling, and spent a Sabbath in Warren, at the public-house. He attended church, and, without making himself known, observed what occurred. A well-dressed, dignified person ascended the pulpit, and in good style performed the ordinary service of that place. Prayers, sermon, and psalms came forth as from a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. The stranger observed that prayer was offered for the aged pastor of the church in his absence for his health. In the afternoon the pulpit was occupied by another, who, like the former occupant of the desk, was happy in the performance of all the duties, he also remembering the absent pastor. Dr. Thompson, upon returning to his lodgings, remarked to his host, "You have an abundance of clergy in this town,—two present to-day and one absent." "Oh," was the reply, "those whom you have heard to-day are our two deacons."'

"An aged friend of mine remembers being specially interested in the remarks of the Warren delegate at a conference of churches held in another county nearly fifty years ago. If Deacon Talmadge was that delegate, as he doubtless was one of the deacons just referred to, no one who knew him will be surprised at the testimony. If it was not he, there were others who could meet the case."

The following is a list of the pastors from the organization of the church to the present time: Silvanus Osborn, installed June 29, 1757; died May 7, 1771. Peter Starr, installed March 18, 1772; died July 17, 1829. Hart Talcott, installed May 11, 1825; died March 27, 1836. Harley Goodwin, installed June 27, 1838; dismissed Dec. 12, 1843; died January, 1855. John R. Keep, installed June 12, 1844; dismissed Nov. 5, 1852. Montgomery M. Wakeman, installed Sept. 27, 1854; dismissed June 24, 1856. Francis Lobdell, installed Nov. 3, 1859; dismissed April 7, 1863. Wm. Elliott Bassett, installed Oct. 12, 1864; dismissed Nov. 15, 1875. Willis S. Colton, present pastor.

The list of deacons were as follows: Joseph Smalley, Daniel Lee, Abel Comstock, Justus Sackett, Jonathan Hitchcock, Ebenezer Tanner, Salmon Sackett, Amos Fowler, John Talmadge, Joseph A. Tanner, Jonathan Reynolds, Gustavus Rouse, John Taylor, Clark S. Swift, William Hopkins, Benjamin E. Carter, Franklin A. Curtiss.

There is a Methodist church also in this town, but we have been unable to secure data for its history.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

DEACON WILLIAM HOPKINS.

William Hopkins was born Sept. 10, 1803. His father, Anthony P. Hopkins, was a victim of the terrible epidemic of 1813, leaving William, at the age of ten years, the oldest son of a family of five children. From his earliest years his Christian mother instilled into his heart steadily, constantly, and successfully the principles of fidelity to right and of a broad Christian charity. She lived to see the germ she had planted come to perfection and its fullest growth, and had the satisfaction of knowing that he was known and honored by his townsmen for his tender sympathy for the suffering, benevolence towards all worthy objects, and his sterling Christian integrity. In the fullness of years, like a shock of corn fully ripe, she passed away to the better land, April 18, 1865, aged ninety-seven years.

Mr. Hopkins early joined the Congregational Church, and while yet a young man was appointed deacon, and for over half a century he walked among the people of Warren, and malice and suspicion never dared whisper aught against his honor or his Christian character. By the death of his father he was, while yet a child, withdrawn from the advantages of school, and this loss he always deplored. It may have been a valuable discipline for him to have thrown upon him so early the headship of the family, for if it was his lot to pass but a very few years in school buildings, he was always a student, never idle. He read much and thought more, and as he grew in years, and the circle of his acquaintance became larger, his mind became more and more enriched by his close association with many cultivated people, and as he received it he assimilated the knowledge by the very act of imparting it to others. He used what he had, and more was given him. The richness of his instructions to his Bible-class never tired of listening, his conversations on any and all subjects, and the easy illustrations to point a moral, testified to a well-furnished mind unusually acute and vigorous. He was never an idler. Possessed of a healthy and vigorous physical nature through youth and middle life, he enjoyed labor, and could and did begin his work before the sun appeared in the morning, and yet, untired, be busy long after it had sunk behind the western hills. Rev. Mr. Bassett, in his memorial sermon, preached June 15, 1879, says, "Nor can I leave this part of my subject without saying a word as to the beauty of Deacon Hopkins' physique. I know not how it was with him in the early period of life, but he had a charming beauty in his old age,—his abundant silvery hair, lying in graceful curls; his large forehead, overhanging his bright, sparkling eyes, which could not have been brighter when the fires of youth shone through them; a mouth holding the impress of the kind words it had uttered; his whole countenance lighted up with kindliness and cheer, radiated very frequently by intelligent smiles, preceding and following the sharp witticisms which were as natural to him as his very breath. Altogether, he presented a look that charmed us all. Such was he among us physically." He was an earnest and a willing worker. On the farm, in society, or the church, where anything reasonable and right was to be done, there was no fear of his failing to respond. Social gatherings of a benevolent character were sure to be enlivened by his presence. A subscription-paper for a good object would always bear his name with a generous sum affixed. If work was to be done about the grounds of the church, he would be among the first to come, and stayed until the last. He was in the world for work, and that he did nobly and well all through the years of his life of seventy-five years, until his death at his life-long home, "Lakeside," March 17, 1879. We can no better conclude this sketch than to take the following from the discourse already alluded to: "Deacon Hopkins was what he was because of his connection with Christ. His 'life was hid with Christ in God.' It was in connection with this that he had his grandest thoughts, his noblest impulses, his most manly purposes and achievements. Not only did his life blossom in his religion, it was rooted in his religion. So he lived and so he died: a man among us. Nature was liberal in her outfit of him, equipping him well for a manly career; and by grace he was led to a manly use of his powers in a life characterized by honesty, helpfulness, self-control, fortitude, willing to bear a man's part in life's burdens, and in the service and love of God. As such we knew him, as such we loved him, as such we will cherish and honor his memory."

THE town of Washington is located south of the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Kent, Warren, and Litchfield, on the east by Morris and Bethlehem, on the south by Woodbury and Roxbury, and on the west by New Milford and Kent. Its surface is rolling and soil fertile.

The town consists of two ecclesiastical societies, Judea and New Preston. The former embraces the territory taken from Woodbury and Litchfield, and the latter that from Kent and New Milford.

The first settlement in the town was made in Judea society, by Joseph Hurlbut, in 1736. Among the other early settlers were Increase Moseley, Nathaniel Durkee, John Barker, Friend Weeks, Joseph Gillett, and Samuel Titcher.

ORGANIZATION OF JUDEA SOCIETY.

The little settlement increased in numbers, and five years later twenty persons presented a petition to the General Assembly for "winter privileges,"—that is, the privilege of supporting a minister of their own distinct from the old society. They also asked that they might be relieved "from paying taxes for a new school-house just built in the First society, and also from parish taxes, that they may build a school-house of their own." The petition was granted, to continue two years, and they were released from one-half of the parish taxes, and from taxes to build a new meeting-house, provided they were "in no ways Active in the Affairs of Building a new Meeting-House in said first Society."

In October, 1741, a petition was presented, signed by twenty-six persons, praying to be organized into an ecclesiastical society, and appointed "Our Trusty and well-beloved friend, Friend Weeks, agent and attorney to prosecute our petition." The signers of this petition were Nathaniel Durkee, John Baker, Joseph Gillett, Joseph Chittenden, Elisha Stone, Samuel Pitcher, Jr., James Pitcher, Increase Moseley, Lemuel Barker, Daniel Castle, Samuel Branton, Ezra Tyrrill, Jr., Ebenezer Allen, Zadock Clark, Elijah Hurd, Joseph Hurd, Joseph Hurlbut, Benjamin Ingrahams, John Royce, John Hurd, Jr., Jedediah Hurd, and Benjamin Hinman.

The petition was granted in October, 1741, and the society erected with the following boundaries:

"Beginning att Col^{a} Johnson's line at New Milford bounds, and from thence Running Eastward in s^{d} line untill it Comes to the line Dividing Between Bethlehem and the West part of the North Purchase, and thence to Extend North to the north line of s^{d} purchase, and thence Westward to New Milford Line, and thence Southward to the first-mentioned place, at the End of Coll. Johnson's line at New Milford bounds."

At the same session twenty-four persons petitioned for a land-tax of thirty shillings per lot, which was granted for four years.

The matter of the church was immediately proceeded with, and in May, 1742, twenty-six petitioners stated that they had "Unanymously and Lovingly Agreed upon A Place for to set a Meeting-House." It was built during the same year.

WEROAMAUG.

The reservation of Weroamaug, or Raumaug, was in the parish of New Preston, adjacent to the reservation of the Bantam Indians, over whom his jurisdiction extended. He was a true friend of the whites, and in his last years professed to have become a convert to Christianity. The Rev. Daniel Boardman, who was ordained as the minister at New Milford in 1716, became much interested in him. In a letter to a friend he calls him "that distinguished sachem, whose great abilities and eminent virtues, joined with his extensive dominion, rendered him the most potent prince of that or any other day in this colony; and his name ought to be remembered by the faithful historian as much as that of any crowned head since his was laid in the dust." During Raumaug's last illness Mr. Boardman constantly attended him, and endeavored to confirm his mind in the vital truths of the Christian faith. It was a sad place for the dying chieftain, for a majority of his people, and even his wife, were bitter opponents of the white man's religion, and used all their influence against it. One day, when the good pastor was standing by the sachem's bedside, the latter asked him to pray, to which he assented. It happened that there was a sick child in the village, and a pow-wow was in attendance, who had undertaken to cure it with his superstitious rites. As soon as the clergyman commenced his prayer, Raumaug's wife sent for the medicine-man, and ordered him to commence his exercises at the door of the lodge. The pow-wow at once set up a hideous shouting and howling, and Mr. Boardman prayed louder, so that the sick man might hear him above the uproar. Each raised his voice louder and louder as he went on, while the Indians gathered around, solicitous for the success of their prophet. The pow-wow was determined to tire out the minister; and he, on the other hand, was quite as fully resolved not to be put to silence in the discharge of his duty by the blind worshiper of Satan. The invincible minister afterwards gave it as his belief that he prayed full three hours before he was permitted to come off conqueror. The pow-wow having completely exhausted himself with his efforts, gave one unearthly yell, and then, taking to his heels, never stopped till he was cooling himself up to his neck in the Housatonic. Raumaug died about the year 1735, or some fifteen years after the first settlement of Litchfield.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The history of the Congregational Church is really the continuation of that of the parish or society as related above. The church was organized Sept. 1, 1742, with the following members: Rev. Reuben Judd, Joseph Gillett, Benjamin Hurd, Deacon Increase Moseley, Allen Curtis, Timothy Hurd, Deacon Joseph Hurd, Joseph Chittenden, John Royce, John Baker, Elijah Hurd, and Samuel Bell. On the 5th of the following September the following females were received into the new church: Deborah Moseley, Ann Hurd, Rachel Weeks, Jerusha Baker, Abigail Hurd, Mary Hurd, Tabitha Hurd, Dorcas Royce, Mary Durkee, and Esther Durkee.

The following is a list of the pastors of this church from its organization to the present time: Rev. Reuben Judd, a graduate of Yale, was ordained the same day the church was organized, and the ceremonies took place in a grove near the residence of the late Daniel N. Brinsmade. He was dismissed May 6, 1747. Rev. Daniel Brinsmade, a graduate of Yale, was ordained March 9, 1749. He died April 23, 1793. Rev. Noah Merwin was installed as colleague with Rev. Mr. Brinsmade in March, 1785. He died April 12, 1795. For a number of months after the death of Mr. Merwin the church was supplied by the neighboring ministers, and by Mr. Platt Bassett and Amasa Porter, candidates for settlement. Rev. Ebenezer Porter began preaching in 1795, and in the following year was ordained. He was dismissed Dec. 18, 1811, having been elected professor of Andover Theological Seminary. He died in 1834. Rev. Cyrus W. Gray was installed in April, 1813, and dismissed Aug. 18, 1815. He was succeeded by Rev. Stephen Mason, who was installed in February, 1818, and was dismissed Dec. 17, 1823. Rev. Gordon Hayes served from Oct. 28, 1829, to June 1, 1852. He was followed by Rev. Ephraim Lyman, who was installed June 30, 1852, and was dismissed June 3, 1863. Rev. Willis S. Colton was installed Aug. 21, 1866, and was dismissed in 1876, since which time Rev. George L. Thrall has been its minister.

During the interval between the pastorates of Revs. Lyman and Colton, Rev. William H. H. Murray for some time supplied the pulpit.

THE FIRST CHURCH IN NEW PRESTON.

In October, 1748, twenty persons obtained leave of the General Assembly to hire a minister for six months in the year, on the ground of their living from seven to ten miles from their places of worship in Kent and New Milford. In May, 1752, the following persons petitioned the General Assembly for a new ecclesiastical society: Samuel Averill, Caleb Rude, Samuel Lake, Moses Averill, Henry Davis, Jehial Murray, Isaac Averill, Joseph Carey, John Guthrie, Daniel Averill, Zebulon Palmer, Jacob Rinney, Samuel Cogswell, Thomas Hodgship, Thos. Morse, Benj. Darling, Samuel Waller, Nathaniel Dewine, Enoch Whittlesey, Jolmjah Jons, Stephen Bosworth, Thos. Beeman, John Benedict, Stephen Noble, Gillead Sperry, Elnathan Curtis, John Bostwick, Benajah Bostwick, Nathan Beale, John Cogswell, Zepheniah Branch, Edward Cogswell, Josiah Cogswell, James Terrill, Jos. Miles, Nathan Hawley, Samuel Cogswell, John Cobb, and Benjamin Capuen. The societies of East Greewich (now Warren), Kent, and New Milford opposed the application mentioned above, and it failed, but was granted in October. In December, 1753, it was voted to lay a tax of twelvepence on the pound to hire a minister for a season, and to build two school-houses by subscription for the use of the society. November, 1754, it was voted to build a meeting-house, thirty-six by twenty-six feet, with five windows of twelve lights each, one hundred rods west of the present stone meeting-house. December, 1766, it was voted to build another meeting-house, fifty by forty feet. This house was inclosed three years later, but was not entirely finished until 1798. In 1806 a permanent fund of five thousand dollars was raised. In 1824 a third meeting-house was built of stone, fifty-four by forty-four feet. In 1853 a majority of the church, with a minority of the society, upon their own responsibility, built a fourth meeting-house in the village of Waramaug, sixty by thirty-nine feet, at an expense of about six thousand dollars, and the church, by a majority vote, on the 27th of January, 1854, voted to remove their place of worship to this house.

The pastors of the church have been as follows: Noah Wadhams, 1757–68; Jeremiah Day, 1770, died in 1806; Samuel Whitlesey, 1807–17; Chas. A. Boardman, 1818–30; Robt. B. Campfield, 1831–34; Columbus Shumway, 1834–35; Merit S. Platt, 1836–37; Benj. B. Parsons, 1839–42; Hollis Read, 1845–51; Samuel F. Bacon, 1851–53; Chas. S. Smith, 1853–55; Jacob H. Strong. The only installed pastor since Mr. Strong was the Rev. H. Upson. Rev. D. Moses supplied the church one year, and Rev. Henry Lancashire has been acting pastor since 1877.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH AT NEW PRESTON HILL.

An unhappy division arose in New Preston in 1853–54, on account of a disagreement about the place of worship. The majority of the society and the minority of the church claim the original organization, though the Consociation decided that the majority of the church, who removed, are to be considered the original church, while the minority retain the records and communion service, and the society with them have the funds for the support of the gospel. The old house has since been extensively repaired.

The pastors have been as follows: Levi S. Beebe, John A. Hempstead, Noah Coe, Williams H. Whittlemore, George Tomlinson, Leonard Bacon, Lewis R. Williams, J. A. Woodhull, Henry Upson, and Rev. A. Isham, the present pastor.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

In about the year 1762 a few families of the Episcopal order resided in this vicinity, and services were occasionally held in private dwellings by the Rev. Thomas Davies, A.M., rector of St. Michael's parish, Litchfield. After the separation of what was known as Davies' Hollow from Litchfield, the Davies family, one of influence, and zealously attached to the church, withdrew from its Litchfield parish and erected a church edifice in Davies' Hollow. The land upon which the church was built was deeded by Mr. John Davies, father of Rev. Thomas Davies, to the new parish, and a condition of the deed required the payment of one peppercorn annually on the feast of St. Michael, if demanded. The church building was erected principally at the expense of the honored churchman John Davies, and it is related of him that, aged and infirm, seated in an arm-chair in the door of his house, he witnessed the raising of the structure. He survived about three years, and died at the age of eighty-six years. The church edifice was removed to its present site in 1813, and received the name of St. John. In consequence of the defective state of the records, it is impossible to give a complete list of the rectors.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, NEW PRESTON.

The first services according to the rites of the Episcopal Church in New Preston were held by Rev. Thomas Davies, A.M., in 1764. The church edifice was erected prior to the Revolution, but during that period was rarely used, and was finally abandoned.

In 1796 the churchmen in the vicinity purchased the building formerly occupied by Jemima Wilkinson, the Friend, and her followers, in New Milford, in which structure they worshiped until 1822, when the present edifice in Marbledale was erected.

Among the rectors who have officiated for St. Andrew's are mentioned the names of Clark, Baldwin, Bersham, Marsh, Jones, Andrews, Kellogg, Lucas, Atwater, Huntington, Gordon, Hitchcock, Sherman, Long, Scott. James L. Scott resigned the charge on the 8th of December, 1867. The Rev. Henry C. Randall became rector on the 2d of August, 1868, and resigned on the 17th of November, 1869. He was succeeded some time in 1870 by the Rev. Charles Husband, who died while rector, on the 20th of December, 1871. He was succeeded, in 1872, by Rev. John N. Marvin, who died in charge, on the 17th of May, 1874. Rev. William L. Peck became rector June 28, 1874, and is the present incumbent.

RISING SUN LODGE, F. AND A. M., No. 27.*

The history of Masonry in Washington must necessarily be divided into two periods, the first extending from the establishment of Rising Sun Lodge, No. 27, to the rise of that great persecution and humbug, Anti-Masonry; the second period embracing the time from the restoration of Rising Sun Lodge to the present time. During the long interval between the suspension of the lodge and restoration of its charter, two full volumes of records were lost, and its jewels were purloined, so that all that remained to us who were active in its restoration were its third volume of records, of six years' use, and some six old brethren, who, though over threescore years and ten, joyfully assisted us in its restoration. A portion of the Grand Lodge records have also been unfortunately lost, and we are left without any certain evidence when and by whom the lodge was chartered. I was told by one of our old brethren that it was instituted near the close of the war of the Revolution.

In the long past Washington was a centre of Masonic importance, for, in addition to Rising Sun Lodge, No. 27, there were also located here Fidelity Chapter, R. A. M., Tyrian Council, No. 13, R. and S. M., and Clinton Encampment, No. 3, K. T.; and at the head of these several Masonic bodies stood that Masonic veteran, Daniel B. Brinsmade, also Grand Master of Connecticut. Clinton Encampment was removed to South Norwalk, the Rising Sun Lodge was restored, while the Chapter and Council have ceased to exist.

From both records and tradition, the old lodge was rich in members, both as regards numbers and character. The Worshipful Masters of it from 1823 to 1829, when its records close, were Daniel B. Brinsmade, Daniel A. Ryon, John Goodyear, and William Moody. Its last record was made June 15, 1829.

In November, 1864, upon the petition of Guy C. Ford, Henry J. Church, R. W. Ford, of St. Paul's

* Contributed by Geo. C. Ford.

Lodge, No. 11, Litchfield, Robert Black, G. H. Black, of King Solomon's Lodge, No. 7, Woodbury, and R. M. Fowler, Leverett Allen, Joel Bishop, and John Goodyear, members of the old lodge, M. W. David E. Bostwick, Grand Master of Connecticut, issued a dispensation to the aforesaid brethren to resume labor as Rising Sun Lodge, No. 27, restored, appointing Guy C. Ford Worthy Master, H. J. Church Senior Warden, and R. W. Ford Junior Warden, which dispensation was confirmed by a restoration of the charter by the Grand Lodge the following May. The lodge since its restoration has been in a uniformly prosperous condition, and although death has sadly decimated our ranks, and severed many a link from our golden fraternal chain, while many from force of circumstances have been led to affiliate with other lodges, still we number eighty members,—a goodly number for a rural lodge.

Its Worshipful Masters since the restoration have been Guy C. Ford, Samuel H. Clark, Charles H. Mason, Albert L. Hodge, Frederick N. Galpin, and William J. Ford, present incumbent.

Its first officers were Guy C. Ford, W. M.; Henry J. Church, S. W.; R. W. Ford, J. W.; Leverett Allen, Treas.; Orestes Hickox, Sec.; A. M. Steele, S. D.; Robert Black, J. D.; J. N. Frost, S. S.; E. N. Moore, J. S.; James Black, Tyler.

Its present officers are William J. Ford, W. M.; George B. Calhoun, S. W.; Simon D. Platt, J. W.; A. G. Baker, Treas.; P. M. Guy C. Ford, Sec.; P. M. Samuel H. Clark, S. D.; William Mayhew, J. D.; Earl Abbott, S. S.; N. W. Hull, J. S.; John Roraback, Tyler; P. M. A. L. Hodge, Marshal, P. M. G. C. Ford, Chaplain.

PHYSICIANS.

Among the physicians who have practiced in Washington are mentioned the names of Drs. John Calhoun, Warren R. and Remus M. Fowler.

Dr. Calhoun, in addition to his practice, was also much engaged in the public business of the town.

Dr. Warren R. Fowler studied his profession with Dr. Sheldon, and commenced practice in Judea society about the year 1810, and continued until his death, in 1826. In 1816 he received from Yale College the honorary degree of Doctor of Medicine.

Remus M. Fowler studied medicine with his brother, Warren R., and commenced the practice of his profession here, where he continued it until his death. In 1834, Yale conferred upon him the degree of M.D. Dr. Orlando Brown has been the resident physician since Dr. Fowler.

REVOLUTIONARY INCIDENT.

During the Revolution a few persons opposed to the war were assembled at Davies' Hollow, and the Whigs in the town, desiring to dislodge them, had assembled at the house of John Logan. While they were in council, young Logan went to a neighbor's and returned with a musket. His sister, seeing him in a warlike mood, asked him what he was going to do with it. He replied, "Shoot Tories." "You shoot Tories!" she replied; "you haven't pluck enough to fire the gun." He said he had, when she playfully remarked, "Then shoot me," whereupon he fired, killing her instantly.

Gunn's Seminary and Boarding-School for Boys has done much to promote the material prosperity of the town, and is one of the celebrated institutions of its kind in New England. The sons of many of the leading men of our age have attended school at this place, among whom may be mentioned those of Henry Ward Beecher, Mrs. Stowe, John C. Fremont, Senator Carpenter, etc.

The Shepaug Railroad passes through the town, having stations at Romford, New Preston, and Washington.

Lake Waramaug, located in Washington, Warren, and Kent, is celebrated as a place of resort, and is one of the most picturesque bodies of water in New England. It takes its name from an Indian chief.

CIVIL HISTORY.

The town of Washington was organized from portions of New Milford, Woodbury, Litchfield, and Kent, "at a general assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Connecticut, holden at Hartford, by adjournment, on the seventh day of January, A.D. 1779."

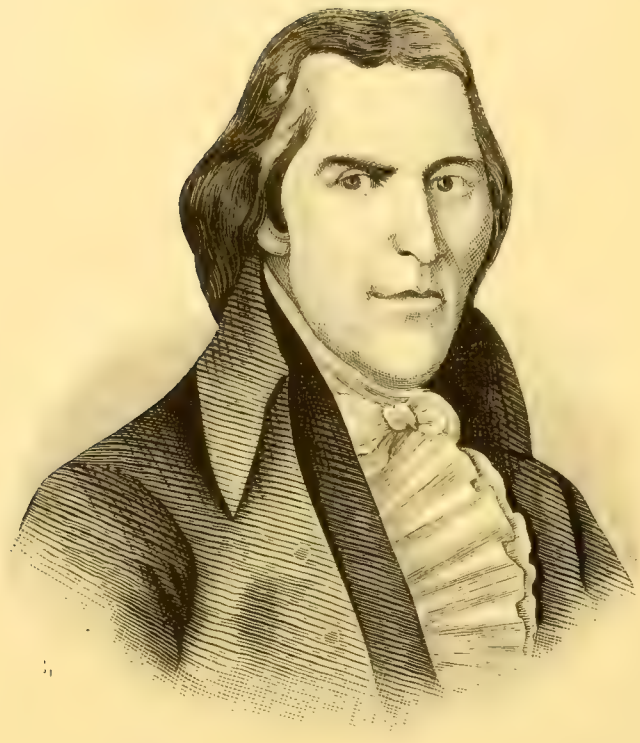
BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. DANIEL N. BRINSMADE.



Hon. Daniel N. Brinsmade, of Washington, the son of Rev. Daniel Brinsmade, second pastor of the Congregational Church in Washington, was born in 1750, graduated at Yale College in 1772, read law in Sharon, and practiced his profession in his native place until his death, in 1826. In 1787 he was a delegate to the convention at Hartford which ratified the Constitution of the United States. He was justice of the quorum, and assistant judge of the County Court for sixteen years, ten of which he sat on the bench. He represented his town in the Legislature during forty-three sessions, and was at one time clerk of the House of Representatives.

DANIEL B. BRINSMADE.

Gen. Daniel B. Brinsmade, son of Hon. Daniel N. Brinsmade, was born in Washington, Conn., Oct. 15, 1782. He was twice married,—first to Irene Merwin, by whom he had one son. His second wife was Mary W. Gold, of Cornwall, Conn. Their family consisted of four children,—two sons and two daughters,—Thomas F., William B., Abigail Irene, and Mary M. Thomas F. married for his first wife Silence, daughter of Samuel Leavitt, and for his second Elizabeth Leavitt, sister of Silence. William B. married Charlotte Chapin, of Springfield, Mass., who is still living in Washington. Abigail Irene married F. W. Gunn, of Washington, where they reside; and Mary M. married George L. Brown, and resides in the city of Brooklyn.

Gen. Brinsmade was one of the leading spirits of his day. He succeeded his father, Daniel N., as town clerk, and officiated in that capacity over forty years. He also represented the town in the General Assembly for the years 1816, 1817, 1828, 1837, and 1848, and was a faithful and efficient official. He manifested an interest in military matters, and in 1817 was made colonel of the Fifth Regiment of Connecticut Cavalry, and subsequently promoted to be general in the State cavalry. He was president of the day at the Litchfield centennial, held at Litchfield, Aug. 13 and 14, 1851, on which occasion he exhibited the epaulets and scarf which were worn by Gen. La Fayette during the war of the Revolution. These historic souvenirs of the gallant Frenchman, who risked his life in the defense of American liberty, are heirlooms in the possession of the Brinsmade family.

Gen. Brinsmade was a man of sterling integrity and sound judgment, and was a recognized power in the councils of the town, county, and State. He died Nov. 3, 1862.

UPSON SEMINARY NEW PRESTON, CONN.

F. W. GUNN.

F. W. Gunn, youngest son and child of Capt. John Gunn and Polly Ford, was born in the town of Washington, Litchfield Co., Conn., Oct. 4, 1816.

His father was a native of Washington, Conn., and was a farmer by occupation. He was deputy sheriff of Litchfield County for many years, during the time the laws of the State imprisoned for debt, serving with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents.

He married Polly Ford, and had eight children,—three sons and five daughters,—and all but two are now (1880) living.

F. W. Gunn worked on his father's farm summers, receiving such advantages for an education as the schools of his own town and those of neighboring towns afforded. At seventeen years of age (in 1833) he entered Yale College, from which he graduated in 1837.

Among the most distinguished members of his class are Chief Justice Waite, Wm. M. Evarts, Profs. Lyman and Silliman, and Edwards Pierrepont. We quote the following from the pen of a personal friend:

"Mr. Gunn's long career and marked success as a teacher are deserving of something more than a mere passing notice. Shortly after his graduation from college he started an academy school at his native place, in 1839, which, with a few years' interval, he has kept up ever since. Of the character of so old and well-established an institution it is hardly necessary to speak. Mr. Gunn is a born teacher. With that remarkable faculty for interesting pupils in study, which normal schools may improve but cannot give, he has excellent methods of play, as well as study for young folks, and early recognized a fact now becoming generally understood, that the development of boys' bodies is as much a part of the teacher's duty as the development of their minds, taking into consideration also the most important fact that with him the boy finds a home as well as a school. We are not surprised at the evidence of increasing prosperity that strikes us at each return to the old institution. One fact we can hardly pass by without due reference. From the outset Mr. Gunn was an outspoken Abolitionist. At that time the Abolitionist was distrusted and disliked, if not persecuted, as a disturber of the peace. The effect on the school was for a time disastrous. The number of pupils diminished, and for a year or two Mr. Gunn taught at Towanda, Pa. On his return from Towanda he started a boarding-school in Washington, which for the past ten or fifteen years has been well known as the 'Gunnery.' Dr. J. G. Holland has introduced it as the 'Birds' Nest' into his novel 'Arthur Bonnycastle,' while it appears as the 'Snuggery' in 'Pastoral Days,' a book written and illustrated by Mr. W. Hamilton Gibson, an old scholar of Mr. Gunn's."

Some of Mr. Gunn's characteristics are untiring energy, devotion to his professional duties, liberal with his means, charitable towards those who differ from him in politics or religion, and first and foremost in his town in all enterprises having for their object the best interest of society.

He married Abigail Irene, daughter of Gen. Daniel B. Brinsmade, of Washington, Conn. She is a lady of culture and refinement, and universally respected.

They have one daughter, who married John C. Brinsmade, a graduate of Harvard College. They are associated with Mr. Gunn in the school.

REV. HENRY UPSON.

Rev. Henry Upson was born in Wolcott, Conn., May 21, 1831; was twin brother to Arabella Harriet Frances Upson, and the youngest of the thirteen children of Thomas and Jerusha (Upson) Upson, a grandson of "Esquire" Charles Upson, whose mother was a sister of the famous Dr. Samuel Hopkins, of Newport, R. I. His early school-days were spent in the Centre district school of Wolcott, of which he gave some reminiscences at the centenary meeting there in 1873. In 1837 the family moved to Berlin (Kensington parish), where was his home till his majority. Here he was "a farmer's son," fond of all domestic animals, his favorite then, as ever since, being the horse. With such education as the common school afforded, in his teens he became a teacher, and exercised his gifts first in the South District in his native town, near the place that had been the home of his grandfather, Isaac Upson. He afterwards taught in Southington, and received kind words of praise from his friend Isaac Burritt, brother of the learned blacksmith. During these years he was occasionally engaged as clerk in the store of his uncle Lucas and brother Samuel Upson, and later, in the store of his brothers Samuel and John Upson, in Southington.

Here, in March, 1850, he became a member of the Congregational Church, under the preaching of Rev. E. C. Jones, for whom he had the highest respect, and to whom he has ever felt himself greatly indebted for good counsel and timely encouragement. Becoming a member of the church involved in the mind of the subject of this sketch another important step, viz., a liberal education in preparation for the work of the gospel ministry.

Filial duties to his mother, however, who became a widow in 1848, led him to spend most of the two succeeding years on the farm in Kensington. Released from these labors on his twenty-first birthday, he became a member of Lewis Academy in Southington, and learned his first Latin lesson the next day. He began his warfare at his own charges and without money. By hard work and economy he entered Yale College in 1855, with a small sum of money at command. College-life was congenial and delightful. In Freshman year he was chosen deacon, and at the meeting there were no more votes cast than were persons present, which, it has been said, has not always been the case in electing such officers. He was often called the "jolly deacon."

Though diverted from study by teaching in term-time, and by other employments in vacations for filthy lucre's sake, he stood well as a student, never got a tardy mark, and graduated with honor in 1859. In the autumn of that year he became a member of Andover Theological Seminary. A part of the next year he spent there, and then joined the Yale Theological Seminary. Here, June 16, 1862, from Governor William A. Buckingham he received a commission as chaplain of the Thirteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers. He was ordained June 22d, and subsequently joined the regiment in New Orleans.

Col. Homer B. Sprague, in his history of the regiment, speaks of him as an earnest and eloquent preacher, but one who in his care for the soul did not forget the body, as many a load of chickens, turkeys, pigs, sweet potatoes, and the like brought into camp and distributed by him to the half-starved soldiers testified. He says, also, in time of battle "he displayed great courage, and rendered invaluable service in communicating orders and dispensing refreshments and consolation to the wounded." He adds further that "the chaplain had a vein of fun in his composition," and others have thought of the same thing before and since. He stood by the regiment in every march and battle and siege till Port Hudson fell. Then he resigned his commission, and on Aug. 7, 1863, left the service of his country to return to Connecticut and become pastor of the Congregational Church of New Preston, from which he had received a unanimous call before he went to war. He was installed Sept. 23, 1863. Oct. 13, 1863, he was married to Abbie A. Platt, daughter of Professor Meritt and Abbie A. (Merwin) Platt, of Milford. They have had no children. For several years after his settlement he was almost constantly chosen moderator of ecclesiastical meetings on account of his unusual knowledge and tact in parliamentary usages. He continued in this pastorate longer than any one else since 1830. He preached here till Nov. 23, 1872. From Jan. 1, 1873, he supplied the pulpit of the old church on the hill for five years. In 1869 he first received some students into his family for special instruction and training. His success in eradicating bad tendencies and instilling good principles was so marked that applications increased, till, in 1878, he gave up preaching regularly and devoted his whole time to his school, which then had become widely known as "Upson Seminary." Having, in 1865, assisted in purchasing the old Eliphalet Tomlinson place for a parsonage, when he gave up preaching in the village those who owned a majority of the stock were willing to sell it to him that he might remain and continue his school in the parish. So the place came into his possession, and the house, in 1877, he greatly enlarged and improved, making it both convenient and pleasant for a family school. His school has been a great pecuniary and social blessing to the place. From the first it has had the patronage of persons of national fame and great wealth. Hon. J. D. Cameron and Maj.-Gen. H. W. Birge were among its early patrons. A son of Rear-Admiral A. H. Foote was there, and from Chili a lineal descendant of Governor Jonathan Trumbull. Some Japanese students have been in the school, who have since occupied with honor high stations in the educational institutions and governmental offices of Japan. Among his later patrons have been Gen. Thomas J. Brady and Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler. For one so small in numbers the school has been remarkably cosmopolitan in character. Students have come from the East and the West in our own country, and from Porto Rico, Chili, Japan, and Germany.

Upson Seminary is peculiar in having no vacations. Boys make it their home, those going away at the request of friends for occasional visits. The range of studies has been wide enough to fit for Yale College or scientific school, for West Point Academy, or for business.

The school, from the first day until now, has steadily grown in popularity, prosperity, and usefulness.

GREGORY SEELEY.

Three brothers by the name of Seeley emigrated from Wales—in what year perhaps no record can be found—and settled in Fairfield Co., Conn., near Long Island Sound, one in Stamford, one in Newfield (now Bridgeport), and the other in West Stratford. Samuel Seeley, a descendant, lived in Stratfield parish, and had a family of about twelve children, one of whom, Ezra, lived in Fairfield, Stratfield parish, and married Mary Sherwood. They had six children, viz.: Anna, Elijah, Aaron, Ezra, Eunice, and Sherwood. Their son Elijah, born Nov. 27, 1769, and Patience Gregory, born March 17, 1774, were married March 3, 1793. He died at his home in Easton, Fairfield Co., March 9, 1851. His wife died at the same place, Feb. 2, 1863. Their children were Paulina, born Dec. 18, 1794 (now deceased, and was the wife of Benjamin Nichols, of Southeast, Putnam Co., N. Y.); Eunice, born Jan. 8, 1797, died May 9, 1861; Gregory (who is the subject of this sketch, and whose portrait may here be seen) was born in the town of Easton, Fairfield Co., May 14, 1799, and died in the town of Washington, Litchfield Co., Jan. 28, 1867; Elijah, Jr., born Jan. 27, 1803, died Oct. 5, 1815; Calvin, born Jan. 13, 1806, and now living in Sandy Creek, Oswego Co., N. Y.; Harriet (wife of Titus A. Bryan, of Washington), born Oct. 19, 1814, died Feb. 19, 1836.

Gregory Seeley, born as above stated, and Polly Sherwood, born Dec. 24, 1803 (daughter of Walker Sherwood, Esq., of Easton), were married Nov. 28, 1820. In the spring of 1821 they commenced housekeeping in their native town, where their eldest son,

Gregory Seeley

Samuel J. Averill

Walker Sherwood, was born, Aug. 27, 1821 (now a farmer residing in Woodbury, Conn.).

In the spring of 1822, Mr. Seeley, with his family, removed to a farm which he had purchased in the town of Southeast, Putnam Co., N. Y. Here they lived for thirteen years, during which time five of their children were born, viz.: Jane Ann, born April 22, 1823, died Oct. 8, 1860 (wife of Daniel S. Baker, of Washington); Calvin, born Sept. 15, 1825, died Dec. 15, 1842; Marriette, born May 31, 1828, died March 12, 1878 (wife of Ethiel S. Green, of New Milford); Henry Warner, born Feb. 13, 1830, now a farmer, living in the town of Washington; Sarah Elizabeth, born Feb. 3, 1833 (wife of Richard A. Bryan, of Washington).

During the thirteen years that Mr. Seeley had lived in Southeast with his family he had been engaged, more or less, in the droving business, and had frequently gone into the southwestern portion of Litchfield Co., Conn., to purchase stock, where the cheapness of the land and its adaptation to grazing purposes led him to believe that he could better his lot by selling his farm in New York and buying in Connecticut. This he accordingly did, moving his family in the spring of 1835 to Washington, locating on a farm of nearly four hundred acres which he had purchased.

Here he commenced a system of farming altogether new in this section of country, and pursued it till his death. He devoted his farm especially to grazing purposes, and discovering that plaster was exactly suited to the soil he used it plentifully, and was bountifully rewarded.

As an omen of success, in the fall of 1835 (November 1st) there was added to the family a pair of twin boys, named Edwin Gregory and Edson Elijah,—the former, a farmer, now living in Roxbury, Conn.; the latter, a farmer, living in Washington. Benjamin Nichols, the youngest son, was born April 24, 1839, and now owns and occupies the farm first purchased by his father in Washington. Harriet Bryan, the tenth and youngest child, was born Jan. 13, 1845, and is the wife of Andrew G. Barnes, of New Milford.

As a man, Gregory Seeley was highly respected, being social and genial in his nature, and noted for his hospitality, his "latch-string being always out."

As a farmer, he was energetic, persevering, and practical, consequently successful. He believed that to be a good farmer was as much of a trade or profession as any other, and required as good judgment and close application. Often told his boys that "the theologian, physician, and lawyer could consult their books, the mechanic his square and compass, but the farmer must weigh and measure with his eye."

His sons all became farmers, and his daughters all became farmers' wives. Soon after his removal to Washington he purchased a small farm adjoining his land, and lying on the main road from Washington to Woodbury, repaired the buildings, and made it his home while he lived. His widow owns and occupies the old homestead, and around the old hearthstone a large and happy group of children and grandchildren meet from time to time as the years roll by.

SAMUEL J. AVERILL.

The exact date of the Averills coming to this country is not known, but a record in the town of Ipswich, Mass., in 1648, recognizes their presence. Isaac and his son Samuel (2), who was born in Preston, Conn., in 1715, and settled in New Preston in 1748, locating upon a portion of the Weraumaug Reserve. Samuel Averill bought the Indian title of Chief Weraumaug in 1749. The Averills continue to own and live upon the same to the present time, December, 1880. Perry (3), born 1754, upon the Averill homestead, was a soldier of the Revolutionary war, attached to Gen. Washington's army in New York City, and afterwards a colonel in the Connecticut militia. Samuel (4), born 1787, a farmer upon the homestead, where he built a substantial stone house, now occupied by his son, Samuel J., and his family. The widow, Betsey Averill, survives him, and was ninety-three years of age May 5, 1880, hale and vigorous in body, mind, and spirit. Samuel Averill was a zealous temperance and Christian worker, and performed a great amount of labor on the homestead, gathering out the stones, making walls, and smoothing it for permanent use, especially for mowing. Samuel J. (5), born Feb. 25, 1819, married Laura P. Platt, of South Britain, Dec. 4, 1844. Their children are Ellen M., Heman O., and Julia. They are the sixth generation living upon the Averill homestead. Samuel J., the subject of our sketch, was a diligent student and a good scholar in the school and academies of his youth, and taught school one winter. He has continued his practical education by reading not only the current news of the day, but also in the line of moral, religious, and scientific subjects, with a good degree of interest and intelligence. He brought a mowing-machine upon the farm Aug. 4, 1853,—probably the first thoroughly successful one in the county,—and many more rocks and stones were removed for its free use and for other purposes upon the farm. The capacity of the farm to produce grass has been thoroughly developed in connection with fattening cattle. He has learned how to make two spears of grass grow instead of one, and how to use that grass for practical purpose. The Averill homestead is a practical proof of the great capacity of the Litchfield County hills to produce grass and hay. He was one of the representatives of the town of Washington in the State Legislature in 1856. He is a deacon in the New Preston Congregational Church, and is known as an active Christian and temperance worker in the vicinity. He has the courage of holding his own convictions, and while he holds strict allegiance to mere human creed and dogmas, considers it the duty of every one to execute loving obedience to all true law, and fulfill the deeper obligations towards God and man. In politics he is a Republican.

WATERTOWN.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlements—The Pioneers—Organization of the Parish of Westbury—Incidents—Reminiscences of Hon. F. J. Kingsbury—Physicians—Men of Prominence—Lawyers—War of 1812—Votes—Evergreen Cemetery—Mortality List—Agricultural—Summer Resort—Railroad—Reminiscences of Mrs. Rev. Frederick Holcomb.

WATERTOWN is located in the southeastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Morris and Thomaston, on the east by Thomaston and New Haven County, on the south by New Haven County, and on the west by Woodbury and Bethlehem. The surface is hilly and the soil fertile.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

The first permanent settlements within the bounds of the present town of Watertown were made in about 1721, by Jonathan Scott, Sr., and Ebenezer Richason, son of Thomas Richason, one of the pioneers of Waterbury. The former located on Scott's Mountain, and the latter on the road leading to the mountain and near Steel's Brook.

John Warner, the first physician in the town, located in about 1723 near Steel's Brook, on the road leading to Scott's Mountain and Wooster's Swamp. Two years later, Isaac Castle and Samuel Thomas, son-in-law of Dr. John Warner, and Joseph Hurlbut, son-in-law of Jonathan Scott, Sr., joined the settlement, locating at Wooster Swamp. Jonathan Kelsey also settled during this year.

The beauty of location and fertility of the soil soon attracted others, and not many years elapsed ere this became one of the flourishing settlements in this part of the State.

Among other pioneers, besides those mentioned above, were Jonathan Scott, Jr., Gersham Scott, Ebenezer Warner, Joseph Nichols, Abraham Utter, John Sutliff, Henry Cook, David Scott, Obadiah Scott, Samuel, James, and Elam Brown, Lieut. J. Fulford, Capt. N. Arnold, Stephen Judd, Thos. Hammond, James Doolittle, Thomas Judd, Dr. Thos. Foot, Thos., Capt. Samuel, and Amos Hickox, George and James Welton, Thomas Matthews, Jonathan Gurnsey, Israel Woodward, Joseph Gurnsey, William Andrews, William Scovill, Samuel Frost, David Strickland, Thos. Dutton, Jonathan Prindle, Jeremiah Peck, Samuel Reynolds, Nathaniel Merrills, Abraham Andrews, John Judd, John Scovill, Edmund Scott, Joseph Hickox, John Welton, Obadiah Richards, and Daniel Porter.

The pioneers were industrious and enterprising, and as early as 1727 a road was laid out through the town.

ORGANIZATION OF THE PARISH OF WESTBURY.

The population increased rapidly, and in 1732 they presented a petition to the General Assembly for "winter priviledges." "Winter priviledges" meant the privilege of hiring a minister for themselves during the winter months, and being exempt during the time from the old parish rates. This petition was signed by thirty-two persons. The town appointed a committee to appear before the Assembly and oppose the petition; but, notwithstanding, the privilege was granted for four years.

In 1733 the "northwest inhabitants" presented a memorial to the General Assembly, asking to be set off as a distinct society, but it was not granted. The question of the new society came before the Legislature in 1734, and again the town resisted the movement. In 1736 another petition was presented, praying to be set off as a distinct society, representing that the settlement numbered forty-five families. This prayer of the petitioners was also refused, but five months' "winter priviledges" were granted for two years. Another attempt was made in May, 1737, but was alike unsuccessful. In the following October, however, a vote was passed by the town signifying a willingness that a Legislative committee should "come to view all the circumstances of the town."

A committee, consisting of Capt. John Riggs, Capt. Isaac Dickerman, and John Fowler, was sent by the Assembly, who reported, in May, 1738, in favor of the petition, and recommended a division line. The society at that time contained two hundred and thirty-five inhabitants. The report of the committee was adopted at the October session of the General Assembly, and the society incorporated by the name of Westbury.

The following reference to the early settlement of the town is taken from the Connecticut Historical Collection:

"The first settlement within the limits of Watertown was made about the year 1729, by a family of the name of Garnsey, from Milford, on what is now the farm owned by Andrew Darrow. It was considered such an undertaking at that period that prayers were offered for their safe arrival, etc. This town has been noted for the size of its forest-trees. It is said that one of the first settlers, having no shelter for the night, peeled off the bark of one of the trees which he had felled, and laid down upon the inside. In the morning, when he awoke, he found the bark rolled up so closely that it was with some difficulty he could extricate himself. It is also related that one of the first settlers, by the name of Brown, was so straitened in his circumstances that he sold one of his children (a son) to one of his neighbors for a barrel of pork, in order to obtain something for the rest of his children to subsist on."

Bronson, in his "History of Waterbury," says,—

"The first house which was erected in the northwest section of the town appears to have been built near what was afterwards called 'the village,' about 1701, by John and Obadiah Richards, son of Obadiah. The Indian disturbances at that period probably prevented its permanent occupation. Richards' house and buildings are occasionally referred to in the laying-out and conveying of land. In April, 1704, Abraham Andruss sold two acres on a hill westerly from Richards' land, where their house and barn is, west of Wooster Swamp. The house is again mentioned in 1709.

"The 'village' (so called) mentioned in the last paragraph was a tract of land in the northwest corner of the town, bordering on Woodbury and Litchfield, the fertility of which had been discovered at an early period, and which at an unknown date had been sequestered to prevent its being taken up in the ordinary land divisions. In November, 1722, the proprietors agreed to have a division of this sequestered land. At the same time land was reserved for roads and provision made for a village."

The following is an extract from the records:

"It was agreed by vote, that in dividing of the sequestered land at the North West corner, there shall be three tears of Lotts,—viz., a highway next Woodbury of Two Rods wide, and then half a mile wide of Land to be paid out in lotts, and then a highway of eight rods to run north and south, and then a nother tear of lotts a half mile, and then a highway on the east side of eight rods (&c.), and the committee in laying out the lotts to leave a four- or six-rod highway every half mile or there abouts through the tears,—no lott to be divided.

"Several divisions were afterwards made of the village lands, but no settlement seems to have been begun there for some time. They were regarded as so much more valuable than the other undivided lands that, in some of the divisions, one acre was equal to five acres (or at a later period, to two and a half acres) in the other parts of the town. The 'village' is now called Gernseytown, from the name of its early settlers, Jonathan Gernsey and his sons and John Gernsey."

REMINISCENCES.

The following reminiscences of the town are taken from an address delivered by the Hon. F. J. Kingsbury at the centennial celebration at Watertown, June 17, 1880:

"By about 1810 the new town might fairly be said to have outstripped the old (Waterbury). Several enterprising merchants had established themselves here. Mr. Wait Smith, who was succeeded by his son, Gen. Genit Smith, Mr. Younglove Cutler, and the brothers John and Benjamin De Forest, were among the leading merchants whose enterprise materially aided in building up the young town. They received the produce of the farmers, and thereby stimulated production and introduced various new branches of industry. Cheese-and butter-making were largely entered into; the raising of stock also, and the packing of beef and pork. From 1810 to 1830, Watertown as a commercial centre was a place of more importance than Waterbury, and there are many people still living who well remember when Waterbury people came to Watertown to do their shopping, much as Watertown goes to Waterbury now.

"Early in the century Gen. David Humphreys, a native of Derby, a man of genius, a soldier of the Revolution, who had been an aide of Washington, became the representative of this government at the Court of Spain. He there conceived the idea of importing into this country the fine-wooled Spanish merino sheep. He embarked his own fortune in the enterprise. To forward his plans he built a factory for the manufacture of fine wool goods at Rimmon Falls, afterwards known as Humphreysville, and now Seymour, but which should have retained the name of its founder. He was not pecuniarily successful; nevertheless the country owes him a debt of gratitude, and the enterprising business men and farmers of Watertown were among the first to engage enthusiastically in his plans. The merino sheep were brought and bred here, and to this day the name of Watertown and the flock of Stephen Atwood is celebrated wherever merino sheep are known.

"A gentleman who has made agriculture and fine cattle a study, and who has traveled all over the world, once told me that he had seen more fine teams of working oxen in the streets of Watertown than he had ever seen in any other place in all his travels. These, of course, were the famous 'Connecticut Reds,' of which Watertown may be said to have been the birthplace, and in the breeding of which Mr. Jacob Blakeslee and others have borne a conspicuous part.

"I have been anxious to present some personal sketches of the men who were most active during this period in building up the young town. I have only been able to get two or three, but perhaps others may be added later. Among the business men of the town, Younglove Cutler was one of the first to open a store in the settlement. Whether he preceded Wait Smith or no, I am unable to say, but they are the two pioneers in the business of merchandising. Mr. Cutler was born in Killingly, Conn., in 1750. Having a stepmother, he was induced at the age of ten years to pack all his possessions in a handkerchief, and, without one cent in his pocket, to strike out and seek his fortune, adopting as his motto, 'Go West, young man,' selecting Westbury as his future home. He worked about for the farmers for a while as he could find employment, but I soon hear of him trading in a small way as a peddler. Next opening a small store in the south part of the house now owned by Dr. John De Forest, where he traded evenings and worked out through the day, which house must have been built not far from 1783, since that is the year in which he bought the land on which the house stands. The large show windows can now be seen under the verandah. Afterwards he built a wood store, where he traded for many years. The building was afterwards removed and the brick store built on its site by Mr. Benjamin De Forest, now occupied by Mr. McNeil. He was successful in business, being, as I understand, industrious, energetic, temperate, frugal, and acquired, for those days, a handsome estate, a considerable part of which was lost toward the close of his life by indorsing. He became a large landowner and stock-breeder, and was particularly interested in the Spanish merino sheep, procuring his flock from Gen. Humphreys, whose importations date 1802. Mr. Cutler sold one ewe for one thousand dollars, and her unborn lamb for five hundred dollars more. To his great chagrin the ewe dropped twins, thus involving to him a loss of five hundred dollars as he always claimed. From his flock it is said sprung the 'Stephen Atwood sheep,' now so celebrated through the country. He died in 1816.

"John H. and Benjamin De Forest, brothers and natives of Huntington, Conn., came to Watertown and entered into mercantile business in 1803, first in a small way in the northeast corner room of the house now occupied by Mr. Lewis, but soon moved to the store owned and formerly occupied by Mr. Cutler, which stood on the ground where the brick store now stands, occupied by Mr. McNeil. There they successfully pursued the business of country merchants till 1817, when the partnership was dissolved. The business in those days was principally a barter trade; but little money was in circulation. No cash was paid out directly for produce; contracts were made with a few of the larger farmers to bring in their pork, butter, cheese, and grain, which were the principal products of the farm, and receive on the 1st day of April in each year one-quarter to one-third cash, the remainder to be taken in 'store pay.' The pork, butter, cheese, and grain were all sent by teams to New Haven. No Waterbury market in those days.

"During the time of their partnership the older brother, John, went several voyages to sea as supercargo and part owner. On one of these voyages he visited Spain and brought away a lot of merino sheep, among the earliest of the kind ever introduced into this country, which proved both profitable to the owners, and of immense value to the farming interests of the United States. A while after the introduction of these sheep the speculation in them ran so high that single merino bucks and ewes were sold for fifteen hundred dollars and sixteen hundred dollars each. On another voyage, during the war of 1812, and while England and France were also at war, he sailed for France with a cargo of codfish. Had they arrived safely the vessel would have netted a large profit to her owners, but just as they sighted port the vessel was cut out by a British privateer, the vessel and cargo confiscated, and the crew thrust into the celebrated Dartmoor prison, where they were confined several months. After a while Mr. De Forest, who was noted as an adept with the pen, wrote a very plausible letter to the British admiralty, and so 'pulled the wool' over the eyes of the officers as to his intentions and destination that they liberated him and the crew.

"During his residence in Watertown, John H. was much interested in politics and civil affairs. He was the principal trying justice for many years, and represented the town in the State Legislature for five sessions, from 1809 to 1815. About the year 1819, John H. went to Humphreysville (now Seymour) and purchased the principal water-privilege there, and the old mill foundry built and occupied by George Humphrey as a woolen-factory, converted it into a cotton-mill, where he successfully pursued the business of cotton manufacture till his death, in 1839.

"After the dissolution of partnership in 1817, Benjamin continued the business till 1825, when he gave it up to Eli Curtiss, who had been his clerk. During this time, while on a trip to New York to purchase goods (there being no drummers in those days), he saw a bundle of palm-leaf lying on the wharf. The thought occurred to him that a hat might be made of it similar to the Panama. He purchased a bundle of palm-leaf, and also a Panama hat, and brought them home. He offered a prize of fifty dollars to any one who would find out how to braid them. Mr. Anson Beebe, of Northfield, and lately of Westville, took the prize. He came to Mr. De Forest's, and for weeks instructed large numbers of women and girls in the art of braiding. The manufacture progressed slowly for want of material. So difficult was it to obtain the plant in New York that an agent was finally sent to the West Indies to procure it and to arrange for a future supply. The manufacture became a success, and large numbers of women and girls in this and the neighboring towns made it their principal business, much to their profit. This branch of manufacture, begun here in Watertown in this small way, is now extensively prosecuted by machinery in various parts of the country, and a hat that once cost two dollars or three dollars is now sold for fifty or sixty cents.

"A short time before Mr. De Forest left the mercantile business he united with Aaron Benedict and others in forming a company for the manufacture of gilt buttons, with a capital of six thousand five hundred dollars, which was the commencement of the Benedict & Burnham Manufacturing Company of Waterbury. Mr. De Forest became salesman of the new company, principally in New York and Boston, till 1837, when he retired in consequence of ill health, and died in 1859.

"During the period covered by the sketches just given the town had grown in wealth and refinement. Elegance, and even luxury, as luxury was then counted, was found among its inhabitants. The people were able to give their sons and daughters all the advantages of education which the country afforded, and many young men went forth from the old town who made names for themselves in all parts of the country.

"So long as agriculture was the principal interest of the State the young town steadily gained on the old one in wealth, enterprise, and importance. For some reason which I have not had time to investigate, the old town seems to have held its own in population somewhat remarkably,—perhaps it had that prolific gift for which poverty is proverbial.

"During the twenty years from 1815 to 1835, Connecticut passed from an agricultural to a manufacturing State. The opening of the wheat-lands of the West, and a variety of other causes which I have not time to enumerate, wrought this change; and the inhabitants of the old town of Waterbury, who had been compelled by the poverty of their soil to exercise their wits in order to live, now found use for them in a profitable direction. Very soon the tide was turned, and the ambitious young men of Watertown began to look to the lower valley as a place to exercise their gifts. The current of emigration was reversed, and the De Forests, Eltons, Buckinghams, Merrimans, and many others now brought their capital and enterprise back to the older town. There the farmers soon began to find a market for their produce, and a place of investment for their surplus gains. There their sons became captains of industry; and where the sons went there went the daughters also."

PHYSICIANS.

The first physician in this town was Dr. John Warner, one of the earliest settlers. Others have been as follows: Thomas Foot, Benjamin Hull, James Elton, John Elton, Samuel Elton, Reuben S. Woodward, Norman Bull, John De Forest, Garwood H. Atwood, Allyn M. Hungerford, Samuel Catlin, Jr., Henry H. Hart, Walter S. Munger, and Rev. F. B. Woodman.*

MEN OF PROMINENCE, ETC.

The following persons, born in Watertown, have distinguished themselves as men of talent:

John Trumbull, poet; died in Detroit, Mich.

Ebenezer Foote, attorney; died in Albany, N. Y.

Samuel A. Foote, attorney, Geneva, N. Y.

Samuel W. Southmayd, attorney, Watertown; died in Watertown, 1813.

Matthew R. Dutton, professor of mathematics, Yale College; died in New Haven, July 17, 1825.

Henry Dutton, attorney, New Haven, and Governor of Connecticut in 1854.

William E. Curtis, attorney, New York City.

The oldest person who has ever lived in Watertown as a permanent resident was Mrs. Rebecca Prindle, widow of Mr. Noah Judd, and granddaughter of Jonathan Prindle, one of the first settlers. She was baptized by the Rev. John Trumbull a few days after his ordination, being the first child baptized in the place. She died March 19, 1838, aged ninety-nine years.

In the winter of 1800 a Mrs. Clark, who for a time had lived with her friends in this place, was carried to Cornwall, Vt., in a sleigh, being then one hundred years of age. She was known to have lived three or four years after.

The first male child born in Watertown was Mr. James Welton, who died May 18, 1812, aged eighty-nine.

Thomas Matthews, Esq., who died Sept. 6, 1798, aged ninety-eight, was the person who trimmed with a pocket-knife the tree known as "The Large Elm."

The first one-horse wagon ever owned in Watertown was purchased by Rev. Chauncey Prindle, in or about 1805.

The oldest house in this town is the one owned and occupied by Mr. Andrew Darrow, supposed to have been built between 1730 and 1735. The next is the one known as the "Trumbull House," in which John Trumbull, the celebrated author of "McFingal," was born, April 24, 1750.

LAWYERS.

The following sketch of the lawyers of Watertown is taken from an address delivered by the late Hon. William E. Curtis, of New York, at the Watertown centennial celebration, June 17, 1880:

"Eli Curtis, who graduated in the class of 1777 at Yale College, and who lost an arm in the war of the Revolution, was the first member of the legal profession that settled in Watertown. Tradition speaks favorably of his courage and services as an officer of the Revolutionary army, of his merits as a lawyer, and the public positions which he held indicate his appreciation by his fellow-citizens. In the brief list of subscribers to Kirby's 'Law Reports,' published at Litchfield in 1789, the first, or among the first, published in America, his name appears; also that of Samuel Southmayd, the father of Samuel W. Southmayd, the lawyer; also the name of Thomas Fenn, Esq., the ancestor of Amasa J. Parker, and other lawyers of eminence and sterling merit; and also the names of Daniel Potter, Esq., and David Smith, Esq. This subscription-list, both here and over the country, is worthily represented to-day in the third and fourth generations of the subscribers. Hon. Eli Curtis removed from Watertown, and died in 1821. Samuel W. Southmayd was born in this town in September, 1773. He was the great-grandson of the Rev. John Southmayd, of Waterbury, who himself was the great-grandson of Sir William Southmayd, of the county of Kent, England. He studied law at Litchfield, and was admitted to the bar in 1795. In 1809 he received the honorary degree of A.M. from Yale College. He early acquired the esteem and confidence of his townsmen, whom during his brief life he represented seventeen times in the Legislature. He soon rose to eminence in his profession. His law library, much of which came into my father's possession, contained most of the valuable English reports and treatises of his day, which, enriched by notes and addenda in his beautiful handwriting, indicate to this day how accomplished and learned he was as a lawyer. He died March 4, 1813.

"The anecdotes and traditions of his career have almost faded away, but his example as a patriotic citizen, a kind-hearted man, and a learned and honorable lawyer, may exert an influence when his name even is forgotten. He was a bachelor, but died, surrounded by the kindred of relatives awaiting the change, as the late Dr. Samuel P. Elton described it to me, with the calmness of a philosopher and the resignation of a Christian. Soon after the death of Mr. Southmayd a committee was appointed at a meeting of citizens to invite Mr. Holbrook Curtis, then practicing law in Newtown, to remove to Watertown. He accepted this invitation, and remained until his death, in 1858. He was in 1813 twenty-six years of age, having graduated from Yale in 1807. During his long period of practice he had the respect and confidence of the community. He was many times a member of the Legislature, a judge of probate, and also a judge of the County Court. Cultivated and scholarly in his tastes, he possessed that rare gift of memory that apparently placed at his command for any occasion the Bible, Shakspeare, Hudibras, Blackstone's 'Commentaries,' and Chitty's 'Pleadings,' and a mass of tradition and anecdote. But his life is so fresh in your memories that it is unnecessary, perhaps not becoming, that I should say more of him, yet I cannot refrain from saying, as his son, how grateful I shall ever be to his friends and neighbors, who, in the weary hours of his declining life, watched over and cheered and comforted him, and whose kindness, ever extended to me and mine, makes the very sight of these hills dear to me."

* Of the physicians mentioned above, Dr. John Elton was in practice twenty-four years, and Dr. Samuel Elton fifty-eight years. The latter died Dec. 8, 1858. Dr. John De Forest practiced fifteen years, and Dr. Allyn M. Hungerford has been in active practice since 1844, nearly forty years.

The present resident lawyer is Curtis B. Atwood.

THE WAR OF 1812.

In the old town records, under date of May 20, 1811, is recorded the following:

"A circular letter from the Chamber of Commerce in the City of New Haven, and also a Letter from the Selectmen of the Town of New Haven bearing sundry resolves of that town was Receivd and Re'd, after which the following were unanimously adopted by Vote (viz.):

"Resolved, That as Freemen under a free Government, we have a Constitutional right to address our Rulers, state to them our grievances, and in Respectful Terms request a Removal of Them.

"Resolved, As sense of this Meeting, that the restrictions on Commerce adopted and improved by the General Government of the United States for a number of years Past is the principal Cause of our Present embarrassment.

"Resolved, That the restrictions heretofore laid on our Commerce have been Tested by Experience and Prove that as Coercive Measures upon the great Beligerants of Europe they are futile. That instead of injuring they are benefitial to them, whilst the injury is felt only by ourselves, and that as Perseverance in those measures serves only to weaken our own strength and disgrace us in the eyes of other Nations.

"Resolved, That we Consider the General Assembly of this State the Guardian of our Rights and Liberties, and that a Petition be presented to their Honorable body now in Session, praying them to make use of such means as they, in their wisdom, shal Think best to prevail upon the General Government to repeal and abandon the restrictive Anti-Commercial System so injurious to the interest of this State.

"Resolved, That we approve of the opinion expressed in the Circular letter from the Selectmen of the town of New Haven, and of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of New Haven.

"Resolved, That the Select Men in behalf of the Town Sign the Petition to the General Assembly, which has been Red and approved in this Meeting, and that the Representative from this town be requested to present the same."

EVERGREEN CEMETERY.

In 1854 some of the citizens of Watertown united in an association to procure and arrange another place of burial besides the one which had been used from the earliest settlement of the town. A piece of land containing four and a half acres, a short distance north of the Centre, was purchased for twelve hundred dollars, and in part graded and laid out into lots. On Monday, Sept. 4, 1854, it was dedicated with appropriate services, and an address delivered by Hon. Samuel A. Foote, of Geneva, N. Y.

The ground has since been planted with evergreens, and the chaste and elegant family monuments and stones, reared by affection to perpetuate the memory of the departed, have greatly beautified this place of the dead.

The first interment in this cemetery was that of Miss Sarah B. Atwood, daughter of Mr. Hinman Atwood, who died Aug. 28, 1854, aged twenty-one years.

In the ordinary course of events many of the citizens of Watertown have removed their residence to other places, but they carry with them pleasant and fragrant memories of past days, and take a just pride in the growth and advancement of their native place. To come back and revisit their old homes, to greet the friends and companions of youthful and maturer years, is an ever-fertile source of pleasure; to speak of changes that have come to each during days of separation fills the mind with sadness. The cemeteries show where to find those who are missed among the living, and their ever-open and increasing volumes give a faithful record of familiar names. As a beautiful rural place for the repose of the dead, Evergreen Cemetery is seldom surpassed. The old cemetery affords a cherished resting-place for those who desire to be laid beside kindred and friends whose graves were made long ago.

AGRICULTURAL.

As an agricultural town, Watertown stands among the first in Litchfield County. Its farmers are widely known for their thrift and enterprise, and the products of their farms are not often excelled. The Agricultural Association of the town, formed in 1867, is flourishing and increasing in interest, and offers at its annual autumnal fair as great attractions as those which have had a longer existence. The present officers of the society are as follows: Henry E. Scott, President; G. S. Atwood, Wm. G. French, C. A. Warner, Vice-Presidents; Alanson Warren, Secretary; George Woodward, Assistant Secretary; F. B. Hand, Treasurer; Executive Committee, O. B. King, C. T. Hickox, C. L. Dayton, M. Hemminway, Jr., George Warner, Jacob Blakeslee, S. H. Peck, W. H. Atwood.

SUMMER RESORT.

As a healthy and attractive summer resort, also, Watertown has a just repute. Its fine and well-kept residences, churches, and other buildings form a prominent part in the landscape. The Warren House, which affords accommodations for a large number of guests, is an elegant structure, with fine grounds handsomely laid out.

RAILROAD.

Railroad communication with seaboard and adjacent places, which has long been desired, is now afforded. A branch road, connecting with the Naugatuck Railroad at Waterbury, was opened a few years since.

We subjoin the following reminiscences of Watertown, written by Mrs. Rev. Frederick Holcomb, and read at the centennial celebration, June 17, 1880.

"I have been requested by some friends whom I highly esteem to say a few words, through my pen, on this interesting occasion,—a strange request to make to one of my years, and to one so unused to address an audience. There is no conceivable reason for it, except it be that my memory reaches back through eighty years of the past century. Acting on this supposition, you shall have some of my childish reminiscences, for you can expect none other from one who has reached the years of second childhood. The first thing that I distinctly remember is being led across the street to look at the lifeless remains of Dr. John Elton. He was highly esteemed as a physician, but died in 1800, at the age of forty-five years, and leaving his son Samuel as his successor. He educated this son from early childhood to be a physician, and he commenced practice, in company with his father, at the early age of eighteen years. He soon won the confidence of the whole community, and his attendance and advice was sought from the adjacent towns. Perhaps his success may be attributed more to his native strength of mind, his ingenuity in devising ways and means to relieve distress, and his avoidance of powerful medicines except in extreme cases, rather than from knowledge derived from medical books. He said once in my hearing that medicine was good for nothing but as an auxiliary to assist nature in throwing off disease. He once told me that when he had nervous, fidgety persons who could not be pacified without some medicine when he thought they required none, that he had manufactured some pills of pure bread for his patients, specifying the number to be taken, and charging them not to take an overdose. He added that the patient would afterwards speak of the wonderful curative properties of those pills, and the sudden relief obtained from their use.

"I will next speak of the days of military exercise, called 'training-days.' On the morning of those days the children of the village were on the alert, watching for the hoisting of the national flag to the summit of the liberty-pole. This pole was erected a few rods westward of the residence of Mrs. Eli Curtiss. They (the children) made a hasty breakfast, and dressed in their Sunday suit, and, their pockets lined with coppers, were ready to proceed to the scence of action. These coppers were designed to purchase gingerbread of a venerable old lady who lived near the liberty-pole, and always kept in readiness for such occasions. Oh, the flavor of that gingerbread on youthful lips! methinks I taste it yet, and see the shining lustre of its glossy surface. The train-band were in readiness by nine o'clock to perform their evolutions, their marches, and countermarches, all the children following in their wake to the music of fife and drum, unless the troopers appeared and scattered the little girls in wild dismay to find some place of security, for the troopers presented quite a formidable appearance, wearing fiery red coats, black bearskin caps, and riding furiously on prancing steeds, the musicians blowing vigorously on trumpets, and the others occasionally firing off their pistols. Oh, the tired little feet at the close of those days, and the welcome rest on the downy pillows!

"A vivid remembrance comes up before me. It was Saturday evening, just after sunset, and I was passing the residence of a neighbor, in which dwelt an aged pair. There was a little porch in front of the house, in which were seated this venerable couple. Oh, the silence, the stillness, the holiness that seemed to pervade the atmosphere! Even the zephyrs dared not play with his hoary locks. Their Sabbath had commenced with Saturday's setting sun, and they seemed to be holding secret communion with their God. Awe-struck and silent, I passed along, but the impression remained. Had any one passed the house on Sunday evening at the same hour, possibly they might have found the people all astir making preparations for the labors of the following week, as their Sabbath ended at sunset.

"Some of you may remember the little red schoolhouse on the village green, surrounded by highways. There was a large fireplace at either end; there was a swing partition, which could be let down and form two rooms, or be raised, and, by the aid of a platform, make a fine place for the display of oratorical powers. Oh, those long pages in Morse's geography, without the aid of globe or map! One kind teacher used to carve apples in various devices to brighten our dullness about the division of the earth and the first principles of astronomy. But more distinctly than all is remembered the shape and size of his ferrule, and very vividly the peculiar tingle left in the palm of the hand when administered as a punishment for whispering. There were a class of young people older than myself who had the benefit of the instructions of Mr. William J. Punderson, who were said to be the best readers and the most intelligent, enterprising class ever raised in Watertown. Some of them emigrated, and became distinguished in other places; others remained to benefit their native place. Two of these persons I would briefly notice. The one was a lady of commanding form and presence with an intellectual and lovely face, pleasing powers of conversation; in short, in her were combined all the loveliness of the female character. She died in 1862, at the advanced age of eighty-seven.

"You will anticipate that I speak of Mrs. Younglove Cutler. Oh, how I loved her while living, how I venerate her memory still! The other lady still lives, though now in her tenth decade. I make an annual pilgrimage to look into her gentle face and listen to her lively, interesting conversation, as she speaks of the happiness of the past, the mercies of the present, and the bright hopes in the future. I allude to Mrs. Deacon Allen Hungerford. I would not omit honorable mention of our worthy fellow-citizen, Capt. Merit Barnes. He resembles the sturdy oak which has breasted the storms and winds of nearly a century, still remaining hale and vigorous, imparting shade and shelter to all around it.

"You shall next have my recollections of the old Congregational church, then called the 'meeting-house.' It was situated a little north of the present post-office, the steeple end at the west, near the public highway. Drawing near, you would discover a huge stone horse-block for the convenience of equine worshipers. There was a little square room at the entrance for the convenience of bell-ringing. Here might usually be found the stalwart form of Mr. Jeremiah Peck tugging at the bell-rope. It is said that this old gentleman for eight or ten years rang that bell every evening in the week, Saturdays excepted, precisely at nine o'clock, to warn the good people that it was time to be at home. Saturday evening being holy time, it was taken for granted they were at home and at their devotions. From this little room there was a door of entrance into the main building. There was also a door at the eastern extremity. The descent of land was so great that it required a very high underpinning; so they built a double flight of steps, one from the north, the other from the south, to bring them on to a platform on a level with the door of entrance. Possibly to avoid all imitations of popery, or even of churchmanship, the main door or entrance was placed directly in the side of the building. The broad aisle led across to the opposite side, where was a flight of stairs leading up to an elevated pulpit, about on a level with the singers' gallery. There was a huge piece of architecture built on the wall behind the pulpit, projecting over the minister's head, called a sounding-board, said to assist the minister in making himself heard. Beneath the pulpit was the deacon's seat, a long, straight pew, with the back to the pulpit. The audience-room was divided into pews resembling pens, with the door of entrance on one side, and seats running around the other three sides. In these little pens the good people rose up to pray, and sat down to praise. The singers' gallery was cqmposed of two straight rows of slips, extending around three sides of the building. The leader sat directly in front of the pulpit, with his tenor on his left hand, his counter on his right. The treble occupied the seats on the east side of the building, the bass on the west. They were arranged in single file. Behind the singers' seats there was an elevated platform, extending quite around the gallery, and between this platform and the walls of the building was a row of pens, similar to those below, elevated one step. These were designed for the younger members of the society. They then had a tithingman appointed, whose duty it was to watch over the conduct or misconduct of these youngsters, and woe be to them if they saw him marching towards them in all the pride of office. The Rev. Uried Gridley was the minister at that time. He was a man of more than ordinary size, and beautifully proportioned. I shall never forget, and language would fail me to describe, his majestic dignity and easy grace as he walked, bowing reverently, up the broad aisle, ascended the steps to the pulpit, and turned his placid, benign face towards the audience. No doubt the good man entertained some of the prejudices of that age against forms of prayer, but some of his sentences are indelibly engraven on the memory from their oft repetition. The minister then read a psalm or hymn. The choir rose; the leader produced an immense pitch-pipe and blew upon the key-note; every singer responded to bring their voices in unison. Then commenced the singing, the leader beating time the full length of his arm to keep them all up to the mark. They frequently sang fugue tunes, the parts responding back and forth till the walls seemed filled with melody. I remember how majestically it sounded to my infant ears when they sang

"'On cherubim and seraphim
Full royally he rode,
And on the wings of mighty winds
Came flying all abroad.'

"There was a bald-headed old gentleman, small in stature, with spindling limbs, who frequently took his stand beside Mr. Gridley in the pulpit, or rather beneath him, and held up in the direction of his face a large funnel-shaped ear-trumpet, to catch the words of wisdom as they fell from his lips. On one occasion he seemed rather dissatisfied with his trumpet. He removed it from his ear, applied its orifice to his lips and blew into it, as if to remove some real or imaginary obstruction. The trumpet responded with a loud blast. The children had a great veneration for Parson Gridley. If he entered the school-room, we all rose en masse to show our respect. If we saw his portly form advancing on the highway, we ranged ourselves on the side of the path and made him a low obeisance as he passed. The good man, with true civility, always returned the salute.

"There was a building erected for the convenience and comfort on Sundays for those who lived at a distance. They called it a 'Sabba-day house.' It stood on the ground near the present residence of Mr. Day Woodward. I think there was a shelter in the rear for their horses. In front was a room with a large fireplace, which in winter was filled with a roaring wood-fire, with hot, burning coals on the hearth. Into this comfortable room the good people used to bring their luncheon, and, it is said, a small wooden bottle filled with cider, to refresh them at noon. They then left for church, some of the more delicate of the females filling little foot-stoves with burning coals. There was no smell of fire in any house of worship in those days, save what came from those little foot-stoves. No one thought of staying at home on that account, but our sufferings were at times almost unbearable. It has always remained an unsolved problem how the minister could perform the duties of the sanctuary with such frosty feet and chattering teeth.

"There was one worthy old pair whom no extremes of cold or heat could prevent attending public worship. They were always to be seen at the regular hour, each mounted on a pacing horse. At length came the era of the one-horse wagon. The old gentleman procured one, together with a harness to fit his wife's horse, and after adjusting things to his own satisfaction, gave the whip and reins into her hands, after inviting a widow of the neighborhood to take a seat by her side. He then mounted his own pacer, and, with John Gilpin civility, rode 'on horseback after we.' They reached the church in safety, and passed a most enjoyable day; but on their return, just as they were passing our dwelling, the vehicle suddenly capsized and threw its occupants with much force on to the dusty pathway. They rose with smashed bonnets and garments filled with dust, and moved towards the house. We hastened to meet them, and soon discovered that the driver's nose was minus a large piece of skin, and the widow had sprained her wrist. The driver washed the blood from her face, procured a piece of white paper, wet it, and laid it carefully over the bruised member, then mounted her spectacles over the whole, and taking up a Bible that lay near, calmly proceeded to read in it, while the widow, some hurt, but more frightened, could not suppress her sighs and tears. The gentleman, after attending to the welfare of his horses, came to the house to ascertain the situation of his wife. In a state of high nervous excitement he kept crying out, 'You pulled the wrong rein: why didn't you pull t'other rein?' The old lady, calm and serene as the surface of an unruffled lake, pursued her reading. She of the sprained wrist groaned audibly, while my young eyes opened widely that any man should speak thus testily to his wife, especially when she was smarting under the sharp twinges of such a skinless nose. But don't draw any wrong inferences. He was truly a good man. This little episode was the natural result of having passed through such a new and unlooked-for experience.

"My parents, in their more youthful days, were attendants at the Congregational Church. They conformed to the Episcopal Church before my recollection. As the parish was small, and unable to support preaching but one-third of the time, we all went to 'meeting' (as it was called) the other two-thirds. This may be one reason, among others, why to this day I enjoy their services, and when present always feel myself to be among friends.

"My first recollections of the Episcopal Church is being led in one day before service to hear the choir practice music. The singers' seats were arranged very much like those at the other church. They sat in single file, extending round the gallery. They had the same formidable pitch-pipe and three tenor singers beating time, to the imminent danger of dislocating their shoulders. The treble sang alone. It sounded sweet to my childish ears:

> "'From pleasant trees that shade the brink,
> The lark and linnet like to drink.'

Surely this poetry was not found in the prayer-book or hymnal. The Rev. Chauncey Prindle, rector, soon walked up the aisle in his clerical robes, and passed through the chancel into the reading-desk. I recollect little except being awe-struck as he read the commandments. But never can I forget the impressions received as he passed through the old cemetery at the head of a funeral procession, reading the service for the burial of the dead. Surely never language fell on human ears so sublime as that. It seemed a voice from another world, and it seems so still. Indeed, all the prayers and services of the Episcopal Church have become, from lifelong use, a part of my being. They never tire, are ever fresh and new, and, as is said of old wine, the longer kept the richer the flavor. Pardon me, my friends, but if you place an old lady on this spot you must allow her to show her colors.

"My first recollections of the Methodists in this place is that of a few people who were peculiar in excluding all bows and trimmings from their dress, denied all necessity for human learning in the preparation for the ministry, depending on immediate divine inspiration, and were said to be loud and demonstrative in their manner of conducting public worship. Truth and candor compel me to confess that these peculiarities were then considered a fit subject for ridicule. But what a change hath time wrought! They now have colleges and seminaries of learning all over the land to educate their ministers, and no outward garb or custom to distinguish them from others. In this town they have a neat little house of worship, a flourishing congregation, in whose male and female members are numbered some of our most esteemed citizens, and with a leader and guide at their head 'whose praise is in all the churches.' This confession is due to them from one who, in her thoughtless days, laughed with others at their peculiarities. She now wishes them all success in 'whatsoever things are lawful and of good report,' but must confess to a lurking desire, a secret hope, that they will yet return to the mother they have deserted, and, bringing their zeal with them, warm us all up to more zeal and devotion in the cause of the Master.

"There is an element in our society formerly unknown. In olden days we seldom, if ever, looked into the face of an Irishman, but now they swarm in all our borders. Like bees, they are industrious, loading themselves with honeyed sweets to carry home to their hives; but, like bees, if trampled on or crowded into a corner, beware of their sting! Kind-hearted and sympathetic, they are true to their friends. They came from their mother-country to better their condition, and, judging from appearances, they have found what they sought. Look at their nice church edifice, and at the large congregation of well-dressed people that attend their services. Look at the full employment they all find, at the comfortable homes they own, and at the opportunity their children have for acquiring an education. The intelligent Irish child is not a whit behind the keenest little Yankee. They are rather exclusive in their notions of church fellowship, and are honest about it; but my faith looks forward to the day (either in this world or the next) when all who truly love the Lord Jesus shall see eye to eye.

"Our colored inhabitants, who a century ago had not the right to call themselves their own, now enjoy all the privileges of others, whether civil, educational, political, or religious. Must we not all thankfully exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'

"A few words about our two cemeteries and I will close. The first record of an interment in the old cemetery was in March, 1741. It continued to be the only place until August, 1856. Perhaps as many persons lie buried there as are now living in Watertown. There repose in death the two first Congregational ministers of the gospel, and with them nearly all their people; there sleep our ancestors, and many of the friends of our youth. They sleep the sleep that knows no waking. Not even the tramp of the iron horse, or the rattling roar of the cars dashing through their midst, can arouse them from their slumbers; but the last trumpet of the Archangel can, and will, and of what a rising that will be of priests and people! The first interment in our beautiful Evergreen Cemetery was in August, 1854, of Miss Sarah B. Atwood, a few days before its dedication. It seemed sad to turn from her grave and leave her alone in that field; but how soon is she surrounded by numbers! Most of our families can say, 'There lies one of our heart's chief earthly treasures.' There sleeps the kind physician, Dr. Elton, who would cheerfully rise at midnight and breast the storm to alleviate the sufferings of his poorest patient; and near him lies the good lawyer, Holbrook Curtiss, who was himself so averse to angry litigation that he trained our people to such habits of peacefulness that to this day they scarcely need a lawyer to settle their differences. And here rest from their labors three ministers of the gospel. The first of the three was the Rev. Frederick Holcomb (Episcopal). He was the person that offered the opening prayer at the dedication of the cemetery. It becomes not his widow to speak of him in terms of unmeasured praise. She leaves the record of his long life of patient effort to advance the best interests of Watertown and its inhabitants to the memories of those who survive him. In the home which his love and kindness so cheered and gladdened there must, while life lasts, remain a sad vacancy, and a grief in the heart of the bereaved one, 'with which a stranger intermeddleth not.' The second interment was the Rev. Dr. Lewis (Episcopal). Who that ever listened to his godly teaching, or witnessed his truly Christian example, can ever cease to mourn his loss? He was a teacher who convinced himself. The third was the Rev. Franklyn Tuxbury (Congregational). His sojourn amongst us was short, and as I was not a member of his flock, of course had few opportunities of listening to his preaching; but he gave a course of scientific lectures which I attended, and came to the deliberate conclusion that no man had ever labored more earnestly to elevate the literary, moral, and religious character of this people than did Mr. Tuxbury. It gives me pleasure to bear this public testimony of my appreciation of his worth of character, and am confident that many, with me, are thankful that his remains rest in our pleasant cemetery, where we can occasionally visit his grave."

WATERTOWN (Continued).

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Congregational Church—Christ Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Methodist Episcopal Church in North Part of Town.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

THIS church was organized soon after the incorporation of the society or parish of Westbury, in 1738, and among its founders were the following: Deacon

RESIDENCE OF BUELL HEMINWAY, WATERTOWN CONN.

J. Garnsey, Daniel Scott, Lieut. Thomas Richards, Nathaniel Arnold, William Scoville, George Welton, Thomas Matthews, Deacon Thomas Hicox, Deacon Timothy Judd, Deacon John Warner, Ebenezer Porter, Amos Hicox, Jeremiah Peck, Joseph Garnsey, Thomas Cole, Ambrose Hicox, Stephen Scott, Thomas Buckingham, Thomas Hammond, John Stoddard, Richard Seymour, Timothy Williams, Elnathan Judd, Thomas Fenn, Samuel Reynolds, Michael Dayton.

The first church edifice was erected in 1741, near the southwest corner of the old cemetery.

"The place for a meeting-house being determined, the Westbury people applied to the town to provide the ground and the necessary public green. Accordingly, the town directed their committee laying out highways at the northeast quarter (it should be northwest) to widen the highway, so as to accommodate said house with a suitable green, according to their discretion, and to award satisfaction to the owners of the land. This was the 24th day of December, 1739, and in the February following the committee, John Judd and John Scovill, laid out the land, as follows:

"'Beginning at the southwest corner, a heap of stones, then east ten rods to a heap of stones, then ten rods north to a heap of stones, then west eleven rods to a heap of stones, then south eighteen rods to a heap of stones, where we began, butting west on land left for a highway, north on Eleazar Scott's land, south on Stephen Scott's land, east on Eleazar Scott's land, or common land, as set out by us.'

"The land included in these lands amounted to nearly one acre, belonging to Eleazar Scott, and as a remuneration for the same the committee awarded him 'three acres of land, to lay out in the undivided land, or fifty shillings in money.'"

The first pastor of the new parish was Rev. John Trumbull, who was born in Suffield in 1715. He was very popular with the people, and acquired great influence by generosity, hospitality, and kindness. It is said that "if one of his parishioners had lost a cow, or had met with a similar calamity, he would interest himself in the matter, head a subscription for his relief, and persuade others to sign the same."

It was also said of him "that if one of his people turned Episcopalian he would buy his farm." He was a wealthy man, and a large land-holder.

The following reminiscences are related of him in Bronson's "History of Waterbury": "Mr. Trumbull was not a tall, but a stout, athletic man. He was sound, shrewd, and humorous. Horses he was fond of, and bought and sold them frequently with success. On this account he was sometimes irreverently called 'Jockey Trumbull.' He loved innocent sports, and had once been a great wrestler. A story is told of him which, though it may not be wholly true, is probably not a pure invention. At any rate it illustrates the manners of the times:

"The Waterbury and Westbury people were in the habit of meeting at some half-way place, in the long autumual evenings, to contend as wrestlers. They met around a fire, and the sport was commenced by the second-rate athletes. When one was thrown, the vanquished called in another from his own side, the object being to vanquish the victor. Then the experts were called out in succession, and he who remained last on his legs was the bully of the night. In several of these contests, at the time of which I am speaking, Waterbury had proven too much for Westbury. Mr. Trumbull heard of the defeat of his boys, and partook of their mortification. On occasion of the next contest he disguised himself, and went down unknown, except to two or three, to give 'material aid,' if necessary. The wrestlers were called in one after another till Westbury was again 'thrown out,' the Waterbury champion having grounded the last of the rival party. At this period, when the signs of exultation on one side and chagrin on the other were becoming manifest, a stranger was dragged in from the outer circle of the ring to contend for the Westbury boys. The parties placed themselves in position, and began, by 'playin' 'round,' to find each other's qualities. After a little time the stranger, watching his opportunity, caught his antagonist's foot and threw him upon the fire. Shouts filled the air, and the victor disappeared. Great was the exploit, and great the mystery of the affair, but the secret finally leaked out.

"The story reached the ears of Mr. Leavenworth, pastor at Waterbury, and the next time he met his brother, Trumbull, he rebuked him for his levity, and censured him particularly for throwing his rival upon the fire, by which his clothes and flesh were scorched. Trumbull agreed that he had been guilty of levity, but as for the scorching, he thought it his duty to give his (Mr. Leavenworth's) parishioners a foretaste of what they might expect after sitting under his preaching!"

In his will he bequeathed to his widow his "negro wench Lemmon," and to his son, John Trumbull, of Hartford, gave his negro girl "Mabel," also his knee-buckles and powder-horn. To his daughter Sarah, wife of Dr. Caleb Perkins, of Hartford, he bequeathed his negro girl "Peg," and another daughter, Lucy, wife of Rev. Mr. Langdon, of Danbury, received a negro girl "that was now in her possession."

Among the early deacons of this church were John Warner, Jonathan Garnsey, Timothy Judd, Thomas Hickox, Samuel Hickox, Thomas Fenn, and Thomas Dutton.

The second church edifice was erected in 1772, and was located a few rods east of the present one, on lands purchased of Mr. Wait Scott. Services were held in the building until January, 1840. In 1839 the present church edifice was built on lands purchased of the heirs of David Woodward, and was dedicated Jan. 29, 1840.

The pastors from the organization of the church to the present time have been as follows: John Trumbull, 1739, died in 1787; Uriah Gridley, 1784, died in 1820; Horace Hooker, 1822–24; Darius O. Griswold, 1825–35; William B. Deforest, 1835–37; Pluto R. Hurd, 1840–49; Chauncey Goodrich,* 1849–56; George P. Prudden, 1857; Samuel M. Freeland, Benjamin S. Parsons, Stephen Fenn, G. P. Gilman, Franklin Tucksbury, and C. P. Crofts.

CHRIST CHURCH.

The first movement towards the formation of an Episcopal parish in Westbury was in 1764, when the following persons agreed to hold public worship in Westbury on those Sundays when there was no preaching in Waterbury, and also to make arrangements to erect an Episcopal church in Westbury. They met in the house of James Doolittle in the winter, and of Ensign David Scott in the summer. Their names are as follows: Asahel Beach, Seth Blake, James Doolittle, Noah Judd, Joseph Prichard, Edward Scovill, Jonathan Garnsey, Samuel Brown, Daniel Brown, Jonathan Fulford, Asa Judd, Eleazar Prindle, Samuel Scovill, Joseph Hicox, Joseph Brown, Thomas Doolittle, John Judd, John Hicox, Gershom Scott, William Scovill.

In 1765, under the agency of Capt. Scovill, the first Episcopal church was erected on a piece of ground donated for the purpose by Capt. George Nichols, of Waterbury, a few rods southwest of the first Congregational church, the business part of the town being then near the locality of the churches.

The second, in 1793, on a piece of ground purchased of Mr. Samuel Southmayd, south of Mr. Timothy Judd's, and near where is now the residence of Alanson Warren, Esq. It was consecrated Nov. 18, 1794, by Right Rev. Bishop Seabury, and last used for divine worship on Sunday, Oct. 28, 1855. Soon after it was purchased by George P. Woodruff, and removed to its present location. None of the contributors for the erection of said church are now living. In February, 1846, valuable real estate, which had been previously purchased by J. N. Blakeslee, Esq., was offered to and secured by this society, on a portion of which an academy was erected in 1846, a rectory in 1851, and in 1855 a new church edifice, the corner-stone of which was laid by Right Rev. Assistant Bishop Williams, on Monday, May 29, 1854, and the church consecrated by him on Thursday, Nov. 15, 1855.

The rectors of the church have been as follows: James Scovill, 1759–85; Chauncey Prindle, 1788–1804; Russell Wheeler, 1805–14; Frederick Holcomb, D.D., 1814–38; N. S. Richardson, D.D., 1838–45; Frederick Holcomb, D.D., 1845–50; Horace H. Reid, 1850–57; Benjamin W. Stone, D.D., 1857; Wm. H. Lewis, D.D., S. D. McConnell, and James Stoddard.

The church edifice was repaired and beautified in about the year 1870, and few country churches are more pleasing than this in its proportions and style of architecture.

* Father of the late Samuel G. Goodrich, familiarly known as "Peter Parley."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first services according to the rites of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Watertown Centre were held May 29, 1853, in a room kindly offered for the purpose by M. Heminway, Esq., and in the following July the church was organized. The chapel belonging to the Congregational society was their place of meeting from the winter of the same year until October, 1854, when they occupied the lecture-room of their new church, which had been erected during the previous summer on an eligible lot purchased of Miss Lydia Woodward. It was dedicated Dec. 13, 1854, the sermon on the occasion being preached by Rev. Dr. Kennedy.

The pastors of this church have been as follows: Joseph Smith and Larmon W. Abbott officiated once in two weeks until May, 1857; Mr. Abbott remained until 1859; A. V. R. Abbott, 1859–60; Seymour Landon, 1861–62; A. C. Eggleston, 1863–65; T. A. Lovejoy, 1866–67, till June; W. S. Bell, latter part of 1867; David Osborn, 1868–69; Benjamin Pillsbury, 1870–71; Thomas N. Laine, 1872–74; Horace Q. Judd, 1875–77; Sidney K. Smith, 1878–80.

There is an old Methodist church standing in the north part of the town, but was long since abandoned as a place of worship.

At a special town-meeting, held June 25, 1781,

"Voted, To Class the Town into Seven Classes, in Order to raise Seven men or Souldiers for the Continental Service."

At the same meeting

"Passed a Vote Desiring the Selectmen to use their Endeavors to Catch those men that Belong to this Town that have Deserted from the Continental Service and take them to the Camp."

At a meeting held February, 1782, choice was made of Edmund Lockwood, Jesse Curtice, Allyn S. Judd, and James Warner for a committee to hire a man, or men, for the Continental service; also

"Voted, That if any Person that shall take up a Cattel and any Souldier belonging to this Town that has Deserted from the Continental army and Deliver him to an officer in said army and take his Receipt therefore, shall receive the sum of £15, Lawful Money (viz.), if Listed three years or During the War."

May 2, 1782, Capt. Moses Foot and John Woodward were appointed a committee to take the Continental soldiers to Wallingford in order to be mustered, and take receipts of the muster-master thereof.

The first town-meeting held in that part of the town then called Northbury, now the town of Plymouth, was on Sept. 18, 1781, and the second in December, 1782.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

LEMAN W. CUTLER.

Leman W. Cutler, the youngest son of Younglove and Anna (Woodward) Cutler, was born in Watertown, Conn., Dec. 12, 1807. Younglove Cutler was born in Killingly, Windham Co., Conn.; was a son of Jesse Cutler, the fourth son of Capt. Isaac Cutler, who came from Salem, Mass., to Killingly about 1712, being one of the early settlers, and a prominent man in Windham County.

Mr. Cutler graduated at Yale College in 1829, but never studied a profession.

His three sisters had all previously died of consumption, and his only brother fell a victim to a lung disease about that time. He resolved that if an outdoor life would equally promote his happiness and give him a longer lease of life, he would follow the occupation of a farmer, and seek good health rather than great riches, in which he was eminently successful.

He married, in 1831, Mary Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. Frederick Holcomb, D.D. They have no children. He has always resided in his native village, and has been highly honored with the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

Politically a decided Republican, he has been twice called to represent the Sixteenth Senatorial District in the State Senate, and five times sent by his townsmen to the House of Representatives. For six years, through the late war, was State comptroller of public accounts, for fourteen years town treasurer, and for twenty-four years judge of probate for the district of Watertown, when the constitutional limit compelled him to leave that office. He is at present town clerk and registrar of births, marriages, and deaths, having held both offices for the last thirty-two consecutive years. He is a member of the Congregational Church.

GEN. MERRIT HEMINWAY.

Merrit Heminway, son of John and Hannah (Thompson) Heminway, was born in East Haven, Conn., March 23, 1800.

His father was the only child of John Heminway, and was born in East Haven, Conn., about 1774. He was a miller, farmer, and dealer in live stock. He was twice married, and had five children by his first wife. Three are living, of whom Gen. Heminway is one.

He had three children by his second wife, one of whom is living. He was a member of the Episcopal Church. He died in 1826, leaving his family in good circumstances for those days.

Mr. Heminway remained at home, working on his father's farm and in a carding-factory summers, attending school winters, until he was sixteen years of age, when he went to New Haven as clerk in the grocery-store of N. & H. Oaks, where he remained two years.

He was then employed by E. & J. Shipman, who were engaged in trade with the West Indies. He remained with them two years. In December, 1821, he came to Watertown, Conn., and in March, 1822, commenced mercantile business in the basement of the old Bishop Hotel, with James Bishop as partner, under the firm-name of Bishop & Heminway. They continued in business seven years, when they took in as third partner Josiah Hickox, and removed to the store now occupied by Mr. Mattoon. Said store was built in 1828 by the firm, and is now owned by Gen. Heminway.

After two years the firm dissolved, and Messrs. Bishop & Heminway continued in trade till about 1837, when they dissolved, and Gen. Heminway continued until 1842, having with him as partner Charles Partree, Heminway being a silent partner. In 1842, Gen. Heminway assumed control of the business, continuing alone until 1855, when his sons became partners, and the firm continued for a number of years as M. Heminway & Sons.

In 1849, Gen. Heminway fitted up a building which had been occupied by Nathaniel Wheeler, who was engaged at that time as a wagon-maker, and began the manufacture of silk. In a few years he took in his sons as partners, under the firm-name of M. Heminway & Sons, and a few years later changed the name to M. Heminway & Sons' Silk Company. This firm consists of Mr. Heminway, his four sons, and daughter, thus representing the entire family in a joint-stock company. They represent one hundred and fifty thousand dollars of capital, employ from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five persons, mostly females, and their silk is to be seen in all parts of the United States, also in South America and Europe. They manufacture the very best sewing-silk of all kinds.

Their factory is large and well situated. A view of it may be seen in another part of this work. They have a store in New York City for the sale of their goods, in charge of Homer Heminway.

Gen. Heminway was engaged for some time, with Nathaniel Wheeler, in the manufacture of slides and buckles.

He commenced keeping public-house in 1840, in the old Bishop Hotel, where he remained about twenty years. He has also managed a farm, which he purchased in 1840.

In politics he is a Democrat. He has been justice of the peace, judge of probate, and postmaster for a number of years. He never sought political distinction, preferring the quiet of home to any official honors.

Gen. Heminway and all his family are members of the Episcopal Church, and he has been vestryman.

He has been a prominent military man in his town. He was a quartermaster-sergeant for Col. Chauncey Craft, of Woodbury, in the Twelfth Regiment Connecticut Militia, and after serving five years resigned, never expecting again to be called upon; but, at the earnest solicitation of some of the prominent men in town, he was induced to accept the position of captain of the First Rifle Company, which was being formed for the first time. He rose through various ranks to colonel of the Twelfth Connecticut Regiment State Militia, and finally was appointed general of the Sixth Brigade.

On the 7th of March, 1832, he united in marriage with Mary Ann, daughter of Jonathan Buell, of Litchfield, Conn., and by this happy union five children have been born, namely, John, Homer, Mary Ann (who married Henry Merriman, of Waterbury, Conn.), Buell, and Merritt, all of whom were born in Watertown and reside there at the present time, and are numbered among Watertown's most highly respected citizens.

DR. JOHN DE FOREST.

Dr. John De Forest, son of Benjamin and Alma (Southmayd) De Forest, was born in Watertown, Conn., March 31, 1806. Educated at Yale College, in the academical and medical departments; commenced the practice of medicine in the spring of 1829, in Goshen, Conn.; thence came to Watertown, in October, 1830, where he pursued his profession closely and with reasonable success until 1845, when he was obliged to retire in consequence of ill health. From that time to the present he has not been engaged in any active business, but has led a quiet and unostentatious life. May 16, 1831, he married Lucy S., daughter of Erastus Lyman, of Goshen, Conn. She was an invalid and sufferer for more than twenty years, which she bore with Christian fortitude and resignation, and died Aug. 3, 1855. They had two children; the eldest died in infancy, and the youngest, Erastus Lyman, born June 27, 1834, was educated at Yale College, in the academical and scientific departments, and is now engaged in scientific pursuits.

DR. SAMUEL ELTON.

The name of Elton has been a historic name in Watertown for more than a century. For a period of ninety years three individuals of that name filled the responsible position of family physician among us.

Dr. Samuel Elton, the subject of this sketch, watched at the bedside of the suffering for sixty years; his father, Dr. John Elton, for twenty-four years; and his uncle, Dr. James Elton, for seven years. Thus we see the name became a "household word" in this community.

John Elton, the first of the Elton name of which the writer has information, came early to this country from Bristol, England, and settled in Middletown, Conn. His son Ebenezer located in Branford; the time of his death is unknown,—he was lost at sea.

His son, Ebenezer, Jr., was born in 1712, and settled first at Middletown, but subsequently removed to Harwinton, Conn.

His eldest son by a second wife, Dr. John Elton, was born Oct. 6, 1755, and it is presumed studied with his half-brother, Dr. James Elton, since on the death of James, John succeeded him in practice at Westbury, now Watertown, dying Oct. 9, 1800.

Dr. Samuel Elton, of whom we wish particularly to speak, was the only son of Dr. John, born Sept. 6, 1780. He studied a short time with his father, who purposed to give him the best possible medical education, but death defeated his plans, and at the early age of eighteen years, with little knowledge of medical works, he commenced active practice, which was never relaxed until old age and disease enforced it, dying Dec. 8, 1858.

What most acquire by the experience of others, through books, lectures, etc., he seized, as it were, by intuition, and retained by personal practical experience. He was never rash, never attempted hazardous experiments, but waited and watched, frequently saying, "No doubt physicians have saved the lives of some people and prolonged those of others, but nobody knows how many lives they have taken."

His conclusions were so uniformly correct that he early grew into an extensive practice as consulting and advisory physician in all neighboring communities. He was kind and tender in feeling, but never profuse in expressions of sympathy; plain, almost blunt, in language; stern in outward demeanor, but, when occasion permitted, jovial and playful as a boy. No one was ever more endeared, or more perfectly secured in the confidence of his patients, than was Dr. Samuel Elton to the end.

He acquired a handsome estate, which might have been doubled had he chosen to enforce the collection of very reasonable charges for his labors. He never took legal steps to collect a debt. He visited and cared for the poverty-stricken patient with all the assiduity he gave the most wealthy. As has been well said of him by another: "Honesty, temperance and economy were with him cardinal virtues. He was the friend of good order, of wholesome laws, and whatever else was calculated to promote the best good of the community."

He married Betsy, the eldest daughter of Mr. Charles Merriman, of Watertown, who bore him seven children, one of whom alone survived him, viz., John P. Elton, who was very successful as a business man, and one of the most highly respected citizens of Waterbury.

ALLYN M. HUNGERFORD, M.D.

Allyn M. Hungerford, M.D., eldest son of Deacon Joel Hungerford, was born in Watertown, Aug. 16, 1810. His father was a lineal descendant of Thomas Hungerford, of Hartford, Conn., an English emigrant, and land-holder there in 1638.

Deacon Hungerford died in 1858, at the age of seventy-five, and his widow, Rebecca Merriam, is still living at the age of ninety-four. Her father, Christopher Merriam, died in Watertown in 1838, aged eighty-seven, and his father, Joel Hungerford, Sr., in 1814, at the age of seventy-two. They were men of integrity and influence, and served as citizen-soldiers in the Revolutionary army, the former at the burning of Danbury, and the latter at the siege and capture of New York. His father, David Hungerford, from Haddam, Conn., settled in Westbury about 1750, and a few years after died while in the English army, near Lake Champlain.

Dr. A. M. Hungerford graduated from the Medical Department of Yale College in 1838, and represented Watertown in the State Legislature in 1850–51. He was judge of the Probate Court for the district of Watertown in 1851–52, and for the district of Waterbury in 1851, also for the Watertown district during the years 1877–78. Mrs. Emily P. Hungerford, his wife, died July 15, 1880, aged sixty-six. She was a daughter of Joseph Platt, Esq., of Prospect, Conn. The only daughter, Sarah A. Hungerford, died March 17, 1870, at the age of twenty-four. The only son, William A. Hungerford, of New York, survives her.

The following address to the Putnam Phalanx, of Hartford, and other invited guests, present at the centennial celebration of Watertown, June 17, 1880, was written for the occasion by Dr. Hungerford:

Men live but once, a noble life lives on Down the uncounted years, through victories won,
Deathless and crowned, for aye. This very day
Heroes who perished in that bloody fray
Where Putnam fought and gallant Warren fell
Are in these scenes around us, living well.
Their lives were thoughts wrought out in deeds sublime,
And still their footsteps press the shores of time.
Our fathers came here from beyond the sea,
Gave us this heritage, and left us free.
A few years since the Indian roamed these hills,
And reared his wigwam by our busy rills;
To-day these homes, with cheerful beauty crowned,
Invite to us the eager world around.
Green isles behind him, and his father's grave,
Erin comes, spellbound, o'er the yielding wave,
To gain a broader manhood when he wills,
And own the sod his hardy muscle tills.
And why that stranger boy from far Cathay,
Satchel in hand, his household gods away?
What but to learn the great, the good, the true
Freedom has taught her generous sons to do?

What they have done I pause not to relate,
Since first the colony became the State,
And States united made the nation free
To rule this heritage of land and sea;
But while our flag is waving in the breeze
Of tropic, torrid, and of polar seas,
Fair Freedom was and is by heaven designed
To rule the greater empire of the mind,
To raise the fallen, make the sick man whole,
And rouse to faith and life his sluggish soul.

There are some things that Freedom will not do:
She cannot make the false to be the true;
She may inspire the poet's loftiest song,
But fails to dignify the flagrant wrong.
We tried it once when growing proudly great,
And in the bosom of a sovereign State
Kept an ill-gotten treasure, made to bring
A pleasure often, oftener a sting.
'Twas feared, yet cherished, hated, too, yet loved,
Detested, honored, scorned, admired, approved,
Till once sworn brothers deadliest foemen stood,
And dropped that burden in a sea of blood.

Hence to your homes, and on our natal morn
Unroll those battle-flags through Dixie borne;
Gaze the brave rents of Minie-ball and shell.
Oh! read their lesson once, but read it well,
Nor vainly strive to carry hoary ills
Up Freedom's sacred heights and heaven-crowned hills.
In the sure kingdom that is yet to come,
Where love refines and purifies the home,
Woman supreme, yet loyal in her sphere,
Her wrongs redressed, her intuitions clear,
Her brilliants richly set, her jewels rare
And regal, as of old Cornelia's were,
That home a glimpse of Eden's bower, revealed,
Ere sorrow entered it or shame concealed,—
A bright Aurora, leading in the morn
To kindreds and to peoples yet unborn,—
Shall be where'er our standard is unfurled,
A power to bless and purify the world.

Our fathers lived for us, and shall we then
Be in these coming ages living men?
Live noble lives, whole, manly lives and true,
And God will guard and guide the nation, too,
Till on earth's darkest realms the light shall rise,
And Freedom's gracious baldric arch their skies.

ELI CURTISS.

Eli Curtiss was born at Huntington, in this State, June 16, 1804, and died Feb. 27, 1878. He came to Watertown when sixteen years old, as clerk for Benjamin De Forest, and when he was twenty-two he took Mr. De Forest's store, remaining there until 1850. In Watertown Mr. Curtiss built up an extensive trade, employing many clerks, and engaging in the "plant-hat" business, as it was called. He procured the material for the hats, which was taken by women from all the adjoining towns, cut into strips, and braided into hats. The ladies from Bethlehem, Morris, Woodbury, Middlebury, Plymouth, and all the surrounding country profited by this employment, returning the hats to Mr. Curtiss, and receiving their pay in goods from his store. In this way he became the most extensive and successful merchant in all these parts, people coming from Waterbury to trade with him, as they now go from Watertown to trade at Waterbury. Here Mr. Curtiss laid, strong and deep, foundations for his future prosperity, beginning business with an empty pocket, but with a head full of good common sense and enterprise, balanced by a benevolent heart. In 1850, Mr. Curtiss went into the New York store of the Scoville Manufacturing Company, remaining in New York eighteen years, and retiring from active business in 1868. He was postmaster of his town for several years, and represented Watertown in the Legislature in 1861, and ten years later became State senator and a fellow of Yale College, assisting in electing Professor Porter president of Yale. He was very fond of military matters, and held various positions, from that of sergeant to that of colonel of the Twelfth Regiment State Militia. For many years he was connected with the Congregational Church in Watertown, and was always interested in church and society matters. One of his last gifts was a handsome donation to the church, in which he occupied the same seat, when at home, almost every Sunday for over twenty years. His generous soul kept his purse ever open to the calls of charity, and his prosperity never exalted him above his own townsmen, for he had a kind word for every one of whatever rank or station. Feb. 20, 1878, he was suddenly struck with a shock of paralysis, being at the Gramercy Park House, in New York, where he had gone, with his wife and two daughters, to spend the winter. After two hours he became unconscious, and lay in that state until he passed away a week later. Mr. Curtiss was twice married, first to the sister of Dr. John De Forest, who left five sons to survive her when she died, five other children having preceded her to the other shore. Mr. Curtiss' second wife, her two daughters, and four of his sons by the first wife now remain to mourn the loss of a kind and loving husband and father.

BENJAMIN DE FOREST, ESQ.

The following was written by a friend, and published soon after his death:

"The character of this gentleman, recently deceased, is worthy of public notice, as it possesses features which may profitably be commended to the imitation of others, especially men of business.

"The outline of his life may be given in a few words. He was born in Huntington, Conn., in June, 1780, the son of Benjamin and Mehitabel De Forest. At the age of sixteen years he went to Watertown to learn the trade of a hatter. After serving a regular apprenticeship at that business, he entered the store of Mr. Leavitt, of Bethlehem, as a clerk. He left that position after a few months to enter into mercantile business in Watertown with his brother, John H. De Forest, who afterwards became a manufacturer in Humphreysville, now Seymour. In that business he continued from 1803 to 1825, when he became connected, as a stockholder, and by active personal agency, with manufacturing in Waterbury, though still having his home and residence in Watertown. About twenty years since, in 1838, on account of impaired health, he retired from active service in business, though he was for a long period after connected as stockholder, and a director whose counsel was always valued, with the Benedict & Burnham Manufacturing Company. Twenty-seven years ago, in 1832, he united with the Congregational Church in Watertown by profession of his faith in Christ, and he has ever since honored that profession by an exemplary Christian life. Of the ecclesiastical society connected with that church he had been for many years previous an active member, and a steadfast, judicious, and reliable friend.

"The most prominent feature in Mr. De Forest's character was his inflexible and incorruptible integrity,—he loved righteousness; he hated iniquity. He loved to do right himself, exactly right, and was exceedingly careful to learn it and do it. His conscientiousness was very active and very just. His devotion to the right and the true in his own conduct was remarkable; and he loved, also, to have others do right, and he did what he wisely could for that end, though he was no busybody in other men's matters, and was not lacking in charity for their failings. The same trait of character made him in all public affairs the firm and ardent friend of righteousness, and the steady and unswerving opponent of wrong and oppression. On all questions of right and wrong men knew where to find him, and how to rely on him.

"As a man of business, he had unusual sagacity,—he made himself thoroughly acquainted with all matters pertaining to his business, and with respect to them was quick-sighted and far-sighted,—and with this sagacity he united equal prudence and caution, though it was not prudence or caution of that sort which partakes of moral cowardice, or ever compromises right and truth. His accuracy was most exact, and his punctuality was proverbial among all who knew him. It is not too much to say that during the more than sixty years in which he was more or less connected with business he was never one moment too late. No man or company of men ever lost a minute's time by his neglect to meet an appointment in season; and this punctuality he carried into every department of his life: at bank, or counter, or convention, at church or prayer-meeting, he was never tardy.

"In his speech he was a man of few words, but they were always pertinent, luminous, and unequivocal words. He never spoke till he had something suitable to say, and then he spoke plainly, briefly, and decidedly. He was as downright in his language as he was upright in thought and conduct.

"Mr. De Forest was a liberal man. By the blessing of Divine Providence on his industry and skill, he possessed a handsome competence for many years, and he made good use of it during his lifetime, as his contributions to many objects of benevolence have for a long period testified. He was quiet and unostentatious in his manner of giving, but many are the plans of heavenly charity, and many the persons in trial and necessity, that testify to the compassion of his heart and the openness of his hands.

"On the whole, it may be truly said that in a good degree Mr. De Forest obeyed the comprehensive rule of human duty as it is given in the Divine Word,—'To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God.'

"In his domestic life Mr. De Forest had much of joy, and an unusual degree of bereavement and sorrow. The wife of his youth was Alma Southmayd (daughter of Samuel and Dorcas Skinner Southmayd, sister of Samuel W. Southmayd, before his early decease an able lawyer at the bar of Litchfield County, and descendant of Rev. John Southmayd, the second minister of the first church in Waterbury), whom he married in Watertown, June, 1805. With her he lived in the happiest relations till December, 1850, when he followed her to the grave, sorrowing, but sorrowing not as those without hope, in the full assurance of her faith in Christ and of her infinite gain. They had before followed, in united grief, to the grave seven out of ten children. These afflictions, through divine grace, were borne by him with Christian patience and meekness, and had a manifest effect in mellowing his character and ripening it for heaven."

He died suddenly, Feb. 2, 1859, with disease of the heart. Three children only survive him, viz.: John, born March 31, 1806; Alma, first wife of Eli Curtiss, born May 28, 1813; and Benjamin, born Aug. 7, 1818.

"Why weep ye then for him who, having won
The bound of man's appointed years, at last,
Life's blessings all enjoyed, life's labors done,
Serenely to his final rest has passed,
While the soft memory of his virtues yet
Lingers, like twilight hues when the bright sun is set."

EDMUND B. DICKERMAN.

Edmund B. Dickerman was born in New Haven, Conn., Nov. 29, 1810.

His early life was passed with his father, a farmer, and his education acquired at the schools of New Haven. While still a youth he entered the employ of Durrie & Peck, booksellers, as clerk. Here he remained until he was twenty-one, when he went to Natchez, Miss., and engaged in trade. After twelve years of life as a merchant in Natchez, Mr. Dickerman removed to Milwaukee, Wis., and became much interested in the early growth of that city. His real estate transactions there having proved successful, in June, 1871, he retired from active business, and took up his residence in Watertown, Conn., where he passed the remainder of his life.

Mr. Dickerman married, July 2, 1844, Margaret G., daughter of Elam Hull, Esq., of New Haven, Conn. Of their three children, only one, Edwin H., attained maturity. He received a liberal education, was graduated from Columbia (N. Y.) Law-School, and is now a successful lawyer of Westfield, N. Y. Mr. Dickerman had all the qualities necessary to success in business, and he was eminently successful. His personal magnetism won him hosts of friends, and his sterling worth and integrity, with his warm, social nature, continued the friendship for years. He was esteemed and honored wherever he was known, and his counsel earnestly sought and heeded in critical times. His ear was ever open to the calls of charity, and his heart and his purse were ever quick to respond, either to aid the suffering or the promotion of public improvements. He was a man of remarkable energy, promptitude, and perception. In business, in society, in considering public interests he always wore the same pleasant smile, used the same far-seeing judgment and quick, unerring decision.

Mr. Dickerman had much leisure for travel, and did travel extensively in this and in foreign lands. His ardent temperament, literary taste, and powerful memory made him one of the most agreeable of traveling companions, and many who enjoyed his society will long cherish the memory of the intercourse.

On the 14th of September, 1871, he married Mrs. Jane B. Woodruff, widow of John H. Woodruff, and daughter of William Bronson, of Middlebury, Conn. Mr. Dickerman's death was sudden, but hardly unexpected. His nervous system was too sensitive to withstand a difficult surgical operation which became necessary, and he passed quietly away, Feb. 22, 1877.

"Beyond the parting and the meeting
We shall be soon;
Beyond the farewell and the greeting,
Beyond the pulse's fever beating,
We shall be soon."

ALANSON WARREN.

Alanson Warren, of Watertown, Conn., was the son of Edward and Mary Steele Warren, of Watertown, and was born May 16, 1796, at their home, on the farm called the Warren place, located about three and a half miles easterly of Watertown Centre. The farm-house is now standing, in a good state of preservation, and liable to for generations to come, for many of its timbers and beams of hard wood are of huge size, being twelve to fifteen inches in diameter. He was the youngest of six children,—five sons and one daughter. His father died Dec. 10, 1814, aged fifty-three years. Alanson at this time was about eighteen years and six months of age. His mother died Feb. 26, 1849, aged eighty-five. His father was a Revolutionary soldier, and but eighteen years old when he entered the service. He was engaged in the capture of the fortress of Stony Point by Gen. Wayne, in 1779, and, as he used to relate the account of it, was the third man to go over the wall or embankment into the fort. The widow drew a pension during her life.

At the age of sixteen Alanson went to learn the hatter's trade with Joel P. Richards, in Watertown, and when he became twenty-one bought out the business of his employer, and, with a capital of six hundred dollars, embarked in the business for himself, employing from ten to twenty apprentices and journeymen. At the age of twenty-two he was married to Sarah M. Hickox, Christmas, Dec. 25, 1818. She was the daughter of Caleb and Ruth Hickox, who lived upon their farm, one and a half miles east of the village of Watertown.

In the year 1833 he formed a copartnership with William H. Merriman and son, C. B. Merriman, merchants, and united the two concerns, under the name of Merrimans & Warren. After three years he withdrew from the company, and alone resumed his old business, and, in addition thereto, commenced the manufacture of cloth and fur caps and fur goods of various kinds. His manufactured goods he sold to the country merchants in Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New York States, carrying them in a large two-horse wagon built especially for that purpose. In 1843 a company was formed for the continuance of the same business, under the name of Warrens & Beers, composed of A. Warren, his son, T. A. Warren, and R. S. Beers, who for many years had been with Mr. Warren, acting as foreman, attending chiefly to the manufacturing. In 1847, A. Warren withdrew from the business, which was thereafter carried on by Mr. Beers and T. A. Warren, under the name of Beers & Warren.

Besides his other business, Mr. Warren for many years carried on farming to quite an extent, having at times from one to three large farms and other lands, the care of which was in a measure intrusted to his elder sons, with hired men more or less, according to the season of year. About the year 1845 he formed a copartnership with his son-in-law, George P. Woodruff, for merchandising, and manufacturing of buckles, buttons, slides, and metal trimmings for hats and caps, occupying the store then standing on what is now the east end of the Warren House park, and was popularly known as the "Corner Store," but has since, at the time of building the hotel, been removed to a lot south of C. A. Warren's residence. The manufacturing was carried on in other buildings on the same premises for several years, until about the year 1848, when they formed a copartnership with Nathaniel Wheeler, who was then also engaged in the manufacture of similar goods in Gen. M. Heminway's factory, now his silk-factory, but very much enlarged. The tools and machinery of Warren & Woodruff were now removed to this factory, and the two concerns consolidated, operating under the firm-name of Warren, Wheeler & Woodruff. They now added to their previous business the manufacture of suspender-buckles. The business so rapidly increased that early in 1849 they found the room and water-power too limited for their business and that of Mr. Hemingway, and therefore purchased the water-power on which the Leverett-Condee satinet-factory, that was burned, had formerly stood, about one and a half miles south of the Centre, and erected a large factory. Here, with their greatly increased facilities, the business was very much enlarged and successfully carried on.

About this time the idea of sewing by machinery began to agitate the minds of a few inventors, and late in 1850 the company contracted to build some two thousand of the Wilson first patented shuttle sewing-machine for a New York company, then the principal owners of that patent. Early in 1851, A. B. Wilson, the patentee, came to the factory to assist in building these machines. He, who has since attained such a world-wide reputation as a sewing-machine inventor, had at this time, in his head, on paper, and in models, still another idea of a sewing-machine on a different principle,—that of a rotary hook,—which was brought out after much study and labor, and patented in 1851, but was not considered quite satisfactory until his second invention, patented in 1852. This improvement being a success, the copartnership of Wheeler, Wilson & Co. was now formed, and composed of A. Warren, N. Wheeler, G. P. Woodruff, and A. B. Wilson, each having equal shares in it, and without any specified amount of capital, which consisted in real estate, patents, machinery, etc., valued probably at not less than eighty thousand dollars. It was about this time, when the sewing-machine business was in its infancy, that Mr. Warren remarked to one of his sons that he would probably live to see the day when they would make and sell twenty-five machines a day. This was considered an extravagant remark at that time, as no one could then foresee the magnitude to which the sewing-machine business would in the future attain, and would hardly have been justified in making a larger estimate. The most visionary mind did not anticipate, or even venture to predict, that they would ever come up to their present capacity of turning out from four hundred to six hundred a day, and with such a demand for them that, even at this rate of production, in November, 1880, they fell some eighteen thousand machines behind their orders, and from a machine that could perhaps take but fifty to seventy-five stitches a minute, have so improved as to now produce machines that will take fifteen hundred stitches per minute.

The business was successfully continued under this firm-name for about one year, when it was thought desirable to enlarge the business, introducing more capital. They then organized the Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Company, Oct. 5, 1853, with a capital of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars. Alanson Warren was elected its president, and George P. Woodruff secretary, Waterbury capitalists and others taking part of the increased stock. In 1855, Mr. Warren resigned the presidency, and N. Wheeler was elected president, and William H. Perry secretary, and have been re-elected every year since to said offices, and may continue to be for life.

It was soon found that the room and power of this factory was not sufficient for their rapidly-increasing business, and in June, 1856, they removed to Bridgeport, into more commodious quarters. They have continued to prosper under the wise management of its officers, increasing its capital stock from time to time by stock dividends to its present capital of one million dollars, with a very large surplus, and in the mean time have paid liberal cash dividends to its stockholders. Their extensive manufactory now covers from eight to ten acres of ground, and employs from nine hundred to eleven hundred hands, according to the business. But for the engagement of Messrs. Warren, Wheeler and Woodruff with each other in business this great and prosperous concern might never have existed.

Mr. Warren was president of the Warren & Newton Manufacturing Company, organized Feb. 5, 1846, for the manufacture of suspenders, with a capital of twelve thousand dollars, which was by the earnings of the company increased to sixty thousand dollars. Their factory was at Oakville. They also carried on a store for general merchandise at Watertown Centre, —the "Corner Store." In 1857 the store was sold to the Phœnix Company,—a new company, with Mr. Warren as president,—and continued as a country store. The factory property and suspender business was sold to the American Suspender Company, at Waterbury,—a new company, formed by the union of three suspender companies, viz., Cheshire Company, Hotchkiss & Merriman Company of Waterbury, and the Warren & Newton Manufacturing Company,—and the business continued on a much larger scale, under a capital of three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Warren was also interested in various other manufacturing companies,—that of the American Knife Company of Plymouth, Waterbury Brass Company, Oakville Pin Company, Union Leather Company, A. Warren & Co., for buckles, etc., at the Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Company's factory, after their removal, 1856, and the Beers, Woodruff & Co., Watertown, for shirts and linen goods, from 1853 till the death of Mr. Woodruff, 1857, then R. S. Beers & Co., till the death of Mr. Warren, 1858, when, T. A. Warren taking his father's interest in the company, it continued, with some changes, till 1870.

Mr. Warren always took an active and lively interest in the affairs of the town, and was willing to do his full share for its general improvements. He represented the town in the General Assembly of 1841. In politics was a Whig. He was a member and communicant of Christ Church parish (Episcopal), and for many years its senior warden, and contributed liberally to its support, also to the building of its new church edifice, the corner-stone of which was laid May 29, 1854, and the church consecrated Nov. 15, 1855, by the Rt. Rev. Assistant Bishop Williams. The church was built on grounds across the park or church green, east of and facing the residence of Mr. Warren. The old church, now removed, then stood north of his residence, between it and the highway. He was one of the building committee for the new church, and was greatly interested in the building of it.

He was one of the incorporators of the Evergreen Cemetery in 1854, and took a deep interest in the laying out and beautifying of these grounds, in which his remains were so soon to be deposited.

He died Oct. 20, 1858, aged sixty-two years.

His widow, who survived him about eight years, died April 20, 1866, aged sixty-seven years.

Their family consisted of ten children,—five sons and five daughters,—of which but four sons are living at this date (January, 1881), two of whom reside in Watertown.

FREDERICK HOLCOMB, D.D.*

Rev. Frederick Holcomb, D.D., was the third son of Jesse and Louisa Holcomb. He was born in Granby, Conn., Oct. 13, 1786. His parents, by religious profession, belonged to the Episcopal Church, and had their children baptized in infancy. At the early age of thirteen himself, with two brothers and a sister, received the apostolic rite of confirmation by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Jarvis. At about the age of sixteen his parents, albeit in moderate circumstances, made him the offer of a collegiate education, though there was no decided indication on his part at that time of a desire to enter the ministry. He eagerly accepted the offer. His preparatory studies began under the Rev. David Waldo, of West Suffield, and were completed under the Rev. Mr. Clinton, of Southwick, Mass. In 1805 he entered Williams College,

* Compiled from a sermon preached by Rev. William H. Lewis, D.D., June 2, 1872.

Massachusetts, graduating in 1809. Soon after that he was led, under the providence of God, to realize the necessity of due preparation for the life to come, and he resolved on a course of theological reading, and entered upon it at once. His first examination was passed under the Rev. Dr. Tillotson Bronson, of Cheshire, and his second under the Rev. Dr. Kewley, of Middletown. He was ordained as deacon, with license to preach and baptize, in Trinity church, New Haven, June 23, 1811, by the Rt. Rev. Abraham Jarvis, D.D. A call was soon received from St. Mark's Church, Harwinton, and Trinity Church, Northfield society, to take charge of them both, and to divide the time equally between them. He removed to Harwinton, with his wife and one child, on the 17th of December, 1811. At his ordination to the priesthood, it being necessary to have three presbyters to lay on hands, with the bishop, the venerable Dr. Mansfield, of Derby, then about ninety years of age, was brought to act, with the Rev. Dr. Bronson, and the Rev. Mr. Whitlock, of Trinity Church, New Haven, and the ordination was in that church, by Bishop Jarvis, Sunday, Dec. 20, 1812.

It was the last ordination performed by that prelate, and for some years Dr. Holcomb was not only the last presbyter ordained by him, but the only survivor of those admitted by him to holy orders. He soon after received a call to Christ Church, Watertown, and removed his family there Dec. 14, 1814. He remained as rector of that parish until 1838, when he resigned its care, but was recalled in 1845, and continued as rector until 1850, when the infirmities of old age prompted him to surrender the cares of a parish forever. Nevertheless, he preached for feeble and destitute parishes, whenever his health would allow it, during the remainder of life. He died May 26, 1872.

His first wife, Mary Pinney, died Nov. 15, 1825, leaving two daughters, Mary E., wife of Leman W. Cutler, and Martha M., wife of Orrin Starr. These last both died before his demise. His second wife, Nancy Merriman, widow of Ed. E. Porter, survives him.

Dr. Holcomb was a man of fine personal appearance, of great physical strength, and until the decay of nature, in old age, always favored with robust health. He was a man of great prudence, never stirring up strife by word or deed of his own,—truly a peacemaker. He was firm in his churchmanship, and yet courteous and kind to those of other religious names, so as always to have been on terms of kindly Christian intercourse with them.

CAPT. E. CARRINGTON BOWERS, U.S.N.

Capt. E. Carrington Bowers, U.S.N., was born in Middletown, Conn., June 7, 1809. On his paternal side he is a descendant from Governor Bradford, of Massachusetts, and on his maternal side he is a descendant of the Hamlins, of Middletown, Conn., one of whom, Jabez, was the first mayor of Middletown. His father, Caleb Bowers, was born in Rhode Island, married Sarah A., daughter of Gen. Ebenezer Sage, of Middletown, Conn., and had four children, of whom the subject of this sketch is the third.

Caleb Bowers was for many years a merchant in the Indies; returned to the United States, where he died in 1815. Young Bowers remained at home until he was thirteen years of age, receiving the advantages of a common-school education, when he went to sea in the ship "Fame" as a common sailor before the mast, making a voyage around Cape Horn. After remaining a year, he entered the Peruvian service as midshipman, when he saw the Spanish flag hauled down at the Castle of Callao, the last of all of Spain's vast possessions in South America. He soon returned to the United States, and entered Capt. Partridge's military school at Middletown, Conn., where he remained some time, until he received an appointment to enter the Greek service in her war for independence against Turkey. He set sail from New York in the Greek frigate "Hope," but soon returned to New York, when he was attached to the old steamship "Fulton," that being the first steam man-of-war ever built. He left her only a short time before she was blown up, and entered the merchant service, making a long voyage to the East Indies.

In 1835 he passed a very satisfactory examination in a class of over one hundred, standing next to Admiral Porter in scholarship. Among other members of his class were the late Commodore Decatur and the present Rear-Admirals Strong and Almy.

He received an appointment as master-mate on board of the United States sloop-of-war "St. Louis," and sailed for the Pacific. Soon after his arrival in those waters he received an appointment as midshipman, bearing date Feb. 2, 1829, since which time he has been identified with the United States navy, having faithfully filled every position from that of a common sailor before the mast to that of captain in the United States navy.

He served through the Seminole and Mexican wars, rendering efficient service, and, with his four sons,—who went forth with muskets but came back with swords,—served through the great civil war with credit to himself and an honor to his country. He was for thirty-three years in active duty on board ship, a period longer than any other man in the same kind of service.

After the close of the Rebellion he was for a short time engaged in the Boston navy-yard, and at the conclusion of his services there he was retired, and now (December, 1880) resides in the village of Watertown, Conn., in one of the most attractive little Italian cottages, called "Bowers' Villa," anywhere to be seen. It consists of ten acres, well improved, being ornamented by trees and shrubbery generally, which receives the captain's personal supervision.

Captain Bowers married Miss Coffin, of Boston, Mass., a cousin of Sir Isaac Coffin, an admiral in the British navy.

Dayton Mcattoon

William G. Francis

DAYTON MATTOON.

Dayton Mattoon, son of William Mattoon and Sarah Hungerford, daughter of Deacon Jonas Hungerford, was born in Vienna, Oneida Co., N. Y., Aug. 20, 1811. His boyhood till he was six years of age was passed there, and by his father's dying request, in 1817, he came to his grandfather's, Amasa Mattoon, of Watertown, and remained one year; then lived with his grandmother on his mother's side, and his uncle, Thomas Hungerford, till he was sixteen years of age, when he began to work on the farm by the month until he was twenty years of age. During all this time he received only limited advantages for an education. He married, Feb. 23, 1831, Ruhamah Wakeman, daughter of Eli Wakeman, a farmer in Watertown. She was born in Watertown, Dec. 19, 1812. By this union they have had six children, viz.: (1) Sarah E., who married George R. Baldwin, of Waterbury, Conn.; (2) William B., who died at twenty-three; (3) Amelia J., and (4) Alson, twins, the last of whom died while an infant, and Amelia J. married Deacon Henry T. Dayton, of Watertown; (5) Helen G., who died at five years of age; (6) Charles B., married Alvin M. Kellogg, of Baraboo, Wis., and resides at home.

Immediately after Mr. Mattoon's marriage he settled where he now resides, taking care of his grandmother and uncle as long as they lived. He has made all the fine improvements on his farm, which now consists of about one hundred and ninety acres of well-improved land, which is in a good state of cultivation.

In politics he is a Republican. He has been constable and collector two years, selectman, assessor, magistrate, and member of the Legislature during the years 1854 and 1872, serving on the committee of agriculture both times.

At the age of thirty-eight, in 1849, he joined the First Congregational Church at Watertown, of which he was a deacon from 1855 till 1871. He has always been one of the main supporters of the church, and the poor have in him a true friend. He has been Sunday-school superintendent for several years. Mrs. Mattoon is also a member, joining the church with her husband in 1849. He was connected for twelve years with the State militia "Rifle Company," occupying every position in it to captain. Gen. Heminway was the first captain of said company, after which he was promoted to general of the Sixth Brigade Connecticut State Militia.

CALEB T. HICKOX.

The subject of this sketch was born in the town of Watertown, Conn., Feb. 5, 1817. His father, Daniel Hickox, was also a native of Watertown, Conn.; was twice married, rearing three children by his first wife, and one (Caleb T. Hickox) by his second. His second wife was the daughter of Mathew Dutton, of Watertown, Conn., dying at the age of eighty-two years, July 28, 1865. Mr. Hickox was a successful farmer by occupation, and was one of the most esteemed citizens of Watertown. He held nearly all the important town offices, such as selectman, justice of the peace, and member of the State Legislature. He died Oct. 21, 1823, at Royalton, N. Y., and was interred in the cemetery in Watertown, Conn.

Caleb T. Hickox was "brought up" on the home-farm by his widowed mother, as his father died when he (Caleb T.) was only six and a half years old. He remained at home, working on the farm summers and attending the district school winters, until he was sixteen years of age, when he went to Seymour, Conn., and entered as clerk in the dry-goods store of E. Gilbert & Co., where he remained three years, when he went to Burton, Ohio, and remained some six months, spending his time in traveling and visiting. He returned to New Haven, Conn., and entered the employ, as book-keeper, of McCrackan & Merriam, and remained one year, then came to Watertown, Conn., at twenty years of age, and commenced farming, which he successfully followed until he retired, October, 1867, at which time he settled in the village of Watertown, where he continued to reside till the present time (December, 1880).

In politics he was a Whig until the Republican party was organized, when he became a staunch Republican, and as such has held nearly all the offices of his town with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He has been selectman for twenty-one years, town treasurer since 1871, justice of the peace for more than thirty years, secretary of the Watertown Agricultural Association twelve years, and treasurer for many years. He has been elected twice a member of the State Board of Agriculture, and during the years 1852 and 1859 represented his town in the State Legislature. On the 8th of May, 1839, he married Emily H., daughter of Abram Hawley, a farmer of Watertown, Conn. Mr. Hickox is a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church of Watertown, Conn., of which his wife is a member. He has always been successful in whatever he has undertaken, and he justly holds a warm place in the esteem and confidence of his fellow-townsmen.

WILLIAM G. FRENCH.

William G. French is a descendant of the ancient line of the Frenches of Essex, England, being of the eighth generation in lineal descent from William French (first generation), his earliest ancestor in America, who came in the "Defense" from London in 1635, with his wife Elizabeth, his eldest child, Francis, aged ten years, and three other children, all from Essex, England, as shown by the record in the custom-house.

William French was one of the original settlers of the beautiful town of Billerica, eighteen miles north of Boston, where he died, aged seventy-eight, having had ten children born in America. He was the author of the celebrated tract entitled "Strength out of Weakness," published in London, and reprinted by the Boston Historical Society.

Francis (second generation), son of William French, came to Milford, in this State, in 1650, and in 1654 settled in Paugasuck, now the town of Derby, then almost a wilderness. April 10, 1661, he married Lydia Bunnel, of Milford, and brought her to his home, which constituted the third or fourth family in the plantation. He died Feb. 14, 1691, aged sixty-six years.

Francis, Jr. (third generation), son of Francis French, was born Feb. 11, 1677. He was high sheriff of the town, and stood high as a Royal Arch Mason. He died on his father's homestead, April 11, 1751.

Israel (fourth generation), son of Francis French, Jr., was born Oct. 8, 1709, and was among the early settlers of Seymour.

David (fifth generation), son of Israel French, was a patriot of the Revolution, going to Boston after the battle of Bunker Hill, to assist in resisting the encroachments of despotism. He was trial justice of the north part of the town of Woodbridge many years. He represented the town in the General Assembly twenty successive years. He was for many years a deacon of the First Congregational Church of Bethany. He died Aug. 4, 1821, aged eighty years.

Luther (sixth generation, grandfather to William G. French), son of David French, married Sarah Miles, and settled on land he inherited from his father, in what is now the town of Beacon Falls. He and his wife both died young, leaving four children, among whom was Smith Miles (seventh generation), a lad of six years, the father of William G. French (eighth generation).

Smith Miles French was taken by an uncle living in Bethany until he was sixteen, then apprenticed to learn the blacksmith trade.

The maternal great-grandfather of Wm. G. French was Capt. James Wheeler, who came to Derby, Conn. (probably from Stratford, Conn.), May 19, 1736. He owned considerable land where the village of Derby Narrows was afterwards built, and was a prominent man of the town.

James, (2d), Jr. son of Capt. James Wheeler, married Mary Clark, of Milford, June 13, 1767. They had twelve children, one of whom was David Wheeler, who was a farmer and carriage manufacturer, married Phebe De Forest, and had several children, among whom we mention Nathaniel Wheeler, of Bridgeport, and Mary A.

William G. French, son of Smith M. French and Mary A., daughter of David Wheeler, was born in Watertown, Conn., Jan. 8, 1844.

His father, Smith M. French, was a native of Bethany, New Haven Co., Conn., and married Mary A. Wheeler, April 23, 1830. She was born Aug. 26, 1814. They have two children, viz.: Sarah J. and William G. Mr. French was a blacksmith by trade, making dies and tools and manufacturing wagons. In politics a Democrat. He died on the 17th of August, 1870, in his sixty-first year.

William G. French received a common-school and academic education at Watertown, Conn., spending his summer vacations on his father's farm. He is one of Watertown's enterprising farmers, and takes a deep interest in the agricultural society of his town, having served on the executive committee several years, and at the present time is second vice-president.

In politics he is a Democrat. He has been one of the selectmen of the town since October, 1872, and for the past five years first selectman, which position he now holds. In the spring of 1875 he was elected to the State Legislature, and served on the committee of engrossing bills, having been the first Democrat elected from Watertown since the election of Samuel H. Nettleton, in 1846.

It is perhaps not too much to say that to Mr. French more than to any other man is due the credit of the Watertown centennial celebration, which occurred on the 17th of June, 1880.

He is a member of Christ's Episcopal Church, at Watertown, Conn., and at the present time is one of the vestrymen. Mr. French is of a social disposition, and popular in his town,—a man in whom the people have confidence.

FREDERICK J. PARTREE.

Frederick J. Partree, son of John and Manorey (Welton) Partree, was born in Watertown, Conn., March 29, 1827.

His grandfather, John Partree, was a native of Nova Scotia, and came to New England when a boy, where he continued to reside through life. He married a Miss Platt, and had six children—two sons and four daughters. He was a practical farmer, and died at a ripe old age. One of his sons was named John, who was born in Old Milford, Conn.; was twice married, and had one daughter, Alma (Mrs. Joseph Tomilson), by his first marriage, and seven children by his second marriage, of whom Frederick J. is the fourth. John Partree was a successful farmer; in politics a Whig, and both he and his wife were members of the Congregational Church. He died Feb. 25, 1855, aged sixty-six years, and his wife died April 29, 1874, aged seventy-eight years.

Frederick J. worked on his father's farm summers, attending the district school winters. At the age of twenty-one he began teaching school winters, working on the farm summers. On the 12th of November, 1857, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Seabury Scoville, and to them have been born three daughters,—viz., Cora, E., Ella M., and Bertha S.,—all of whom are now (December, 1880) at home.

Mr. Partree settled on his present farm in April, 1855, and has made nearly all the fine improvements on it.

In politics he is a Republican. During the great civil war he was a selectman, and for the years 1872–74 was first selectman. He has been an assessor for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Partree are members of the Congregational Church of Watertown, Conn.

CHAPTER LXIX.

WOODBURY.*

Introductory—Six Purchases from the Pootatucks—First or Pomperaug Purchase—Kettletown Purchase—Fourth, or Nonnewaug Purchase—Fifth Purchase—Sixth, or Confirmatory Purchase—Reservation, or "Purchase"—Indian "Marks"—A Buried Race.

INTRODUCTION.

A LITTLE more than two hundred years ago the pleasant hills and sunny valleys of Woodbury, now teeming with life, intelligence, and happiness, were one vast solitude, unvisited by the cheering rays of civilization, everything betokening that the silence of nature had been unbroken by human voices since those early days "when the morning stars sang together," save by those of nature's own uncultivated children, the red hunters of the forest. Nature in all its great magnificence met the enchanted view of the pale-face in these sweetly fertile plains and mountain fastnesses. The grim chiefs of the woody wilds alone roamed over these retired solitudes, save the wild beasts that growled upon a thousand hills. Every year had the Indians set fire to the fallen leaves, thus denuding the trees of the lower branches, and destroying the underbrush, so that the dense woods presented a most magnificent and enchanting appearance. Thus the "eye was allowed to rove with delight from ridge to ridge, and from hill to hill, which, like the divisions of an immense temple, were crowded with innumerable pillars, the branches of whose shafts, interlocking, formed the archwork of support to that leafy roof which covered and crowned the whole." On the meadows by our noble river were scanty patches of maize, beans, and tobacco, the results of the rude husbandry of the untutored savage of the forest. The whole face of nature was one vast solitude, uncheered by the benign rays of civilization. From Wyantenuck to Mattatuck, and from Pootatuck to Bantam, were heard the dismal howl of the wolf and the war-cry of the red man. Amid these secluded wilds, and by the silvery waters of the Quassapaug, sported the timid deer, and coy doves built their lovely nests. Here dwelt a race groping in the shadow of dim imaginings, faintly led by the light of nature. Here desperate fights and deadly ambuscades were planned. Here did the prisoner of war suffer the extreme tortures of his enemies. Here the romantic lover "wooed his dusky mate" with presents and silent attentions, in primitive simplicity. Here, too, the pow-wow held his dread incantations, and, if tradition is to be believed, offered human sacrifices to appease the wrath of Hobbamocko, the spirit of evil, the author of all human plagues and calamities. Here, too, in the golden days of the Indian summer, the poor savage mused of the Great Spirit, the benevolent Kichtau, giver of his corn, beans, and tobacco, who lived far away to the southwest, in whose blest dominions he hoped at death to find his happy hunting-grounds.

Everything now is changed. The desert waste that met the first gaze of our pioneer forefathers has been made to bud and blossom as the rose. Where once were but the scattered huts of the former race are now enterprising and busy villages. The ceaseless hum of machinery, giving employment, competence, and happiness to hundreds of families, is now heard in our valleys, which in those early days but echoed the growl of the bear or the cry of the panther. Instead of the wretched orgies of the pow-wow, and the inhuman sacrifices of the midnight of barbarism, are churches dedicated to the service of the living God, where prayer and praise are wont to be made. Where once were cherished the savage instincts of men and a taste for war now are cultivated the arts of peace and schemes for the happiness and advancement of mankind. Intelligence and enterprise now take the place of ignorance and sloth. The hills and vales that groaned with scenes of violence and blood have been made vocal with the praises of the great Creator. Instead of a race groping in the shadows of paganism we find one filled with the hopes of a rational and glorious immortality. Our fathers found a howling wilderness; we behold to-day, as the result of their labors, from which they long have rested, some of the most happy and beautiful of New England's many lovely villages. An upright and honored race, they wrought well, and their works do follow them.

The simple, unfortunate race of the early days has departed, faded from the view, and almost from the memory of men. In their lowly, unnoticed, and unknown graves they sleep well. "The chiefs of other times are departed; they have gone without their fame. Another race has arisen; its people are like the waves of the ocean. Like the leaves of woody Morven, they pass away in the rustling blast, and other green leaves lift their heads on high."

How did our fathers come by their title to this now blooming territory? How did they acquire the fee to the soil, and the right to dominion? How did they obtain rights which civilized nations ever fight for and wade through rivers of blood to secure? The answer to these questions is ready, and is honorable to our fathers' sense of right and justice. Those who represent the founders of Woodbury can look upon their landed possessions as having come down to them by fair, honest, and legitimate titles. They not only purchased their lands of the Indians, but in some instances they purchased them several times over from conflicting claimants and dishonest pretenders. They were very particular in procuring title-deeds and alienations, executed in legal form, and with great solemnity. They were extremely careful, that they might in this manner more vividly impress on the minds of the Indians the binding nature of their contents. Those children of nature, the former lords of the forest, took great interest in the proceedings, and fixed their uncouth, though often ingenious, "marks" of a snow-shoe, a fish, a bow and arrow, a war-club, a snake, or some wild animal, to the deeds that were conveying away forever their paternal hunting-grounds to the pale-faced strangers within their ancient borders. They often stipulated in their conveyances that the "marked trees," or bounds, should be made "clere and ffayre," and that they should be carefully kept from obliteration.

The date of the first Indian deed given to the explorers of this valley is April 20, 1659, and is signed by Tautaunimo and other Derby Indians. They encouraged our fathers to purchase by saying, in their quaint language, that this valley was "a good place for many smokes of the white man." It was so proved, and no complaint, in this regard, can be made against the grantors. The bounds in this deed are: "Polateuk River South-west, Naugatunck River North-east, and bounded on y^{e} North-west with trees marked by me (Tautannimo), and other Indians." This includes a territory in Litchfield and New Haven Counties nearly as large as Litchfield County itself. It extended from the Naugatuck to the Housatonic, and from the southernmost point of Southbury to Bantam Lake, in Litchfield. It does not appear that the pioneers made use of this purchase, except, perhaps, for hunting-grounds, till thirteen years later, at which time they planted corn upon the river meadows in company with the Indians. The next year, April 26, 1673, they made their first, or Pomperaug, purchase of the Pootatuck Indians, the real occupants of the soil, covering the whole town-plot from the eastern hills to "Wecuppeme," and from the north end of East Meadow to the "Bent" of the Pomperaug River at South Britain, taking in "transilvania and ragland." By this purchase a large part of the most fertile and arable lands of the town were obtained.

The second purchase of lands from the Pootatucks was made March 17, 1685–86. This was the Shepaug purchase, comprising two-thirds of the present town of Roxbury and a part of Southbury. On the 18th day of May, 1700, the inhabitants of the town, having become numerous for those days, made their fourth, or Nonnewaug purchase. Till this time it seems that the sagamore of that name had retained his possessions in the valley of the Nonnewaug, in East Sprain stream. But now it came his turn to make room, and it seems that he and his counselors did it with a good grace, as the deed informs us the sale was made "For valid considerations moving thereto, besides y^{e} desire y^{t} is wthin us of a friendly correspondency wth y^{e} English inhabitants of s^{d} Woodbury." At a very early day that part of Southbury, known as Kettletown, had been purchased of the Indians for the consideration of a brass kettle. It had been bought the second time seven years after the settlement of the town; and on the 25th of October, 1705, it became necessary to purchase it the third time. Something more than a quarter of a century had passed since the last sale, and by this time it is probable that they again felt the need of the "consideration." This was the fifth regular purchase of the Pootatucks. On the 28th day of May, next year, the town bought the sixth, or confirmatory purchase. This covered and confirmed all former grants and purchases, together with a considerable tract of land in Roxbury, and a piece eighty rods wide, from Steep Rock, in Washington, to the mouth of the Shepaug, on the west side of that river. In this deed the Indians reserved a large tract of land in the southwest part of Southbury, called the Pootatuck Reservation. This was bounded on the north by a line drawn from Shepaug Falls to the "Bent" of the Pomperaug, east by that river, or by a line drawn parallel to, or a few rods east of it, from the "Bent" to its mouth, south by the Pootatuck, and west by the Shepaug River. This reservation, now called "The Purchase," contained the principal Indian village, located on the Pootatuck River, south of South Britain village. After this sale the Indians continued to convey portions of their land, from time to time, till 1733, when there was left to them only a remnant of their possessions at the southwest corner, in which was located their remaining village, called the "Pootatuck Wigwams." They retained their title to this last resting-place for a quarter of a century longer, when, reduced to a mere handful in numbers, in May, 1759, they sold their cherished Pootatuck, and the "remnant that remained" took up their abode with the "Scaticook Indians" at Kent, where a few of mixed blood remain to this day. In all their later sales they reserved the right to take game on the lands forever,—a right which was always religiously respected by our fathers whenever a straggling Pootatuck revisited the graves of his ancestors, or wandered in his once wide dominions!

The "marks" with which these Indians signed their deeds were unique and interesting. Nonnewaug's mark was a snow-shoe; Wecuppeme's, a snake; Momauchewaug's, a rude drawing of the face of a prostrate foe; Punhone's, the uplifted arm of a warrior; and that of Tummasseete, the owner of the first orchard in this territory, was a bow and arrow. A part of this orchard still exists, and bore apples last season. These "marks" were as truly signatures as our own, and as readily identified.

It is many years since the last Pootatuck, an old squaw, came back to the Pootatuck village to revisit the graves of her ancestors. Looking up to the place where still stand the few remaining trees of "Tummasseete's old orchard," she said, "There is Pootatuck, the home of the buried braves." What a world of sad associations cluster around that simple outburst of nature! After lingering among the graves of her people a few days she returned to Scaticook, and the light of the pristine race in this territory went out forever!

Let us pause a moment to drop a tear over the graves of a buried race. With as great care, or perhaps greater, than our own, the Indians marked the graves of their fathers. By the romantic falls of his own ever-murmuring stream is the grave of Nonnewaug. In his own orchard at Pootatuck, near the Housatonic, is resting the remains of Tummasseete. Within the fertile meadows of Wecuppeme reposes the brave of that name, in his last quiet sleep. And in the very midst of our village they buried Pomperaug, who gave his name to our beautiful river.

So far as the Indians of this town were concerned, they were always the friends of our fathers, and maintained with them a perpetual peace. There were some Indian conflicts here, but they arose from the incursions of the Mohawks, who, previous to the arrival of the white settlers, held the Indians of this territory as tributaries by superior prowess. As early as 1675, during King Philip's war, they made a treaty with the first settlers, in which they covenanted to continue in "friendship with the white settlers, and be enemies to their enemies, and discover them timely, or destroy them." This treaty was ever kept, as a perpetual league, with entire good faith by both the contracting parties, and many were the mutual offices of kindness they performed for each other.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Church Dissensions in Stratford the Cause of the Settlement of Woodbury—Action of the General Court in 1667, 1669, 1670—Pomperaug Granted and Settlement Commenced in 1672—Fresh Arrivals Next Year—Pomperaug made a Town and Called Woodbury in 1674—Signification of the Name.

THE settlement of Woodbury was the result of difference in religious opinion among the inhabitants of Stratford. It was accomplished by one of the most remarkable and brilliant mental conflicts that ever occurred in planting a New England town. There were giants in those days, girded for the defense of what they believed to be religious truth. The usual reason for settling a new town had been that the parent town had become too full to accommodate all its inhabitants, and that it was necessary to seek new locations for extending the church of God and advancing the interests of religious freedom. No idea of mere worldly advantage entered the minds of the stern and earnest men who founded our town. The first ministers of the colony being dead, and a new generation coming on the stage of action, alterations in respect to church membership, baptism, and the mode of church discipline were earnestly demanded. Great dissensions on these subjects accordingly arose in the churches at Hartford, Windsor, Weathersfield, and other places, and continued in various parts of the colony from 1656 to about 1670. It is difficult for us, at this distance of time, fully to understand the merits of the controversy. The system in dispute was called the "Half-way Covenant" system of church membership. Upon this question there was the gravest difference of opinion among the most learned and pious men in New England.

By this plan a person of good moral character, who had been baptized in infancy, might own or renew the covenant of baptism which had been made for him by his parents, confessing the same creed as members of the church in full communion, and, affirming his intention of becoming truly pious in heart and life, have the privilege of presenting his children, grandchildren, adopted children, and even his slaves, for baptism by giving a pledge for their religious education. Persons thus owning the covenant were considered members of the church to all intents and purposes, except that they were not admitted to the communion-table. For conduct unbecoming church members they could be, and were, dealt with and punished in the same manner as members in full communion. Consequent on this practice baptism followed closely upon birth, generally in from one to eight days, and if the child was in danger of "non-continuance" it was baptized at once.

In those early days the choice of pastors was confined exclusively to members of the church, though every freeholder was taxed for their support, and nearly all the offices and honors of the colony of Connecticut, to which Stratford belonged, were distributed to professors of religion, who alone, in the colony of New Haven, possessed the right of suffrage in meetings of a political character. During the lives of the early colonists little trouble had arisen on these points, nearly all of the first immigrants having been church members. But this generation had passed away and a new one had succeeded, many of whom, on account of their not belonging to the church, were excluded from their proper influence in the community. Most of them had been baptized, and by virtue of this it was claimed they might own their covenant, have their children baptized, and thus perpetuate the church and themselves attain the rank of perfect freemen. Hence it may be readily seen why our forefathers, being excluded from their proper position in the affairs of the town and colony, desired such a change in church government as would overcome this unjust inequality. All New England became interested in this controversy, and in 1657 it was decided by a council of the principal ministers of the colonies, convened in Boston, that it was the duty of those who had come to the years of discretion, baptized in infancy, to own the covenant; that it was the duty of the church to call them to do it, and if they refused, they might be censured by the church. In consequence of this decision many owned their covenant and presented their children for baptism, but did not unite with the church in the celebration of the Supper, nor in most other duties of members in full communion. Hence it was termed the "Half-Way Covenant System."

The church at Stratford, notwithstanding the Boston decision, would not adopt this practice, although a large and influential part of its members were in favor of it, together with a majority of the voters of the town who were not church members. Rev. Israel Chauncey, son of President Charles Chauncey, of Cambridge, Mass., who was opposed to this practice, was settled over the church in 1666. On account of this difference a large part of the church and town was opposed to his ordination. It was, therefore, agreed that if, after hearing Mr. Chauncey a certain time, they should continue to be dissatisfied with his ministry, the dissenting party should be at liberty to call another minister, and have the same use of the meeting-house as the other party. After hearing Mr. Chauncey the time agreed on, and continuing to be dissatisfied with his ministrations, they invited Rev. Zachariah Walker to preach to them, and finally chose him to be their pastor. Both ministers conducted public worship in the same house, Mr. Chauncey at the usual hours, and Mr. Walker two hours in the middle of the day. But it was difficult to confine the services to the exact time allowed, and it soon happened that Mr. Walker exceeded the time limited, one day to such an extent that Mr. Chauncey and his hearers, becoming impatient, retired to a private house and held their afternoon services. They were, however, so much displeased that next day they went over to Fairfield and made a complaint against Mr. Walker to Maj. Gold, one of the magistrates. The major, upon hearing the case, advised pacific measures, and that Mr. Walker should be allowed three hours for his public exercises. Then began that remarkable conflict of master-minds, conducted on the one side by Rev. Mr. Chauncey and Philip Grove, and on the other by Rev. Mr. Walker, Capt. John Minor, "the learned and pious scribe," Hon. Samuel Sherman, and Lieut. Joseph Judson, men of worth and might. Space forbids that I should give full details of this remarkable contest. The dissentients had a majority in the town-meeting, and Deacon John Minor, one of their leaders, was town clerk during the whole time of the controversy and for several years afterwards. This written controversy has been preserved on the town and colony records and in the history of Woodbury, and is a model of Christian courtesy and moderation.

After Mr. Walker had been called to preach by the dissentient party there was an effort, on the part of the Walker party, to have joint meetings, each minister taking a part. But this plan, as might have been expected, failed.

In September, 1668, the church refused to hear the two ministers in joint meeting, and refused to consider the disputes between them till Mr. Walker's party had "procured the approbation of the General Court and the consent of neighboring churches." In November of the same year Mr. Walker, for his people, replied to this communication, and informed the church that they had concluded, "God willing," to occupy the meeting-house a part of each Sabbath, beginning with the next Sabbath. He closed the communication with the desire that the "God of Peace" would guide the parties to such a course of action as would be for their "mutual peace and comfort." The result of this notice was a compromise, by which Mr. Walker was allowed two hours each Sabbath for his services in the meeting-house, in the middle of the day, between the two services of Mr. Chauncey, till the meeting of the General Court in May, 1669. At that session both parties presented petitions in relation to their disagreements, particularly in regard to the manner in which they should "enjoy the meeting-house." The court took the case into consideration as requested, confirmed the choice of Mr. Chauncey, ordered both parties to choose "some indifferent persons of piety and learning to compose their differences," and gave Mr. Walker's party liberty till the October session to occupy the church three hours each Sabbath, in the middle of the day, between the two services of Mr. Chauncey. They could not, however, agree upon the points to be submitted to the arbitrators, and at the October session, 1669, a resolution was passed by the General Court advising the First Church to comply with the desire of Mr. Walker's party to have union services, allowing Mr. Walker to preach one part of each Sabbath to the united congregation. Some communications passed between the parties relative to this advice, but Mr. Chauncey's party, instead of granting them this privilege, which they had so long sought, excluded them from the house entirely, after which they met for public worship in a private house during the remainder of their stay at Stratford.

It was at this juncture that Governor Winthrop advised that Mr. Walker and his people should remove, and that a tract of land for the settlement of a new town should be granted. Accordingly, the General Court, on the 9th of May, 1672, granted to Samuel Sherman, William Curtiss, Joseph Judson, and John Minor, the leading members of Mr. Walker's church, "liberty to erect a plantation at Pomperoage," provided that "any other honest inhabitants of Stratford" should have liberty to join them in settling there, and provided that they should "entertain so many inhabitants as the plantation would conveniently entertain."

Thus ended a controversy that had agitated the minds of the early fathers for about eight years. During the whole of that long period of excited discussion it will be found, by a careful examination of the details, that the founders of our town ever maintained a Christian tone and temper. They furnished a model course of action to us on all occasions of conflict of interests and opinions.

It was in the midst of this controversy, early in 1668, that Mr. Walker was called to perform pastoral labors among the people of the Second Church at Stratford, now the First Church in Woodbury. For two years he had preached to them without ordination. Among the other difficulties under which his people labored they had found no opportunity to have him ordained in the desired ecclesiastical authority. But now, being taunted by the First Church on account of their unorganized State, being informed that they would hold no further communication with them till they were duly organized, and there being no longer any hope of arrangement, they took the steps necessary to "embody in church estate." This they accomplished May 1, 1670, with the approval of the churches of Fairfield, Killingsworth, and the "new church at Windsor." Mr. Walker was ordained on the 5th of May, 1670, when twenty male members again publicly owned their covenant, the gathering of the church having been made by them in private, on account of the great opposition to them. This fact is most thoroughly set forth on the first page of our First Church records, in the handwriting of Mr. Walker, now before me. Seven more male members were admitted a few days after, and ten more, six of whom were females, were added previous to the removal to Pomperaug, in 1672,—a number fully equal to that of most other churches at their commencement in this wilderness land.

The initial point from which dates the settlement of Woodbury was the grant of the General Court, in accordance with Governor Winthrop's recommendation, in 1672. As this grant was not made till the May session, it was too late for our forefathers to move their families into the wilderness that year; but the preliminary arrangements were immediately commenced, and it is related that a few of the proprietors came here and raised some corn, which they stored in log cribs, but when they returned the next spring with fifteen families, they found that the wild beasts or Indians had rifled them of their contents. By some mistake, which even at this distance of time seems singular, as the founders had known the territory since 1659, the pioneer families, in following the Housatonic, passed the Pomperaug in their journey, and went up the Shepaug valley some miles, till they discovered they must be on the wrong route, when they made the best of their way over the hills to this valley. They encamped the first night on Gord Hill, west of our village. The next day they proceeded to the valleys to examine and take possession of their lands, and encamped the second night beneath a large white oak just below the present line of our town in Southbury. The location still bears the name of "White Oak." They finally decided to make their principal location in the lower part of the present principal village of the town. By the colony records we learn that the intervales on the Pomperaug River had been deprived of the trees by the annual fires kindled by the Indians, and had been by them cultivated before our fathers moved here. So the land was in some measure prepared for their occupation. Their first dwellings were built of logs, but these habitations passed away with the first generation, and comfortable frame dwellings took their places. The first framed house was located in Judson Lane, a few rods west of the Congregational church. The houses were built in a substantial manner, in the old lean-to style, the back roof running nearly to the ground, and were covered with rent oak clapboards. They were rude dwellings, but sufficed the wants of the pioneers.

Among the preparations which our forefathers made for their removal hither was a code of laws, or articles of agreement for their government, quite as carefully drawn as that written covenant entered into by the Pilgrims before they left the "Mayflower" to land on Plymouth Rock. This model constitution, containing all the elements of civilization, justice, and religious liberty, is still preserved to us. It is a legacy of which we are proud. It is a perfect model for our republican form of government; also providing for the exigencies of a settlement in the woods. It provided that as many persons should be admitted into the plantation as could be comfortably accommodated, and that all public charges, civil and ecclesiastical, should be borne in proportion to the size of their home-lots, the largest being twenty-five, and the smallest ten, acres, while the allotment to a bachelor was only five acres. It was further provided that considerable tracts of land should be set apart for the support of the preaching of the gospel; and also, in the quaint language of the original instrument, "a parsell of land for y° Incouriging a Schoole, y^t learning may not be neglected to children." Each inhabitant was obliged to pay his pro rata share of the expense of the purchase of the territory from the Indians, the expense of removal, and all other public charges, within ten months after his home-lot was laid out to him, in wheat, peas, and pork, in equal proportions. Lastly, and above all, it was stipulated that for the purpose of remaining in the "peaceable enjoyment of that way of church discipline which they were persuaded is according to God," they engaged, each for himself, not to disturb the peace of the plantation, but to subject themselves, personally, "to that ecclesiastical government that should be there established or practiced agreeably to y° Word of God."

These articles were subscribed by Samuel Sherman, Sr., Joseph Judson, Sr., John Minor, Israel Curtiss, John Wheeler, John Wyatt, John Sherman, John Judson, Jonathan Curtiss, Samuel Styles, Titus Hinman, David Jenkins, Moses Johnson, Samuel Munn, Roger Terrill, Eleazur Knowles, and Thomas Fairchild. These are the ancestors of a large number of the most distinguished men now administering the affairs of the nation, or who have been most distinguished in our history. Among these are ex-President Grant, Gen. W. T. Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury John Sherman, Secretary of State William M. Evarts, Hon. Chauncey M. De Pue, of New York City, and many others honoring their country in every part of the Union.

A moment's examination will show the wisdom of this first solemn governmental covenant. The committee of principal men composed a court to judge between man and man, doing justice according to the letter of "God's written word," until a town should be organized under the jurisdiction of magistrates, "who are appointed of God." This court had the power of life and death over their brother colonists till the incorporation of the town.

From these articles we learn that here, as in all other early New England towns, the settlers had a particular regard for the establishment of religious institutions. It was their design to erect churches in strict conformity to Scripture example, and to transmit evangelical purity, in doctrine, worship, and discipline, with civil and religious liberty, to their posterity. So great was the attention paid to this matter that they not only made provision for the minister first settled, but they also sequestered lands for the future support of the ministry, which were called the "parsonage lands."

Another truly New England feature in this their first solemn agreement is seen in the ample provision made for a school, "that learning might not be neglected to the children." Our fathers were republicans, rejecting with abhorrence the divine right of kings. Upon republican principles they formed their civil institutions. They thought the church should be accompanied by the school-house. In this way they judged intelligence and good morals could best be propagated.

It is interesting to notice, also, the poverty of our ancestors at this time. All the expenses growing out of the purchase and settlement of the plantation were to be paid in wheat, peas, and pork, in equal proportions as to value, and if any settler was so poor that he could not obtain a surplus of these beyond the wants of his own family, then he was to pay in other articles to the satisfaction of the committee having charge of the expenses of the settlement.

In our times we fail to appreciate the difficulties attending the founding of a new town in New England. The first signers to the covenant to found a new town at Woodbury were but seventeen, but there were as many founded most other towns in New England. The territory of our town comprised a whole county, and the number of noble men who founded it, and removed their families here during the first two years after its settlement, was fully equal to that of most New England colonies at the date of their settlement. There were but forty-one signers to the articles on board of the "Mayflower," on the 11th of November, 1620, for the founding of the celebrated colony of Plymouth. The first grant of the entire colony of Connecticut was made to eleven persons, and the first three towns, in 1635, were settled by about sixty persons, men, women, and children, or twenty to each town, a much smaller number than that which first colonized Woodbury. Roger Williams pitched his tent at Providence, founded Rhode Island, and formed a body politic for the advancement of religious freedom when his followers only numbered seventeen. Massachusetts Bay Colony had a still smaller beginning. At first it was nearly a failure, and for a considerable time was held only by Roger Conant and three other "disheartened companions," and yet, in his lofty trust, he believed that "God would make this land a receptacle for his people." Let it not be considered, then, that the founding of Woodbury was an inconsiderable or trivial affair. The history of an early Connecticut town is the history of a colony, or State, or the Union in miniature. In no way can we form so accurate an estimate of the dangers and difficulties that beset our fathers, the hardships borne, and the labors performed to secure the liberty and unnumbered blessings which we now enjoy as by a perfect history of the events and struggles of such a town.

In our day, surrounded by the comforts, conveniences, and luxuries of life, we can little estimate the hardships encountered by the men and women who first trod these now smiling valleys. They had no covering for their heads but the overarching heavens, no lodgings for their weary, travel-worn bodies but camps made of evergreen trees. There were no public roads and no vehicles. The first females, as well as the males, went on foot or on horseback through a trackless wilderness, guided by marks upon the trees or feeling their way wherever they could find room to pass. In the midst of the first drear winter their provisions gave out, and some of the settlers were obliged to make their way through the pathless forests to the older settlements for food to sustain them during the remaining winter months. Some of those sturdy men went to Stratford, a distance of thirty miles, with hand-sleds, and returned laden with corn for their pressing necessities. We can have but a faint idea of the dangers that surrounded those early founders on such a journey, exposed to all the perils and privations of those interior forests. Added to their lack of bread, the pioneers had neither dwellings nor clothing sufficient to prevent suffering. Should any emergency happen, they were cut off from any succor or effective retreat. What a sad beginning had this now fair and opulent town on the Pomperaug!

It was necessary to erect and fortify houses, to make roads, and to spend much time in watching, training, and preparation for defense against the Indians of New York. Everything was to be constructed from rude materials or brought from a great distance and procured at a dear rate. They were obliged, with little previous knowledge of the art, to break ground on bare creation, drawing their subsistence from an unwilling soil. That fifteen families in the wilderness, before they had time to provide for their own pressing wants, should undertake to support a minister of the gospel shows the abiding confidence, the lofty trust of those men of iron nerve. Everything must be manufactured by themselves or they must go without the indispensable necessaries of life. They, being only tillers of the soil, must become their own blacksmiths, carpenters, shoemakers, clothiers, and tailors. "The grim present was lowering upon them with all its sharp and angular realities." But they accepted the chances with a firm reliance upon Providence.

How did our forefathers dress? What were their costumes and fashions? All the garments of both sexes were of homespun, of their own manufacture, from the raw material to the perfected garment. The small-clothes, and even the coats of the men, were often made of deer-skins and leather. Nothing is more commonly mentioned in the early inventories of estates. And yet, amid all this rigid simplicity, the General Court, four years after the settlement of Woodbury, passed an act against the excess of apparel among the people, as "unbecoming a wilderness condition and the profession of the gospel;" ordering that any person who should wear any clothing that should be "apparently beyond the necessary end of apparel for covering or comeliness," should, on due conviction, forfeit ten shillings for every offense. How great a commotion would be caused by the passage of such a law in the present days of foolish extravagance!

So numerous had the arrivals of our ancestors become in the new plantation of Pomperaug during the year 1673, that at the May session of the General Court, in 1674, it was made a town, called Woodbury (meaning a "dwelling-place in the wood"), and exempted from taxes for four years. In May, 1675, a committee was appointed to lay out a road to Derby, and Stratford was ordered to construct a road to the same place. This committee did not report till May, 1677; and it is probable that it was not completed under several years, so that the settlers remained secluded from all the world for many years.

CHAPTER LXXI.

WOODBURY (Continued).

King Philip's War in 1675—Inhabitants of Woodbury go back to Stratford—Orders of the General Court—Rev. Mr. Walker's Letter—Inhabitants Return in 1677—The First Three Corn Mills—Town First Represented in the General Court in 1684—Patent Granted to the Town in 1686—General Court grants the North Purchase to the Town in 1703—Same Purchased of the Indians in 1710.

BUT far more serious evils awaited the adventurous pioneers in this "dwelling-place in the wood."

In June, 1675, King Philip's war broke out, and filled this and the neighboring colonies with the gloom and terror which always accompany Indian warfare. The startling intelligence of a general combination of all the Eastern tribes for the utter extermination of the white race fell with a sad cadence on the afflicted ears of the settlers. Philip, with his fierce band of relentless warriors, appeared suddenly on the scene of action, and misery and destruction followed in his trail. Every portion of the colony suffered from the predatory excursions of the savages and continual alarms. The frontier towns, like Woodbury, were particularly exposed to destruction. The General Court, deeply affected with the apparent dangers, enacted military regulations of the most careful and rigorous kind. It was equivalent to putting the whole colony under martial law. Sixty soldiers were to be raised in each county, places for refuge and defense to be immediately fortified in every plantation, disobedience of orders in time of attack to be punished with death, and no male between the ages of fourteen and seventy to be suffered to leave the colony without permission. Each plantation was to keep a sufficient watch from sunset to sunrise, and to keep one-fourth of the town under arms every day, taking regular turns. The watch was directed to call up every man in the town an hour before day, and each one was directed to arm himself, repair to his appointed ward, and there stand guard, ready to repel any attack till half an hour after sunrise, when the "warders" again took their places. Scouts on horseback were also sent into the woods each day to look for the foe, with directions to go only so far as to enable them to return by nightfall. These orders were carried out with alacrity by our town. This was then the most remote northwestern town in the colony, and one of the most exposed. It was known both by the whites and Indians that persons sleep soundest just before the dawn, and hence the order that every inhabitant should be awakened by the watch, and called to arms an hour before day. Guards were stationed on Lodge, Orenaug, and Castle Rocks to watch for the enemy and protect the inhabitants. Fortified houses were erected on Lodge Rock, on the location now occupied by the house of Mr. Horace Hurd, in West Side, and near Widow Nathan Warner's dwelling-house, in Judson Lane, to receive the settlers in case of assault. It is more than difficult, at this distance of time, to realize the trials and alarms which must exist in such feeble communities, reminded each hour of their desperate condition by regulations of such severity as those that had been adopted. Every effort was made for the public safety, but the dangers thickened so darkly around them that the settlers were obliged, early in the summer, to remove their wives and little ones to Stratford, "a place," as stated in their characteristic language, "of more hopeful security." This was rendered the more necessary, because their men, as often as they went to the "seaside towns," or their necessary business, were pressed into the service, so that, as we learn from an autograph letter of Rev. Mr. Walker, in October, 1676, a greater number of men from Woodbury, proportioned to its population, was engaged in King Philip's war than from any other town in the colony. Notwithstanding all these discouragements and dangers, our fathers, after having conducted their households to Stratford, returned to Woodbury, raised and secured their crops, and carried them to Stratford in the autumn.

But the plantation was by no means given up. During the year 1677 the inhabitants slowly returned to the new settlement. In May, 1678, the General Court ordered the remainder to return by the 1st of November, on pain of forfeiting their lands in the town. Immediately after this the town passed a vote that the order of the court should be strictly enforced, and requested the town clerk to write a letter to those who neglected to return, urging them to come back to their lands. In writing this letter, the clerk, Capt. John Minor, urged them to return, saying, "Friends, it is far from our desire that any of you should be abused by this act of ours. We covet not your lands, but your company. We desire not to displease any of you, but if we cannot please you upon lower terms than by undoing ourselves, we assure you that we cannot come to that price." This action of the court and town brought the wandering children home. In June of this year Mr. Walker came with his family to reside, permanently, with his people at Woodbury. Previous to this time his family had resided at Stratford, and he had ministered at both places, as occasion required. The householders at this time probably numbered about sixty. It is known that there were as many as that four years later. This would show the whole population to be about three or four hundred.

Previous to this date they had had no corn-mill, and had no flour or meal, except what they could get occasionally at Stratford. Even on wedding occasions —those times of great interest among all nations— the principal dishes at the marriage feast were bean porridge for soup, and for the other courses an enormous plate of pork and beans, with bread made of pounded corn. How would such a wedding entertainment suit our lady friends of the present day? This deprivation was too great to be borne by our fathers, and accordingly they procured a set of small mill-stones at Stratford, so diminutive in size that they brought them here on horseback. This was probably in 1674, and they were the only ones used till 1681. They prepared mill-gearing, built a small shed on Middle Quarter Brook, a few rods easterly from the house of the late Deacon Eli Summers, and set their mill in operation. It is said that when it was in complete running order one could grind a bushel of grain per day. Each settler, in turn, carried his grist to the mill in the morning, set it in motion, and went for his meal at night. One of these mill-stones is still in existence, and is fastened to the base of the fathers' monument. Traces of the old dam, also, exist.

But the inhabitants had become so numerous before 1681 that the old mill was entirely inadequate to the wants of the town. It had, therefore, granted "mill accommodations" of land, and other considerations, on the west side of the river, to John Hurd, to "encourage" him to take upon himself the responsibility of building a "corn-mill" of sufficient capacity to do all the grinding required by the town. The date of this agreement is Aug. 28, 1681. He erected his mill about fifty rods westerly from his dwelling-house, which stood where the Hon. N. B. Smith's now stands. It was erected immediately under the hill, and the water for its accommodation was brought in a ditch—faint traces of which remain—from the Pomperaug River, about one hundred rods distant, and discharged into the river again about fifty rods below, the mill nearly in rear of "Parson Stoddard's house." The dam was built across the river west of the mill, the bed-sills of which are to this day in a good state of preservation, though it is just two hundred years since they were placed in the river, and can be seen at low water. Hurd and his heirs carried on the mill for ten years, but the floods carried away the dam so often that they gave up the contract. The town then, Feb. 15, 1691, made a contract with John Mitchell and Samuel Stiles to carry on the mill. There was a stipulation that if after further trial the dam could not be made to stand at the present location, then they might build it "elsewhere with the consent of the town." For the "encouragement of the miller" thirty pounds were granted, and a ten-acre accommodation was entailed to the "Mill and Miller" that should do the grinding power, so that it could not be conveyed away. This "accommodation" was laid out in Ragland, and has been owned by the owners of the mill to this day. On the part of the miller it was stipulated that he should "well and seasonably grind from time to time, and at all times, all such corn as each and every of the inhabitants of Woodbury shall bring to said mill to be ground." It being found impossible to maintain the dam at the first location, the "millers" soon established the mill near the present mill and factory of Daniel Curtiss' sons, in which place a corn-mill has ever since been kept up in accordance with the terms of the entailment.

At the May session of the General Court in 1684, Capt. John Minor and Lieut. Joseph Judson appeared as members. This was the first time the town had been represented, and at that session the court granted that the "Woodbury sallery for their deputies shall be fifty shillings a session." There was a previous regulation, by which each town was to furnish the use of a suitable nag, upon which its representatives might be carried, in proper state, to the place of legislation.

About the same time uneasiness began to arise in the minds of the inhabitants in relation to the title by which they held their lands. The territory of the town had originally been granted to the committee of the Second Church at Stratford, under the injunction or proviso that they should receive as many inhabitants to rights and privileges in their lands as the plantation would conveniently accommodate. The extent of territory was large, and it was a much more desirable place for habitation than most other inland towns. Under these circumstances many persons offered to be admitted to the privileges of proprietorship in the plantation, and the authorities did not see fit to admit all of them. It was very natural for these persons to question the rights of those already located there, and to threaten to have the title by which they held their lands inquired into. It is possible that this was the particular moving cause that induced the town to send deputies to the General Court this year, when it had rested quietly without representation for ten years after its legal organization as a town. Previous to this the people had remained content with the measure of law and justice meted out to them by their committee of the principal men of the place, who ruled in accordance with the "written word." At the May session of the General Court, May, 1685, the citizens petitioned for a patent, and at the May session, 1686, it was granted in ample form. At the May session, 1703, this patent was confirmed, and the town during the same year confirmed all the grants of land it had previously made.

At the same session the court granted an addition to the north side of the town, containing seventeen thousand four hundred and eighty-two acres and sixty rods of land. This was called the North Purchase, and covered the present town of Bethlehem and Judea Society in Washington.

The town having obtained this grant of the court in 1703, commenced negotiations for the purchase of the same of the Indians, but did not complete the bargain till June 23, 1710, when a deed was executed by Nunawague, Chesguneage, Cocksherry, Wussuttanunckquet, and Sasaw. The town had now full and undisputed title to its entire limits, both from the General Court and the native proprietors.

CHAPTER LXXII.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Character of the First Settlers—Capt. John Minor—Capt. William Curtiss—Hon. Samuel Sherman—Hon. John Sherman—Lieut. Joseph Judson—Lieut. Israel Curtiss—Col. Joseph Minor—Hackaliah Preston—Hon. William Preston.

THE original signers of the fundamental articles, as we have seen, were seventeen in number. Fifteen of these, undoubtedly, removed to the new plantation during the first year. It is not certain that the two aged planters, Samuel Sherman, Sr., and Joseph Judson, Sr., ever resided here, although they had larger "accommodations" than most of the other proprietors.

First among the settlers, men of note in Woodbury, and foremost in all difficult undertakings, was John Minor, an interpreter to the Indians, a justice of the quorum among the magistrates, a captain in the militia, and a deacon in the church. He was also a surveyor, a necessary and important character in a new country. All the Indian deeds in this region were executed before him, from his being able to act as an interpreter. Early in life he acquired a good knowledge of the Indian dialects, and conversed in them with fluency. To perfect him in this knowledge, the magistrates of Connecticut sent him to school and college two or three years, wishing to prepare him for a preacher of the gospel to the Indians. He lived with Rev. Mr. Stone, of Hartford, for several years, and acted as interpreter for him when he preached to the Indians. He was town clerk of Stratford for ten years from 1666, with the exception of a year, and held the same office for thirty years from its beginning. He was also, for twenty years, almost always a member of the General Court, held an influential position there, and was appointed on committees for the composing of serious differences and the solving of difficult questions. He died at an advanced age, and was buried in the southwest part of the ancient burying-ground, but no stone remains to mark the spot.

Capt. William Curtiss was another early founder of Woodbury, of high standing in the colony, and one of the grantees in the plantation. He was from Roxbury, Mass. His name was usually spelled "Curtice." It does not appear that he bought an interest in the plantation himself, but he was its fast friend, and sent two of his sons, Lieut. Israel and Joshua, with the first settlers. He was a member of the General Court, ten or twelve years, from Stratford; often a commissioner, or justice of the peace; and from year to year appointed by the court on important committees in various parts of the colony. He was appointed, Nov. 23, 1673, captain of the forces raised in Fairfield County to serve against the Dutch at New Amsterdam (New York). In October, 1675, he was appointed, by the General Court, captain of the sixty men to be raised in Fairfield County to serve in King Philip's war, with power to appoint his inferior officers. In May, 1676, when the people of Woodbury were at Stratford on account of this war, he and Mr. Samuel Sherman were appointed commissioners for "Stratford and Woodbury."

Intimately associated with the last named in all that related to the welfare of the town, was the Hon. Samuel Sherman. He was, at the date of its settlement, undoubtedly the most distinguished man connected with the enterprise. He was from Dedham, Essex Co., England. Came to this country in 1634, and previous to the date of the new plantation had been a leading man in the colony. He had assisted in the settlement of several other towns in the colony, and now undertook the same for Woodbury. He had been a member of the Court of Assistants, or Upper House of the General Court and Supreme Judicial Tribunal, for five or six years from 1663, and held various offices of honor and trust. He is referred to in ancient deeds and documents as the "Worshipful Mr. Sherman." In 1676, as stated above, he was one of the commissioners for "Stratford and Woodbury." It is not certain he ever resided here, although he took a first-class "accommodation" in the grant of the General Court. If he did not remove personally to Woodbury, he evidently caused his lands to be improved in accordance with the articles of the settlement. They are "recorded to" him May 26, 1675, and on the 22d of June, 1679, it is further recorded that "Mr. Sherman having enjoyed and improved his accommodations to this 22d of June, 1679, according to the grant of y• town," has now an "absolute and positive record to him of the same according to law." He deceased previous to October, 1684, and his sons, Matthew and John, agreed on a division of said lands. He may have resided here, but it is probable that, being advanced in years and comfortably settled in Stratford, he continued to reside there till his death. He furnished one son (John) for the first company, and subsequently two other sons, Samuel and Matthew, for other companies. His son, Hon. John Sherman, was one of the first company, and his farm is more particularly the property of the town than the last two. He was distinguished not only in his town, but also in the colony. He was a justice of the quorum, or Associate County Court judge for forty-four years from 1684, a representative of the town for seventeen sessions, and speaker of the Lower House in May and October, 1711, and May and October, 1712. He was town clerk twenty-five years, and captain in the militia, a high honor in those days. He was the first judge of probate for the district of Woodbury from its organization in 1719, nine years. This district then comprised all the settled portion of the present county of Litchfield, and Waterbury, in New Haven County. He was also an assistant (or senator) for ten years from 1713.

Lieut. Joseph Judson, Sr., another subscriber to the Fundamental Articles, was a man of note before the removal to this town. He came from Concord, Mass. He was deputy to the General Court there some six years, and otherwise distinguished. After the settlement of Woodbury he was sent as a deputy, with John Minor, to the session of 1684, being the first time the town had been represented, and continued to represent the town for four sessions afterwards. He was one of the leaders of Rev. Mr. Walker's party at Stratford. He had a first-class "accommodation," but it is not certain that he lived here till the close of his life, as a part of his land was afterwards sold to pay a ministerial rate. His son, John, another "original signer," was a prominent individual in the town and colony. He died Jan. 12, 1709–10, aged sixty-three years.

Lieut. Israel Curtiss, son of Capt. William, was another of the "original signers," and took a prominent part in the settlement of the town. He was a lieutenant in the militia, and represented the town at the May session, 1689, and for seventeen sessions afterwards.

Col. Joseph Minor, son of Capt. John, was not one of the "original signers," but was one of the early settlers, and for eighty years afterwards held a prominent position. He attained the greatest age to which any inhabitant of the town has ever arrived, save one, since its settlement. He was born March 4, 1672–73, and died Oct. 20, 1774, being nearly one hundred and two years old. He was born sixteen days after the signature of the "Fundamental Articles," came to Woodbury a child, and spent a long life in its service. He passed through the several grades of the military service to the rank of colonel, and was very efficient in preparing men for service in the French and Indian wars. He was representative thirty-two sessions, town clerk twenty-eight years, justice of the quorum fourteen years from 1725, and judge of probate thirty years. He lived under the hill in rear of Horace H. Minor's present dwelling-house. He inherited the homestead and other land from his father, which said Horace, one of his descendants, now owns; and it is a remarkable fact that it has never passed by deed since the deed from the Indians, two hundred and twenty-one years ago. It has passed from father to son through the Probate Court.

Another early settler, but not an "original signer," was Hackaliah Preston. He was a native of Wales, but came to Stratford from Turkey. Tradition says the Turks for some reason sought to kill him, and that he fled to save his life. He married Emma Fairchild, daughter of Thomas Fairchild, of Stratford, one of the principal planters and first magistrates of that town, who had come thither directly from England. He soon removed to Woodbury, in one of the companies of the first settlers.

Hon. William Preston, son of the above, was born at Stratford, March 21, 1676, just before his father's removal to Woodbury, and was, therefore, in one sense, a son of the soil, having spent his entire life in the town, and rested from his labors, Sept. 5, 1754, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was a leading man in the town, county, and colony. He was a member of the General Court thirty-five sessions, and stood high in the militia, having attained the rank of colonel. He was justice of the quorum eleven years from 1740. On the formation of the new county of Litchfield, in 1751, he was appointed its first judge, which office he held three years till his death, performing its duties to the credit of himself and the interests of the people. He was a man of fine talents and commanding influence, of sterling integrity, and unflinching determination. He was active and efficient in all the walks of life, and died much lamented.

Such was the character of the early men of Woodbury.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Home-Lots—Rev. Z. Walker's House—Palisaded Houses—First School-House—Second, or Stoddard Parsonage—First Meeting-House—First Birth, Marriage, and Death—First Clothier—First Physician—First Blacksmith—First Divorce—Parson Stoddard Kills Two Indians—Wood Creek Expedition—Slavery.

THE settlers laid out their home-lots in quantities of from two to five acres, with narrow fronts, which were arranged on both sides of the Main Street, or "Indian trail," from East Meadow two miles, or the whole length of the present street. The "home-lot division," four times as large as the home-lot, was laid out in rear of it, and extended back one mile from the street, "that," as the record says, "run through the middle of the town from end to end of the town." This rule for building the houses close together was in pursuance of an order of the general court to all new towns, for protection against the Indians. Next came the "meadow division," or low-land, which was laid on the intervales, or plain lands. After this came the "upland division," laid out on the irregular, hilly grounds. At the same time the "pasture division" was laid out for the accommodation of their cattle. In process of time came the "woodland division," after they had cleared their other divisions, and a provision for fuel became necessary. Still later, when they had subdued and brought under cultivation their other lands, came the "Good Hill division" and the "White Oak Plain division," which designate their own localities. All these divisions were assigned or laid out to the settlers in proportion to the size of their home-lots, and that was determined by the amount paid in under the original articles.

The house of Rev. Zechariah Walker, the first minister, or "first parsonage," stood where Mrs. Levi S. Douglass now lives, and covered a part of the present cellar. Isaac Judson built his house in Judson Lane, and was one of those surrounded with palisades as a protection against the Indians. Another palisaded house stood on the site occupied by Horace Hurd's dwelling-house. Capt. John Minor's, under the hill, below where Horace H. Minor now lives, was another. Another of the fortified houses was that of one of the Bronsons, in Transylvania. It had a look-out on its top, by the chimney, for observation. The reservation of land for a school, as agreed in the "fundamental articles," was laid out north of the cranberry pond before 1700, and the first school-house stood where George Hitchcock's wagon-shop now stands. In 1700 some change was made, when Rev. Anthony Stoddard was settled in the ministry, and his home-lot was laid on the 12th of May in this place, then called Foot's Neck. It was a part of the contract of the town with him to build him a house of certain dimensions on this lot. It was immediately commenced and finished, so that he could move into it late in 1701. It was surrounded with "palasadoes," was the most strongly fortified house in the plantation, and could receive more people than any other in case of an alarm. This old house was pulled down in the fall of 1880, and a fine modern dwelling is now erected on its site by Walter S. Curtiss, Esq. This was the oldest house in the State, except the old stone house in Guilford, and it was a pity that the old landmark was removed.

After the settlers were in some measure located, and began to have some of the comforts and conveniences of life, their thoughts naturally turned to the prime object of all the plantations in New England,—the establishment of public worship, and the location and construction of a suitable house in which to enjoy the ministrations of the gospel. From their first settlement hitherto they had worshiped in each other's houses in the inclement months of the year, and in the summer months had convened, in the stillness of the Sabbath morn, in a beautiful and retired spot on the east side of the Oronaug Rocks, between the cliffs, with their sentinels placed on the tops of the adjacent rocks to guard against surprise from savage foes, and there made the "surrounding aisles of the dim woods" vocal with the high praises of God. In a rude pulpit of stone, still tanding in that lonely dell, we may, in imagination, see the faithful Walker addressing his attentive hearers, and delivering to them the words of "truth and soberness." This spot received the name of Bethel Rock from this circumstance, and has ever been held as a consecrated place by the descendants of those early Christians, whither they have at times repaired for meditation and prayer to the present day.

The unsettled state, produced by King Philip's war, having passed away, and the inhabitants become quite numerous for a new town, they resolved to build a house for public worship. As has ever been the case in such matters, they did not readily agree on a location. They tried various ways to solve the difficulty. Among other methods they "cast lots," thus showing us a glimpse of the superstition of the age in which they lived. But although they had "solemnly left the matter to God" for a decision, vague suspicions of some human agency in the result obtained arose in the minds of many. They, therefore, in a peaceable and orderly manner submitted the question to the arbitrament of Deputy-Governor Robert Treat, Sr., Maj. Nathan Gold, who chose Nicholas Camp as the "third man," and they fixed the site where Hon. N. B. Smith's carriage-house now stands, July 5, 1681, about twenty rods from the first parsonage, five from the school-house, and twenty-five from the second corn-mill. The work of building immediately commenced. It was of large size for those times, and was used for public worship till the erection of the second meeting-house in 1747. The people were called to church on the Sabbath by the beating of a drum upon the rock on which the Masonic lodge now stands. The same instrument was used to call the people together on other days in the week for other purposes. It was beat for town-meetings, for the assembling of the train-band, and in cases of alarm in times of war. There was a particular beat for each of these occasions, but what was the difference in the roll of the drum ecclesiastic, the drum military, and the drum civil is not now known. During the perilous times of the French and Indian wars, guards were placed on Lodge Rock, Orenaug Rocks, and Castle Rock, while the people, who worshiped within the church, also carried their arms. After the dedication of the second meeting-house, the old one was used for a town-hall for many years, and also by the Episcopal Society for their service. Still later it was used by Mr. Tallman for a slaughter-house. But it was taken down many years ago, and a portion of it now constitutes a part of one of Hon. N. B. Smith's outhouses.

The first female born in Woodbury was Sarah, daughter of Samuel Sherman, Jr., and the first male, Thomas, son of John Wheeler. They were both born in 1673, and baptized in Stratford. The first marriage that appears on record is that of Benjamin Hinman and Elizabeth Lumm, July 12, 1684. The first death recorded on record or tombstone was in 1683. The first wheelwright was Samuel Munn, who came in 1681.

Dr. Trumbull, in his "History of Connecticut," says that in 1713 "there was but one clothier in the colony. The most he could do was to full the cloth which was made. A great proportion of it was made without shearing or pressing." If this assertion is correct, Woodbury was the location of that first clothier, and Abraham Fulford was his name. His home-lot was laid out next to that of Samuel Stiles, the town miller. The fulling-mill was on the East Sprain, near "East Meadow Rocks." The first physician was Dr. Butler Bedient, and Dr. Ebenezer Warner, Sr., settled about the same time. The first blacksmith in Woodbury of whom the records speak was Deacon Samuel Bull, of Farmington, who was granted a ten-acre accommodation on condition he would carry on the blacksmith trade in town for ten years. He married the only daughter of Mr. Walker, the first minister. So it seems the blacksmith was "settled" like the minister. The first divorce was granted to Jonathan Taylor from his wife by the General Court, at its October session, 1708. The grounds were that his wife endeavored to "take his life by her violence, deserting him, and living with Joseph Allen, a negro, at Sackett's Farm, N. Y.,"—the Bible cause somewhat aggravated.

It is related that during the Indian war of 1708, one Sabbath evening, after the conclusion of services at church, while the Rev. Anthony Stoddard was walking in his garden near Cranberry Pond, he discovered an Indian skulking in the bushes. He quietly re-entered his house, and took his gun. After watching for a while, Mr. Stoddard obtained a fair view of him, fired, and the Indian fell. He dared not investigate further that night. Early in the morning he discovered another red foe near his companion, whom he also dispatched.

Beginning with King Philip's war, in which it furnished more than its just share of men, being then but little more than two years old, Woodbury has always furnished its men liberally for all the wars that have arisen in which our country has had a part. In that fruitless and fatal expedition to Ward Creek, under Gen. Nicholson, of the royal service, to assist in the reduction of Montreal and Quebec, in 1709, Connecticut furnished her full quota, of which Woodbury's part was nine. Two of these, Sergt. Thomas Skeel and John J. Johnson, died a few days after their return home, of disease contracted by exposure in the service.

It is difficult now to conceive that slavery ever existed in Connecticut. Yet it was only in 1848 it was formally abolished by the Legislature. It is more than ninety years, however, since the institution in this State had even a "name to live." We can hardly believe that our honored forefathers could be slaveholders, and yet such is the fact. All the leading men of property in the early days owned slaves. Nothing was more common in the early inventories than the item of slaves, nor in distributions than whole or fractional parts of slaves divided to the heirs. It is true that they were treated kindly, educated, their religious interests cared for, presented in baptism as members of the household, treated more like children than slaves, yet they were such, bought and sold at the will and pleasure of their owners. During the whole of the eighteenth century the institution flourished here, though in a mild form. They became attached in many instances to the places where they were brought up, and some of them lingered around the "old homestead" long after they were entitled to go free by virtue of law. In the war of the Revolution, freedom was granted to all slaves who would enlist and serve through the war. To avail themselves of this provision, some twenty-five of their number in town enlisted at various periods of the war, and made good soldiers, fighting valiantly for the liberty of the country.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Character of Rev. Zechariah Walker—Rev. Anthony Stoddard Settled—Rev. Noah Benedict Settled—Half-Way Covenant Abolished, 1760—Rev. Samuel R. Andrew Settled—Remaining Pastors of the Church—Recapitulation—Strict Congregational Church—Rev. Grove L. Brownell Settled—Rev. John Churchill Settled—W. L. R. Wychorf Settled—Episcopal Church—Methodist Church—Catholic Church.

WE have already stated the causes which led the second church of Stratford to settle in Woodbury and the circumstances attending the building of the first meeting-house. Within the walls of this edifice Mr. Walker continued to labor till his death, Jan. 20, 1699–1700, or Jan. 31, 1700, according to new style. He was a man of solid attainments, a fervid and powerful preacher, greatly beloved by the people of his charge. He conducted the affairs of his church with commendable discretion, and both that and the infant town flourished during his administration. Under him the church had secured a firm foundation, notwithstanding all the trials and hardships that beset its earlier years. After a life of usefulness "y^e faithful, worthy, beloved Minister of the Gospel, and much lamented Pastor of ye Chh. of Christ," was gathered to his fathers, and his remains repose in the southern part of the ancient burial-ground, where the present fathers' monument now stands. He sleeps amid the faithful flock to whom he ministered in life.

In 1700, Rev. Anthony Stoddard commenced preaching to the people, and in 1702 was ordained over the church. Rev. Israel Chauncey, of Stratford, having forgotten all former difficulties, was one of the officiating clergymen on the occasion. The town in 1700 built him a house, as has already been stated. The ministry of Mr. Stoddard was remarkable for its duration and the prosperity which attended it. From the date of his first sermon as a candidate to his last, immediately preceding the brief illness which terminated his useful labors, he numbered more than sixty years in his holy calling, and great peace and harmony ever prevailed under his administrations. The number of communicants was always large, notwithstanding four large societies were taken from his limits during his ministry. These were Southbury in 1730, Bethlehem in 1739, India in 1741, and Roxbury in 1743. The good work seemed constantly to grow under his hands with a steadiness rarely equaled. The whole number by him admitted to full communion was 474; to the half-way covenant, 142; and 1540 received baptism at his hands.

To his ministerial labors he joined those of lawyer and physician. Like many of the early ministers, he prepared himself for the practice of medicine that he might administer to the wants of the body as well as those of the mind. In this capacity he was often called. He acquired a very good legal knowledge for those early days. This was the more necessary, as at the beginning of the eighteenth century there were but four lawyers in the colony, and as late as 1730 an act was passed limiting the number of lawyers that might practice to three in Hartford County, and two in each of the other counties. He was clerk of probate for forty years, during which time he drew most of the wills of his townsmen and did the greater part of the business of the office, the judge for the time being approving his acts. All the records of the court during the time he was clerk appear in his handwriting. He was also one of the largest farmers in town. After a life of arduous and successful labor the second pastor, at a good old age, entered into his rest. He died Sept. 6, 1760, in the eighty-third year of his age and the sixty-first year of his ministry, after a severe illness of "about two days' continuance." He lived and died enshrined in the hearts of his people. He was buried in the central part of the old burial-ground, and there reposes surrounded by a numerous congregation slumbering in death, very many of whom he himself had followed to the grave. As in life he was ever united to his people, so in death they are not divided.

Previous to Mr. Stoddard's death, early in 1760, Rev. Noah Benedict had been called to be settled as his colleague, but he died before the day fixed for Mr. Benedict's ordination, which was Oct. 22, 1760. The ordination took place that day as arranged, but it was to the work of the ministry as sole pastor.

At the time of the death of Mr. Stoddard the half-way covenant system had not been abandoned. He, as well as his father, Rev. Solomon Stoddard, was an advocate of the system, though Rev. Mr. Edwards, the grandson of the latter, had done so much to overthrow it wherever it existed. The system was not in accordance with Mr. Benedict's views, and within two weeks after his ordination it was, by a vote of the church, abolished. The half-way covenant members were invited, if they had owned their covenant in sincerity, to the Lord's table, which invitation they accepted, and the practice ceased forever. At the same meeting a covenant and profession of faith were adopted by the church, which, with slight verbal alterations, is the one now in use.

Mr. Benedict spent a long and useful life among his people. Few controversies arose among them during the long period of his ministrations till near its close. This was a controversy in regard to the location and building of the third meeting-house. That constant source of bitter animosity, the location of public buildings, was the only thing that disturbed the serenity of a period of pastoral labor extending through a period of more than half a century. But he lived not to see the heat of the battle, having died about three years before the final disruption of his church. He died April 20, 1818, in the seventy-sixth year of his age and the fifty-third year of his ministry. Under his administration the church was prosperous. The number admitted to it was two hundred and seventy-two, and seven hundred and fifty-eight persons were by him baptized. Mr. Benedict was a man of sound piety, and of great dignity and amiability of character. He held an honored place in the affections of his people. Thus we see that three ministers served this church for the long period of one hundred and forty-three years.

Rev. Samuel R. Andrew was settled, by unamimous call, over the church Oct. 8, 1817. He preached his farewell discourse Jan. 4, 1846, having been dismissed on account of failing health. The division in the church, caused by the disagreement about the location of the new meeting-house, had ended in the formation of another church before his installation, and the church, under his care, for nearly twenty-nine years enjoyed uninterrupted peace and prosperity. Two hundred and sixty-three members were received into the church, and two hundred and forty-three persons were by him baptized. The present church edifice was dedicated Jan. 13, 1819, seventy-two years after the dedication of the second. Thus we see that this church was led for one hundred and seventy-two years by three ministers.

Mr. Andrew was the only son of Samuel Andrew, who was grandson of Rev. Samuel Andrew, of Milford, one of the founders of Yale College, a fellow, and, pro tempore, a rector of that institution, and for fifty years pastor of the First Church in Milford. Mr. Andrew was born at Milford, May, 1787, and gradated at Yale College in 1807. He studied law for a year or two, and spent a few years at the South in editing a newspaper and in teaching. He studied theology with Rev. B. Prince, of Milford, and was ordained over this church in 1817. He was chosen fellow of Yale College in 1837, which office he resigned in 1847, on moving out of Litchfield County to New Haven, and was at the same time appointed secretary of the college, which office he held till his death, May 26, 1858, at the age of seventy-one years. In 1848 he was chosen a member the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Mr. Andrew's intellect was strong, clear, comprehensive, and discriminating. His judgment was preeminently sound and wise. His taste was pure and classical. His sensibilities were exquisitely susceptible to beauty in nature, in literature, and in character. His thoughts were always just, and often rich and original. He was a laborious student, and a close, independent, and comprehensive thinker in theology. His sympathies were as tender as his intellect was strong. His heart was warm to the suffering and sorrowing. He was true to his friends and loved them well. His piety was the very beauty of holiness, it was so unaffected, so symmetrical, so honest, and so tender.

He died as few men die. He had arranged to make a visit to his old friends in Woodbury, and had dispatched a more than usually cheerful letter to an intimate friend there. That letter was received after he had been some hours dead. In the morning he woke at his usual hour, and, apparently, in his usual health. He spoke of being slightly chilled, adjusted the covering of his bed, breathed twice audibly, and in an instant was gone. Such a death had been pronounced by him to be beautiful and desirable, and his thought was fulfilled. "Mortality was swallowed up in life." "He walked with God, and he was not, for God took him."

The remaining pastors of this church are all living. Rev. Lucius Curtis was installed July 8, 1846, and resigned on account of ill-health Jan. 22, 1854. Rev. Robert G. Williams was installed Jan. 29, 1855, and resigned Jan. 15, 1859. Rev. Charles E. Robinson, D.D., began to supply the pulpit early in 1861, was installed June 10, 1861, and resigned Jan. 27, 1864, on account of ill-health. Rev. Charles Little supplied the pulpit from the summer of 1865 to the fall of 1867, without installation. Rev. Horace Winslow supplied the pulpit for a year from January, 1868. Rev. Gordon W. Noys was installed over the church, Dec. 8, 1869, and continued his ministrations for ten years, when he resigned. For the past year and a half the pulpit has been supplied by Rev. A. W. Colver.

From its origin, two hundred and eleven years ago, this church has received into its fold sixteen hundred and twenty-six persons, administered the rite of baptism to three thousand one hundred and two, and ordained twenty-five deacons, four of whom are now living. Its present membership is about two hundred. Six churches have been formed entirely out of it, two others have received a good number from it, to say nothing of its contributions to other denominations within its ancient limits, and to the churches of its own faith in the cities of the East and West.

In 1816 another large and flourishing church was formed out of the First Church, and was incorporated under the name of the "Strict Congregational Society," with the same territorial limits as the first society. This was about one hundred and forty-six years after the gathering of the First Church in Woodbury. The first minister was Rev. Grove L. Brownell, who was ordained over the church July 27, 1817, and continued his ministry about twenty-three years. He was a very capable and faithful minister of the gospel. Two hundred and thirty-eight joined the church by profession during his ministry, and fifty-eight by letter, which, added to the original forty members, make the whole number of persons connected with the church during his service three hundred and seventy-five. The number of children baptized by him was one hundred and eighty-eight.

On the dismission of the first pastor, Rev. John Churchill was, by unanimous call, installed over the church April 22, 1840, and presided over it for a period of twenty-seven and a half years, closing his labors on the last Sabbath in September, 1867. Mr. Churchill was a logical and forcible preacher, and very successful in his labors. One hundred and ninety-seven were added to the church during his ministry, and at its close almost the entire congregation were members of it.

The church remained without a settled pastor till 1874, when the Rev. W. L. R. Wychorf, of New Jersey, commenced his labors, was settled over it, and still continues his ministrations to the acceptance of his people, and with marked success.

For nearly seventy years after the settlement of the town there were no churches within its limits, except those of the Congregational, or "Standing Order." Our fathers emigrated to this country to enjoy their religion, not only free from persecution, but without interruption from Christians of different sentiments. They were desirous, as all churches had been before them, of maintaining a uniformity of doctrine and worship. Correct views of religious liberty had not then been held in any Christian country, and toleration was not a virtue of that age. But our fathers were far in advance of the rest of the world in learning and adopting that truly Christian virtue. By the very first code of laws ever published in the colony, in 1672, all denominations of Christians were allowed to worship God in their own way, provided they did not commit a breach of the peace. It is true that all were obliged to contribute to the regular minister; but this was but carrying out a contract on the part of the people, for the only price they paid for their lands consisted in bearing their pro rata share of the amount paid the Indians, the joint expenses of removal, the expense of building roads, bridges, schoolhouses, church buildings, and the support of that mode of worship unanimously established by the first founders of the several towns. New-comers, who, as soon as they arrived, were admitted to all the privileges of the original planters, had no right to complain of the necessity of bearing the same burdens as the rest. But at a very early day even this provision was changed, so that every one paid his tax to the pastor of his choice.

A short time previous to 1740 some few families in this town adopted the sentiments of the Church of England, and at that date were occasionally supplied by the ministers of the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts." Soon after this a church edifice was erected in the town, on the hill between Transylvania and Roxbury Centre. After the erection of the Second Congregational church, in 1747, on the site now occupied by the Soldiers' Monument, the old first church was used by the Episcopalians for public worship till the erection of their present church, in 1785. In 1771, Rev. John R. Marshall assumed the charge of the parish, having been ordained by the Bishop of London the same year. The parish flourished under his administration, and by his piety, devotion, address, and perseverance he laid the foundations deep and sure of this now flourishing church.

A most important and interesting event in the history of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Connecticut, and indeed of the United States, occurred in Woodbury soon after the declaration of peace in 1783. The priesthood of this church were under an oath of allegiance to the sovereign of Great Britain. But America had been acknowledged as an independent nation. Of course there was no bishop then for the United States. Under the rules of the church this was a matter of prime necessity, and how to obtain one, with the proper ecclesiastical consecration and appointment, was the great question which engaged the attention of the believers in this form of church government. It was necessary to select, and get the consent of some one to go to Great Britain and seek consecration. Previous to this time all those who desired to enter the Episcopal ministry were obliged to go to the old country for holy orders.

Rev. John Rutgers Marshall, of Woodbury, was the last but one of those candidates who went from Connecticut on the perilous and expensive voyage across the ocean for holy orders. He had been reared in the city of New York. For a time he was a merchant in Stratford; but in the summer of 1770, when he was more than twenty-seven years of age, we find him studying divinity with Dr. Johnson of that town, preparing to come to Woodbury to preach the gospel. He was graduated at Kings, now Columbia College, of New York, as Bachelor of Arts, in 1770. His diploma, in beautifully written Latin on parchment, is before me as I now write. He received the degree of Master of Arts in regular course two years subsequent to his ordination, he having returned from England in the autumn of 1771, "licensed and authorized," by the Bishop of London, "to perform the office of a minister or priest at Woodbury, or elsewhere within the province of Connecticut, in North America." He settled here, and preached to the members of his persuasion in all this region.

It was in the last week of March, 1783, just after the publication of the articles of peace, that ten missionaries of the Episcopal Church met in Woodbury, at the house of Rev. Mr. Marshall, far away from the centres of influence and observation, to select some one to proceed to England for consecration as a bishop. The meeting was "kept a profound secret, even from their most intimate friends of the laity." The meeting, of course, was informal, but they nominated Rev. Dr. Samuel Seabury for the office, and he was consecrated at Aberdeen, Nov. 14, 1784.

Mr. Marshall's old house, in which this event, so important to the Episcopal Church of this country, occurred, is still standing in the midst of our village, and in a good state of preservation. The church here should purchase it, and preserve it as a memorial of the important event which occurred in it.

As early as 1790 services of the Methodist Church were held in Woodbury, at first in the open air, under Lodge Rock, by Samuel Wigdon, and afterwards, for about twenty years, in the dwelling-house of "Father" Elijah Sherman, till the erection of a church edifice, which has within a few years been modernized and rendered commodious and convenient. This church has been a prosperous one.

For quite a number of years priests of the Catholic Church from Waterbury, Naugatuck, Ansonia, and New Milford have held services in the Town Hall about once in two weeks. The congregation is now quite large, and they have bought a site for a church edifice, and are raising a fund to build it.

Thus have we traced our way through the long years of the dim and dusty records of the early fathers, and we cannot leave these communings with the past without regret. We part with the actors as from old friends with whom we have journeyed long. There is an interest lingering about the history, sayings, and doings of those iron-hearted men which belongs to no later generation. The most trivial details in regard to them seem important, and we gather them up with ever-increasing admiration.

CHAPTER LXXV.

WOODBURY (Continued).

MILITARY HISTORY.

French and Indian Wars—War of the Revolution—War Convention at Litchfield in 1766—Town-Meetings in 1774—Boston Alarm—Committee of Observation—Capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point by Woodbury Men—Woodbury the Birthplace of Col. Ethan Allen, Col. Seth Warner, and Capt. Remember Baker—Tories—Events of 1775—Events of 1776—Events of 1777—Events of 1778—Shadrach Osborn—Commissary Supplies—Events of 1779—Events of 1780—Volunteers till New York Should be Taken—Events of 1781 and 1782—Conclusion.

Ancient Woodbury has ever been a military town from the time of King Philip's war, in 1675, where, as we have seen, it had a larger number of soldiers in the service than any other town in the colony in proportion to the number of its inhabitants, through the French and Indian wars, the war of the Revolution, when it sent more than sixteen hundred men to the field, the last war with Great Britain, when it furnished more than two hundred men, down to the war of the great Rebellion, when it furnished more than its quota, and more than two hundred and sixty men. In every war, and on every "alarm," the men of Woodbury have been found at the post of duty performing feats of valor. For that fruitless and fatal expedition under Gen. Nicholson, for the reduction of Montreal and Quebec, in 1709, Woodbury, still the frontier forest-town, furnished its full quota of men, being nine, two of whom died from exposure at Wood Creek. Among the forces under the American commander, who was obliged to execute that most unrighteous and cruel decree for the dispersion of the unhappy inhabitants of Acadia among the New England colonies, tearing the unoffending and peaceful people from their loved and beautiful firesides, were soldiers from our old Puritan town, and nine of those sorrowful victims of England's gross injustice were sent into exile upon the outskirts of our town, to be kept at labor under the direction of the selectmen. From 1744 to 1759 our town freely furnished her sturdy sons for all those ill-managed and desolating wars between Great Britain and France. Col. Benjamin Hinman and Capt. Adam Hinman greatly distinguished themselves in these campaigns, although the regular troops constantly domineered over the provincials. As soon as the drum at the "alarm-posts" in our peaceful shades sounded the note of preparation for the relief of Fort William Henry, near Lake George, that beautiful sheet of water once so peacefully resting between its rampart of highlands, the gallant captains Wait Hinman and Ebenezer Downs, the former at the head of his company of ninety-six men, and the latter leading his company of eighty, marched at a moment's warning, and made their rapid way through many a trackless and weary solitude to succor their English brethren. In Hinman's company marched Hezekiah Thompson, the first regular lawyer in the village, and Dr. Joseph Perry, one of its most distinguished physicians. And in that final, glorious campaign, conducted under the administration and auspices of the energetic, brilliant, and renowned Pitt, in those important victories resulting in the capture of Forts Niagara, Ticonderoga, and Crown Point, and in the more glorious event, the surrender of Quebec to the victorious army under Wolfe, who met his death in the battle-field, and whose "spirit escaped in a blaze of glory," in all these celebrated engagements the men of Woodbury, both officer and soldier, stood in the first rank. Valuable, indeed, was this school of military services, which closed with this campaign, to our fathers, who were so soon to engage in a life-and-death struggle for their own liberties. Great was the rejoicing in Woodbury when the news of the last great victory arrived, not unmingled with sorrow at the loss of the slain, three of whom had gone forth from our hearth-stones. Like demonstrations of joy were everywhere shown. In the eloquent words of Bancroft, "America rang with exultation; the towns were bright with illumination; Legislatures, the pulpit, the press, echoed the general joy; provinces and families gave thanks to God."

But in a far more glorious chapter of our country's history the patriotic sons of Woodbury acted a noble and distinguished part. It was the chapter of the war for independence. It had been generally known that at the end of the war with France new regulations would be introduced into the government of the American colonies. Connecticut, in particular, was said to be but "little more than a mere democracy, most of them being upon a level, and each man thinking himself an able divine and politician;" and to make its inhabitants "a good sort of people, it was supposed all that was necessary was to take away its charter and crush its energies." The mother-country had forgotten its experience in the Charter Oak affair, by which it should have learned that this would not be so easy a thing as might be desirable. So she, in the magnitude of her towering pride, said, "Let the colonies be taxed, and let there be no representation." What a world of interests was affected by that stern and unjust decision! Little dreamed he who spake it that it would inflame a continent, and rend from old England her fairest possession. But the word had been spoken, the decree gone forth. With a fatal madness, an unaccountable folly, she took her furious course. Her children, driven by her intolerance into the savage wilds of a distant continent, were pursued with a ruthless barbarity. She little knew, and little cared, if far away over the mighty Atlantic her arbitrary acts were creating "the land of the free and the home of the brave." From this came the war of the Revolution, to blast the dearest hopes of the people of the new world. Yet from its gloomy shades gleamed forth the light of liberty, which to-day shines with such dazzling splendor.

The passage of the Stamp Act aroused the most intense excitement, alarm, and indignation throughout the colonies. Absolute resistance to this measure everywhere appeared, and as early as February, 1766, a convention of Litchfield County was held, in which the noble men of Woodbury were leading spirits. This body of men, feeling within them the true spirit of freedom, "Resolved, That the Stamp Act was unconstitutional, null, and void, and that business of all kinds should go on as usual." The paramount and immediate cause of the great struggle of the Revolution was the passage of the Boston Port Bill. This outrageous and malicious act excited universal sympathy for that town throughout the colonies, but nowhere was it shown in a more lively or effective manner than in Connecticut. The universal spirit of resistance broke out in Woodbury, and in September, 1774, a town-meeting was held, at which resolutions of sympathy with the affected people of Boston and Charlestown were passed, and a considerable amount of donations was collected and forwarded to Boston with all possible dispatch. This meeting was held just after the "great Boston alarm," caused by a report that ships of war were cannonading Boston. During this alarm a large number of the patriotic sons of Woodbury had marched in mad haste, and made a part of that glorious twenty thousand from Connecticut, who, completely armed, put themselves on the route to Boston to relieve their brother sufferers. It was soon apparent that war with the mother-country was inevitable, and the great object of our Revolutionary sires was to form public opinion in favor of a contest with England. This was best effected in that day of scarcity of newspapers by holding town-meetings, in which they could publicly read such newspapers as treated upon the subject of common interest, and discuss their rights and grievances. In this way the people became excited and exasperated, and patriotism glowed in the coldest hearts. The fathers of Woodbury were fully up to the spirit of the times, and held frequent meetings to advise concerning the public weal. In November, 1774, Woodbury held a town-meeting, and appointed a committee to observe the acts of the inhabitants in relation to the non-importation and non-consumption agreement of the united colonies, with directions to publish in the Gazette the names of all violators of that sacred agreement, to the end that all such persons might "be publicly known and universally contemned," agreeing to break off all dealings with such persons as should be guilty of such violation.

There can be no better way of appreciating the trials, dangers, and difficulties of achieving our independence than by carefully noting the labors and struggles of a single important town. One furnishes a type of the whole. In that great contest Connecticut was one of the foremost, if not the very first, States in the confederacy to resist the tyranny of Great Britain, and to lavish her blood and treasure in sustaining the conflict with her oppressors. Her soldiers were frequently applauded by the commander-in-chief of the American army for their bravery and fidelity. The honor of the first conquest made by the united colonies during the war belongs chiefly to Connecticut, and in a distinguishing manner to the sons of Woodbury. It was the capture of Ticonderoga, May 10, 1775, without the loss of a man or the firing of a gun, one of the most brilliant and daring feats of the war. At least one-half of that little patriotic band of eighty-three men who entered the fort were natives or inhabitants of Woodbury. They were led by Col. Ethan Allen,* Col. Seth Warner, and Capt. Remember Baker, cousins and natives of Woodbury, then residing in the "New Hampshire Grants," and on the demand of the former, in the "name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress," the commander of the fort rubbed his eyes in astonishment and yielded the fortress. Neither the demeanor of the man, the boldness of his message, nor the nature of his authority could be gainsaid for a moment. This post, and that of Crown Point, which was imme-

* In placing the name of Ethan Allen in the list of natives of Woodbury, the writer is well aware that the honor of having been his birthplace has been claimed by several other towns. Litchfield, Cornwall, and Salisbury have been competitors in this contest. It is very certain, from an examination of every scrap of evidence that has ever been found, that there can be no competitor with Woodbury, except Litchfield, and Litchfield has only this to show, that on the first page of the first volume of its town records, thirteen years after the birth of General Allen, its date is recorded, with other Allen entries. All there is of this consists in the fact that Allen's grandmother, with some children, had removed from the country to Litchfield, his father, Joseph, included. Joseph married Mary Baker, of Woodbury, at Woodbury, March 11, 1736–37, nearly four years after he had sold his last rod of land in Litchfield; and Gen. Ethan married Mary Brownson, of Woodbury, at Woodbury, June 25, 1762, and was the owner of land in Woodbury some years after this. For a careful statement of the proof as to Gen. Allen's place of birth, the writer refers to the first volume of his "History of Ancient Woodbury," pages 411 to 416. In view of the facts there stated there can be no doubt that Woodbury was Allen's birthplace.

diately taken by Col. Warner, being thus acquired, Connecticut was obliged to garrison, and in 1775 sent one thousand men for this purpose, eight companies of whom were from the limits of this ancient town, containing at least one hundred and fifty men, eighty of whose names are still preserved. The garrisons were placed under the command of Col. Hinman, of Woodbury. Is it then vainglorious in her sons if to-day they claim it to be essentially a Woodbury affair? Truly to her brave children must be awarded the palm for securing this opening victory to the American arms.

Woodbury was noted for the vigilance with which it watched the movements of the Tories within its borders, of whom it had a few, as well as for its active co-operation in everything necessary to carry on the great struggle, which had now begun in good earnest. A committee of inspection and observation of the conduct of the inhabitants of the town was appointed, consisting of thirty of its chief men, and undoubted patriots, which exercised its functions during the whole war, vacancies in the board being filled from time to time by the town. The duties which this committee were obliged to perform were of the most delicate and difficult nature, and constituted such an oversight and interference in men's private affairs as could only be justified by such a case of emergency as was then existing. But they were men in whom all had confidence, and upon whom entire dependence could be placed in times of difficulty and danger.

During the first two years of the war the larger part of the militia, which comprised all the able-bodied men from the age of sixteen to fifty, had been called to serve at various posts and on various expeditions a great part of the time. Early in 1777 enlistments for three years or during the war were called for, and the quota for each town was established. It was a severe levy on the already weakened state of the town. But it met the call with a ready zeal and undaunted perseverance. Large bounties were offered to those who would enlist, and heavy taxes were laid on the inhabitants who were not liable to do duty or did not enlist in the army. Another arrangement, besides increased wages, held out by the town to induce men to enlist, was a provision which required it to support their families during their absence in their country's service, and committees were annually appointed to carry this provision into effect. From a report to the General Assembly at the close of the war, in 1783, we learn that nearly three thousand pounds worth of provisions had in this manner been furnished to soldiers' families during the war. Woodbury was also a prominent point for collecting supplies of provisions for the army. The streets of the village from the First Congregational church to the soldiers' monument were often piled high on either side with barrels and hogsheads of pork, beef, lard, flour, and other military stores for the use of the army. Nor was the supply of clothing of every kind less profuse in quantity for the wants of the soldiers of the town. In March, 1778, clothing to the value of more than one thousand dollars was forwarded to them at one time. Besides the provisions thus furnished by the town for the army during the war, large quantities were purchased of the inhabitants by Shadrach Osborn, of Woodbury, who was assistant commissary of purchases, and also issuing commissary. From his accounts and other sources we learn that more than half a million dollars' worth of supplies was furnished by this town towards the grand amount necessary to achieve our country's independence. This is a showing of which any town may be justly proud.

Such was the care of the town to support and defend those nearest and dearest to the brave men who were manfully fighting the battles, and consecrating with their blood every battle-field of their country. Such was the anxious care for the soldiers themselves. Those who went forth to war suffered extreme hardships, in common with their brethren from other parts of the country; and those who remained at home suffered hardships hardly less severe, in the heavy taxes necessary to pay for the soldiers' bounties, and for the support of their families, while their own business was crippled and nearly ruined.

All this was accomplished under the pressure of most unparalleled financial difficulties. The Continental money, by means of British counterfeiting and the unavoidable loss of credit, arising from so long and sanguinary a struggle, constantly depreciated, and at last became nearly valueless. So great was the depreciation that, when the soldiers of the Continental army were discharged, after the peace of 1783, many of them were forced to beg their way home, their wages for a service so long and weary being scarcely sufficient to purchase them a dinner.

But Woodbury, in a far more important manner, contributed towards a successful issue of the dispute with Great Britain. This was accomplished by sending large numbers of her best sons to the field of battle. In the number and valor of her troops it is believed that few towns of similar territorial and numerical strength can vie with her. Their heroic deeds should grace a bright page of our country's history. During the course of the war more than sixteen hundred of her patriotic sons went forth to "do battle for their country." At the commencement of the war, Col. Hinman's, or the Thirteenth Regiment of militia, comprised only the three towns of Woodbury, Kent, and New Milford, and all these were within the limits of the original Indian deed. Ancient Woodbury furnished eight out of the twelve companies that composed it, and the number of soldiers furnished from them for the Continental army, in 1775, exclusive of the company that marched in the "Lexington alarm," was at least one hundred and fifty, as that was the number whose "poll-taxes" were abated that year by the General Assembly on account of their service. At least an equal number between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one must have been in the ranks, who had no poll-taxes to be abated.

The sun of 1776, although our armies had been successful the preceding year, arose clouded and in gloom. "The note of preparation" was sounded through the land. There was a "hurrying to and fro" throughout the country on business of the most solemn import, affecting the dearest interests in life. In June one-fourth of the able-bodied men between the ages of sixteen and fifty years in the territory were drafted or enlisted. In August, after the evacuation of Boston and the occupation of New York by the British, the entire militia of Connecticut, west of the river of that name, at the request of Gen. Washington, was ordered to New York. The Woodbury companies were called out on the 10th, mustered on the 11th, and marched on the 12th for their place of destination. The number of officers and soldiers on the military rolls at this time was five hundred and sixty-four, all of whom but thirty-nine marched at the call of their commanders. Besides these there were two hundred and eighty-four men in the Continental army by enlistment, making the number of men in actual service, from this single town, at that time, eight hundred and seventy-three. The entire population of Ancient Woodbury, by a census taken that year, amounted to only five thousand three hundred and twenty-five souls, so that nearly one-fifth of the population, counting men, women, and children, were fighting for the freedom of their firesides. This "raw militia" was present in the unfortunate operations on Long Island, towards the close of this year, and in Washington's retreat from New York, soon after which the men were discharged. One would think that it would be impossible to arouse and lead forth to battle, at a moment's warning, all the able-bodied men in the militia of a town in such a manner as this, but the interests at stake were great, and the most prominent and popular men in the community were in the movement heart and hand. The officers addressed the soldiers in the most urgent and patriotic language, and even the pulpit lent its powerful aid to the cause by prayers to the Almighty, by volunteering to go with them on their campaigns in the capacity of chaplain, as did Mr. Wildman, of Southbury Society, on one occasion. Besides these influences, another aided the Revolutionary fathers of this town. Previous to the action at White Plains, the soldiers of Woodbury had been remarkably fortunate. Scarcely one had been killed or wounded, insomuch it had become a common remark, "the enemy's bullets could not hit the Woodbury boys." In consequence of this feeling of security enlistments went on briskly, and to it, in part, is to be attributed the large number of soldiers who volunteered to go into the service. In that scene of misery at the "Sugar-House" in New York, and the inhuman cruelties there inflicted, Woodbury had some representatives. With so large a number of men in the service, it could not fail to be represented in every field of battle of the eventful struggle in which our freedom was secured and the mother-country humbled in the dust.

The campaign of 1777 opened with an invasion of Connecticut on the part of the enemy, an event long feared by our people. Troops were called for to defend the coasts, and Col. Moseley's regiment marched to Fairfield. In April there was a sudden call for troops to go to Danbury, as the British were burning the houses and destroying the property of the inhabitants. The alarm-lists and militia of Woodbury were put in motion, and some of the soldiers, including Hon. William Edmond, afterwards a judge of the Superior Court, and one of the greatest geniuses this State has ever produced, were wounded. Col. Joel Hinman was also wounded at the same moment in which Gen. Wooster received his mortal wound, at a little distance from him. The ball remained in the groin of Col. Hinman for the long period of thirty-three years, when it was extracted by Dr. Anthony B. Burritt, Sr.

One of the guns used on this occasion is still in existence, which, as is seen by the manufacturer's date on the barrel, was made in 1624, two hundred and fifty-seven years ago. It has been handed down from father to son from Capt. John Minor, the pioneer, to Horace H. Minor, the present owner. It was used in the Pequot, and all the French and Indian wars, and in the war of the Revolution. It is said to have caused, first and last, the death of forty red men, and from this circumstance has been familiarly known as the "forty-Indian gun."

It was during this attack, as the British were approaching the village, that Mr. Luther Holcomb, entirely alone, rode up on a hill in front of the enemy, and waving his sword and turning his head as though he was addressing an army behind him, gave, in a voice of thunder, the somewhat imposing command, "Halt, the whole universe! Break off by kingdoms!" As this was rather a formidable force to encounter in battle array, and more especially as it had the advantage of position, the enemy halted, brought forward their cannon, and sent out flanking parties to make discoveries. Upon this the "Kingdoms of the universe" quietly subsided, and Mr. Holcomb made good his retreat. He did not deem it prudent to see whether "one man could chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight."

In May one-fourth of the Thirteenth Regiment was ordered to Horseneck, numbering about one hundred and fifty men. In the battle of Bennington, under the brave Col. Warner, of Woodbury, his friends and neighbors did good service. Two hundred and forty men answered to Gen. Washington's draft for Peekskill. In September, the regular army being called to reinforce Gen. Washington, one-half of the militia was drafted to go to Peekskill, under Gen. Putnam. Not far from three hundred men marched from Woodbury on this occasion, exclusive of the entire company of "Light-Horse" under the command of Maj. Thomas Bull, which was also ordered to the same destination. The attentive student of history will see at a glance how much greater was the number from Woodbury than from other towns, when he considers how small was the whole number in the service. The exact number of the three years' enlistments is not known, but is believed to be at least three hundred. At the glorious and memorable victory of Saratoga, Woodbury had a large body of men, who fully sustained the high character for skill and bravery which they had previously earned.

In the early part of 1778 it became necessary to draft one hundred and five men to fill the town's quota of three years' men. The fear of the smallpox, which prevailed at all of the military posts, and other causes, had retarded enlistments. It was not strange, under the painful circumstances and sad reverses of the close of 1777, when the troops under Washington had worn out their shoes and clothing, and could be tracked in their marches by the blood of their feet, that new recruits were obtained with difficulty. It was emphatically the midnight of the Revolution. But the States having, at this juncture, framed and accepted "articles of confederation," and being aided by the French, the war was vigorously prosecuted in all directions.

In February, 1779, the whole militia under Col. Moseley, and the regiment of "Light-Horse" under Maj. Bull, were ordered to Norwalk, and in May one hundred men from the Thirteenth Regiment were ordered to Horseneck, fifty-seven of whom were from Capt. Leavenworth's company. It was during these occurrences that Gen. Putnam made his famous "escape" at Horseneck, by spurring his horse, when hotly pursued, down a steep precipice at full gallop.

During the winter of 1780 the troops had suffered greatly in their quarters for want of food and clothing. They were paid off in Continental money, and with it they could buy neither food nor clothing. In this emergency the town, in its great solicitude, offered a bounty of forty-five pounds in silver for each recruit, and dispatched to the suffering soldiers in the "Connecticut line" nearly seven thousand articles of clothing of which they had the most pressing need, among which were about two thousand pairs of shoes. At this period of the war the prospects of the country were gloomy in the extreme. Only the most hopeful could see relief in the dark aspect of the forbidding future. Successive defeats and rampant toryism disheartened the people at the South, and the treason of Arnold, the uninterrupted drain of men and money, producing poverty and distress, chilled the hopes of the patriots at the North.

Yet in August of this year Washington conceived the plan of taking New York from the enemy, and consequently desired a force that would not be constantly leaving him by expiration of service. He therefore suggested the enlisting of a body of "volunteers to serve expressly till New York should be taken," and to be called on for no other service. Instantly twenty-two men from this town left their labors, enrolled themselves for this purpose, and reported themselves to their captains. Three of them were cousins of Col. Ethan Allen, of the Revolutionary stock. The names of those noble, fearless patriots, who could forget the call of all other duties, the ties of affection, the sacred delights of their cherished firesides and household joys, to go to the aid of their country, are still preserved. Many times before during that year had they responded to the call of their beloved chief, and only a few days before this they had returned from an arduous tour of service. Four hundred and forty out of four hundred and eighty, the whole number in the regiment, had been on duty. But nothing could crush the indomitable energies of those sturdy, unselfish men, unselfish in the highest sense of the term. History does not show a brighter example of lofty and sublime devotion to the country's weal!

In 1781 thirty men were added to the Continental line, and in 1782 twenty-eight more. This proved to be the last time the town was called upon to show its devotion to the interests of the country during the war for independence. It has been seen that the efforts of the town to subserve the good cause began to grow weaker and weaker, as the strength of its soldiers wasted away before the pestilence and the deadly struggle in the field of battle, and its wealth disappeared under the ever-fresh levies of supplies for the army. It would seem that, overwhelmed with debt as the country then was, it could hardly have held out much longer. But, however that might have been, it seems that a kind Providence had designed, in His wisdom, to spare them the trial. To Him "who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" it seemed good to say to pride, power, and oppression, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther."

Early next year, just eight years after the battle of Lexington, Great Britain made propositions for peace, and hostilities terminated. Many soldiers of Woodbury were present at the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, which virtually closed the war. The eyes of these survivors of a ruthless warfare beheld a glad sight on the morn of the 19th of October, when in solemn silence, not amid the smoke and carnage of the battle-field, they saw the brave Gen. Lincoln receive the sword of Lord Cornwallis,—the strength and glory of the British army on this side of the ocean broken and destroyed. Well might the news of this auspicious event spread universal joy, as it did, throughout the country. Well might all hearts unite in praise and thanksgiving to God for this signal blessing, which was to successfully terminate our struggle for independence. It was not inappropriate that Washington ordered divine service to be performed throughout the army, and that Congress proceeded in solemn procession to the house of God to acknowledge its grateful sense of this special favor.

But this great boon had been obtained by dangers, and toil, and miseries, with scarcely a parallel in the annals of mankind. The blood of the dwellers in these fair vales, and in each town and hamlet in our land, was shed like water on every glorious battle-field of our country, from the skirmish at Lexington to the ever-memorable siege of Yorktown, from the sad massacre of the fair and poetic vale of Wyoming to the field of honor on the heights of Saratoga. Their worldly goods, so dearly earned, were freely offered on the altars of their country's good. Hunger, cold, privation of every sort, were cheerfully endured; every tie which nature holds dear, and which binds the hearts of men in conjugal, paternal, or fraternal bands to the familiar hearth-stone, were sundered at the call of our suffering country in her hour of need and of peril. They went forth with bounding hearts, and athletic, manly forms. Many of them found honored graves in various parts of our land, and many more returned with dire diseases, mutilated frames, and shattered health, the merest wrecks of what they were, to the firesides that had missed their presence for months and years. But the result of their labors was glorious beyond expectation, or even the dreams of the most hopeful. They wrought well. A redeemed and widely extended people now rejoices in the result of their toils and sufferings. Many long years have rolled their slow course away since the thrilling scenes of the Revolution were enacted, but they live engraved on the hearts of a grateful and happy posterity. The heroic events of that important period, the immortal deeds of our fathers, shall live, too, on the brightest page of history, while thought shall endure, or the recollection of human greatness remain. If there be "a recompense of reward" for those who do well, surely our patriot sires have long since entered on a bright fruition!

WOODBURY (Continued).

List of Public Officers in Ancient Woodbury—Representatives, 1684–1881—List of Soldiers in Fort William Henry Alarm—List of Soldiers in the Revolutionary War—List of Soldiers in the War of 1812—Woodbury's Roll of Honor, War of the Rebellion, 1861-65—Alphabetical List of the Soldiers of Woodbury in the War of the Rebellion.

PUBLIC OFFICERS OF WOODBURY.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

Nathaniel Smith, 1795–99.

JUDGE OF THE SUPERIOR COURT.

Nathaniel Smith, 1806–19.

JUDGES OF THE COUNTY COURT.

Col. William Preston, 1751–54; Daniel Sherman, 1786–91; Charles B. Phelps, 1850–53.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

William Cothren, 1851–52; Josiah G. Minor, 1865–71; Alfred Birch, 1874–77.

ROLL OF ASSISTANTS AND SENATORS.

Assistants were magistrates, who constituted the upper house of the Assembly, and, in early times, were the Supreme Court of the State. They were the leading men of their times.

John Sherman, 1713–23; Nathaniel Smith, 1799–1805; Noah B. Benedict, 1816–18.

SENATORS.

Nehemiah C. Sanford, 1833–34; Matthew Minor, Jr., 1837; Charles B. Phelps, 1843; William Cothren, 1855;* Daniel Curtiss, 1866; James Huntington, 1877–79.

JUSTICES OF THE QUORUM.

John Minor, 1684–1719; John Sherman, 1684–1728; Col. Joseph Minor, 1725–39; Col. William Preston, 1740–51; Noah Hinman, 1754–59; Increase Moseley, 1755–80; Daniel Sherman, 1761–86.

JUDGES AND CLERKS OF PROBATE FOR THE DISTRICT OF WOODBURY.

From the first settlement of the colony of Connecticut to 1666, probate business was done by the Court of Assistants and the General Court. In 1666 County Courts were established, and probate business was done by them till October, 1698, when Probate Courts were first established. There were but four counties in the State till 1726, viz., Hartford, New Haven, New London, and Fairfield. The probate districts corresponded in name and extent to the counties, till October, 1719, when three new districts were constituted, viz., Guilford, Windham, and Woodbury. The probate districts, including the original four, now number eighty-seven. The first court in Woodbury District was held Feb. 2, 1719–20. It included all the settled part of the present county of Litchfield, and Waterbury, in New Haven County. Litchfield district was set off in 1742, Waterbury in 1779, New Milford in 1787, Washington in 1832, and Roxbury in 1842. The district now includes Woodbury, Southbury, and Bethlehem.

JUDGES.

Capt. John Sherman, 1719–28; Col. Joseph Minor, 1728–58; Daniel Sherman, Esq., 1758–95; Nathan Preston, Esq., 1795–1805; Noah B. Benedict, Esq., 1805–16; John Strong, Jr., Esq., 1816–18; Nathan Preston, Esq., 1818–22;† Charles B. Phelps, Esq., 1823–34; John Strong, Jr., Esq., 1834;‡ Charles B. Phelps, Esq., 1835–38; Nathaniel B. Smith Esq., 1838–42; Charles B. Phelps, Esq., 1842–44; Leman B. Sprague, Esq., 1844–45; Thomas Bull, Esq., 1845–46; Charles B. Phelps, Esq., 1846–47; Thomas Bull, Esq., 1847–49; Charles B. Phelps, Esq., 1849–

* Mr. Cothren's title to his seat was contested during the session by Abraham Beecher. Sixty-four imperfect ballots were cast, that were intended for Mr. Cothren, which he offered to prove. But the Senate refused to hear evidence of the intention of the voters, which gave the seat to Mr. Beecher by sixteen majority. Since then, it is believed that the practice in the several States and in Congress has been to allow the intention of voters to govern. The last election of Governor Jewell was determined by taking the testimony of all the voters of one of the wards in New Haven. In 1877 the rule of intention was allowed in the case of Senator Hills, of Hartford, and gave him the seat.

† The duties of probate judge were performed from this time till May, 1823, by John Kingsbury, Esq., of Waterbury district, by statutory provision.

‡ Holbrook Curtiss, Esq., of Watertown district, held jurisdiction till May, 1835.

58;* Lewis Judd, Esq., 1858–60; Thomas Bull, Esq., 1860–61; James Huntington, Esq., 1861.

CLERKS.

Rev. Anthony Stoddard, 1716–59; Gideon Walker, Esq., 1759–78; Daniel Sherman, Jr., 1778–94; Nathan Preston, Esq., 1794–95; Noah B. Benedict, Esq., 1795–1805; Matthew Minor, Jr., Esq., 1805–16; Judson Blackman, 1816–18; Nathan Preston, Jr., 1818–33; Edward M. LIST OF SOLDIERS IN THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR FROM WOODBURY.

It may be safely asserted that no town in Connecticut, or in New England, furnished a greater number of men in the war of the Revolution, in proportion to the number of its inhabitants, than the town of Woodbury. In 1776 every able-bodied man in this and the other western towns of Connecticut, between the ages of sixteen and sixty years, was marched to New York, by order of Gen. Washington, and Woodbury was during the entire war the headquarters of the recruiting service in Western Connecticut. No complete list of soldiers can be obtained. The following is the best that can now be had. It contains nearly one thousand names. A few in this list may have come here from other towns to enlist. Probably not far from fifteen hundred men went from this town during the course of the war.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

STILES CURTISS AND HIS SONS, JOHN AND HENRY S.

Stiles Curtiss was born in Stratford, Conn., April 13, 1771. He was the son of John Curtiss and Mary, his wife, and belonged to the Stratford branch of the Curtiss family; the earliest record of which in that town is in 1652, and is of widow Elizabeth Curtis, mother of John and William. From her children have descended all of that name claiming origin in Stratford. The family is of English origin, having the right to bear arms as knights from about the Norman conquest. During the reign of Charles I., their right to their coat-of-arms was confirmed by Parliament. Mr. Curtiss emigrated to Woodbury immediately after his marriage; became a farmer on Good Hill, and resided in town all of his days. He was actively interested in church and public matters, and was one of the town's representative farmers. He had nine children, eight of whom attained maturity. He lived to be seventy-eight years of age, and died, Jan. 20, 1850, much respected. His wife survived him twelve years, living with their youngest son, Henry, and dying at the advanced age of eighty-eight. She was a good Christian woman, and with her husband belonged to the Congregational Church.

JOHN CURTISS.

John Curtiss, second son of Stiles and Sarah (Beard) Curtiss, was born in Woodbury, Conn., July 31, 1797. He was educated at the schools of Woodbury, and, at the age of nineteen, taught the winter term of Roxbury school, and was continued as teacher for several winters. When he arrived at age he received a portion of the old homestead, consisting of about fifty acres, and afterwards became owner of one hundred more, all on Good Hill. He married, Oct. 18, 1818, Maria, daughter of David Gilbert, of Woodbury. She was born in Kent, Conn., Nov. 9, 1797. For sixty-two years this worthy couple walked life's pathway together, performing its duties faithfully, and helping to bear each other's burdens in the spirit of true affection. They had two children,—Sarah H. and Harriet M. Sarah married Benjamin S. Russell, of Woodbury, and still resides in the town. Harriet married James H. Linsley, of Woodbury, and died in June, 1879. After his marriage Mr. Curtiss taught the district school of Woodbury during several winter terms, and those who remember him as teacher speak of his marked ability in that profession. But he was a farmer, and as a farmer had a pride in having all his surroundings neat, thrifty, and convenient, and his crops equal to his brother agriculturists. He never sought position save in one direction. About 1813 he enlisted in the Woodbury Independent Company belonging to the Twelfth Regiment of Connecticut militia, and step by step was steadily advanced to its captaincy. He was appointed sergeant Oct. 25, 1814; commissioned lieutenant by Governor Oliver Wolcott, April 26, 1823, and captain by Governor Gideon Tomlinson, Aug. 23, 1827. Mr. Curtiss had positive political convictions; was first a Federal, then a Whig, then a Republican, and has voted at every election held in the town since he became a voter. About 1860, Mr. Curtiss sold his farm on Good Hill, and purchased the pleasant home where he now resides, and where Mrs. Curtiss, after nearly twenty years' enjoyment of its pleasures, died, Feb. 18, 1880. Both Mr. and Mrs. Curtiss were members for many years of the South Congregational Church of Woodbury.

HENRY S. CURTISS.

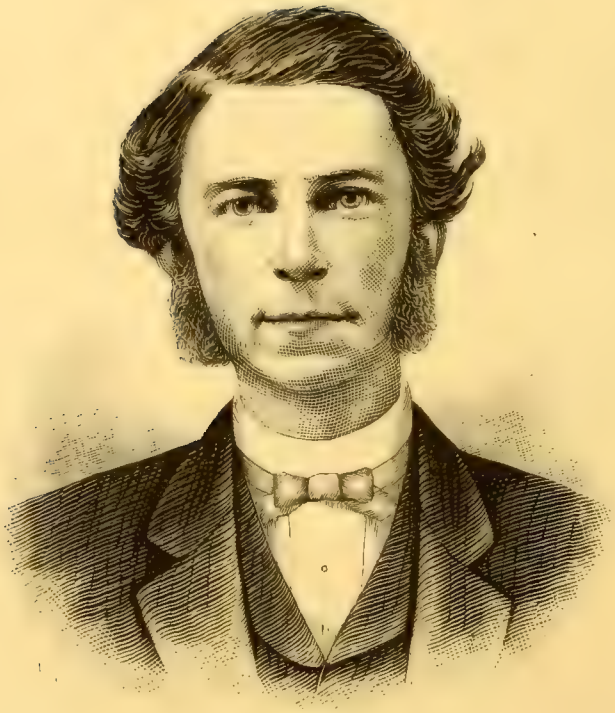
Henry S. Curtiss, youngest son of Stiles and Sarah (Beard) Curtiss, was born in Woodbury, Feb. 24, 1814. He passed his early life with his father; received his education at the schools of Woodbury, and became a farmer on the old homestead. He was a man who shrank from notoriety, and preferred the quiet retirement of home to any other society, and although he represented Woodbury one term in the State Legislature, preferred that the matters of public interest should be attended to by those who had more desire for them than he.

Mr. Curtiss was especially characterized by modest and unassuming manner, strong social feelings, frankness and honesty of purpose, to which may be added a firm belief in Christianity. Both he and his wife were long connected with the South Congregational Church of Woodbury. In the domestic relation Mr. Curtiss was an affectionate husband and father, and his friendships were warm and lasting. His marriage to Miss Elizabeth L., daughter of Gamaliel and Abigail (Warner) Benham, occurred June 10, 1840. She was of an old Connecticut family, her ancestors settling at Benham Hill, West Haven, in the first days of the commonwealth. She was born in South Britain, Nov. 22, 1814. Their only child, Henry B., was born Feb. 24, 1842. He gave promise of an active manhood, but died suddenly after an illness of only one week, Oct. 19, 1853.

Mr. Curtiss died at his residence in Woodbury, Oct. 23, 1869. Mrs. Curtiss still survives, patiently waiting till the summons comes for her to join her husband and son in the "better land."

HON. DANIEL CURTISS.

Of an old and honorable family, famed for chivalric deeds in the days of knighthood in the earlier times of "Merrie England," the historian can find no worthier character to point a moral on the pages of the history of Woodbury than Hon. Daniel Curtiss. The energy which marked the possessors of the name in the olden days appeared intensified in him, and whatever his hand found to do was done with all his might, and he has made an impress on the town second to none of its various residents.



Mr. Curtiss was a lineal descendent of Capt. William Curtiss, of Stratford, Conn., one of the original proprietors of Woodbury (1672), and who probably came from England in early manhood, with his mother and brother John, about 1650, as the first record of them in Stratford "town records" is of "widow Elizabeth Curtis, mother of John and William." The Curtiss coat-of-arms is used by "Daniel Curtiss' Sons" as their trade-mark on their manufactured goods, and is thus described in heraldry: "Az. a fess dancetteê betw. three crowns or. Crest, a lion in his pp. colors, issuing forth of his colors or and azure, thereon a fess dancetteê; or maritted gules doubled argent. Motto, Sapere aude." Their right to bear this coat-of-arms was confirmed during the reign of Charles I. "by grant under the Great Seal, reciting that search having been made in the register and records for the true and antient armes belonging to the Curtis name and family, and the same appearing by ould seales and records and other good testimonie and proofes in the custody and keeping of Richard St. George, Clarencieux, King of Armes, to be the proper and antient armes thereof, and which they did theretofore bare, they were, to them, and their issue and posterity, in memory thereof, forever ratified and confirmed, according to the law of armes and costome of England."

Hon. Daniel Curtiss was fifth child of David S. and Sybilla (Huntington) Curtiss, and was born in Woodbury, Conn., Sept. 18, 1801. In education he had only the advantages of the public schools of that day, when the student graduated oftener with knowledge of axe and scythe than that of books, but acquired sufficient knowledge to enable him to teach two or three terms of winter school, in Middlebury and Litchfield, before he became of age. Then going to New Jersey, he peddled for some time for a New Jersey firm, both on foot and with a horse. Returning to Woodbury, he established himself as a dry-goods and grocery merchant, and continued in trade for years. In connection therewith he commenced the manufacture of silver-ware,—spoons, thimbles, spectacles, etc.,—and was the pioneer in this branch of manufacturing in this part of the State. He was the inventor of "German silver," and was the first person to manufacture goods made of this article. These goods were sold by peddlers, who traveled through the country for that purpose. Of these Mr. Curtiss had sometimes seventy-five employed at one time. About 1840, he disposed of this manufacturing interest, and it was carried to Waterbury. Soon after, or about that time, he commenced manufacturing woolen goods, with which he was ever after connected, and which is now carried on by his sons under firm-name of "Daniel Curtiss' Sons." Selling out his mercantile interests in 1845, he thereafter gave his attention to manufacturing and farming.

Mr. Curtiss married, Jan. 27, 1837, Julia F., daughter of Hon. John Strong and his wife, whose maiden name was Flora Preston. She was born in Woodbury, Feb. 9, 1812. Her grandfather was a lieutenant in the colonial army throughout the Revolution. Their children are Walter S., Emily A. (Mrs. Homer Tomlinson), Ellen C. (Mrs. Perry Averill, of Jackson, Mich.), Horace D., Cordelia S. (Mrs. George C. White, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y.), Edward J., Frances J., Elizabeth S. (Mrs. Edward F. Cole, of Waterbury, Conn.).

Dan Bunch

STANLEY E. BEARDSLEY.

About the time of his marriage Mr. Curtiss purchased the Jabez Bacon place, where he resided until his death, which occurred May 16, 1878. Mr. Curtiss was prominent and active in public affairs, was often called to take public trusts, was selectman, representative for Woodbury three years, and senator for this district in the State Senate one year. In politics he was a Whig in early life, and a Republican from the organization of that party. He was active during the Rebellion, and gave largely in time and money for the preservation of our free institutions.

In 1851, the Woodbury Bank was established, and Mr. Curtiss was chosen its president. He always commanded the esteem and confidence of the citizens of the town for which he has done so much. He was essentially a self-made man, and his life was one of steady and active devotion to business. His great success, which built up a large fortune, was the natural result of his ability to examine and readily comprehend any subject presented to him, power to decide promptly, and courage to act with vigor and persistently in accordance with his conviction.

STANLEY E. BEARDSLEY.

Stanley E. Beardsley, son of Grandison and Mary A. Beardsley, was born in Woodbury, Aug. 4, 1841, and died Feb. 23, 1879. He was educated in the common schools and in the Woodbury Academy, then conducted by Mr. P. B. Hulse. He made a rapid advance in mastering the English branches of education taught therein. At an early age he showed a decided aptitude for mercantile business, and his father took him into his store, where he soon became familiar with all the branches of trade carried on therein. He became the leading salesman and bookkeeper, and in a few years relieved his father principally from the purchasing of goods in the market. During the last few years of his young life he superintended the entire purchases and sales, and had the sole care of the books. He was a rapid accountant and an excellent bookkeeper. He possessed indefatigable industry,—never on any occasion leaving his post of duty when there was business to be done. He never attended public gatherings in town, deeming it his duty, then of all other times, to be in his place of business to attend to the wants of the public. He was always active, attentive, and polite to his customers. It was his rule to let none go away dissatisfied. In consequence of this attention to business, and his tact in its management, the firm of G. Beardsley & Son secured a larger trade in its line than any other firm in all this part of the county. He was absolutely a man of no recreations and no holidays. He had no taste for and did not go into general society. Perhaps this utter engrossment in business, and excessive labor in it, were the principal cause of his early death. It may have weakened his constitution so that he was less able to bear the shock of the final blow upon the head which carried him off. Human endurance cannot last forever,—though in this case he had been remarkably well for three or four weeks preceding his death.

His decease was sudden and untimely. On Sunday morning, the 23d of February, 1879, as he did not go home to breakfast at the usual hour, his parents became alarmed for him, and his father went to the store, in the chamber of which he slept at night to protect the property, and on trying to open the door of the store found that he was lying against it. On gaining an entrance the father assisted the son to sit up on a bale of cotton. He was weak, and put his fingers under the fastenings of the bale to support himself. He told his father that he had stumbled upon the bale and fell, hitting his head violently against the door. A load of goods had arrived the evening before, and this bale had been left in the way. He had arisen, dressed himself, gone into the store below, taken the coal-hod to go for some coal, and fell, as before stated, the store being dark on account of the shutters being closed. Help and a physician were called, and he was borne to his home a little distance away, where everything possible was done to save his life, but he gradually failed and breathed his last about four hours after he was found, dying of concussion of the brain.

He was a young man of genial and kindly disposition, warmly attached to his friends, and devoted to his parents. A strong and lasting attachment existed between him and the writer, such as will sometimes spring up between persons of a considerable disparity of age. As the survivor he feels a personal loss, and will never cease to regret his early death.

He was thoroughly self-reliant, though modest and retiring in his demeanor. He was very reticent in his intercourse with others, and was much more likely to divine your secret than to disclose his own. He was careful in speech. No vulgar or profane word escaped his lips. He was thoughtful of the wants of others, and liberal and kind to the poor. He was for a number of years town treasurer and justice of the peace, and was postmaster from Oct. 19, 1867, to April, 1869, when he resigned the office.

In his death his parents, the community, and especially the business community, suffered a very great loss. A prominent business man remarked at his decease, that by his death and that of his neighbor, the late William E. Woodruff, the pillars of business seemed to have fallen, and there were none to replace them. Such removals are providences we cannot understand, but we must reverently believe that the Ruler of the universe knows what is for the best, and "doeth all things well."

THOMAS BULL.

It is with pleasure that the historian stops the narration of events, for the purpose of sketching the character and life of one who has for so many years been identified with the history of Woodbury, and who has done so much in his way for its improvement and advancement, that coming generations may read and take example from its teachings.

Thomas Bull, son of David Samuel and Elizabeth (Mitchell) Bull, was born in Woodbury, Conn., Dec. 29, 1801. His father was brought up in New London, and often, in early life, went as supercargo to the West Indies. He afterwards became a merchant in Woodbury, and in the latter part of his life was a farmer. He died in October, 1810. Thomas Bull, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, and from whom he was named, was a major of cavalry in the Revolutionary war, and died in February, 1804. The first settlers of the Bull family came from Farmington, and were originally from Hartford. Deacon Samuel Bull settled on the place now occupied by Mr. Bull, and it has been in the possession of the family ever since.

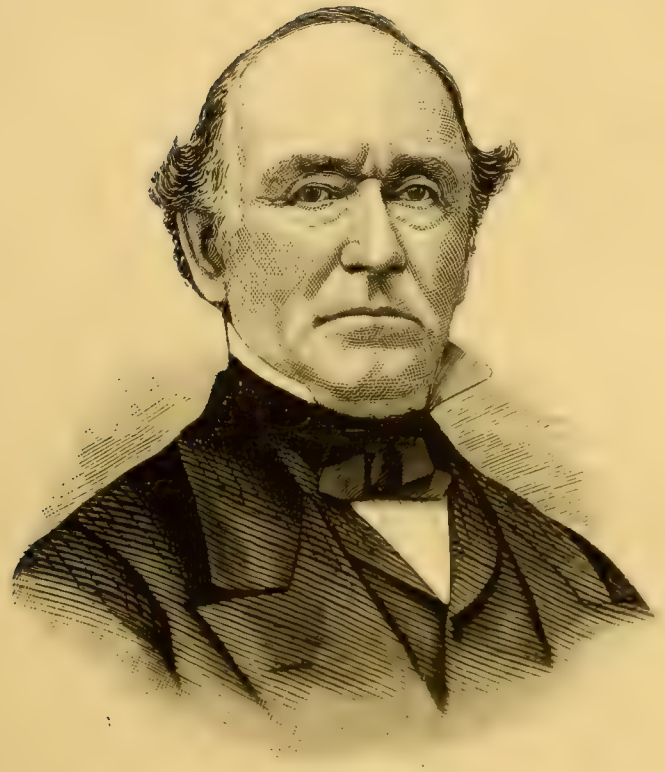
Mr. Bull was educated at the best schools of Woodbury, has been trying justice of Woodbury for forty years, was judge of probate for several years, and has always been a man known and prized for his frankness, acumen, and sterling integrity. As a justice, he carefully weighed the evidence, and decided with such good judgment as to give justice, and never was a decision of his reversed by a higher court. He was brought up a farmer and always was a farmer, but through his financial ability was often enabled to extend aid to his townsmen, and by many of them was considered a private banker. He was in possession of a handsome competency, the result of inheritance, business ability, and prudence. He was a man of no common intellect, and his reasoning powers and memory are far better now than many much younger than he. He is respected, esteemed, and honored. On the last portion of a long and useful life he can look back and see a life that will be pointed to with pride by his descendants, and from which he need not wish to erase a single line. He married Jan. 15, 1824, Susan, daughter of Aaron and Anna (Curtiss) Sherman. Their children are Elizabeth A., David S., Julia E., and Susan J. (Mrs. Dr. Shove). Both Mr. Bull and wife have been for many years members of the Congregational Church.

BENJAMIN FABRIQUE.

Benjamin Fabrique is of French ancestry. His grandfather, John Fabrique, emigrated from France, and settled in Newtown, Fairfield Co., Conn., at an early day, where he raised a large family, of which Bartimeus, the father of Benjamin, was the youngest. He was born in 1751, was apprenticed to and learned the carpenter's trade, and settled in Southbury, marrying Lucy, daughter of Nathan Judson, of Woodbury. He had three children that attained maturity, —Betsey, who married Nathaniel Tuttle, of Southbury; William L., and Benjamin, and died at the good old age of seventy-eight years.

Benjamin Fabrique was born in Southbury, Conn., Oct. 26, 1799. He received such advantages of education as were afforded by the common schools of that period, and, after arriving at manhood, engaged as farm hand on a farm in Woodbury. For twenty-six years he followed this labor, by economy and thrift gradually laying up a capital for future years. When about fifty-four years of age he was called to attend to the business of a sick nephew, a resident of New Haven, and for two years he was absent from Woodbury. Returning here in 1855, he has ever since devoted himself to the care of his business investments, and the business which others have confided to his careful attention.

Mr. Fabrique is a man who has taken care of himself, and consequently is possessed of youthful appearance. He is possessed of correct habits; is a man of unusual regularity, careful, painstaking, and accurate in everything. He does not jump at hasty conclusions, but weighs every side before he forms his judgment, which, once formed, he rarely finds occasion to change. For years he has been familiar in his dealings, and his "comings and goings," to the people of Woodbury, and none to-day have aught to say of him but words of respect and esteem. He has been chosen at various times selectman of the town, and the last time he held that office was continued in it for several successive years. He also represented Woodbury in the Legislature in 1856, 1863, and 1864. He has been for years an auditor and a corporator of Woodbury Savings Bank. In politics was formerly a Whig, but a Republican from the organization of that party. He is a member of the First Congregational Church of Woodbury.



HORACE HURD.

Among the inhabitants of Meriden, Conn., who went to Stratford, John Hurd went so early as to represent the town in 1649. His brother, Adam, was residing there at the same time. Both married and had children, each a son named John. From this has arisen some trouble to genealogists, as the greatest pains has to be taken in order not to confound the two Johns.

John Hurd, son of Adam, came to Woodbury in its pioneer days, and the family has been an industrious, honorable, and respected one in Woodbury from that day to this. Those who desire to trace the long line of lineage with its numerous ramifications, will find the work well done in Cothren's "History of Ancient Woodbury."

Isaiah Hurd was probably born in Woodbury before the Revolution, and grew up, married, and lived there till about 1805. He married Eunice, daughter of Seth Minor, of Woodbury, in 1794–95, and had children born in Woodbury, as follows: Gideon, Marcus, Horace, Burr, and Diah. He then moved to the "Hurd Settlement," Bethel, N. Y., and passed the rest of his life in that State. There his son Seth and a daughter, who died in infancy, were born. Mr. Hurd was a hard-working farmer all of his days, and died about 1850.

Horace Hurd was born in Woodbury, March 15, 1801. He went to New York with his father when but a mere child, and remained until he became of age. He then came to Woodbury and resided with an uncle—Seth Minor—for several years. He married Roxa, daughter of Wait and Susan Minor, of Woodbury, and commenced housekeeping. Already his industry and economy had given him a small capital, and he purchased a farm of about sixty acres, on which he erected a house the next year after marriage. To this farm he added by purchase about one hundred acres more. Mrs. Hurd died Oct. 3, 1863. Of their children, only their oldest—Marcus A.—lived to grow up. He married Eunice Warner, of Woodbury, and resides on the place first purchased by his father, who, about 1852, removed to the pleasant home he now occupies, which formerly belonged to Seth Minor, his uncle, and which he had purchased some time previously.

Mr. Hurd has been all his life a hard-working, practical farmer, and is in all respects a true representative of that class. His fields, his plowing, his sowing, all were models, which others would have done well to imitate. He has never sought office, and, although often solicited to do so, has steadily refused. He is justly considered one of Woodbury's estimable citizens. He united with the "South Church" in 1836, and has held his membership from that date. He is a man of positive convictions, and, having once formed a course of action, is slow to change. For example, when a youth of thirteen, he took a stand against liquor and tobacco, and has never indulged in the use of either during his long life, even abstaining from cider that had fermented, and he says his health has been as good, and, in fact, better than those who have used these articles. Mr. Hurd is a Republican in politics, and was an "Old-Line Whig" in former days. He was married, May 14, 1856, to Mrs. Clarinda Barnes, daughter of Philo and Grace (Nichols) Tousey, of Newtown, Conn. She was born in Perrington, N. Y.

GEORGE B. LEWIS.

George B. Lewis, second son and third child of Abijah and Sally (Fairchild) Lewis, was born in Roxbury, Conn., Dec. 3, 1820. His grandfather, John Lewis, emigrated from Stratford to Roxbury in the latter part of the last century, and located there permanently as a farmer. He died in Roxbury, leaving a large family of children. Abijah Lewis was the oldest son of John Lewis, and was born prior to the Revolution. He became a farmer also, passed his life in Roxbury, living to a hale old age, and dying about 1852, at the age of eighty-one. His children were three girls and two boys.

George B. Lewis spent his early years at home, but, when about ten years of age, went to work for farmers in the neighborhood, and from that time returned only at intervals to his father's. When about sixteen he came to Woodbury, and served an apprenticeship at the tinning business with Tuttle Dayton. And right here we will make a singular statement in these days of workmen of unsettled and roving disposition and habit. Mr. Lewis, after his apprenticeship, worked at his trade for a time for Mr. Dayton, and, after his death, purchased his interest and continued the business. For thirty-five years he continued in the same trade and occupied the same buildings. He was ever thorough in his business, careful, economical, and a good investor of funds. He is frank, social, and pleasant in his intercourse with others, and his relations with his fellow-townsmen have ever been agreeable. His business qualities have been appreciated by them, and he has been chosen to administer many estates. He has been first selectman for five years, and has represented Woodbury in the State Legislature. He has been president of Woodbury Savings Bank from its incorporation. His industry and attention to business have brought him a fine property and enabled him to retire from active life in 1871. He has a beautiful home in Woodbury, where he has resided since he closed his business. He has traveled much, visiting nearly every State in the United States. He is a Republican in politics, and has been one from the organization of the party. He married, May 19, 1848, Miss Charlotte L., daughter of Capt. Judson and Charlotte (Leavenworth) Hurd, also of Roxbury. His success is a lesson to every young man, showing what steadiness, industry, and proper attention to business will accomplish for any one under our American institutions and laws.

DR. HARMON W. SHOVE.

The "Shove" family has long had a place in the annals of Connecticut. Rev. Seth Shove, the great-grandfather of Dr. Shove, was the first settled pastor of the First Congregational Church in Danbury. His sons, Seth and Levi, came to Warren shortly after marriage, and settled permanently there as farmers. They both reared large families, and were reputable citizens. The only son of Seth was Cyrus. He married Saloma Young, by whom he had seven children.

He was always a farmer, and died, much respected, when comparatively a young man. His son, Harmon W., was born in Warren, Litchfield Co., Conn., July 30, 1823. He remained at home until he was fifteen years old, and then for three years attended Howard's Academy, in Warren, after which he went to New Jersey, and taught school for four years. He then taught two years in New York and two in Connecticut. About 1849 he commenced the study of medicine at Litchfield, in the office of Drs. Beckwith and Seymour. He attended one course of lectures at Yale Medical College, and two at the College of Physicans and Surgeons in New York, and was graduated at Yale in the spring of 1852. For two years, while pursuing his studies, he held the appointment of surgeon's steward in the United States navy. This was, both in experience and pecuniarily, of great assistance to the young student. Immediately after graduation, Dr. Shove removed to Woodbury, where he has since resided. For the past twenty-eight years he has steadily devoted himself to his profession, working hard and never relaxing his student habits, but keeping pace with all medical progress, and availing himself of all the improvements and advancement of the healing art, at the same time gathering rich experience from an extended practice, and his long and successful labors have been productive of a handsome competency. He is a member of the Litchfield County Medical Society, Connecticut State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association, and has been examiner for pensions since 1861.

Dr. Shove is a careful, deliberate man, of fine physique, pleasing in personal appearance, and with a fund of quiet humor which makes his conversation entertaining. He has never received any assistance from any one but himself, and is a good example of what may be accomplished by steady application, self-denial, and patient resolution. In politics he has been a Republican from 1856.

Dr. Shove married, July 30, 1861, Susan J., daughter of Thomas and Susan (Sherman) Bull, of an old and honorable Woodbury family.

SUPPLEMENT.

THE following additions were received too late for insertion in the body of this work:

JOSEPH BATTELL.

Joseph Battell was born in Milford, Conn., July 21, 1774. He was the second of twelve children of William and Sarah (Buckingham) Battell, of whom five sons and five daughters lived to adult life. He was of the fifth generation in descent from Thomas Battelle, who became a townsman of Dedham, Mass., in 1648, and in the same year married Mary Fisher, daughter of Joshua Fisher, of Dedham. This Thomas Battelle spelled his name as here written. The name, with different spellings, is an old one in England, and from the prevailing forms would seem to have been of Norman origin.

William Battell, the father of Joseph Battell, removed from Milford to Woodbury, and soon again to Torringford, while the son was yet a lad. At the age of eighteen the son commenced business for himself in Norfolk, upon a small capital furnished by his father, which was afterwards refunded. Here he passed the remainder of his life, for forty-six years of which he was actively engaged in mercantile business.

The following extract from a sermon delivered at Norfolk the Sabbath after New Year, 1842, is believed to be a just estimate of the character of Mr. Battell:

"The character of his intellect was elevated, combining qualities which we do not often meet; he had comprehension of mind to embrace the largest subject, and at the same time did not overlook the details of any matter. His mind was wonderfully active, and capable of great and long-continued effort without any signs of exhaustion or weariness. In the most active and busy period of his life, when his cares would have seemed sufficient to overwhelm and crush a mind of ordinary vigor, so far was he from being oppressed or overburdened that at that very period he was a great general reader. Most of the books of his large and select library were purchased during those years, and were read, too. Standard authors in literature, history, morals, and religion were perused amid the intervals of business. His taste was just; his criticism upon authors and intellectual performances indicated nice discrimination, a full appreciation, and high enjoyment of whatever possessed literary merit. He was a friend of education, and a liberal patron of literary institutions in different parts of our land.

"Of his business character I will not say much: most of you have had opportunity to judge for yourselves. His plans were characterized by enterprise, by sagacity, and by caution. But he was not a mere schemer. He was, beyond any man I ever knew, diligent and persevering in the execution of his plans. Without any parade of method, he attended to every matter in its season, and never left anything to which he put his hand till he had seen it through and finished, then, the very next moment, he was ready to turn to anything else that might arise. This habit of doing things in the proper season, of carrying through matters undertaken, was, I imagine, one great secret of his success. His business never became confused, nothing was overlooked. He was ever ready to attend to any person who called, or to any subject that might be presented, thus everything was kept in order. His natural disposition was uncommonly amiable, and thus business never perplexed or fretted him. On this account he was always in good humor, and ready to attend to your concerns.

"Need I add that, as a merchant and a man of business, he was scrupulously honest. His integrity was perfect. Those who knew him best, who had most dealings with him, and the best opportunities to understand his principles, were most implicit in their confidence; indeed, many considered him fastidious on this point.

"In speaking of him in relation to business, I ought to add that his own affairs, extensive and various as they were, constituted but a small part of that which received his attention. How many went to him for advice? and he must draw their contracts, and adjust the whole matter for them.

"With what interest would he enter into your affairs! how disinterested his counsel, how prompt in rendering you his personal assistance! He was guardian for many an orphan, treasurer of various corporations; and how easily he seemed to sustain these burdens, how cheerful and pleasant and social!

"In his character as a citizen he was public-spirited and liberal. He was an intelligent and interested observer of public affairs, both in our own land and in the world. His circle of acquaintance and friends was as wide as that of any man I have known who was not in public life, yet he felt a special regard for this place. Here he had spent the greater part of his life, transacted a vast amount of business, made his property, enjoyed much happiness, formed many intimate friendships; here he expected to be buried. I have never known him give a stronger manifestation of injured feeling than when any one spoke disparagingly of this place or its population.

"He rejoiced in your prosperity, was always gratified in the well-doing of your children who live elsewhere, and is it too much to say that he himself contributed much to the prosperity of this town during the half-century he has been here?

"In declaring that he did I only repeat what has been frequently said to me by those among you. Certainly everything of a public nature received his most cordial and liberal support; it was expected by every one, and he seldom disappointed such expectation.

"This leads me to speak of his charities. I will but just allude to them. I think those bestowed in private far exceeded in amount his public donations. For some years I have been in a situation to know something in regard to these matters, and am certain that his heart was full of compassion for the poor and distressed; that he thought of them, and provided for their relief when they were forgotten by others. A single remark now on this point: his charities arose, not from indifference to the value of property,—he appreciated it according to its worth,—but benevolence overcame his desire to retain it. He was a thoughtful, a judicious, a considerate benefactor."

Mr. Battell married, July 24, 1805, Sarah Robbins, daughter of Rev. Ammi R. and Elizabeth (Le Baron) Robbins. There were nine children of this marriage, four sons and five daughters, who lived to adult age.

Mr. Battell died Nov. 30, 1841, aged sixty-seven years.

THE COE FAMILY.

The Coe family came to this country from Suffolkshire, England, where they had resided for many generations. The earliest notice of them which can now be found is in Fox's "Book of Martyrs," which speaks of Roger Coe, of Milford, Suffolkshire, in 1555. Little is known respecting the family till the removal of Robert Coe to this country. In the authentic family record he belongs to the first generation.

Robert Coe* was born in Suffolkshire, England, in 1596. With his wife, Anna, born in 1591, and their three sons, he sailed from Ipswich in the ship "Francis," John Culling, master, April 10, 1634. They reached Boston in the following June, only six years from the date of the first settlement in the Massachusetts colony. Robert Coe settled with his family in Watertown, near Boston, and was made a freeman there Sept. 3, 1634. In 1635 or '36 he removed to Wethersfield, Conn.

Oct. 30, 1640, Mr. Andrew Ward and Mr. Robert Coe, in behalf of themselves and about twenty other planters, purchased Rippowams (Stamford) of New Haven colony for thirty-three pounds, and commenced a settlement there. At the General Court in New Haven, April 5, 1643, a court having the same powers as that at New Haven was established at Stamford, and Robert Coe was appointed one of the assistant judges.

In the spring of 1644, Robert Coe and several others formed the first English settlement at Hempstead, L. I. In 1652 he removed to a place called Westport, and aided in establishing a settlement, which was named Middleburg (now Newtown, L. I.). He was a magistrate during his whole residence there, and took a leading part in all the affairs of the town.

Early in 1656 he, with several others, commenced a settlement in Jamaica. The first town-meeting was held February 18th, when a house-lot was given to Robert Coe, and another to his son, Benjamin Coe. He continued to be one of the most active and prominent men in public affairs till about 1672, at which time he was seventy-six years old. The time of his death is not known.

SECOND GENERATION.

Robert[1] and Anna had three children, viz., John[2], Robert[2], and Benjamin[2]. Robert[2] was born in England in 1627, and accompanied his father to Watertown, Wethersfield, and Stamford. He removed thence to Stratford, Conn., married Hannah ———, and died in 1659, aged thirty-two.

THIRD GENERATION.

Robert[2] and Hannah had one child, viz., John[3], born May 10, 1658, spent his early life in New Haven, returned to Stratford in 1680, married Mary Hawley, December 20, 1682, and died April 19, 1741, aged seventy-eight, leaving ten children, viz.:

FOURTH GENERATION.

Robert[4], born Sept. 21, 1684; Joseph[4], born Feb. 2, 1686; Hannah[4], born April 14, 1689; Mary[4], born Aug. 11, 1691; John[4], born Dec. 5, 1693; Sarah[4], born March 26, 1696; Ephraim[4], born Dec. 18, 1698; Katharine[4], born Sept. 23, 1700; Abigail[4], born March 11, 1702; Ebenezer[4], born Aug. 18, 1704.†

Robert[4], son of John and Mary (Hawley) Coe, married Barbara Parmele, and settled in Durham, and afterwards in Middlefield, Conn. He was commissioned as ensign in train-band in 1718. His wife, Barbara, died in Bristol, Sept. 26, 1774, in her eighty-sixth year. Children:

Thomas[5], son of Robert[4] and Barbara (Parmele) Coe, married Mary ———, and settled in Litchfield, Conn.; died Feb. 23, 1810, in the eighty-third year of his age. His wife, Mary, died Sept. 10, 1812, aged eighty-five years. Children:

SIXTH GENERATION.

Zachariah[6], baptized Dec. 11, 1757; Abigail[6], baptized Jan. 15, 1759; Levi[6], born July 3, 1760; Lois[6], baptized June 6, 1762; Mary[6], baptized June 23, 1765; Eunice[6], baptized Aug. 31, 1766; Thomas[6], Jr., Sept. 11, 1768.

Levi[6], son of Thomas[5] and Mary Coe, married Deborah McCall, of Lebanon, Conn., Sept. 8, 1789. He purchased the homestead in Litchfield in 1785, which is still in possession of his son Levi[7]. Levi[6] Coe died Feb. 28, 1832, aged seventy-one years. His wife, Deborah, died April 29, 1843, aged seventy-three years. Children:

SEVENTH GENERATION.

Dyer[7], born June 2, 1794; Ira[7], born April 9, 1796; Walter[7], born Feb. 10, 1798; Emeline[7], born Feb. 2, 1801; William[7], born Nov. 28, 1802; Elizabeth[7], born Jan. 18, 1805; Olive[7] M. W., born Oct. 29, 1806; Levi[7], Jr., born Sept. 14, 1810; Maria[7] D., born July 10, 1812; Thomas[7] M., born Jan. 4, 1815.

Levi[7], son of Levi[6] and Deborah (McCall) Coe, married, May 22, 1838, Lavinia, daughter of Samuel and Lavinia (Judson) McNiel, of Litchfield, born Sept. 30, 1815. Children:

EIGHTH GENERATION.

Dwight[8] M., born March 6, 1840, died Dec. 3, 1863; Frederick[8] L., born Sept. 20, 1842, married Sarah C. (born Jan. 1, 1851), daughter of William Norton, of Litchfield, Dec. 8, 1875. Children:

Stanley[9] L., born Sept. 3, 1876; Philip[9] F., born Nov. 20, 1878.

Francis[8] M., born Jan. 22, 1852, married, March 18, 1880, Marion I. Platt (born Oct. 10, 1852), daughter of Sherman Platt, of Marbledale, Conn.

Levi[7] Coe and his family are all members of the Congregational Church, Litchfield.

REV. RUFUS BABCOCK, D.D.

The Rev. Rufus Babcock, D.D., a native of Colebrook, Litchfield Co., Conn., was one of the most prominent and learned men who have been born in the town of Colebrook, Conn. His father, Elder Rufus Babcock, was the founder and first pastor of the Colebrook Baptist Church. He was born in North Stonington, Conn., April 22, 1758, and was of the eighth generation from James Babcock, of Essex, England. As a Puritan, James Babcock migrated to Leyden, Holland, and thence went to Plymouth colony, Mass., where he arrived in June, 1623. Elder Rufus Babcock was ordained at Colebrook in 1794, and was the first minister of any denomination in the town. He continued to serve the Baptist Church at Colebrook as its pastor until he was seventy-three years of age, with good success, maintaining his family by carrying on the business of a farmer. In the same way he was enabled to give a liberal education to his two younger sons, Cyrus G. and Rufus, at Brown University, Providence, R. I. After resigning as pastor he continued to nurse the church with fatherly care, and gave to it a parsonage. Without any great advantages of early culture, without fluency of speech, or any of the graces of oratory, Elder Babcock had such native soundness and vigor of mind, coupled with good sense and indefatigable industry, that he was highly and deservedly esteemed, not only in his own community, but by learned and intelligent ministers of other denominations.

During the Revolutionary war he was twice called out as a soldier, and served in Capt. Timothy Moses' company. Elder Babcock was twice married, but left issue only by his first wife, who was a daughter of Capt. Moses, all being sons, named, respectively, Timothy, Cyrus Giles, and Rufus. He died Nov. 4, 1842, aged nearly eighty-five years. His youngest son, Rufus, in writing of him, describes him as being "one of the best of fathers."

Rufus Babcock, Jr., was born in North Colebrook, Conn., Sept. 19, 1798, and passed his early years on his father's farm, where he formed habits of industry which never forsook him as long as life lasted. Having obtained such rudiments of education as a country town afforded, he was sent to Brown University, then the only Baptist college in America, where he devoted himself with untiring energy to study, and from which he was graduated in 1821. As was the custom in those days with students in the various colleges, young Babcock devoted his vacations to teaching, and took charge of a school in the town of Barrington, R. I., on the shores of the beautiful Narragansett Bay, where in after-years he was accustomed to spend many weeks each year, amidst the friends whose acquaintance he had formed in early life. While at college, by his consistent deportment and steady habits, he made many warm friends, and among them was Nicholas Brown, whose friendship continued until death severed the ties which bound them together.

The natural ability of the young student soon attracted the attention of distinguished men in the Baptist denomination, and before his class had graduated he was offered a tutorship in Columbian College (now Columbian University), a Baptist college, which had then been chartered by Congress, in the District of Columbia, under the special auspices of the celebrated Luther Rice. It was in 1815 that he united with the Baptist Church at Colebrook, and, having been licensed to preach, he spent several months after his graduation, in 1815, in supplying churches in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

In 1821 he went to Washington City, and assumed the position of tutor in the college of which the Rev. William Staughton, D.D., was president. He remained here until 1823, when he resigned to take charge of the Baptist Church at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he was ordained, and the same year was married to Miss Olivia Bicknell Smith, daughter of Nathaniel Wait Smith, of Barrington, R. I. It was while here that he formed his habits of personal visitation among his flock as pastor, and devoted himself to his studies, which soon placed him among the best preachers of his denomination. While attending one of the large conventions of his church he met with Dr. Lucius Bolles, of Salem, Mass., who, although pastor of the flourishing church at that place, was likewise engaged as corresponding secretary of the Baptist Triennial Convention, now known as the American Baptist Missionary Union. Such was the impression created by Mr. Babcock that he was invited by Dr. Bolles to become his associate pastor at Salem, and in 1826 he moved to that city, and at once assumed such a position that his learning and graces as a speaker made him prominent among the Baptists of New England. He found here a loving, intelligent people, and after a lapse of fifty years, referring to his settlement at Salem, he wrote of them as follows: "A happier settlement, all things considered, I have never seen; and I have ever since been accustomed to think and speak of this as the model church." But his fame had gone forth as a teacher and preacher, and Waterville College, in Maine, being without a president, he was in 1833 invited to that high and honorable place. Accordingly, in that year he assumed the duties of president of that college, and so continued until 1836, when failing health compelled him to resign and seek a more congenial clime. He accordingly removed to Philadelphia, Pa., and became pastor of the Spruce Street Baptist Church.

While at Waterville the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Bowdoin College, and while at Philadelphia he was invited to the presidency of the State University, at Bloomington, Ind., of Alton (now Shurtleff) College, Illinois, and of Columbian College, District of Columbia, all of which positions he declined, as he afterwards did the presidency of Burlington University, Iowa. Few young men were more sought after at this period than was Dr. Babcock.

His subsequent pastorates were at New Bedford, Mass., Paterson, N. J., and again at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., which he always regarded as his home. For some years Dr. Babcock was president of the American Baptist Publication Society, and corresponding secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society; he was also interested in the Pennsylvania Colonization Society and the American Sunday-School Union.

While at Poughkeepsie one of his most prominent parishioners was Matthew Vassar, the founder of Vassar College, who conferred with Dr. Babcock in all the initiatory steps which led to the organization of that grand institution of learning for young women.

During all his career Dr. Babcock was a most indefatigable student and worker. From his early life he wrote much for the press, and while at Poughkeepsie projected, and for five years edited, the Baptist Memorial, which soon acquired great popularity. When Dr. Sprague began his great work, "The American Pulpit," and was gathering materials for his sixth volume, containing sketches of Baptist ministers, he secured the aid of Dr. Babcock, to whom, in his preface, he offered his best thanks, and said that to him the public were indebted for no small degree of the interest that pertains to that department of his work. He was likewise a frequent contributor to the Christian Review of extended articles, as well as literary notices, and he wrote much for the various Baptist newspapers. His published works are "Claim of Education Societies," 1829; "Review of Beckwith's 'Dissuasive from Controversy on Baptism,'" 1829; "Making Light of Christ," 1830; "Life of George Leonard," 1832; "Abraham Booth and Isaac Backus;" "History of Waterville College," 1836; "Tales of Truth for the Young," 1837; "Adoniram Judson, D.D.," 1851; "Personal Recollections of John M. Peck, D.D.," 1858; and "The Emigrant's Mother," 1859. Dr. Babcock's attachment to his birthplace, and his love for the church of which his father was the founder, were remarkable. Towards the close of his life, when he had withdrawn from the duties of the pastorate and was living at Poughkeepsie, surrounded by a loving circle of friends, and in the midst of an attached family, having heard that the little church was without a pastor, he separated himself from all home comforts, and journeyed to Colebrook. There, even in the winter, he remained for many months, and ministered to the little flock, trying to infuse new life and energy into the church. While thus laboring he was cheered by the hearty support of his warm and devoted friend, Gen. E. A. Phelps, who had been his playmate, though several years his junior, in "days lang syne," and who still survives, and often speaks of his friend, Rufus Babcock.

As already stated, Dr. Babcock was devoted to literary pursuits, and his ability as a scholar was recognized by those with whom he was associated in the various benevolent and educational organizations of his church. For nearly half a century he was a trustee of Brown University,—his Alma Mater,—and he was one of the original trustees of Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Dr. Babcock died at Salem, Mass., on the 4th day of May, 1875, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He had gone there apparently in excellent health, and on the last Sunday of April preached twice, his last sermon being delivered at the First Baptist Church, of which he had once been the pastor. His text was from Mark vii. 37: "He hath done all things well." The effort was too much for him, and he was attacked with typhoid pneumonia, and died after a brief illness. His remains were taken to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and interred in the beautiful cemetery near that city. The estimate of his character has been truthfully portrayed by the Rev. Dr. F. B. Wheeler, pastor of the Poughkeepsie Presbyterian Church, in the following words: "Affectionate and sunny in his disposition, all were won to him; courteous and gentlemanly in his bearing, all respected him; a man of warm Christian spirit, all revered him. His memory is precious in many hearts. He was pre-eminently a peacemaker, always ready to conciliate and turn away wrath. In all the intercourse of life he was kind and true, a friend upon whom one could always rely. As a preacher he has been a positive power in his denomination, persuasive in oratory, and thoroughly evangelical in his doctrine. While he was warmly attached to the principles and faith of the Baptist Church, there was no narrowness in his spirit, but a catholicity of feeling and action that was delightfully refreshing to all with whom he came in contact. Honored by his brethren and his church, he has entered into rest, like a shock of corn fully ripe into the garner."

Dr. Babcock left but two children to survive him, viz., Caroline Vassar Babcock Jones, wife of Horatio Gates Jones, Esq., of Philadelphia, a member of the bar, and a senator in the Pennsylvania Legislature; the other, Harriet Shepherd Weeks, wife of James H. Weeks, Esq., a member of the Poughkeepsie bar, in Dutchess Co., N. Y.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, LITCHFIELD.

The matter of erecting a monument to the memory of the patriot dead of Litchfield who fell during the war of 1861–65 was undertaken by the ladies of the town in 1868, and a committee, consisting of Mrs. L. W. Wessells, Mrs. Rufus Smith, Mrs. H. D. Kilborn, Mrs. E. R. Wadhams, Mrs. H. R. Coit, and Mrs. C. Hinsdale, were appointed to attempt raising the necessary funds. This was done by individual subscriptions of one dollar, and the balance by means of fairs and entertainments of various kinds, and was placed in the East Park, in the centre of the village, in June, 1871. It was made by H. F. & G. E. Bissell, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and cost something more than two thousand dollars.

It is of white marble, about twenty feet high, and of fine workmanship.

Three sides of the base contain the names of those who were killed in action or died in service, and the fourth represents very handsomely a cavalryman and infantryman, with cannon, muskets, flags, etc., and the column is inscribed with the various battles in which the soldiers were engaged.

The following are the inscriptions:†

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, CORNWALL.

Methodism in New England was founded, under God, by the bold evangelist, Jesse Lee, in the year 1789, he being the first preacher appointed to the State of Connecticut by the New York Conference of that year. He arrived at Norwalk on the 11th day of June, 1789, and preached his first sermon on the 17th of that month, by the roadside, under the shade of an apple-tree, to about twenty hearers, from John iii. 7: "Ye must be born again."

"Litchfield Circuit was founded about the beginning of the year 1790, and comprehended all the northwestern portion of Connecticut," says Stephens' "History of Methodism," "and Samuel Wigton and Henry Christie were the first preachers appointed by the Conference to travel this circuit, during the ecclesiastical year of 1790–91. Cornwall was for many years embraced within its boundaries."

So far as we have any authentic information, the first Methodist sermon preached in Cornwall was by Freeborn Garrettson, who "entered the northwestern angle of Connecticut at Sharon, on the 20th of June, 1790," and on the 22d, "after riding fifteen miles, preached in a Presbyterian meeting-house to some hundreds" from "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinners appear?" The meeting-house referred to was undoubtedly the one which stood on the ground now occupied by the school-house at Corwall Centre. He preached again in Cornwall on Saturday, July 24, 1790, and found, he says, "that the Lord had begun a blessed work in this town." These were among the first of the sowing of the seeds of Methodism in Cornwall.

It is said, on good authority, that Edward Rogers, Esq., one of the leading spirits of his age, and a man greatly respected, invited the first Methodist minister to preach here, because he preached "a full salvation," in opposition to the strong Calvinistic doctrines so universally preached at that time, and which were repulsive to the Rogerses. His wife and two daughters became ardent Methodists; one of them, Elizabeth W., married Henry Christie, one of the first preachers that traveled the circuit, who afterwards located and lived in Cornwall more than twenty years, much of the time at the place now occupied by William W. Baldwin, where he continued to assist his "itinerant brethren" as a faithful local preacher, sharing their trials.

It is related of him "that he was summoned early one morning, before he was out of his bed, with a writ by a sheriff for marrying a couple, and was saved from a lodgment in jail only by the timely bail of a Christian brother." He removed to Ohio in 1817, "where he continued to preach with increased frequency." His health now gave way, and in 1826 he sank into the repose of the grave, joyful in the hope of the first resurrection. On his death-bed, being asked how he was, he replied, "I am near my Father's house."

It is recorded of him "that his last hours were full of special consolations and triumphs." Another daughter of Edward Rogers, Lucretia, married John Ward, whose son, John R. Ward, lived in Salisbury, Conn., recently deceased, and was so well known as a prominent man in the town, and in the Methodist Church, of which he was an exemplary member.

"The apostolic bishop of Methodism, Francis Asbury, entered Connecticut on the 4th of June, 1791,—a man whose ministerial labors have scarcely been paralleled since the days of St. Paul."

On the 23d day of July, 1791, this great evangelist

"traveled by a rocky, mountainous way to Cornwall, and preached to about one hundred and fifty hearers." He tarried in the place over the night; tradition says that he was entertained at the home of Capt. John Peck.

The nucleus of a society thus founded was soon strengthened by the immigration to this place of Capt. John Peck, "who was the first man to join the class founded by the Rev. Jesse Lee in Stratford, Conn. He purchased the farm, and lived on the place now owned by the heirs of B. P. Johnson, at Cornwall Centre. In 1793 his house was opened for preaching, and until his removal to the West continued to be the place of meetings, and the itinerants' home. In 1794 further accessions were made in Samuel Agin Judson and family; and in 1796 he bought the farm now owned by M. Beers and son of Abel Thorp, and by a residence of over fifty years he sustained by precept and example the cause of the church. In 1798 the society was further strengthened by the arrival of Allen Shepherd and his family. He purchased the farm now owned by Mrs. C. Todd, and after the removal of Capt. Peck his house became the place for meeting.

Rev. Gendon Rexford, a Methodist minister, settled on Cream Hill, in the north part of the town, towards the close of the last century.

A class-paper of date "Cornwall, Feb. 23, 1805," records the names of Zalmon Lyon and Eben Smith as preachers on Litchfield circuit, Henry Christie as local deacon, Samuel A. Judson as class-leader, and Allen Shepherd as class steward, with thirty-one names following: Samuel A. Judson, Abiah Judson, John Peck,* Mary Peck,* Holly Reed, Selah Reed, George Dibble, Huldah Hartshorn, Daniel A. Dean, Clarissa Dean, Lois Wickwire, Allen Shepherd, Anna Shepherd, Henry Reed, Sarah A. Reed, Elizabeth Christie, Enos Northrop, Anna Northrop, Rusha Lewis, Rebekah Bishop, Nancy Wright, Rebekah Shepherd, Lucina Bishop, Jonah Dibble, John Tousley, Rachel Hull, Sarah Wadsworth, Sarah Ward, James Wadsworth, Hannah Rogert.

The land on which the first Methodist Episcopal church in Cornwall was built was given to Samuel A. Judson, Allen Shepherd, John Ward, trustees, and to their successors in office, by Edward Rogers and Henry Christie, by deed bearing date May 4, 1808. The building now occupied as a dwelling by Anna Kaler was soon after erected, and served as a meeting-house for about thirty years.

In 1839 the society was reorganized, as expressed in the following declaration of purposes and desires:

"CORNWALL, March 19, 1839.

"We, the subscribers, being desirous of forming ourselves into a legal ecclesiastical society, for the purpose of enjoying and promoting the public worship of God, and in pursuance of a statute law of this State, do hereby unite and form a society to be known and called 'The First Episcopal Methodist Society in Cornwall,' with all the powers and immunities given to religious societies by the laws of this State.

"Samuel A. Judson, John Kellogg, Holly Reed, John R. Harrison, Luther Miner, C. B. Crandall, Eliphalet H. Shepherd, Clark Marvin, Julius Beardsley, John Bradford, Carrington Todd, John Whitcomb."

The present church edifice was erected in 1839. The trustees at that time were Eliphalet H. Shepherd, Luther Miner, Carrington Todd, Julius Beardsley, and Samuel A. Judson.

The building committee were Eliphalet H. Shepherd, Luther Miner, Julius Beardsley, George Wheaton, and John R. Harrison.

Below are given the names of some of those noble men of God who traversed these hills and valleys to preach the glad tidings of the gospel:

1791–92.—Mathais Swain, James Cood.
1792–93.—Philip Wager, James Coleman.
1793–94.—Lemuel Smith, Daniel Ostrander.
1794–95.—Fredus Aldridge, James Cood.
1795–96.—Jesse Stoneman, Joseph Mitchel.
1796–97.—Daniel Dennis, Wesley Budd.
1797–98.—Ezekiel Canfield, William Thatcher.
1798–99.—Ebenezer Stevens, Freeman Bishop.
1799–1800.—Augustus Joselyn, Aaron Hunt.
1800.—Elijah Batchelor.
1801.—Peter Moriarty, John Sweet.
1802.—James Campbell, Lennan Andress.
1803.—Caleb Morris, John Sweet.
1804.—Zalmon Lyon, Eben Smith.
1805.—Zalmon Lyon.
1806.—Nathan Emery, Samuel Cochrane.
1807.—Aaron Hunt, Jonathan Lyon.
1808.—Harry Eames, Andrew Prindle.
1809.—Laban Clark, Reuben Harris.
1810.—Laban Clark.
1811.—James Coleman, Aaron Scolefield.
1812.—James Coleman, Benjamin Griffin.
1813.—William Swayze, Gad Smith, J. Reynoldy.

Many noble men of deep piety, consecrated to the work of the Master, and filled with the Spirit of God, have preached their one, two, and three years in Cornwall since Methodism became established here, and well and nobly they have performed their self-denying labors. They were men of more than ordinary ability, and believed the calling of a Methodist circuit-rider to be the highest on earth. Below will be found the names of some of these men:

P. Cook, Cyrus Culon, Nathan Emery, E. Washburn, Seth Cronell, Gad Smith, Henry Hatfield, Stephen L. Stillman, Samuel D. Ferguson, Julius Field, Elbert Osborn, Eli Barnett, John Lovejoy, A. Bushnell, Luther Mead, L. A. Sanford, Laban Clark, A. S. Hill, David Osborn, R. R. Reynold, Weeks M. Blydenburg, Isaac Sanford, Wm. McAllister, S. H. Platt, T. C. Youngs, Henry Burton, R. D. Kirdy, David Nash, C. W. Powell, J. D. Bouton, S. F. Johnson, Wm. H. Stebbins, Wm. Brown, D. S. Stevens, C. S. Dikeman, F. M. Hallock, James Robinson.

Many of them, with those to whom they preached the word of life, have long since gone to their reward. The deeds and incidents of their lives are to a great extent forgotten.

George Clark came from Woodbury to Cornwall in 1800, and became identified with the first Methodist Episcopal Church; was an exhorter, a great Bible reader, and very zealous in holding meetings and other labors for Christ.

Many unassuming men and women have lived and labored and performed their life-work as members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cornwall whose names will never appear, and whose graces will not be alluded to by the historians of earth, but they are all recorded in the great record book on high.

This church has truly been a vine of the Master's planting. Its influences for good cannot be determined in time. Its children and representatives have gone out into other and various fields of Christian duty, many of these worthily honoring themselves and their mother-church.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN NEW MILFORD.

There must have been Episcopalians in New Milford earlier, but the first allusion to them occurs in the record of a town-meeting in 1744, just previous to the death of Mr. Boardman: "Voted, That those of us who are of the Church of England shall be free from paying any charge for a minister for one year, if circumstances remain as they now are; but if in the providence of God our reverend pastor should be taken away, then the said churchmen to be under the same regulation as the rest." The Rev. James Beach, of Newtown, visited New Milford occasionally between 1740 and 1745, and a lay reader read service for some time. The first Episcopal clergyman who resided here was Rev. Solomon Palmer, who came in 1754. This society continued feeble for many years, but under the twenty years' pastorate of the Rev. Charles G. Acly it grew strong and healthy. It is now in a flourishing condition.

THOMASTON.

There is also a Congregational Church at Reynoldsville, organized a few years ago, and the present pastor is Rev. Mr. Sanford.

Reynolds' Bridge is a hamlet in the southeastern part of the town. Here is located the American Knife Company, a flourishing institution.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH, WINSTED.

The Rev. D. P. Sanford, D.D., took charge of the parish in May, 1870, and remained nearly four years.

Rev. F. S. Jewell, Ph.D., was chosen rector in 1874, and remained in charge nearly four years.

Rev. F. W. Harriman was his successor, and he remained a little over one year, and was succeeded by the Rev. George M. Stanley, the present rector.

JOHN H. HUBBARD, LITCHFIELD.

John H. Hubbard was twice married, first to Miss Julia Dodge, of Salisbury, who died in 1851 (two children of this marriage died in infancy); the second time to Miss Abby J. Wells, of Litchfield, who, with four children, still survives.
